Mx North
346

University of London Library

Reference Only

THIS BOOK MUST NOT BE REMOVED FROM THE LIBRARY

19 JUN 2002

HAND BOUND BY
A. J. B. Bookbinding Co.
TELEPHONE
020 8653 5877

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2026

https://archive.org/details/weekly-law-reports_1955_1

THE WEEKLY LAW REPORTS 1955

The House of Lords

The Privy Council

The Supreme Court of Judicature

Assize Courts

and

Ecclesiastical Courts

VOLUME 1

London

THE INCORPORATED COUNCIL OF LAW REPORTING
FOR ENGLAND AND WALES

Published by the Incorporated Council of Law Reporting for England and Wales · 3 Stone Buildings, Lincoln's Inn, London, W.C.2, and printed by The Eastern Press, Ltd., London and Reading

BIBL. LONDIN.

THE INCORPORATED COUNCIL OF LAW REPORTING FOR ENGLAND AND WALES

MEMBERS OF THE COUNCIL

Chairman—The Hon. Mr. Justice McNair

Vice-Chairman—Sir Leslie Farrer, K.C.V.O.

*

EX-OFFICIO MEMBERS

The Rt. Hon. Sir Reginald E. Manningham-Buller, Q.C., M.P.
Attorney-General

Sir Harry Hylton-Foster, Q.C., M.P.
Solicitor-General

Walter Charles Norton, Esq., M.B.E., M.C.
President of The Law Society

*

ELECTED MEMBERS

Lincoln's Inn

The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Jenkins C. Montgomery White, Esq., Q.C.

Inner Temple

R. E. Burrell, Esq., Q.C. J. V. Nesbitt, Esq.

Middle Temple

W. Latey, Esq., M.B.E., Q.C. Montague L. Berryman, Esq., Q.C.

Gray's Inn

The Hon. Mr. Justice McNair S. E. Pocock, Esq., O.B.E.
* A. G. P. Johnson, Esq.

Appointed on the nomination of the General Council of the Bar

H. Edmund Davies, Esq., Q.C. R E. Megarry, Esq.

The Law Society

Sir Leslie Farrer, K.C.V.O. (Firm: Messrs. Farrer & Co.)
Kenneth D. Cole, Esq. (Firm: Messrs. Linklaters & Paines)

* Co-opted Member.

*

Secretary—F. G. Hudson, Esq. Assistant Secretary—F. E. Smith, Esq.

3 Stone Buildings, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.2

EDITORS AND REPORTERS

*

Editor—R. P. Colinvaux, Barrister-at-Law

Assistant Editor—J. D. Pennington, Barrister-at-Law

*

REPORTERS

House of Lords
F. H. Cowper

Privy Council
Charles Clayton

Court of Appeal No. 1
B. A. Bicknell E. Dangerfield

Court of Appeal No. 2
A. W. Grant

Court of Appeal No. 3
P. B. Durnford, O.B.E. M. M. Hill

Chancery Division
J. L. Denison K. R. A. Hart F. R. Dymond
I. G. R. Moses

Queen's Bench Division, Court of Criminal Appeal and Courts-Martial Appeal Court
J. D. Pennington J. F. Lamb C. J. Ellis
J. A. Griffiths E. M. Wellwood

Probate and Divorce
J. B. Gardner E. Jones

Admiralty and Ecclesiastical
A. L. G. Stewart-Richardson

Barristers-at-Law

HOUSE OF LORDS

Lord Chancellor: Lord Kilmuir

Lords of Appeal in Ordinary

Lord Simonds
Lord Oaksey
Lord Morton of Henryton
Lord Reid
Lord Radcliffe
Lord Tucker
Lord Cohen
Lord Keith
Lord Somervell

COURT OF APPEAL

Lord Chancellor: Lord Kilmuir

Lord Chief Justice of England: Lord Goddard
Master of the Rolls: Sir Francis Raymond Evershed
President of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division: Lord Merriman

Sir John Edward Singleton
Sir Alfred Thompson Denning
Sir David Llewelyn Jenkins
Sir William Norman Birkett
Sir Francis Lord Charlton Hodson
Sir John William Morris
Sir Charles Robert Ritchie Romer
Sir Hubert Lister Parker

CHANCERY DIVISION

Lord Chancellor: Lord Kilmuir

Sir Harry Bevir Vaisey
Sir Ronald Francis Roxburgh
Sir Henry Wynn-Parry
Sir Charles Eustace Harman
Sir Harold Otto Danckwerts
Sir George Harold Lloyd-Jacob
Sir Gerald Ritchie Upjohn

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION

Lord Chief Justice of England: Lord Goddard

Sir Malcolm Hilbery
Sir Roland Giffard Oliver
Sir Wintringham Norton Stable
Sir James Dale Cassels
Sir Hugh Imbert Periam Hallett
Sir Gonne St. Clair Pilcher
Sir George Justin Lynskey
Sir Austin Ellis Lloyd Jones
Sir Laurence Austin Byrne
Sir Frederic Aked Sellers
Sir Donald Leslie Finnemore
Sir Geoffrey Hugh Benbow Streatfeild
Sir Benjamin Ormerod
Sir Gerald Osborne Slade
Sir Edward Holroyd Pearce
Sir Patrick Arthur Devlin
Sir William Gorman
Sir Patrick Redmond Joseph Barry
Sir Terence Norbert Donovan
Sir William Lennox McNair
Sir Cecil Robert Havers
Sir Colin Hargreaves Pearson
Sir Hildreth Glyn-Jones
Sir Denis Gerrard
Sir John Percy Ashworth

PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION

President: Lord Merriman

Sir Hubert Joseph Wallington
Sir Henry William Barnard
Sir Henry Gordon Willmer
Sir Charles Arthur Collingwood
Sir Seymour Edward Karminski
Sir William Arthian Davies
Sir Eric Sachs

Attorney-General

Sir Edward Manningham-Buller

Solicitor-General

Sir Harry Braustyn Hylton-Foster

TABLE OF CASES

(VOL. 1)

A

	Page
Adams v. War Office	1116
Alberti, decd., In the Estate of	1240
Aldhous, In re. Noble v. Treasury Solicitor	459
Alenquer, The	263
Allan, Sherlock v. In re Rumball, decd.	1037
Anatogu, Kodilinye v.	231
Andrews, decd., In re. Andrews v. Smorfitt	1105
Anglo-French Exploration Co. Ld. v. Clayson (Inspector of Taxes)	1314
Arnould, decd., In re. Arnould v. Lloyd	539
Aster (An Infant), In re	465
Atid Navigation Co. Ld. v. Fairplay Towage and Shipping Co. Ld.	336
Atkinson v. Bettison	1127
Attorney-General, Cecil-Williams v. In re Morgan, decd.	738
Attorney-General, London Parochial Charities Trustees v.	42
Audley Land Co. Ld. v. Kendall	639
Automatic Woodturning Co. Ld., Stringer v.	971
Automobile Proprietary Ld. v. Brown	573

B

B. v. B. (No. 2)	557
B. v. B. (No. 3)	559
Bains, Chogley v.	877
Baker v. Baker	1011
Baker v. Barclays Bank Ld.	822
Bambridge v. Inland Revenue Commissioners	1329
Barclays Bank Ld., Baker v.	822
Barclays Bank Ld. v. Brassey. In re Brassey's Settlement	192
Barclays Bank Ld. v. Dovell. In re Follett, decd.	429
Ballantyne v. Nanwa Gold Mines Ld., In re Nanwa Gold Mines Ld.	1080
Barnes, Trickers (Confectioners) Ld. v.	372
Battersea and Putney Hospital Management Committee, Slade v.	207
Baxter v. Keldon	84
Beach Bros. (Dover) Ld., Parish v.	351
Berry, Penney v.	1021
Bettison, Atkinson v.	1127
Bevan v. Bevan	1142
Blake, Haymills Houses Ld. v.	237
Blandford, Regina v.	331
Board of Trade, J. H. Tucker & Co. Ld. v.	655
Bock v. Bock	843
Bone, decd., In re. Bone v. Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co. Ld.	703
Bookman (Thomas) Ld. v. Nathan	815
Borg, Vincenti, v.	1137
Bradfield (J. C.) & Co. Ld., Brophy, v.	1148
Brassey's Settlement, In re. Barclays Bank Ld. v. Brassey	192
British Transport Commission, Clayton (Valuation Officer) v.	504
British Transport Commission, McDonald v.	1323
Britt v. Britt	1272
Brixham Urban District Council, In re	5, 426
Brixton, The (Owners) v. The Planter (Owners). The Planter	898
Brophy v. J. C. Bradfield & Co. Ld.	1148
Brown, Hopgood v.	213
Buchanan v. Motor Insurers' Bureau	488
Buckland, Petherick, v.	48
Bullock, Regina v.	1
Burford v. Burford	1242
Bursted Properties Ld. v. Denton Urban District Council	82

C

Caddies, Harold Holdsworth & Co. (Wakefield) Ld. v.	352
Cameron, decd., In re. Currie v. Milligan	140

	Page
Caras v. Caras	254
Carpenter v. Carpenter	669
Carr v. Carr	422
Cartwright v. W. Richardson & Co. Ld.	340
Carver, Regina v.	181
Castle, Sandown Park, Ld. v.	747
Caston Cushioning Ld., In re	163
Cecil-Williams v. Attorney-General. In re Morgan, decd.	738
Chalkley, Cowlishaw v. (Practice Note)	101
Charlson, Regina v.	317
Charlton v. Charlton	675
Chelsea Juvenile Court, Regina v. In re an Infant	52
Chloride Batteries Ld., Gahan (Inspector of Taxes) v.	277
Chogley v. Bains	877
Clark, Doring v. In re Doring	1217
Clark, Hearst v.	1210
Clarke, McInnes v.	102
Clayson (Inspector of Taxes), Anglo-French Exploration Co. Ld. v.	1314
Clayton v. British Transport Commission	504
Clayton, Shell-Mex and B.P. Ld. v.	982
Cobb v. Cobb	731
Coleman v. Coleman	1235
Comber v. Fleet Electrics Ld.	566
Copeland v. Houlton	1072
Cory, decd., In re. Cory v. Morel	725
Cottam, In re. Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co. Ld. v. Huddersfield Corporation	1299
Cotton v. Wallis	1168
Cowlishaw v. Chalkley (Practice Note)	101
Creed v. McGeoch & Sons Ld.	1005
Crookhall v. Vickers-Armstrong Ld.	659
Currie v. Milligan. In re Cameron, decd.	140

D

Daniels v. Ford Motor Co. Ld.	76
Davidson v. Rodwell (Practice Note)	654
Davidson-Houston v. Lanning	858
Davies v. Gilbert	160
Dawson v. Preston	1219
Debtor, In re Fletcher, a. Ex parte Fletcher v. Official Receiver	172
Denton U. D. C., Bursted Properties v.	82
Dirphys (Owners) v. Soya (Owners). The Soya	1246
Disciplinary Committee, Rajasooria v.	405
Dolbey v. Goodwin	553
Dolton Bournes & Dolton Ld. v. Osmond	621
Domville (Inspector of Taxes), Wiseburgh v.	1287
Doncaster Amalgamated Collieries Ld., In re	167
Doring, In re. Doring v. Clark	1217
Dovell, Barclays Bank Ld. v. In re Follett, decd.	429
Durbridge, Sanderson (Inspector of Taxes) v.	1087

E

East Elloe Rural District Council, Smith v.	380
East Yorkshire Gravel Co. Ld.'s Application, In re	88
Eisinger v. General Accident Fire and Life Assurance Corporation Ld.	869
English Folk Dance and Song Society, O'Sullivan (Valuation Officer) v.	907

F

Fairclough Dodd & Jones Ld., J. H. Vantol v.	642, 1302
Fairplay Towage and Shipping Co. Ld., Atid Navigation Co. Ld. v.	336
Finchley Borough Council, Ex parte. Regina v. Minister of Housing and Local Government	29
Follett, decd., In re. Barclays Bank Ld. v. Dovell	429
Forbes v. Forbes	531
Ford Motor Co. Ld., Daniels v.	76
Freeman Heating Co. Ld., Wallace v.	172
Freestone, Regina v.	331
Fry, Regina v. (Practice Note)	36

G

	Page
Gahan v. Chloride Batteries Ld.	277
Galer, Morrissey v.	110
Galler v. Galler	400
Gallwey, Portman Building Society v.	96
General Accident Fire and Life Assurance Corpn. Ld., Eisinger v.	869
Gilbert, Davies v.	160
Godalming Licensing Committee, Regina v. Ex parte Knight	600
Godfrey v. Smith	692
Gonda, Gordon v.	885
Gordon v. Gonda	885
Grahame (J. W.) (English Financiers) Ld. v. Ingram	563
Green v. Rozen	741
Green, Guinness Trust (London Fund) Founded 1890, Registered 1902 v.	872
Greenbaum, Orman Bros. Ld. v.	248
Greenslade v. Swaffer	1109
Greenslade v. World's Press News Publishing Co. Ld.	1109
Gregson v. Hick Hargreaves & Co. Ld.	1025, 1252
Guardianship of Infants Acts, 1886 and 1925 (Practice Direction)	335
Guinness Trust (London Fund) v. Cope	872
Guinness Trust (London Fund) v. Green	872

H

Hadaway v. Hadaway	16
Harris v. Rugby Portland Cement Co. Ld.	648
Hart, Pearse v.	67n.
Hartley v. Hartley	384
Hatton, Westminster Bank Ld. v. In re Longman	197
Haymills Houses Ld. v. Blake	237
Hearst v. Clark	1210
Heelex Investments Ld. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners	289
Hern v. Palmer	123
Hick Hargreaves & Co. Ld., Gregson v.	1025
Highway Ironfounders (West Bromwich) Ld., Richards v.	1049
Hill v. Minister of Pensions and National Insurance	899
Hinchcliffe v. Sheldon	1207
Hinds, Woodlands v.	688
Hobbs, Jess B. Woodcock & Sons Ld. v.	152
Hodkinson v. H. Wallwork & Co. Ld.	1195
Holdsworth (Harold) & Co. (Wakefield) Ld. v. Caddies	352
Holme, Westminster and Kensington Freeholds Ld. v.	272
Hopgood v. Brown	213
Houlton, Copeland v.	1072
Howard Ross & Co. Ld., MacPherson Train & Co. Ld. v.	640
Huddersfield Corporation, Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co. Ld. v. In re Cottam	1299
Hughes v. McGoff & Vickers Ld.	416
Humphreys, John v.	325
Hunter, Huyton-with-Roby Urban District Council v.	603
Hurley v. J. Sanders & Co. Ld.	470
Hurrell, Lamdon Trust Ld. v.	391
Huyton-with-Roby Urban District Council v. Hunter	603

I

Imperial Chemical Industries Ld., Luttman v.	980
Imperial Chemical Industries Ld., O'Reilly v.	839, 1155
Industrial Disputes Tribunal, Regina v. Ex parte Portland Urban District Council	949
Infant, In re An. Regina v. Chelsea Juvenile Court	52
Inland Revenue Commissioners, Bambridge v.	1329
Inland Revenue Commissioners, Heelex Investments Ld. v.	289

J

Jackson v. National Coal Board	132
Jarvis v. Williams	71
Jennings v. Tavener	932
Joannou, Theocharides v.	296
John v. Humphreys	325
Jones, Ottway v.	706

PAGE

JONES v. RICHARDS 444
JONES, SCHOFIELD v. 1133
JOYCE, In re. Ex parte JOYCE 800

K

KELDON, BAXTER v. 84
KELMAN v. LIVANOS 590
KENDALL, AUDLEY LAND CO. LD. v. 639
KNIGHT, Ex parte. REGINA v. GODALMING LICENSING COMMITTEE 600
KODILINYE v. ANATOGU 231
KOHLER, YOUNG AND, YOUNG v. 395

L

LAMBERT, WHITMORE v. 495
LAMDON TRUST LD. v. HURRELL 391
LANE v. LONDON ELECTRICITY BOARD 106
LANNING, DAVIDSON-HOUSTON v. 858
LAW SOCIETY v. RUSHMAN 681
LAW SOCIETY (GARNISHEES). DAWSON v. PRESTON 1219
LAWSON v. LAWSON 200
LEA v. MOORE 38
LEE, TREVETT v. 113
LEVIEN, In re. LLOYDS BANK v. WORSHIPFUL COMPANY OF MUSICIANS 964
LEVY, PROSSER (A.) & SON LD. v. 1224
LEWIS, WARD v. 9
LIVANOS, KELMAN v. 590
LLEWELLYN v. LLEWELLYN 480
LLOYDS BANK v. WORSHIPFUL COMPANY OF MUSICIANS. In re LEVIEN 964
LONDON ELECTRICITY BOARD, LANE v. 106
LONDON PAROCHIAL CHARITIES TRUSTEES v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL 42
LONGMAN, In re. WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. HATTON 197
LUTTMAN v. IMPERIAL CHEMICAL INDUSTRIES LD. 980

M

MCCARTHY, REGINA v. 856
MCCOMBE v. READ 635
MCDONALD v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION 1323
MCGEOCH & SONS LD., CREED v. 1005
MCGOFF & VICKERS LD., HUGHES v. 416
MCINNES v. CLARKE 102
MACPHERSON TRAIN & CO. LD. v. HOWARD ROSS & CO. LD. 640
MANNERS, DECD., In re. PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. MANNERS 1096
MARJORAM v. MARJORAM 520
MASON v. WILLIAMS & WILLIAMS LD. 549
MAYNARD v. WILLIAMS 54
MAYWHORT, REGINA v. 848
MEARNS v. MEARNS 303
MIDLAND BANK LD., BONE v. In re BONE, DECD. 703
MIDLAND BANK EXECUTOR AND TRUSTEE CO. LD. v. HUDDERSFIELD CORPORATION. In re COTTAM 1299
MILLARD, Ex parte. REGINA v. PADDINGTON (SOUTH) RENT TRIBUNAL 348
MILLER'S CASH STORES LD. v. WEST HAM CORPORATION 1121
MILLIGAN, CURRIE v. In re CAMERON, DECD. 140
MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT, REGINA v. Ex parte FINCHLEY BOROUGH COUNCIL 29 MINISTER OF PENSIONS AND NATIONAL INSURANCE, HILL v. 899
MITCHELL, REGINA v. 1125
MOORE, LEA v. 38
MOREL, CORY v. In re CORY, DECD. 725
MORGAN, DECD., In re. CECIL-WILLIAMS v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL 738
MORRISSEY v. GALER 110
MOTOR INSURERS' BUREAU, BUCHANAN v. 488
MOTTURE v. MOTTURE 1066

N

NANWA GOLD MINES LD., In re. BALLANTYNE v. NANWA GOLD MINES LD. 1080 NATHAN, THOMAS BROOKMAN LD. v. 815

PAGE

NATIONAL COAL BOARD, JACKSON v. .. 132
NATIONAL MOTOR AND ACCIDENT INSURANCE UNION, WEST v. .. 343
NEWBOROUGH, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. In re WYNN .. 940
NISBETT SHIPPING CO. LD. v. THE QUEEN .. 1031
NOBLE v. TREASURY SOLICITOR. In re ALDHOUS .. 459
NUTTALL, DECD., IN THE ESTATE OF (PRACTICE NOTE) .. 847

O

O'DONOVAN v. O'DONOVAN .. 1086
OFFICIAL RECEIVER, Ex parte FLETCHER v. In re FLETCHER, A DEBTOR .. 172
ORANGE, REILLY v. .. 616
O'REILLY v. IMPERIAL CHEMICAL INDUSTRIES LD. .. 839, 1155
ORMAN BROTHERS LD. v. GREENBAUM .. 248
OSMOND, DOLTON BOURNES & DOLTON LD. v. .. 621
O'SULLIVAN (VALUATION OFFICER) v. ENGLISH FOLK DANCE AND SONG SOCIETY .. 907
OTTWAY v. JONES .. 706
OWEN, WILLIAMS v. .. 1293

P

PADDINGTON (SOUTH) RENT TRIBUNAL, REGINA v. Ex parte MILLARD .. 348
PADWICK'S ESTATE, In re .. 439, 751
PALMER, HERN v. .. 123
PARISH v. BEACH BROS. (DOVER) LD. .. 351
PARKWAY MOTORS LD., UNITED DOMINIONS TRUST (COMMERCIAL) LD. v. .. 719
PAYS, SIMPKINS v. .. 975
PEARKES v. REYNOLDS. In re REYNOLDS, DECD. .. 12
PEARLBERG, PENFOLD v. .. 1068
PEARSE v. HART .. 67n.
PENFOLD v. PEARLBERG .. 1068
PENNEY v. BERRY .. 1021
PENNINGTON & SON, SIMMONS v. .. 183
PERRY v. THOMAS WRIGLEY LD. .. 1164
PETHERICK v. BUCKLAND .. 48
PHILLIPS, REGINA v. .. 1103
PILINSKI v. PILINSKA .. 329
PLANTER, THE .. 898
PORT LINE LD., SMITH v. .. 514
PORTLAND U.D.C., Ex parte. REGINA v. INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES TRIBUNAL .. 949
PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. GALLWEY .. 96
PRACTICE DIRECTION (AFFIDAVITS) .. 36
PRACTICE DIRECTION (ANCILLARY RELIEF) .. 703
PRACTICE DIRECTION (APPEALS FROM JUSTICES UNDER THE GUARDIANSHIP OF INFANTS ACTS) .. 1239
PRACTICE DIRECTION (APPLICATIONS) .. 36
PRACTICE DIRECTION (COSTS) .. 603
PRACTICE DIRECTION (FOREIGN MARRIAGES) .. 668
PRACTICE DIRECTION (GUARDIANSHIP OF INFANTS ACTS, 1886 AND 1925) .. 335
PRACTICE DIRECTION (MORTGAGES) .. 36
PRACTICE DIRECTION (POWERS OF MASTERS UNDER R.S.C., ORD. 55, R. 15) .. 427
PRACTICE DIRECTION (TRANSCRIPTS) .. 975
PRACTICE DIRECTION (WRIT OF POSSESSION) .. 1314
PRACTICE NOTE. COWLISHAW v. CHALKLEY .. 101
PRACTICE NOTE. DAVIDSON v. RODWELL .. 654
PRACTICE NOTE. IN THE ESTATE OF NUTTALL, DECD. .. 847
PRACTICE NOTE (PREVIOUS CONVICTIONS) .. 139
PRACTICE NOTE. REGINA v. FRY .. 36
PRACTICE NOTE. REGINA v. ROSSI .. 109
PRESTON, DAWSON v. LAW SOCIETY (GARNISHEES) .. 1219
PRIESTLY (R. L.) LD., SUMNER v. .. 1202
PROSSER (A.) & SON LD. v. LEVY .. 1224
PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. MANNERS. In re MANNERS .. 1096
PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. NEWBOROUGH. In re WYNN .. 940 PUTNEY HOSPITAL MANAGEMENT COMMITTEE, SLADE v. .. 207

Q

QUEEN, THE, NISBETT SHIPPING CO. LD. v. .. 1031

R

	Page
Rajasooria v. Disciplinary Committee	405
Randall v. Tarrant	255
Read, McCombe v.	635
Read (S. G.) & Co., Rusholme & Bolton & Roberts Hadfield Ld. v.	146
Regina v. Ashford, Kent, Justices. Ex parte Richley	562
Regina v. Blandford	331
Regina v. Bryant	715
Regina v. Bullock	1
Regina v. Carver	181
Regina v. Charlson	317
Regina v. Chelsea Juvenile Court. In re An Infant	52
Regina v. Dent	297
Regina v. Freestone	331
Regina v. Fry (Practice Note)	28
Regina v. Godalming Licensing Committee. Ex parte Knight	600
Regina v. Industrial Disputes Tribunal. Ex parte Portland Urban District Council	949
Regina v. McCarthy	856
Regina v. Maywhort	848
Regina v. Minister of Housing and Local Government. Ex parte Finchley Borough Council	29
Regina v. Mitchell	1125
Regina v. Paddington (South) Rent Tribunal. Ex parte Millard	348
Regina v. Phillips	1103
Regina v. Rossi. (Practice Note)	109
Regina v. Wilson	493
Reilly v. Orange	616
Rene, The	263
Reynolds, decd., In re. Pearkes v. Reynolds	12
Rialto Cinemas Ld. v. Wolfe	693
Richards v. Highway Ironfounders (West Bromwich) Ld.	1049
Richards, Jones v.	444
Richardson (W.) & Co. Ld., Cartwright v.	340
Rodwell, Davidson v. (Practice Note)	654
Rossi, Regina v. (Practice Note)	109
Rousou's Trustee v. Rousou	545
Rozen, Green v.	741
Rugby Portland Cement Co. Ld., Harris v.	648
Rumball, decd., In re. Sherlock v. Allan	1037
Rusholme & Bolton & Roberts Hadfield Ld. v. S. G. Read & Co. (London) Ld.	146
Rushman, Law Society v.	681

S

Salcombe Urban District Council, In re	5
Sanders (J.) & Co. Ld., Hurley v.	470
Sanderson (Inspector of Taxes) v. Durbidge	1087
Sandown Park Ld. v. Castle	747
Schofield v. Jones	1133
Scrace v. Windust	475
Sheldon, Hinchcliffe v.	1207
Shell-Mex and B.P. Ld. v. Clayton	982
Sherlock v. Allan. In re Rumball, decd.	1037
Silver (orse. Kraft) v. Silver	728
Simmons v. Pennington & Son	183
Simpkins v. Pays	975
Slade v. Battersea and Putney Hospital Management Committee	207
Smith v. East Elloe Rural District Council	380
Smith, Godfrey v.	692
Smith v. Port Line Ld.	514
Smorfitt, Andrews v. In re Andrews, decd.	1105
Soya, The	1246
Stainer v. Tragett	1275
Sterling, Westminster Bank Ld. v. In re Young, decd.	1269
Stringer v. Automatic Woodturning Co. Ld.	971
Sumner v. R. L. Priestly Ld.	1202
Swaffer, Greenslade v.	1109
Sykes & Harrison Ld., Williams v.	1180

T

PAGE

TARRANT, RANDALL v. 255
TAVENER, JENNINGS v. 932
THEOCHARIDES v. JOANNOU 296
THOMAS WRIGLEY LD., PERRY v. 1164
TOOL METAL MANUFACTURING CO. LD. v. TUNGSTEN ELECTRIC CO. LD. 761
TOTNES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, In re 5, 426
TRAGETT, STAINER v. 1275
TRATHAN v. TRATHAN 805
TREASURY SOLICITOR, NOBLE v. In re ALDHOUS 459
TREVETT v. LEE 113
TRICKERS (CONFECTIONERS) LD. v. BARNES 372
TUCKER (J. H.) & CO. LD. v. BOARD OF TRADE 655
TUNGSTEN ELECTRIC CO. LD., TOOL METAL MANUFACTURING CO. LD. v. 761

U

UNITED DOMINIONS TRUST (COMMERCIAL) LD. v. PARKWAY MOTORS LD. 719

V

VAN LESSEN, In re 1326
VANBERGEN (A BANKRUPT), In re. Ex parte THE TRUSTEE v. VANBERGEN 20
VANTOL (J. H.) LD. v. FAIRCLOUGH DODD & JONES LD. 642, 1302
VICKERS-ARMSTRONG LD., CROOKALL v. 659
VINCENTI v. BORG 1137

W

WALLACE v. FREEMAN HEATING CO. LD. 172
WALLIS, COTTON v. 1168
WALLWORK (H.) & CO. LD., HODKINSON v. 1195
WAR OFFICE, ADAMS v. 1116
WARD v. LEWIS 9
WELLS-KING v. WELLS-KING 309
WEST v. NATIONAL MOTOR AND ACCIDENT INSURANCE UNION LD. 343
WEST FERRY ROAD, POPLAR, In re. In re PADWICK'S ESTATE 439, 751
WEST HAM CORPORATION, MILLER'S CASH STORES LD. v. 1121
WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. HATTON. In re LONGMAN 197
WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. STERLING. In re YOUNG DECD. 1269
WESTMINSTER AND KENSINGTON FREEHOLDS LD. v. HOLME 272
WHITMORE v. LAMBERT 495
WILLIAMS, JARVIS v. 71
WILLIAMS, MAYNARD v. 54
WILLIAMS v. OWEN 1293
WILLIAMS v. SYKES & HARRISON LD. 1180
WILSON, REGINA v. 493
WINDUST, SCRACE v. 475
WISEBURGH v. DOMVILLE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) 1287
WOLFE, RIALTO CINEMAS LD v. 693
WOODCOCK (JESS B.) & SONS LD. v. HOBBS 152
WOODLANDS v. HINDS 688
WOOL TEXTILE EMPLOYERS MUTUAL INSURANCE CO. LD., In re 862
WORLD'S PRESS NEWS PUBLISHING CO. LD., GREENSLADE v. 1109
WORSHIPFUL COMPANY OF MUSICIANS, LLOYDS BANK v. In re LEVIEN 964
WYNN, In re. PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. NEWBOROUGH (NO. 2) 940

INDEX TO SUBJECT-MATTER

ADMINISTRATION. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

ADOPTION—Adoption order—Alleged error—Court's power to correct particulars—Adoption Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 26), s. 21.
* REGINA v. CHELSEA JUVENILE COURT. In re AN INFANT - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 52

AGENCY — Contract — Parties — Confirming house — Principal an Australian company, agent an English confirming house—Original indent by Australian company upon manufacturer containing term "confirmation and payment by" agent — Agent's contract with manufacturer for purchase of goods—Original indent cancelled by Australian company — Whether agent liable as principal.
* RUSHOLME & BOLTON & ROBERTS HADFIELD LD. v. S. G. READ & CO. (LONDON) LD. - - Manchester Autumn Assizes 1 W.L.R. 146

2. —— Estate agent — Accommodation agency—Deposit required on supplying list of addresses — Balance of fee paid on client obtaining accommodation — Deposit returned to unsatisfied clients—Accommodation Agencies Act, 1953 (1 & 2 Eliz. 2, c. 23), s. 1 (1) (b).
* MCINNES v. CLARKE
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 102

AGRICULTURE—Threshing machine—Fencing—Statutory duty to fence "during the "working thereof"—Machine to be kept "sufficiently and securely fenced so far as is "reasonably and practicable and consistent "with the due and efficient working thereof" —Liability of owner of machine and employer of injured workman—Liability of farmer for whose "service or benefit" machine used—Whether farmer "permitted" use—Threshing Machines Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 12), s. 1.
* JONES v. RICHARDS. Caernarvon Winter Assizes - - - - 1 W.L.R. 444

2. ——. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

ANIMAL—Nuisance. See PUBLIC HEALTH.

APPEAL—Bankruptcy—Extension of time. See BANKRUPTCY.

2. —— Bankruptcy. See BANKRUPTCY.

3. —— Cost of transcript for. See LEGAL AID.

4. —— Form of notice. See COURT OF APPEAL.

5. —— From justices to Chancery Division under Guardianship of Infants Acts. See INFANT.

6. —— Rating—Practice. See RATES AND RATING.

7. —— To Divisional Court. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

APPEAL—continued.

8. —— To House of Lords. See HOUSE OF LORDS.

ASSAULT. See CRIMINAL LAW.

BANKING — Cheque — Conversion — Partnership cheques appropriated by one partner, indorsed and paid by third person into his banking account—Whether bank holder in due course—Manager's failure to make sufficient inquiries—Negligence—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), ss. 29 (1) (b), 30 (2), 82.
Partnership—Partnership property—Conversion — Partner's conversion of partnership property — Cheques payable to partnership indorsed by one partner and paid into third person's banking account—Right of aggrieved partner to sue bank alone without joining guilty partner—R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 11.
Practice—Parties.
* BAKER v. BARCLAYS BANK LD.
Birmingham Assizes 1 W.L.R. 822

BANKRUPTCY—Appeal—Certificate of misfortune — Refusal — Whether appeal against refusal to be inter partes — Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 32 (2) (b)—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), s. 26 (4).
* In re JOYCE. Ex parte JOYCE.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 800

2. —— Appeal—Extension of time—Application to registrar ex parte out of time —Dismissal by registrar of motion by trustee to set aside order extending time for appeal—Right of trustee to have order set aside—Discretion of registrar to extend time for good cause shown—Whether established practice should be altered by judicial direction—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), ss. 102, 109 (4), 147 (1)—Bankruptcy Rules, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 2113 (L. 14)), rr. 4 (1), 8 (1) (g) (2), 9, 31, 32, 261, 389.
* In re VANBERGEN (A BANKRUPT). Ex parte THE TRUSTEE v. VANBERGEN
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 20

3. ——. See PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

BARRISTER—Fees. See LEGAL AID.

BREACH OF STATUTORY DUTY—Staircase. See FACTORY.

2. ——. See DOCK.

BUILDING — Contract — R.I.B.A. form — House "built down to a price"—Defects in materials and workmanship—Final certificate issued by architect—Liability of architect to building owner.
Architect—Negligence.
* COTTON v. WALLIS - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1168

2. —— Safety regulations — Application —"Building" — Installation of electrical apparatus in workshop in course of construction—Whether "construction . . . of a build-"ing"—Scaffold—Breach of statutory duty by employer—Consequent shifting of onus of proof—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1145), regs. 2, 22, 24.

BUILDING—continued.

* Hughes v. McGoff & Vickers Ld.
Liverpool Assizes 1 W.L.R. 416

CANADA—Shipping—Limitation of liability — Crown — Warship in collision — Solely to blame—Crown not entitled to limit liability—Express statutory exclusion—Canada Shipping Act, 1934, c. 44, ss. 649, 712.

Shipping. Crown—Statute—Application to.

* Nisbet Shipping Co. Ld. v. The Queen
J.C. 1 W.L.R. 1031

CATERING WAGES — Minimum wage — Manager sharing profits—Contract by husband and wife to manage a café and to pay a weekly sum to the owner — Weekly sum earned insufficient to satisfy terms of contract—Wrongful dismissal—Whether contract within the Act — Scale of Remuneration — Catering Wages Act, 1943 (6 & 7 Geo. 6, c. 24), ss. 1 (4), 9 (1)—Wages Regulation (Unlicensed Place of Refreshment) Order, 1953 (S.I. 1953, No. 1611)—Wages Regulation (Unlicensed Place of Refreshment) (Amendment) Order, 1955 (S.I. 1955, No. 386).

* Hearst v. Clark Lloyd-Jacob J. (sitting as additional judge of Q.B.D.) 1 W.L.R. 1210

CERTIORARI. See Crown Practice.

CHARITY—Aged, impotent and poor—Homes—Gift for provision of flats for persons over age of 65 years—Flats to be let at economic rents—General charitable intention—Validity.

* In re Cottam, Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co. Ld. v. Huddersfield Corporation
Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 1299

2. —— Agriculture — Bank — Will — Trust to establish bank—Primary object to assist planters with loans at low interest—Whether valid charitable trust—Construction—Not confined to "the general improvement "of agriculture"—Windward and Leeward Islands.

* Hadaway v. Hadaway
J.C. 1 W.L.R. 16

3. —— Education — Singing — Trusts for encouragement of singing and advancement or study of organ music—Validity.

* In re Levien. Lloyds Bank v. Worshipful Company of Musicians
Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 964

4. —— Housing trust. See Landlord and Tenant.

5. —— Poverty, relief of—Club members—Trust to provide grants and pensions to members of a members' club "who may fall "on evil days"—Validity.

Charity—Public—Section of community.

* In re Young, decd. Westminster Bank Ld. v. Sterling
Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 1269

CHARITY—continued.

6. —— Public — Bequest "to the bishop "for the time being of the diocese of the "Windward Islands"—"To be used by him "as he thinks fit in his diocese"—Whether valid charitable trust.

Will—Construction.

* In re Rumball, decd. Sherlock v. Allan
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1037

7. —— Recreation — Recreation ground — Gift for a parish—Intention the maintenance and improvement of the health and welfare of the inhabitants—Whether valid charitable gift—Sports grounds already in existence—Application cy-près.

* In re Morgan, decd. Cecil-Williams v. Attorney-General
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 738

8. —— Scheme — Modification — Scheme for administration made under statute and approved by Order in Council—Article of scheme enabling Charity Commissioners to modify it "by schemes made in the exercise "of their ordinary jurisdiction"—Application to court to modify scheme—Jurisdiction of court—Charitable Trusts Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 136), ss. 2, 3, 4, 5—City of London Parochial Charities Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 36), s. 34.

* London Parochial Charities Trustees v. Attorney-General
Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 42

CHILD. See Trespass.

CHILDREN—Imprisonment. See Road Traffic.

2. —— See Family Allowance; Negligence.

CLUB—Rating. See Rates and Rating.

COAL. See Mines and Minerals.

COLONY — Interpretation in Settlement. See Settlement.

COMPANY—Capital—Increase—Invitation to apply for shares — Return of subscribers' money—"Should . . . conditions not be ful-"filled . . . moneys will be refunded and "meanwhile . . . retained in a separate "account" — Conditions not fulfilled and scheme abandoned — Money subscribed not part of company's general assets—Subscribers entitled to return of their money—Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), s. 51.

* In re Nanwa Gold Mines Ld. Ballantyne v. Nanwa Gold Mines Ld.
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 1080

2. —— Coal—Compensation for nationalization. See Mines and Minerals.

3. —— Director — Managing director — Terms of appointment — Subsequent restriction of duties — No breach of contract—Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), Sch. I, Table A, paras. 107, 109.

* Harold Holdsworth & Co. (Wakefield) Ld. v. Caddies - H.L.(Sc.) 1 W.L.R. 352

4. —— Winding up—Costs—Taxation in Companies Winding-Up Department—Whether

COMPANY—continued.

chief clerk has jurisdiction to conduct taxation —Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 330 (L. 4)), rr. 1, 4 (3).

* In re Wool Textile Employers Mutual Insurance Co. Ld.
Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 862

5. —— Winding up—Liquidator—Voluntary liquidation—Nomination by resolution of creditors — Majority in value and number necessary—Voluntary winding up superseded by compulsory winding up—Costs of liquidator in voluntary winding up—Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), s. 294—Companies (Winding Up) Rules, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 330 (L. 4)), r. 134.

* In re Caston Cushioning Ld.
Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 163

COMPULSORY PURCHASE — Compulsory purchase order—Validity—Writ alleging order made in bad faith—Whether court has jurisdiction—Acquisition of Land (Authorisation Procedure) Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 49), Sched. I, Pt. IV, para. 16.

* Smith v. East Elloe Rural District Council - - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 380

2. —— Costs. See Solicitor.

CONFLICT OF LAWS—Immovable property —Assignment—Will—Revocation—Real estate in England—Disposition only revocable by English law—Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), ss. 9, 20.

* In the Estate of Alberti, decd.
Wallington J. 1 W.L.R. 1240

2. —— Marriage — Validity — Religious ceremony in Germany—No civil ceremony—Failure properly to register the marriage.

*Pilinski v. Pilinska
Mr. Commissioner Latey, Q.C. 1 W.L.R. 329

3. ——. See Husband and Wife; Divorce.

CONSPIRACY. See Libel and Slander.

CONTEMPT OF COURT—Committal order — Infant — Breach of undertaking to return child to jurisdiction—Party out of jurisdiction — Summons not served — Committal order made.

Infant—Custody.

* O'Donovan v. O'Donovan
Wallington J. 1 W.L.R. 1086

CONTRACT—C.I.F. See Sale of Goods.

2. —— Condition. See Insurance.

3. —— Dwelling-house in course of construction—implied warranty. See Vendor and Purchaser.

4. —— F.O.B. See Sale of Goods.

5. —— Formation — Intention to create legal relationship — Competition — Fashion competition in newspaper—Three forecasts by different persons in one coupon—Coupon submitted in defendant's name—Agreement to

CONTRACT—continued.

" go shares "—Claim to recover share of prize —Intention to create legal relations.

* Simpkins v. Pays
Chester Assizes 1 W.L.R. 975

6. —— Parties. See Agency.

7. —— Penalty. See Hire-Purchase.

8. —— R.I.B.A. form. See Building.

9. —— Sale of ship. See Shipping.

10. —— Suspension—Notice to determine —Nature of notice—Patent—Licence subject to compensation for exceeding quota—Agreement to suspend payments of compensation—Litigation between parties — Counterclaim seeking to enforce payments—Whether sufficient notice — Patent — Licence — Condition—" Prohibit or restrict " — Meaning — Patents and Designs Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 38 (1).

Patent.

* Tool Metal Manufacturing Co. Ld. v. Tungsten Electric Co. Ld.
H.L.(E.) 1 W.L.R. 761

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE. See Nuisance.

CONVERSION—Cheque. See Banking.

COSTS—Barristers' fees. See Legal Aid.

2. —— Company winding up. See Company.

3. —— Divorce. See Legal Aid.

4. —— Costs follow event—Discretionary remedy sought—Jurisdiction to order successful defendant to pay plaintiff's costs—Rent restriction—Possession application—Tenant causing nuisance—Landlord's application for possession dismissed—Tenant ordered to pay landlord's costs — Jurisdiction to make order — County Court Rules, 1936, Ord. 47, r. 1—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 32), s. 3 (1), Sch. I (b).

Landlord and Tenant — Rent restriction. Court of Appeal—County court—Appeal from.

* Ottway v. Jones - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 706

5. —— Lands Tribunal — Scale — Costs awarded by tribunal on county court scale 3 —Order for costs of hearing before tribunal on scale 3 awarded to successful appellants by Court of Appeal—No application for certificates for increased charges and fees made until year after order as to costs—Grant of certificates out of time in discretion of court —County Court Rules, 1936 (S.R. & O. 1936, No. 626/*L.*17), Ord. 47, r. 21 (4).

Costs—County court action—Scale.

* Sandown Park Ld. v. Castle (Valuation Officer) - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 747

6. —— Legal aid—transcript for appeal. See Legal Aid.

7. —— Payable by party cited in divorce suit. See Husband and Wife—Divorce.

COSTS—continued.

8. —— Taxation—Compulsory purchase. See Solicitor.

9. —— Taxation — Probate and Divorce Division — Objection to taxation — Informal reference to registrar—R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27, reg. 39.
* Practice Direction. (Costs.)
Probate, etc., Division 1 W.L.R. 603

10. —— Taxation. See Legal Aid.

11. —— Taxation. See Solicitors.

12. ——. See Legal Aid.

COUNTY COURT—Jurisdiction—Question of title to land—Lease—Assignment or guarantee—County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), ss. 40, 43, 51.
* Lea v. Moore - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 38

COURT OF APPEAL—Notice of appeal—Form—Discretion of registrar—Rule of convenience—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), s. 68 (2)—R.S.C., Ord. 58, r. 8.
* Parish v. Beach Bros. (Dover) Ld. (Practice Note.) - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 351

CRIMINAL LAW—Accessory before the fact —Knowledge of crime—How specific—Motor-car over which appellant had control used for purposes of housebreaking—Appellant's knowledge that motor-car was being used for criminal purpose — Whether necessary to direct jury as to knowledge of some particular crime in view.
* Regina v. Bullock - C.C.A. 1 W.L.R 1

2. —— Assault—Aggravated assault—Conviction of common assault — Assault with intent to resist arrest — Unlawful arrest — Whether jury may convict of common assault —Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 38.
* Regina v. Wilson - C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 493

3. —— Evidence — Compulsory disclosure by accused—Affidavit sworn after attachment —Written affidavit sworn by accused in consequence of compulsory process—Disclosure of acts alleged to constitute fraudulent conversion — Motion to quash indictment properly made before plea—Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 43 (2).
* Regina v. Maywhort
Chester Assizes 1 W.L.R. 848

4. —— Fraud—Obtaining credit by fraud —Sale of motor-cycle before hire-purchase payments completed — Further hire-purchase transaction — Value of stolen motor-cycle "credited" against purchase of another — No debt created — Corrective training — Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 13 (1).
Criminal Law—Sentence—Corrective training—Maximum sentence for offence one year—Inapplicability of corrective training.
* Regina v. Mitchell C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1125

5. —— Imprisonment — Children. See Road Traffic.

CRIMINAL LAW—continued.

6. —— Larceny. See Military Law.

7. —— Obstructing police. See Licensing.

8. —— Practice — Previous history of accused and convicted persons—Information to be given by police.
* Practice Note (Previous Convictions)
C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 139

9. —— Practice—Report on prisoner—Age —Date of birth to be stated in police and prison reports.
* Regina v. Rossi (Practice Note)
C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 109

10. —— Practice — Venue — Receiving — Offences not committed in county where tried—Appellants not resident in county— Other persons resident in county summonsed for similar offences committed there—Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), s. 11 (1)—Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 55), s. 1 (2) (b).
*Regina v. Blandford; Regina v. Freestone C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 331

11. —— Sentence—Conditional discharge— Breach — Further offence committed — Sentence of Borstal training — No sentence imposed for previous offence—Desirability of nominal sentence.
* Regina v. Fry (Practice Note)
Divl. Ct. 1 W.L.R. 28

12. —— Sentence — Corrective training — Corrective training a form of imprisonment— Petty offence — Breach of probation order— Sentence of three years' corrective training —Term of three years too severe in relation to offence—Sentence of eighteen months' imprisonment substituted.
* Regina v. McCarthy
C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 856

13. —— Sentence—Imprisonment and fine — Maximum sentence of imprisonment — Power of court to impose further imprisonment in default of payment of fine—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s. 3—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1922 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 56), s. 3—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 58), s. 14 (1) (c).
* Regina v. Carver - C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 181

14. —— Wounding—Causing grievous bodily harm with intent to murder—Causing grievous bodily harm with intent to cause grievous bodily harm—Unlawful wounding—Defence that wounds inflicted while accused in state of automatism—Defence of insanity not raised —Onus on the prosecution to prove conscious acts.
*Regina v. Charlson
Chester Assizes 1 W.L.R. 317

CROWN—Application of Statute to. See Canada.

CROWN PRACTICE—Certiorari—Application for extension of time—Respondent to be notified—R.S.C., Ord. 59, r. 4 (2).
*Regina v. Ashford, Kent, Justices, Ex parte Richley (Practice Note)
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 562

CROWN PROCEEDINGS — Liability of Crown in tort—Pension—Death of soldier on duty—Certificate by Minister of Pensions that death attributable to service—Refusal by Minister to award pension to parents of soldier—Action in tort by parent on behalf of estate — Liability of War Office — Crown Proceedings Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 44), s. 10—Royal Warrant of May 24, 1949 (Cmd. 7699), arts. 37, 65.
*Adams v. War Office
Glyn-Jones J. 1 W.L.R. 1116

CRUELTY — Sodomy — Corroboration. See Husband and Wife.

DAMAGES—Detinue. See Hire Purchase.

2. —— Injury to health arising partly before and partly after breach of duty. See Negligence.

3. —— Loss of prospect of providing for family. See Factory—Dust elimination.

4. —— Mother's claim for son's death. See Fatal Accidents Acts.

5. —— Remoteness. See Solicitor.

DEFAMATION. See Libel and Slander.

DESERTION. See Husband and Wife — Justices.

DETINUE—Damages. See Hire Purchase.

2. —— Plaintiff's property in goods — Immediate right to possession—Contractual right—Goods sold and delivered—In possession of third party—Agreement between buyer and seller for return—Whether seller entitled to sue third party in detinue.
*Jarvis v. Williams - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 71

DIVORCE—Costs. See Legal Aid.

2. —— Costs payable by party cited. See Husband and Wife.

3. —— Delay. See Husband and Wife.

4. ——. See Husband and Wife.

DOCKS—Rating. See Rating.

2. —— Regulations—Crane or winch—Signaller—Crane engaged in loading barge—Scope of duty to provide signaller—Area of duty defined—Docks Regulations, 1934 (S.R. & O. 1934, No. 279), reg. 43.
*Smith v. Port Line Ld.
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 514

3. —— Regulations — Shipbuilding — Dry dock—Painting ship with anti-fouling paint—"Work of repair"—Safe means of access to "all parts of the ship"—Part of dock from which ship painted — Notional occupier—Shipbuilding Regulations, 1931 (S.R. & O. 1931, No. 133), reg. 1.
*Hurley v. J. Sanders & Co. Ld.
Liverpool Assizes 1 W.L.R. 470

EASEMENT — Prescription — Period of user until action—No possibility of interruption for a year—Right of way—Contiguous plots of land—Agreement—Grant of conditional user by defendant of plaintiff's entrance drive—Action by plaintiff to terminate user—User for period of over 19 years—Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), ss. 2, 4.
*Reilly v. Orange - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 616

2. ——. See Vendor and Purchaser.

EAST AFRICA (KENYA) — Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Sublease—Claim to possession—Premises sublet without consent of landlord—Landlord's right against "occupier" whether or not a "lawful sub-tenant"—Increase of Rent (Restriction) Ordinance, 1949 (Kenya), s. 16 (1) (i), (2) (6).
Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction.
*Chogley v. Bains - J.C. 1 W.L.R. 877

ELECTRICITY — Regulations—"Danger"—Electricity sub-station with open duct on floor—Fall of electrician while inspecting premises—Parts of premises where apparatus placed to be "adequately lighted to prevent danger"—"Danger from shock, burn, or other "injury"—"Other injury" ejusdem generis with "shock, burn"—Construction—Regulations for the Generation, Transformation, Distribution and Use of Electrical Energy, 1908 (S.R. & O. 1908, No. 1312), s. 26.
Ejusdem generis rule—Statute
*Lane v. London Electricity Board
Parker L.J. (sitting as additional judge of Q.B.D.) 1 W.L.R. 106

ESTOPPEL. See Vendor and Purchaser.

EVIDENCE — Compulsory disclosure of criminating — Subsequent prosecution. See Criminal Law.

2. —— Cruelty — Sodomy — Corroboration. See Husband and Wife.

3. —— Expert. See Practice—Summons for Directions.

4. —— Foreign marriage. See Husband and Wife.

5. —— Furnished letting — Onus. See Landlord and Tenant.

6. —— Evidence Act, 1938—Admissibility — Action for personal injuries — Written statement made by witness at time of accident — Witness employed by defendants when statement made—Not in defendants' employment when statement signed—Inadmissible in re-examination to vary witness's oral evidence — "Person interested" — Evidence Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 28), s. 1 (1) and (3).
*Cartwright v. W. Richardson & Co. Ld. - - - - Barry J. 1 W.L.R. 340

EVIDENCE—continued.

7. —— Foreign marriage. See HUSBAND AND WIFE—Divorce.

8. —— Onus of proof. See HIGHWAY—Private street works.

9. ——. See HUSBAND AND WIFE—Divorce.

EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR — Administrator — Grant de bonis non — Bona vacantia — Partial intestacy — No claim by next-of-kin—Balance of estate transferred by executor to Treasury Solicitor—Subsequent grant of administration de bonis non to niece of testator — Claim by administratrix to balance of estate—Administratrix not able to give good discharge—Trustee Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 27.

Administration — Statutory advertisement regarding claims against estate—Form desirable—Trustee Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 27.

* In re ALDHOUS. NOBLE v. TREASURY SOLICITOR - Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 459

2. —— Position before probate. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

FACTORY — Dangerous machinery—Fencing —Transmission machinery—Unfenced machinery nine feet above ground — Unauthorised interference by worker—Causation—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 13 (1).

Causation.

* HODKINSON v. H. WALLWORK & CO. LD. C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1195

2. —— Dangerous machinery — Fencing — Unfenced nip between conveyor belt and roller—Employee cleaning machine in motion — Causation — Contributory negligence — Apportionment of liability—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 14 (1).

Causation.

* WILLIAMS v. SYKES & HARRISON LD. C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1180

3. —— Dangerous machinery—Fencing—Woodworking machine — Circular saw — Saw not used for sawing—Duty to comply with Act notwithstanding compliance with regulations —Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 14 (1)—Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922 (S.R. & O., 1922, No. 1196), reg. 10.

* STRINGER v. AUTOMATIC WOODTURNING CO. LD. - Liverpool Assizes 1 W.L.R. 971

4. —— Definition — Works canteen — Premises within the curtilage of a factory—User—Purpose incidental to the processes of manufacture carried on at the factory—Part of the factory—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 151 (1) (6).

* LUTTMAN v. IMPERIAL CHEMICAL INDUSTRIES LD. - Liverpool Assizes 1 W.L.R. 980

5. —— Dust — Elimination — "All practicable measures" — Duty not absolute — Whether danger one of which employer had or ought reasonably to have had contemporaneous knowledge — Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 47 (1).

* GREGSON v. HICK HARGREAVES & CO. LD. Manchester Spring Assizes 1 W.L.R. 1025 C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1262

6. —— Dust—Elimination—"All practicable measures" — Substantial quantity of dust—No masks or exhaust appliances provided—Dust not known to be injurious until 1950 — Silicosis contracted by workman — Whether all practicable measures taken by employers—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 47 (1).

Damages—Personal injuries—Life shortened —Loss of prospects of making provision for family.

* RICHARDS v. HIGHWAY IRONFOUNDERS (WEST BROMWICH) LD. C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1049

7. —— Eyes — Protection — Provision of goggles or effective screens—"Suitable"—Fettling process involving special risk of eye injury—Misting of goggles—Duty of employers —Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 49—Protection of Eyes Regulations, 1938 (S.R. & O. 1938, No. 654), Sch.

* DANIELS v. FORD MOTOR CO. LD. C.A. 1 W.L.R. 76

8. —— Safety regulations — Application — "Repair or maintenance"—Preparation for—Fall of workman through fragile asbestos roof —Failure of employers to affix prominent notices that roof fragile—Workman sent up to take measurements for new roof gutter—Whether regulations applicable — Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, regs. 2 and 31 (3) (a) and (b).

* SUMNER v. R. L. PRIESTLY LD. C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1202

9. —— Staircase — Hand-rails — "Condition of surface of steps"—"Special circumstances . . . specially liable to cause accidents" — Construction — Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 25 (2).

* HARRIS v. RUGBY PORTLAND CEMENT CO. LD. - - - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 648

10. —— Ventilation or fumes—Boiler room —Workman killed by injurious fumes—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), ss. 4 (1), 47 (1).

* BROPHY v. J. C. BRADFIELD & CO. LD. C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1148

11. ——. See NEGLIGENCE.

FAMILY ALLOWANCE — Entitlement — Absence at school — Children received into care of local authority — Sent to residential schools—Whether "included in the family" for family allowances purposes—"Temporary absence . . . at any school" — Family Allowances Act, 1945 (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 41), ss. 1, 3 (2), 21 (7)—Children Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 43), s. 1—Family Allowances and National Insurance Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 29), s. 52.

* HILL v. MINISTER OF PENSIONS AND NATIONAL INSURANCE Lord Goddard C.J. 1 W.L.R. 899

FAMILY PROVISION—Child—Daughter unmarried—Departure from paternal home to live as wife of married man—Testator under no moral obligation to maintain daughter after departure from home — Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 45), s. 1 (1) (b).

* In re Andrews, decd. Andrews v. Smorfitt - Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 1105

2. —— Limitation — Extension of time — Question of whether a person had an interest in the estate, not having been determined at the time when representation first taken out —Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 45), as amended by Intestates' Estates Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 64), s. 2 (1) (1A).

* Bone, decd., In re Bone v. Midland Bank Ld. - Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 703

3. —— Widow—Annuity—Partnership between testator and his brother — Annuity (nominated by will) payable, on death of partner, to widow by surviving partner during joint lives—Abatement if profits less than specified sum annually—Further provision—Any portion of annuity not received out of partnership funds payable out of residue during widowhood.

* In re Doring. Doring v. Clark Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 1217

FATAL ACCIDENTS ACTS—Damages—Mother's claim in respect of son's death—Mother a widow—Principle of assessment of damages.

* Dolbey v. Goodwin C.A. 1 W.L.R. 553

FIRE. See Inn.

FOOD AND DRUGS—Bread—Deficiency in weight — Deficiency due to action of some person over whom retailers had no control—Not necessary for retailer to show due diligence used or reasonable precautions taken —Considerable variation in weight—Information correctly laid in respect of individual loaves — Wrapped sliced loaves — Weight of wrapper to be included in the weight of bread—Bread Order, 1953 (S.I. 1953, No. 1283), arts. 1, 3—Sale of Food (Weights and Measures) Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 63), s. 6.

* Trickers (Confectioners) Ld. v. Barnes. Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 372

GAMING —Betting—Ready-money betting—Receiving money in street on behalf of bookmaker—Defendant charged with assisting in conducting a betting business contrary to section 3 of the Betting Act, 1853—Defendant guilty of offence under section 4—No offence committed under section 3—Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), ss. 1, 3, 4.

* Baxter v. Keldon Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 84

2. —— Lottery—"Private lottery"—Supporters' Club of Football Club—Money raised by various means including a weekly lottery—Whether club "conducted for purposes not "connected with . . . lotteries"—Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 58), s. 24 (1).

* Maynard v. Williams Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 54

GAMING—continued.

3. —— Lottery—"Private lottery"—Supporters' club of football club—Money raised by various means including weekly lotteries — Whether club "conducted for purposes not "connected with . . . lotteries"—Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 58), s. 24 (1).

* Pearse v. Hart - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 67n.

HIGHWAY—Obstruction. See Nuisance.

2. —— Nuisance. See Public Health.

3. —— Private street works — Objection to proposals — Jurisdiction of justices — Evidence—Objection that alleged street is highway repairable by inhabitants at large—Onus of proof on local authority—Private Street Works Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57), ss. 5, 6, 7, 8.

Justices—Case stated—Jurisdiction of Divisional Court—Must not retry questions of fact. Burden of Proof—Nature of onus—Provisional burden—Evidence pro and con—Determinate conclusion—Irrelevance of onus.

* Huyton - with - Roby Urban District Council v. Hunter - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 603

4. —— Street works — Expenses—Apportionment—Appeal—Power of Minister—Point of law—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 268.

* Regina v. Minister of Housing and Local Government. Ex parte Finchley Borough Council Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 29

HIRE PURCHASE — Hire-purchase agreement — Assignment — Prohibition against assignment of goods or benefit of agreement —Option to purchase—Sale of goods by hirer —Tender of balance of hire and purchase price by purchasers — Purchasers without rights under hire-purchase agreement—Damages not restricted to balance of hire and purchase price.

Detinue—Damages.

* United Dominions Trust (Commercial) Ld. v. Parkway Motors Ld. McNair J. 1 W.L.R. 719

2. —— Hire-purchase agreement—Motor-car—Hirer in arrears with payment of instalments—Breach of agreement—Agreement terminated by owners — Car returned to owners—Claim by owners under depreciation clause for sum equal to three-quarters of purchase price—Penalty.

Contract—Penalty.

* Lamdon Trust Ld. v. Hurrell Denning L.J. 1 W.L.R. 391

HOUSE OF LORDS—Appeal to—Leave to appeal—Matrimonial cause—Infant—Custody —Religious upbringing—No appeal except by leave of Court of Appeal—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), s. 27 (2).

Infant—Custody—Divorce Court. "Matrimonial cause."

*B. v. B. (No. 2) (Practice Note) H.L. 1 W.L.R. 557

2. —— Appeal to—Leave to appeal—Matrimonial cause—Infant—Custody—Religious upbringing—Whether question of law raised—

HOUSE OF LORDS—continued.

Question of discretion—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), s. 27 (2).

Fact or law—Judicial discretion. Infant—Custody—Divorce Court.

*B. v. B. (No. 3) - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 559

HOUSING. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

HUSBAND AND WIFE—Divisional Court—Transcripts of judgments—Provision at public expense.

* PRACTICE DIRECTION. (TRANSCRIPTS)
Probate 1 W.L.R. 975
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 480

2. —— Divorce—Conflict of jurisdiction—Foreign decree based on domicile at time of desertion—Similar English jurisdiction—Validity — Declaration — Matrimonial Causes Act (Northern Ireland), 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6 (N.I.), c. 13), s. 26 — Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), s. 18 (1) (a).

* CARR v. CARR - Barnard J. 1 W.L.R. 422

3. —— Divorce — Costs — Petition and answer—Wife's allegations of cruelty—Adultery of wife admitted—Measure of liability of party cited to pay costs.

* MEARNS v. MEARNS - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 303

4. —— Divorce—Cruelty—Acts of cruelty after cohabitation has ceased — Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), s. 1 (1).

*BRITT v. BRITT - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1272

5. —— Divorce—Cruelty—Contraceptives—Wife's deliberate refusal to have children—Insistence on contraception — Knowledge of injurious effect on husband—No fear of childbirth.

* FORBES v. FORBES
Mr. Commissioner Latey, Q.C.
1 W.L.R. 531

6. —— Divorce—Cruelty—Deception before marriage—Association with another woman—Shock of subsequent discovery—Aggravation by husband's deliberate conduct and desertion.

* CARPENTER v. CARPENTER. HOLDEN INTERVENING - - Sachs J. 1 W.L.R. 669

7. —— Divorce — Cruelty—Drunkenness——Husband's persistent excessive drinking.

* BAKER v. BAKER
Liverpool Assizes 1 W.L.R. 1011

8. —— Divorce—Delay—Cruelty—No condonation—Unreasonable delay.

* LLEWELLYN v. LLEWELLYN
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 480

9. —— Divorce—Desertion—Termination—State of deserted party's mind—Words spoken as result of deserted party's justified sense of grievance—Metaphorical not physical prevention of cohabitation.

* BEVAN v. BEVAN - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1142

10. —— Divorce — Discretion—Exercise—Only matters proved to be taken into account—Matters relevant in discretion statement—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), s. 4.

* COLEMAN v. COLEMAN C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1235

HUSBAND AND WIFE—continued.

11. —— Divorce—Evidence—Admissibility of signed statement of witness overseas—"Person interested"—Husband alleged to have lain on bed with nursemaid with trousers undone—No allegation of adultery—Nurse not "interested" — Evidence Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 28), s. 1.

Evidence—Evidence Act, 1938.

* GALLER v. GALLER
Barnard J. 1. W.L.R. 400

12. —— Divorce—Evidence—Foreign marriage—Proof of Certificate in Divorce Division—Avoiding expert evidence — Evidence (Foreign, Dominion and Colonial Documents) Act, 1933 (23 Geo. 5, c. 4).

* PRACTICE DIRECTION (FOREIGN MARRIAGES).
Probate, etc., Division - 1 W.L.R. 668

13. —— Divorce — Discretion—Exercise—No finding on issue of desertion—Refusal of court to exercise discretion on petitioner's admission of adultery—Duty of court to find for or against petitioner on matrimonial offence alleged before exercising discretion — Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), s. 4 (1) (2).

Husband and Wife — Divorce — Practice — Answer—Amendment—Husband's petition for divorce on grounds of desertion—Admission of Adultery by husband in evidence—Application by wife for leave to amend answer and cross-charge adultery—Refusal of leave to amend—Grounds for refusal of leave to amend held insufficient—Order for new trial.

* BURFORD v. BURFORD
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1242

14. —— Divorce—Insanity—Care and treatment—"Without any interval"—Detention under temporary order—Discharge—Re-admission 12 days later as voluntary patient — Whether receiving treatment "without any "interval"—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), s. 1 (1) (d), (2) (a), (d).

De minimis non curat lex. "Interval."

* CHARLTON v. CHARLTON
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 675

15. —— Divorce — Rehearing—Jurisdiction of Divisional Court — Concurrent appeal to Court of Appeal — Allegation of undisclosed adultery — Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1940), r. 36 (1).

* WELLS-KING v. WELLS-KING
Divl. Ct. 1 W.L.R. 309

16. —— Justices — Cruelty—Sodomy—Corroboration—Submission to, but not consent, by wife — Desirability of corroboration of wife's evidence—No legal necessity for corroboration.

* LAWSON v. LAWSON - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 200

17. —— Justices — Desertion — Defence of belief in deserted spouse's adultery — Husband's misconduct in promoting or bringing about the state of affairs inducing belief a defence.

* HARTLEY v. HARTLEY
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 384

18. —— Justices — Maintenance—Jurisdiction — Wife's application for increase of amount—Husband's application at hearing to discharge order—No complaint made by husband—No jurisdiction to discharge without complaint.

HUSBAND AND WIFE—continued.

* Trathan v. Trathan
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 805

19. —— Justices—Practice—Irregularities—Cumulative effect—Husband's letter to court giving his defence—Failure to inform wife—Failure to assist litigant in person to put case in cross-examination—Refusal of adjournment—Refusal to allow closing address to court on law—Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 55), s. 61.

Husband and Wife—Desertion—Constructive desertion—Wife's sluttishness.

* Marjoram v. Marjoram
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 520

20. —— Maintenance—High Court—Ancillary relief—Application out of time—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1940 (L. 27)), r. 44 (1).

* Practice Direction (Ancillary Relief)
Probate, etc., Div. 1 W.L.R. 703

21. —— Maintenance—High Court—Jurisdiction—Parties resident in same house—Neglect to maintain—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), s. 23.

* Caras v. Caras (Practice Note)
Davies J. 1 W.L.R. 254

22. —— Marriage—Foreign marriages—Proof—Evidence (France) Order in Council, 1937, No. 515.

* Motture v. Motture
Karminski J. 1 W.L.R. 1066

23. —— Nullity—Intention to marry—Marriage to evade immigration regulations—Intention to become man and wife—Valid marriage.

* Silver (orse. Kraft) v. Silver
Collingwood J. 1 W.L.R. 728

24. —— Property—Matrimonial home—Desertion by husband—Sale of home—Wife remaining in occupation—Claim to possession by purchasers for value with notice of wife's occupation—Exercise of court's discretion—Circumstances in which it may be exercised.

* Jess B. Woodcock & Sons Ld. v. Hobbs
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 152

25. —— Property—Proceedings under Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 17—House purchased jointly for home—Intention of parties that house be owned in equal shares and that husband meet mortgage payments—Wife's payment of certain household expenses—Part of mortgage repaid by husband—Application by husband for order that house belonged to him—Duty of court to give effect to intention of parties—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 17.

* Cobb v. Cobb C.A. 1 W.L.R. 731

INFANT—Appeal from courts of summary jurisdiction. See Practice.

2. —— Custody—Appeal. See House of Lords.

INFANT—continued.

3. —— Custody—Appeal from justices—Leave to appeal out of time—R.S.C., Ord. 55A, r. 6 (2).

* Practice Direction. (Appeals from Justices under the Guardianship of Infants Acts.) Ch.D. 1 W.L.R. 1239

4. —— Custody—Illegitimate child—Rights of mother—Rights of putative father—Mother's wish to have child adopted.

* In re Aster (an infant)
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 465

5. —— Custody. See Contempt of Court.

INJUNCTION—Nuisance—Trees—Continuing nuisance from roots of trees on adjoining land—Injunction granted.

* McCombe v. Read Harman J. (sitting as an additional judge of the Q.B.D.) 1 W.L.R. 635

INN—Duty to guest—Loss of guest's goods—No absolute liability for injury to goods—Motor-car destroyed by fire—No liability—Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774 (14 Geo. 3, c. 78), s. 86.

Fire—Fires Prevention Act.

* Williams v. Owen
Exeter Autumn Assize 1 W.L.R. 1293

INSURANCE—Motor. See Legal Aid—Costs.

2. —— Motor. See Road Traffic—"Road."

3. —— Motor-vehicle—"Loss"—Sale of motor-vehicle induced by fraud of purchaser—Delivery of motor-vehicle in exchange for cheque—Worthless cheque—No intention by purchaser to pay for motor-vehicle—Motor-vehicle obtained by false pretences—Not a "loss" within meaning of insurance policy.

* Eisinger v. General Accident Fire and Life Assurance Corporation Ld.
Lord Goddard C.J. 1 W.L.R. 869

4. —— Warranty—Breach—Rescission of policy—Repudiation of claim—Dwelling-house and contents—Proposal form basis of contract of insurance—Under-statement by assured in proposal form of value of contents—Burglary—Claim by assured—Whether insurance company, having affirmed the policy, were entitled to repudiate the claim.

Contract—Condition.

* West v. National Motor and Accident Insurance Union Ld. - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 343

INTEREST—Rate—Breach of trust. See Partnership—Dissolution.

INVITOR AND INVITEE—Invitee or licensee—Hospital—Visitor—Patient dangerously ill—Wife permitted to visit at any time—Fall on slippery floor in process of being polished—Unusual danger—Concealed danger—Liability of hospital.

Licensor and Licensee—Hidden trap—Trap known to licensor.

* Slade v. Battersea and Putney Hospital Management Committee
Finnemore J. 1 W.L.R. 207

JUSTICES—Appeal—Divisional Court. See Highway.

LICENSING—continued.

the purpose of granting a different licence—Licensing Act, 1953 (1 & 2 Eliz. 2, c. 46), s. 7.
* Regina v. Godalming Licensing Committee, Ex parte Knight
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 600

3. —— Police right to enter licensed premises — Obstruction — Attempted entry by police—Warning given to licensee by third party—Police detained from entering — Whether obstruction of police in execution of duty—Prevention of Crimes Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 75), s. 2—Licensing Act, 1953 (1 & 2 Eliz. 2, c. 46), s. 151 (1).
Criminal Law—Police obstruction.
* Hinchliffe v. Sheldon
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1207

LICENSOR AND LICENSEE. See Invitor and Invitee.

LIMITATION. See Mortgage.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT—Housing trust. See Landlord and Tenant.

LOTTERY. See Gaming.

MAINTENANCE—High Court jurisdiction. See Husband and Wife.

MALAYA — Solicitor — Discipline — "Grossly improper conduct" — Intention to deceive—Requisition for company meeting—Signatures from original document pasted on to new amended document—Some signatories no longer shareholders — No intention to deceive—Advocates and Solicitors Ordinance, No. 4 of 1947, ss. 26, 27.
Solicitor.
* Rajasooria v. Disciplinary Committee
J.C. 1 W.L.R. 405

MALTA—Pre-emption—Immovable property—Judicial sale by auction—"Absent persons"—Conditions limiting right of pre-emption—Publication of notice of sale at least one month before the day fixed for the sale—"Day fixed "for sale" in the notice—Code of Organization and Civil Procedure (c. 15), ss. 314, 356—Civil Code (c. 23), s. 1520 (1) (2).
* Vincenti v. Borg - J.C. 1 W.L.R. 1137

MARRIAGE—Foreign—Proof. See Husband and Wife—Divorce.

2. —— See Conflict of Laws.

MASTER AND SERVANT—Employment of servant of another — Invitee or employee—Full-time hiring of lorry and driver over prolonged period—Methods of loading and unloading under supervision and control of hirer—Liability of hirer for unsafe system of unloading.
* O'Reilly v. Imperial Chemical Industries Ld. - Manchester Spring Assizes
1 W.L.R. 839
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1155

2. —— Safe system of work. See Negligence.

MASTER AND SERVANT—continued.

3. —— System of work—tool with latent defect. See Negligence.

4. ——. See Catering Wages.

MATRIMONIAL HOME. See Husband and Wife.

MILITARY LAW — Court-Martial — Civil offence—Larceny—Offence within section 18 of the Army Act—Whether charge to be laid under that Act or under the common law—Army Act, 1881 (as re-enacted), ss. 18, 41—Larceny Act, 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50), s. 2.
Criminal Law—Larceny—Simple larceny—Common law offence—Reference in charge to section 2 of Larceny Act, 1916, surplusage.
* Regina v. Bryant - Courts-Martial Appeal Court 1 W.L.R. 715

MINES AND MINERALS—Coal—Breach of statutory duty—Roof—"Reasonably practical" precautions—Security of travelling road and working place—Fall of roof occasioned by an explosion of abnormal character — Whether roof made secure—Coal Mines Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 50), ss. 49, 102 (8).
* Jackson v. National Coal Board
Leeds Assizes 1 W.L.R. 132

2. —— Coal — Nationalization — Company adjustment—Shareholders' rights—Preference and ordinary shares—Compensation—Adjustment proposals—Date when "finally determined" — Coal Industry Nationalisation (Company Adjustment) Regulations (S.I. 1948, No. 2360), regs. 2 (5), 23—Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 59), s. 25.
* In re Doncaster Amalgamated Collieries Ld. - - Vaisey J. 1 W.L.R. 167

3. —— Working facilities—Lease—Notice to quit at termination of lease—Lease of beds of gravel and sand under two fields—Application to Ministry for right to work made several days before expiration of lease—Matter later referred to High Court—"Without the concurrence of two or more persons"—"Having "an interest in them"—Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 1 (1).
* In re East Yorkshire Gravel Co. Ld.'s Application - Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 88

MONEYLENDER — Memorandum — Copy—Delivery—Joint and several borrowers—Delivery to agent of borrower—Moneylenders Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 21), s. 6.
*J. W. Grahame (English Financiers) Ld. v. Ingram - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 563

MORTGAGE — Receiver — Corporate body—Limitation of action — Acknowledgment — Action against sureties 13 years after original default of mortgagor company—Appointment of bodies corporate as successive receivers—Periodical sums paid by receivers to mortgagees—Limitation Act pleaded by sureties—Appointment of receivers a nullity—Receivers not agents of mortgagor—Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 109 (2)—Companies Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 23),

MORTGAGE—continued.

s. 306 (1)—Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), s. 366.
Limitation of Action.
* Portman Building Society v. Gallwey
Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 96

2. ——. See Practice and Procedure.

MOTOR CAR — False pretences — "Loss." See Insurance.

NATIONALIZATION—Coal. See Mines and Minerals.

NEGLIGENCE—Architect. See Building.

2. —— Child—Injury to—Building site—Child injured while playing upon trailer—Liability of contractors—Whether occupiers of the site—Duty of care—Extent of duty.
Trespass.
* Creed v. McGeoch & Sons Ld.
Liverpool Assizes 1 W.L.R. 1005

3. —— Collision. See Road Traffic.

4. —— Onus of proof — Safe system of work—Failure to provide safe plant—Railway wagon in dangerous condition—"Dock "use only" wagon — Whether defendants exercised reasonable care.
* McDonald v. British Transport Commission - Durham Assizes 1 W.L.R. 1323

5. —— Safe system of work—Injurious dust—Steel foundry—Risk of silicosis—Duty to take steps to induce employee to wear mask provided.
Factory—Dust—Elimination—Provision of masks—"All practicable measures . . . to "protect the persons employed against inhala-"tion of the dust" — Failure to induce employee to wear mask provided—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 47 (1).
Damages — Negligence — Continuing negligence—Injury to health arising partly before and partly after breach of duty.
* Crookall v. Vickers-Armstrong Ld.
Lancaster Assizes 1 W.L.R. 659

6. —— Safe system of work — Plant and equipment—Latent defect—Injury to workman's eye caused by tool with latent defect—Tool supplied direct by reputable makers—Whether employers under a duty to inspect such tools—Liability of makers—Burden of proof.
*Mason v. Williams & Williams Ld.
Chester Assizes 1 W.L.R. 549

7. —— Servant of another. See Master and Servant.

8. —— System of water supply. See Rylands v. Fletcher.

9. ——. See Solicitor.

NUISANCE—Animal. See Public Health.

2. —— Escape of water. See Rylands v. Fletcher.

NUISANCE—continued.

3. —— Highway — Obstruction — Hosepipe laid across highway by frontager—Whether unreasonable use of highway. Contributory negligence — Standard applicable — Analogy with negligence—Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 28), ss. 1, 4.
* Trevett v. Lee - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 113

4. —— Highway. See Public Health.

5. —— Parking on highway. See Road Traffic.

6. —— Trees. See Injunction.

NULLITY. See Husband and Wife.

PARTNERSHIP—Conversion of cheque by partner. See Banking.

2. —— Dissolution—Partnership property—Conversion—One partner becoming enemy alien—Whether other partner trustee of partnership assets — Exchange of assets — Misappropriation of trust funds—Liability for interest—Rate of interest—Partnership action—Appropriate order.
Trust and trustee—Breach of trust—Rate of interest.
* Gordon v. Gonda - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 885

PATENT. See Contract—Suspension.

PENALTY. See Hire Purchase.

PRACTICE—Amendment of pleading. See Libel and Slander.

2. —— Amicus Curiae. See Mortmain.

3. —— Chancery Division—Applications ex parte—Affidavits—Office copies—Mortgage—Redemption and foreclosure—Notice—Place of redemption.
Mortgage—Practice.
* Practice Directions. (Applications: Affidavits: Mortgages)
Ch.D. 1 W.L.R. 36

4. —— Chancery Division—Master—Powers—Amendment of R.S.C., Ord. 55, r. 15.
* Practice Direction. (Powers of Masters under R.S.C., Ord. 55, r. 15.)
Ch.D. 1 W.L.R. 427

5. —— Commercial Court. See Sale of Goods—C.I.F.

6. —— Court expert — Report — Irrelevant matter expunged—Official referee—Jurisdiction—R.S.C., Ord. 37A, r. 1.
Official Referee.
* Audley Land Co. Ld. v. Kendall (Practice Note) - His Honour W. K. Carter Q.C. (Official Referee) 1 W.L.R. 639

7. —— Criminal. See Criminal Law.

8. —— Garnishee proceedings — Attachable debt—Money awarded to the judgment debtor under a judgment, in the hands of the Law Society—Money liable to statutory charges—Exact amount not calculable at the time of the garnishee order nisi—Whether such money can be attached.

PRACTICE—continued.

Practice and Procedure — Garnishee proceedings—Procedure—Garnishee order absolute—Right of judgment debtor to appear at the hearing—Right of appeal—R.S.C., Ord. 45, r. 1.

Legal Aid—Charge on property recovered—Garnishee—Order against Law Society—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1939 (12 & 13 Geo. 6, c. 51), s. 3—Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1359), reg. 16 (6).

* Dawson v. Preston. Law Society (garnishees) - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1219

9. —— Infant — Guardianship — Appeals from county courts or courts of summary jurisdiction—Reasons for decision below to be lodged with application for direction—Guardianship of Infants Acts, 1886 and 1925 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 27 and 15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 45).

* Practice Direction (Guardianship of Infants Acts, 1886 and 1925.) Ch.D. 1 W.L.R. 335

10. —— Inspection—Land—Not in possession of party—Specific performance—Sale of leasehold property—Building still requisitioned and in possession of the local authority—Order for inspection—Jurisdiction—R.S.C., Ord. 50, r. 3.

* Penfold v. Pearlberg Roxburgh J. 1 W.L.R. 1068

11. —— Jury, civil action—Disagreement of jury—Procedure for re-entry.

* Davidson v. Rodwell (Practice Note) Q.B.D. 1 W.L.R. 654

12. —— Parties. See Banking.

13. —— Parties—Joinder of parties—Defendants' application to add further defendants—Sole purpose to assist on counterclaim—No jurisdiction—R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 11.

* Atid Navigation Co. Ld. v. Fairplay Towage & Shipping Co. Ld. Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 336

14. —— Probate. See Probate.

15. —— Settlement of action—Enforcement—Action settled by consent on terms indorsed on counsels' briefs—No order of court—Non-compliance by one party with terms of settlement—Jurisdiction to enforce settlement—Informal settlement of actions—Form of order —" Tomlin " order.

* Green v. Rozen - Slade J. 1 W.L.R. 741

16. —— Striking out innuendo. See Libel.

17. —— Summary procedure under Order 14A—Action for specific performance—alternative claim for damages—Agreement to purchase or to find a purchaser for shares in limited company —" Property " including shares—" Purchase "—R.S.C., Ord. 14A (S.I. 1954, No. 1728/*L.*25).

* Woodlands v. Hinds Vaisey J. 1 W.L.R. 688

PRACTICE—continued.

18. —— Summary procedure under Order 14 —Part of claim—Final judgment signed under Order 14, r. 1, in respect of part of claim—Plaintiff not entitled to apply for judgment under Order 14, r. 1, in respect of balance of claim—R.S.C., Ord. 3, r. 6, Ord. 14, rr. 1, 4.

* Stainer v. Tragett - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1275

19. —— Summons for directions — Expert evidence—Liberty to call surveyors on term that statements be exchanged 14 days before trial—Plans and documents used in connexion with statements also to be exchanged—Shipping—Collision—R.S.C., Ord. 30.

* The Brixton (Owners) v. The Planter (Owners). The Planter Willmer J. 1 W.L.R. 898

20. —— Writ—Service out of jurisdiction—Quasi-contract—Transfer of assets by bankrupt two months before act of bankruptcy—Claim against transferees by trustee in bankruptcy—Claim quasi-contractual — Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59)—R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (e).

Bankruptcy—Quasi-contract.

* Rousou's (A Bankrupt) Trustee v. Rousou - Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 545

21. —— Writ of possession for recovery of land—Application for leave to issue—Rent Act information—R.S.C., Ord. 47, r. 1.

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Possession application. Execution—Sheriff—Writ of possession.

* Practice Direction (Writ of Possession) Q.B.D. 1 1W.L.R. 1314

PRESCRIPTION. See Easement.

PROBATE—Practice—Lost will—Proof—Ex parte application — Non-Contentious Probate Rules, 1954 (S.I. 1954, No. 796), r. 53 (1).

* In the Estate of Nuttall, decd. (Practice Note.) Probate Div. 1 W.L.R. 847

2. —— Practice — Particulars — Allegation that testator was not of sound mind—Request for detailed particulars of allegation—Extent to which particulars must be supplied—R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 25A.

* In re Reynolds, decd. Pearkes v. Reynolds - - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 12

PUBLIC HEALTH—Drainage—Garden path—Leading to front and back doors of dwelling-house—Whether " passage giving access to a " house "—Public Health Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 49), s. 56 (1).

* Bursted Properties Ld. v. Denton Urban District Council Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 82

2. —— Nuisance—Animal—Statute providing that " animals kept in such a place or " manner as to be prejudicial to health or a " nuisance " shall be a statutory nuisance—By-law prohibiting the keeping of noisy animals causing nuisance—Whether ultra vires—" Serious "—Public Health Act, 1936

PUBLIC HEALTH—continued.

(26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 49), s. 92—Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 249 (4).

By-law—Validity.

* Morrissey v. Galer

Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 110

3. —— Nuisance — Cellar — Cellar-head in pavement—Projection after resetting by local authority—Obligation of frontager to "be "kept in good condition and repair"—Whether duty to abate nuisance created by local authority—Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 35 (1).

Nuisance—Highway.

* Penney v. Berry - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1021

RATES AND RATING—Assessment—Rateable value—Dock undertaking—Valuation of office premises—"Profits basis"—Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 22.

* Clayton (Valuation Officer) v. British Transport Commission C.A. 1 W.L.R. 504

2. —— Docks—Freight-transport hereditament—Oil piped by company from ships into storage tanks on hereditament—"Dock pur-"poses"—"Dock undertaking"—Whether storage tanks warehouses—Business of shipping and unshipping—"Use of undertakers"—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 44), ss. 5 (1) (c), (2) (c), (3), 6.

* Shell-Mex and B.P. Ld. v. Clayton (Valuation Officer) - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 982

3. —— Industrial hereditament — Club — Royal Automobile Club—Workshops—Occupier company comprising members of club—Provision of facilities to members—Whether "by way of trade"—Not a factory or workshop—Repair of units of road service fleet — Whether "maintenance of road "vehicles"—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 149 (1) (c)—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 44), s. 3.

Club.

* Automobile Proprietary Ld. v. Brown (Valuation Officer) C.A. 1 W.L.R. 573

4. —— Industrial hereditament — Timber merchants' premises—Whether retail shop, or "premises of similar character where retail "trade or business . . . carried on"—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 44), s. 3 (1), (4).

"Shop." "Retail." "Wholesale."

* Dolton Bournes & Dolton Ld. v. Osmond (Valuation Officer) C.A. 1 W.L.R. 621

5. —— Practice—Appeal—Appeal by valuation officer to local valuation court—Rating authority in agreement with valuation officer's proposal—No steps taken by rating authority in reliance on valuation officer's proposal—Withdrawal of appeal by valuation officer—Rating authority not entitled to be heard—Local Government Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 26), s. 48.

* In re Brixham Urban District Council. In re Salcombe Urban District Council. In re Totnes Urban District Council. (Practice Note.)

Divl. Ct. 1 W.L.R. 5

RATES and RATING—continued.

6. —— Practice—Appeal—Appeal by valuation officer to valuation court—Rating authority in agreement with valuation officer's proposal—No steps taken by rating authority in reliance on valuation officer's proposal—Withdrawal of appeal by valuation officer—Rating authority's claim to be heard refused—Application for order of mandamus—Local Government Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 26), s. 48.

* In re Brixham Urban District Council. In re Totnes Urban District Council (Practice Note) - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 426

7. —— Science or fine art—Exemption—Society to promote folk dancing, folk songs and other folk music—Whether instituted for purposes of the fine arts exclusively—Whether supported wholly or in part by voluntary contributions—Scientific Societies Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 36), s. 1.

* O'Sullivan (Valuation Officer) v. English Folk Dance and Song Society C.A. 1 W.L.R. 907

RECEIVER. See Mortgage.

REVENUE—Income Tax—Expenses—Meals—Moneys paid by local authority to local government officer for evening meal when working extra hours—Whether expenditure of money on evening meal incurred "wholly, "exclusively and necessarily" in performance of duties of office or employment—Income Tax Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 10), Sch. 9, rr. 5, 9.

* Sanderson (Inspector of Taxes) v. Durbidge

Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 1087

2. —— Income tax — Profits of trade — Company — Resignations from agency and secretaryship to another company—Payment by third party of sum in consideration of resignation — Whether taxable as trading receipt.

* Anglo-French Exploration Co. Ld. v. Clayson (Inspector of Taxes)

Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 1314

3. —— Income tax — Profits of trade—Damages—Proceedings by agent for breach of contract terminating agency agreement—Compromise of proceedings on payment of agreed damages—Compensation received by agent for loss of agency—Whether taxable as profits of trade.

* Wiseburgh v. Domville (Inspector of Taxes) - Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 1287

4. —— Income tax—Transfer of assets to company incorporated abroad—Death of transferees — Settlement of shares in company — General bequest of shares—Liability of beneficiary to tax — "Associated operation" — Finance Act, 1936 (25 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 34), s. 18 (1) (2).

Will—Effect—Vesting of interests under it—Independent of probate.

* Bambridge v. Inland Revenue Commissioners - - H.L.(E.) 1 W.L.R. 1329

5. —— Profits tax — Company — Principal and subsidiary companies—Grouping notice—

REVENUE—continued.

Sums paid to principal company by subsidiary "by way of reimbursement of profits tax"—Amount deductible for income tax—Finance Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 54), s. 22—Finance Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 35), s. 38 (3).

* Gahan (Inspector of Taxes) v. Chloride Batteries Ld. - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 277

6. —— Profits tax—Company—Principal and subsidiary company—Grouping notice—Subsequent exemption of principal company from profits tax—Whether subsidiary assessable to profits tax—Finance Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 21—Finance Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 54), ss. 19, 22 (1) (2)—Finance Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 35), s. 31 (2).

* Heelex Investments Ld. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 289

ROAD TRAFFIC—Disqualification—Driving while disqualified—Sentence of imprisonment—Defendant aged 20 — Effect of Criminal Justice Act, 1948—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), s. 7 (4)—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 58), s. 17 (2)—Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2), s. 107 (2).

Children and Young Persons—Sentence for offence—Imprisonment.

* Davidson-Houston v. Lanning
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 858

2. —— Disqualification—Driving while disqualified—Sentence of imprisonment—Period for which disqualification should be imposed—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), s. 7 (4).

* Regina v. Phillips
C.C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1103

3. —— Disqualification—Limitation of disqualification to vehicles of a particular description—"Class or description"—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), s. 6.

* Petherick v. Buckland
Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 48

4. —— Negligence—Collision—Inference from facts—Stationary vehicle—Narrow clearance—Standard of care demanded of driver of moving vehicle—"All possible care."

Nuisance—Highway—Obstruction—Parking—Driver a trespasser on adjoining land—Whether legality of parking tainted.

* Randall v. Tarrant
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 255

5. —— Licence—Driving licence—Onus of proof—Not for prosecutor to prove that the defendant was not the holder of licence—Burden on defendant—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), s. 4 (1).

* John v. Humphreys
Divl. Ct. 1 W.L.R. 325

6. —— "Road"—Meaning—Dock road—Accident due to negligent driving of motor-lorry—Driver not insured—Claim for damages—Judgment not satisfied—Liability of Motor Insurers' Bureau—Whether dock road a road "to which the public has access"—Road

ROAD TRAFFIC—continued.

Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), ss. 34 (1), 121 (1).

* Buchanan v. Motor Insurers' Bureau
McNair J. 1 W.L.R. 488

7. ——. See Legal Aid—Costs.

RYLANDS v. FLETCHER—Exceptions to rule—Consent to danger—Escape of water from stop tap in common passage way—Damage to tenant's stock on lower floor—Negligent system of water supply—Liability.

* A. Prosser & Son Ld. v. Levy
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1224

SALE OF GOODS—C.I.F.—Cancelling clause—Prevention of shipment by specified clause—Whether seller must prove impossibility of purchasing goods afloat—Prohibition of export—Extension "by two months."

Commercial Court—Practice—Declaratory judgment—Value of.

* J. H. Vantol Ld. v. Fairclough Dodd & Jones Ld. - McNair J. 1 W.L.R. 642
C.A. 1 W.L.R. 1302

2. —— F.O.B.—Construction of contract—Goods "afloat per S.S. Morton Bay due "London approximately 8th June"—Whether mere identification of ship and goods or condition of contract.

* Macpherson Train & Co. Ld. v. Howard Ross & Co. Ld.
McNair J. 1 W.L.R. 640

SALE OF LAND—Negligence by solicitor. See Solicitor.

SALVAGE. See Shipping.

SETTLED LAND — Trustee for sale—Improvement—From capital money—Repairs—Expenditure on repairs by trustee out of income—Claim by tenant for life for recoupment out of capital—Settled Land Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 18), s. 73 (1)—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63), ss. 1 (1), 81 (1), and Sch. III, Pt. II, para. 23.

* In re Wynn. Public Trustee v. Newborough (No. 2)
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 940

SETTLEMENT — Construction—Investment clause—Power to invest in stocks of "any "British colony or dependency"—Whether Dominion stocks included—"Colony"—"Dependency"—Statute of Westminster, 1931 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 4), ss. 1, 2.

Canada. Commonwealth.

* In re Brassey's Settlement. Barclays Bank Ld. v. Brassey
Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 192

SETTLEMENT OF ACTION. See Practice.

SHIPPING—Collision—Damages for detention—Vessel under charter—Rise in freight market during detention of vessel—Vessel delayed from trading under enhanced freight rates in subsequent charter—Measure of damages.

* Dirphys (Owners) v. Soya (Owners). The Soya - Willmer J. 1 W.L.R. 1246

SHIPPING—continued.

2. —— Collision—Salvors' vessel in collision with salved property—Standard of care—Principles applicable.

Shipping—Salvage—Services at request—Vessel answering S.O.S. and distress signals—Misconduct of salvors—Negligent navigation—Forfeiture of award.

* The Rene (Owners) v. The Alenquer (Owners). The Alenquer.

The Alenquer (Owners, Master and Crew) v. The Rene, Her Cargo and Freight (Owners). The Rene.

Willmer J. 1 W.L.R. 263

3. —— Sale of Ship—Hull damage—Class maintained—Whether purchaser entitled to refuse ship until repaired—Meaning of "free from average"—"Average"—Priam Terms—Lloyd's survey—Repairs deferred to owner's convenience.

* Kelman v. Livanos

McNair J. 1 W.L.R. 590

4. ——. See Canada.

SHOP—Early closing—Registered shop—Local order providing for Thursday closing—No provision for registered shops—Application of order to registered shops—Shops Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 28), ss. 1, 53 (1) (13), 76 (2).

* Miller's Cash Stores Ld. v. West Ham Corporation - Divl.Ct. 1 W.L.R. 1121

SLANDER. See Libel and Slander.

SOLICITOR—Costs—Taxation—Compulsory purchase — Registered land — Vendors' costs payable by purchasers—Scale fee allowed—Lands Clauses (Consolidation) Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), ss. 81, 82, 83—Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1883 (S.R. & O., 1882)—Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1953 (S.I. 1953, No. 117/*L.*1)—Solicitors' Remuneration (Registered Land) Orders, 1925, 1944 and 1953 (S.R. & O., 1926, No. 2/*L.*2; S.R. & O., 1944, No. 204/*L.*6; S.I. 1953, No. 118/*L.*2).

* In re West Ferry Road, Poplar. In re Padwick's Estate

Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 439

C.A. 1 W.L.R. 751

2. —— Discipline. See Malaya.

3. —— Negligence—Sale of land—Land of client sold by auction—Requisition by purchaser as to title—Requisition answered in accordance with general conveyancing practice—Purchaser thereby enabled to refuse to complete and to recover deposit—Opportunity for resale—Advice against resale pending trial of action to recover deposit—Property damaged by fire—Uninsured—Remoteness of damage.

* Simmons v. Pennington & Son

C.A. 1 W.L.R. 183

STATUTE—Application to Crown. See Canada.

2. —— Ejusdem Generis Rule. See War Damage.

3. —— Interpretation—Ejusdem generis. See Electricity.

STATUTE—continued.

4. —— Interpretation. See Landlord and Tenant—Act of 1954.

STATUTORY DUTY—Breach. See Agriculture.

2. —— Breach. See Building.

3. —— Breach. See Dock.

4. —— Breach. See Factory.

5. —— Breach. See Mines and Minerals.

6. —— Breach. See Negligence.

TORT—Liability of Crown. See Crown Proceedings.

TRADE DISPUTE — Industrial Disputes Tribunal—Jurisdiction—Award by tribunal that recognized terms and conditions should apply to local authority—Local authority's circumvention of award by dismissing and re-engaging employee for same duties on different terms—Report of an "issue" by union to Minister—Reference of issue by Minister to tribunal—"Issue" and "dispute"—Not mutually exclusive—No duty to exhaust alternative negotiating machinery before reporting issue to Minister—Industrial Disputes Order, 1951 (S.I. 1951, No. 1376), arts. 2 (b), 10, 12 (1).

* Regina v. Industrial Disputes Tribunal. Ex parte Portland Urban District Council - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 949

TRESPASS—Child—Injury to—Allurement—Trespasser—Road works—Excavation—Child injured when playing inside the barrier—Whether excavation constituted an allurement—Liability of contractors—Duty of care—Extent.

Licensor and Licensee—Child—Allurement.

* Perry v. Thomas Wrigley Ld. and Another - Manchester Summer Assize

1 W.L.R. 1164

2. —— Child. See Negligence.

TRUST—Breach—Rate of interest. See Partnership.

2. ——. See Partnership; Will.

TRUSTEE—Compulsory disclosure of criminating evidence. See Criminal Law.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER — Conveyance—Parcels—Ill-defined boundary—Inference of straight line—Agreement by adjoining landowners as to position of boundary—Whether successors in title bound—Estoppel—The subsequent conveyance—Parcels as previously described—Construction.

Estoppel—Conduct, by. Easement—Drainage — Licence — Reciprocal — Revocation — Benefit of manhole and outflow.

* Hopgood v. Brown - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 213

2. —— Implied covenant—Warranty of fitness—Contract to purchase dwelling-house—Implied warranty—Purchase of bungalow in course of erection or to be erected—Cracks in walls appearing after completion—Caused by withdrawal of moisture from subsoil by roots of poplar trees—Not fit for habitation—Builder's obligation to provide proper foundations—National Conditions of Sale, 15th ed., 12 (3).

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—continued.

* JENNINGS v. TAVENER
Jones J. 1 W.L.R. 932

WAR DAMAGE—Business insurance scheme—"Goods"—Working drawings used in manufacture—Excluded as "documents owned "for the purposes of a business"—War Damage Act, 1943 (6 & 7 Geo. 6, c. 21), ss. 84 (1), 104.

Ejusdem Generis Rule—Statute.

* J. H. TUCKER & CO. LD. v. BOARD OF TRADE - - Vaisey J. 1 W.L.R. 655

WEST AFRICA (NIGERIA)—Land—Ownership—Statutory transfer of land to Crown—Subsequent abandonment under statute as amended—Effect—Title to ownership reverting to original owners—Usufructuary and occupancy rights intermediately acquired not affected—To be decided in independent proceedings—Declaration and injunction—Desirability of formal order embodying precise language of relief granted—Niger Lands Transfer Ordinance, 1916, c. 86 (as amended by Ordinances Nos. 22 and 61 of 1945), s. 14 (now s. 15 of c. 149 of the Laws of Nigeria, 1948 Rev.).

KODILINYE v. ANATOGU - J.C. 1 W.L.R. 231

WILL—Construction—Annuity—One third of income of residuary trust fund payable to widow for life—If insufficient to provide £6,500 in any year "free of English income and "super-tax" trustees to pay balance "out of "the income of the trust fund"—Whether annuity a continuing charge on income.

* In re CAMERON, DECD. CURRIE v. MILLIGAN - - - - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 140

2. —— Construction—"Children"—Whether limited to children in esse—Gift of share of residuary estate to "my grand-"children, the children of my son E. J. M."—Distribution to be "when the youngest is "21 years of age."

* In re MANNERS, DECD. PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. MANNERS - Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 1096

WILL—continued.

3. —— Construction—"Colony"—Bequest of postage stamp collection—"British "Colonies"—Ambit of gift.

* In re VAN LESSEN
Wynn-Parry J. 1 W.L.R. 1326

4. —— Construction—Omission—Clause ungrammatical and illogical unless words supplied from precedent—Judicial notice that precedent available.

* In re FOLLETT, DECD. BARCLAYS BANK LD. v. DOVELL - C.A. 1 W.L.R. 429

5. —— Construction—Omission—Gift of income during minority—Whether gift of corpus implied—Bequest of "All other money . . . "up in trust for my four grandchildren . . . "until each reaches the age of twenty-five "years"—Conflict of authorities—Ordinary rule of construction applicable—No gift of corpus.

Punctuation—Nonsensical full stop—Construed as comma.

* In re ARNOULD, DECD. ARNOULD v. LLOYD Upjohn J. 1 W.L.R. 539

6. —— Construction—Omission—Implied power of appointment—Words inserted—No restriction on method of exercise—Drafting by scissors or paste.

* In re CORY, DECD. CORY v. MOREL
Harman J. 1 W.L.R. 725

7. —— Construction. See CHARITY.

8. —— Forfeiture clause—Protective trust—Beneficial interest in income subject to forfeiture if income became payable to any other person—Authority given by beneficiary for payment of debts out of future dividend of a company—Dividend never declared—Authority nugatory—Interest not forfeited.

Trust—Protective trust.

* In re LONGMAN. WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. HATTON - Danckwerts J. 1 W.L.R. 197

9. —— Immovables. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

10. —— Lost. See PROBATE—Practice.

11. —— Unproved. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

TABLE OF CASES CITED

PAGE

Abbott v. Abbott [1931] P. 26; 100 L.J.P. 36; 144 L.T. 598; 47 T.L.R. 207; 45 S.J. 138; affirmed 47 T.L.R. 222, C.A. 742

Abdul Karim Basma v. Weekes. See Basina v. Weekes.

Aberdeen (Assessor for) v. Shell-Mex and B.P. and Shell-Mex and B.P. v. Assessor for Aberdeen, 1953 S.L.T. 151; 1953 S.C. 211; 46 R. & I.T. 688 . . 989, 993, 994, 995, 999, 1003, 1004

Adams v. Naylor [1946] A.C. 543; 115 L.J.K.B. 356; 175 L.T. 97; 62 T.L.R. 434; 90 S.J. 527; [1946] 2 All E.R. 241, H.L. 1119

Addie (Robert) & Sons (Collieries) Ld. v. Dumbreck [1929] A.C. 358; 98 L.J.P.C. 119; 140 L.T. 650; 45 T.L.R. 267; 34 Com.Cas. 214, H.L. 260, 1007, 1166, 1167, 1168

Addison v. Overend (1796) 6 Term.Rep. 766; 101 E.R. 816 830

Admiralty Commissioners v. S.S. Volute [1922] 1 A.C. 129; 91 L.J.P. 38; 126 L.T. 425; 38 T.L.R. 225; 66 S.J. 156; 15 Asp.M.L.C. 530, H.L. 1189

Adsett v. K. and L. Steelfounders and Engineers [1953] 1 W.L.R. 137; 97 S.J. 49; [1953] 1 All E.R. 97n.; 51 L.G.R. 99; affirmed [1953] 1 W.L.R. 773; 97 S.J. 419; [1953] 2 All E.R. 320; 51 L.G.R. 418, C.A. . . . 664, 1026, 1054, 1060, 1253

Agar v. Nokes (1905) 93 L.T. 605; 69 J.P. 374; 3 L.G.R. 1168, D.C. . . . 1129

Alhadeff v. Alhadeff [1951] W.N. 367; 95 S.J. 547 316

Allen v. Allen and D'Arcy (1860) 2 Sw. & Tr. 107 846

Allinson v. General Council of Medical Education and Registration [1894] 1 Q.B. 750, C.A. 415

Allsop, In re [1884] W.N. 196; 1 T.L.R. 4 969

Almeroth v. Chivers & Sons, 92 S.J. 71; [1948] 1 All E.R. 53, C.A. 115

American Economic Laundry v. Little [1951] 1 K.B. 400; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 1080; 94 S.J. 803; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1186, C.A. 237, 242, 246

Andrew v. Bridgman [1908] 1 K.B. 596; 77 L.J.K.B. 272; 98 L.T. 656; 52 S.J. 148, C.A. 571

Andrew v. Grove [1902] 1 K.B. 625; 71 L.J.K.B. 439; 86 L.T. 720; 50 W.R. 524; 18 T.L.R. 455; 46 S.J. 380, D.C. 713

Andrews v. Partington (1791) 3 Bro.C.C. 401; 29 E.R. 610 . . . . 1101, 1103

Apex Supply Co., In re [1942] Ch. 108; 111 L.J.Ch. 89; 166 L.T. 264; 86 S.J. 27; [1941] 3 All E.R. 473 394

Argentino, The (1888) 13 P.D. 191; 58 L.J.P. 1; 59 L.T. 914; 37 W.R. 210; 6 Asp.M.L.C. 348, C.A. 1248, 1250

Arlidge v. Tottenham Urban Council [1922] 2 K.B. 719; 92 L.J.K.B. 21; 127 L.T. 841; 86 J.P. 171; 38 T.L.R. 819; 66 S.J. 694; 20 L.G.R. 594, D.C. . . . 874

Armitage v. Williams (1859) 27 Beav. 346; 7 W.R. 650; 54 E.R. 135 1101

A/S Tankexpress v. Compagnie Financiere Belge de Petroles S.A. [1949] A.C. 76; [1949] L.J.R. 170; 93 S.J. 26; [1948] 2 All E.R. 939; 82 Ll.L.Rep. 43, H.L. 762

Ashton, In re [1938] Ch. 482; 54 T.L.R. 491; [1938] 1 All E.R. 707; affirmed sub nom. Farley v. Westminster Bank [1939] A.C. 430; 108 L.J.Ch. 307; 161 L.T. 103; 55 T.L.R. 943; [1939] 3 All E.R. 491, H.L. . 1038, 1041, 1042

Ashworth v. McQuirk (J.) & Co. Ld. [1944] 1 K.B. 1; 60 T.L.R. 14; [1943] 2 All E.R. 446 . . . . . 516, 520

Astor v. Perry [1935] A.C. 398; 104 L.J.K.B. 423; 153 L.T. 1; 51 T.L.R. 325; 79 S.J. 231; 19 T.C. 255, H.L. 278

Atkinson v. London & N. E. Railway Co. [1926] 1 K.B. 313; 95 L.J.K.B. 266; 134 L.T. 217; 90 J.P. 17; 42 T.L.R. 79; 23 L.G.R. 702; 28 Cox C.C. 112, D.C. 1197

Atkinson v. Paice (1781) 1 Bro.C.C. 91; 28 E.R. 1005, L.C. 541

Attenborough v. Solomon [1913] A.C. 76; 29 T.L.R. 79; 82 L.J.Ch. 178; 107 L.T. 833; 57 S.J. 76 . . . . . 461, 463

Attorney-General v. Antrobus [1905] 2 Ch. 188; 74 L.J.Ch. 599; 92 L.T. 790; 69 J.P. 141; 21 T.L.R. 471; 49 S.J. 459; 3 L.G.R. 1071 . . . 607, 609

Attorney-General v. Brighton & Hove Co-operative Supply Association [1900] 1 Ch. 276; 69 L.J.Ch. 204; 81 L.T. 762; 48 W.R. 314; 16 T.L.R. 144; 64 J.P.J. 68, C.A. 115

Attorney-General v. De Keyser's Royal Hotel [1920] A.C. 508; 89 L.J.Ch. 417; 122 L.T. 691; 36 T.L.R. 600; 64 S.J. 513, H.L. 1033

Attorney-General v. Lockwood (1842) 9 M. & W. 378; 152 E.R. 160 . . 1203, 1206

Attorney-General v. Partington (1864) 3 H. & C. 193 497

Attorney-General v. Tomline (1880) 15 Ch.D. 150; 43 L.T. 486, C.A. . . . 1033

Attorney-General v. Watford R. D. C. [1912] 1 Ch. 417; 81 L.J.Ch. 281; 106 L.T. 27; 76 J.P. 74; 10 L.G.R. 364 607

PAGE

Attorney-General and London Property Investment Trust v. Richmond (Mayor of) and Gosling & Sons (1903) 89 L.T. 700; 68 J.P. 73; 20 T.L.R. 131; 2 L.G.R. 628 607

Attorney-General of Commonwealth of Australia v. Adelaide S.S. Co. [1913] A.C. 781; 83 L.J.P.C. 84; 109 L.T. 258; 12 Asp.M.L.C. 361 762

Attorney-General (Quebec) v. Attorney-General (Canada). See In re Silver Bros.

Austin's Case (1672) 1 Vent. 189; 86 E.R. 128 607

Badcock v. Badcock & Chamberlain (1858) 1 Sw. & Tr. 189; 31 L.T.(o.s.) 268; 6 W.R. 737 304

Bain, In re [1930] 1 Ch. 224; 99 L.J.Ch. 171; 142 L.T. 344; 45 T.L.R. 617, C.A. . 1038

Bain v. Moss Hutchison Line [1949] 1 K.B. 51; 64 T.L.R. 473; [1948] L.J.R. 1918; [1948] 2 All E.R. 294 341

Baker, In re, Baker v. Baker [1904] 1 Ch. 157; 73 L.J.Ch. 172; 89 L.T. 742; 52 W.R. 213; 48 S.J. 101 . . . . . 198, 199

Baker v. Baker [1954] P. 33; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 857; 117 J.P. 556; 97 S.J. 798; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1199 385

Balfour v. Balfour [1919] 2 K.B. 571; 88 L.J.K.B. 1054; 121 L.T. 346; 35 T.L.R. 609; 63 S.J. 661, C.A. 976

Bambridge v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1460; 98 S.J. 851; [1954] 3 All E.R. 682; [1954] T.R. 375; 48 R. & I.T. 63; 33 A.T.C. 393; T.C. Leaflet 1716, C.A. 1330

Bamford v. Turnley (1862) 3 B. & S. 66; 31 L.J.Q.B. 286; 6 L.T. 721; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 377; 10 W.R. 803; 122 E.R. 27 122

Barclay, In re, Barclay v. Andrew [1899] 1 Ch. 674; 68 L.J.Ch. 383; 80 L.T. 702 . 889

Barclays Bank v. Bird [1954] Ch. 274; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 319 156

Barker v. Barker [1949] P. 219; [1949] L.J.R. 464; 65 T.L.R. 49; 113 J.P. 91; 93 S.J. 88; [1949] 1 All E.R. 247; 47 L.G.R. 143, D.C. 671

Barker v. Barker [1950] W.N. 158; 94 S.J. 285; [1950] 1 All E.R. 812, C.A. . 304

Barkway v. South Wales Transport Co. [1949] 1 K.B. 54; 64 T.L.R. 462; [1948] 2 All E.R. 460; [1948] L.J.R. 1921; reversed [1950] A.C. 185; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 597; 114 J.P. 172; 94 S.J. 128; [1950] 1 All E.R. 392, H.L. . . 341

Barley, In re [1923] 1 Ch. 177; sub nom. In re Barley, Ex parte Harrison, 92 L.J.Ch. 419; [1922] B. & C.R. 258 22

Barnardo v. McHugh [1891] A.C. 388; 7 T.L.R. 726; 61 L.J.Q.B. 721; 65 L.T. 423; 55 J.P. 628; 40 W.R. 97 468

Barnett v. Barnett [1955] P. 21; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 229; 99 S.J. 79; [1954] 3 All E.R. 689 1147

Barnett (W. & R.) v. Commissioner of Valuation for Northern Ireland [1942] N.I. 20 989

Barr, Crombie & Co. v. Inland Revenue [1945] S.C. 271; 26 T.C. 406 . 1292, 1319, 1320

Bartholomew v. Bartholomew [1952] W.N. 535; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 934; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1035; 117 J.P. 35 . . . . . 522, 525, 526, 529, 531

Basma v. Weekes [1950] A.C. 441; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 1047; sub nom. Abdul Karim Basma v. Weekes [1950] 2 All E.R. 146, P.C. 150

Bastable v. Little [1907] 1 K.B. 59; 76 L.J.K.B. 77; 96 L.T. 115; 71 J.P. 52; 23 T.L.R. 38; 51 S.J. 49; 5 L.G.R. 279; 21 Cox C.C. 354, D.C. 1209

Bates v. Stone Parish Council [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1249; 118 J.P. 502; 98 S.J. 698; [1954] 3 All E.R. 38, C.A. 1007

Battersea (Lord) v. London City Sewers Commissioners [1895] 2 Ch. 708; 65 L.J.Ch. 81; 73 L.T. 116; 59 J.P. 728; 44 W.R. 124; 39 S.J. 689; 13 R. 795 . 618

Battersea Metropolitan Borough v. British Iron and Steel Research Association [1949] 1 K.B. 434; [1949] L.J.R. 646; 65 T.L.R. 183; 93 S.J. 117; 41 R. & I.T. 569; 152 E.G. 448, C.A. 923, 929

Baxter v. Baxter [1948] A.C. 274; 64 T.L.R. 8; [1947] 2 All E.R. 886; [1948] L.J.R. 479; 92 S.J. 25 537

Beddy, In re (1953) unreported 1038, 1045, 1048

Beech, In re, Saint v. Beech [1920] 1 Ch. 40; 89 L.J.Ch. 9; 122 L.T. 117; 63 S.J. 801 889

Bell v. Kennedy (1868) L.R. 1 Sc. & Div. 307, H.L. 425

Bell v. Travco Hotels [1953] 1 Q.B. 473; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 556; 97 S.J. 170; [1953] 1 All E.R. 638, C.A. 208

Bell (Adam) v. Strathern & Blair (1954) 104 L.J. 618 189

Bellew (Lord) v. Markey (1878) 2 L.R.Ir. 185 1280

Belsize Motor Supply Co. v. Cox [1914] 1 K.B. 244; 83 L.J.K.B. 261; 110 L.T. 151 722, 723, 724

Bendall v. McWhirter [1952] 2 Q.B. 466; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1332; 96 S.J. 344; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1307, C.A. 155, 157, 158, 159

Benham v. Gambling [1941] A.C. 157; 110 L.J.K.B. 49; 164 L.T. 290; 57 T.L.R. 177; 84 S.J. 703; [1941] 1 All E.R. 7, H.L. 1065

PAGE

Benn v. Kamm & Co. [1952] 2 Q.B. 127; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 873; [1952] 1 All E.R. 833, C.A. 974

Bentleys, Stokes and Lowless v. Beeson [1952] W.N. 280; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1529; 96 S.J. 345; [1952] 2 All E.R. 82; [1952] T.R. 239; 45 R. & I.T. 461; 33 T.C. 491; 31 A.T.C. 229, C.A. 1089

Berkhamsted Grammar School, In re [1908] 2 Ch. 25; 77 L.J.Ch. 571; 99 L.T. 147; 72 J.P. 273; 24 T.L.R. 514; 6 L.G.R. 791 . . . . . 42, 44

Berthiaume v. Dastous [1930] A.C. 79; 45 T.L.R. 607; 99 L.J.P.C. 66; 142 L.T. 54, P.C. 330

Betts v. Stevens [1910] 1 K.B. 1; 79 L.J.K.B. 17; 101 L.T. 564; 73 J.P. 486; 26 T.L.R. 5; 7 L.G.R. 1052; 22 Cox C.C. 187, D.C. 1208, 1209

Bew v. Bew [1899] 2 Ch. 467; 68 L.J.Ch. 657; 81 L.T. 284; 48 W.R. 124, C.A. . 304

Billings v. Reed [1945] K.B. 11; 114 L.J.K.B. 11; 171 L.T. 312; 61 T.L.R. 27; 88 S.J. 398; [1944] 2 All E.R. 415, C.A. 1119

Birmingham and District Land Co. v. London and North Western Railway Co. (1888) 40 Ch.D. 268; 60 L.T. 527, C.A. 763, 783, 795, 798

Birmingham Small Arms Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1951] W.N. 349; 95 S.J. 527; [1951] 2 All E.R. 296; [1950] T.R. 163; 44 R. & I.T. 443; 30 A.T.C. 158, H.L. 279

Birtwistle v. Hindle. See Hindle v. Birtwistle.

Blake v. Woolf [1898] 2 Q.B. 426; 67 L.J.K.B. 813; 79 L.T. 188; 62 J.P. 659; 47 W.R. 8; 42 S.J. 688, D.C. 1232

Bleckly, In re [1951] Ch. 740; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 902; 95 S.J. 335; [1951] 1 All E.R. 1064, C.A. 1103

Bloxam v. Hubbard (1804) 5 East 407; 1 Smith K.B. 487; 102 E.R. 1126 . 830, 831

Bloxwich Iron and Steel Co., In re [1894] W.N. 111; 38 S.J. 546; 1 Mans. 350; 8 R. 442 165

Blunt v. Blunt [1943] A.C. 517; 112 L.J.P. 58; 169 L.T. 33; 59 T.L.R. 315; 87 S.J. 220; [1943] 2 All E.R. 76, H.L. 1237, 1244

Blyth v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. (1856) 11 Exch. 781; 25 L.J.Ex. 212; 26 L.T.(o.s.) 261; 20 J.P. 247; 2 Jur.(N.S.) 333; 4 W.R. 294; 156 E.R. 1047 . 1233

Bolam v. Barlow [1949] T.R. 65; 31 T.C. 136 1093

Bolton v. Stone [1951] A.C. 850; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 977; 95 S.J. 333; [1951] 1 All E.R. 1078; 50 L.G.R. 32 953

Borthwick, In re [1949] Ch. 395; [1949] L.J.R. 752; 93 S.J. 147; [1949] 1 All E.R. 472 . . . . . 1106, 1218

Boulting v. Boulting (1864) 3 Sw. & Tr. 329; 33 L.J.P.M. & A. 33; 9 L.T. 779; 10 Jur.(N.S.) 182; 12 W.R. 389; 164 E.R. 1302 487

Boulton Bros. & Co., In re [1927] 1 Ch. 79; 96 L.J.Ch. 90; [1927] B. & C.R. 1, C.A. 802

Bourke v. Davis (1889) 44 Ch.D. 110; 62 L.T. 34; 38 W.R. 167; 6 T.L.R. 87 . 607

Bowling v. Cox [1926] A.C. 751 548

Bowman v. Secular Society [1917] A.C. 406; 86 L.J.Ch. 568; 117 L.T. 161; 33 T.L.R. 376; 61 S.J. 478, H.L. 1039

Boyd v. Boyd, 55 T.L.R. 3; [1938] 4 All E.R. 181 526

Bradby, In re (1936) Unreported motion 1241, 1242

Bradley-Hole v. Cusen [1953] 1 Q.B. 300; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 193; 97 S.J. 45, sub nom. Hole v. Cuzen [1953] 1 All E.R. 87, C.A. 156

Brandt (H. O.) & Co. v. Morris (H. N.) & Co. [1917] 2 K.B. 784; 87 L.J.K.B. 101; 117 L.T. 196, C.A. 150

Brassey's Settlement, In re, Barclays Bank v. Brassey [1955] 1 W.L.R. 192; 99 S.J. 149; [1955] 1 All E.R. 577 . . . . . 1326, 1328

Brewer v. Westminster Bank [1952] W.N. 435; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 568; 96 S.J. 531; [1952] 2 All E.R. 650 831

Brierly v. Kendall (1852) 17 Q.B. 937; 21 L.J.Q.B. 161; 18 L.T.(o.s.) 254; 16 Jur. 449; 117 E.R. 1540 . . . . . 722, 723

British and Argentine Meat Co. v. Randall (1939) 162 L.T. 91; 83 S.J. 943; [1939] 4 All E.R. 293 700

British and Foreign Marine Insurance Co. v. Gaunt [1921] 2 A.C. 41; 90 L.J.K.B. 801; 125 L.T. 491; 37 T.L.R. 632; 65 S.J. 551; 15 Asp.M.L.C. 305; 26 Com.Cas. 247, H.L. 937, 938, 939

British Coal Corporation v. R. [1935] A.C. 500; 104 L.J.P.C. 58; 153 L.T. 283; 51 T.L.R. 508; 79 S.J. 541, P.C. 192, 195

British Insulated and Helsby Cables v. Atherton [1926] A.C. 205; 95 L.J.K.B. 336; 134 L.T. 289; 42 T.L.R. 187, H.L. 1318

British Launderers' Research Association v. Hendon Rating Authority [1949] 1 K.B. 462; [1949] L.J.R. 416; 119 J.P. 72; 65 T.L.R. 103; 93 S.J. 58; [1949] 1 All E.R. 21; 47 L.G.R. 113; 41 R. & I.T. 564 915

British Motor Syndicate v. Taylor & Son [1900] 1 Ch. 577 1004

British Russian Gazette and Trade Outlook v. Associated Newspapers [1933] 2 K.B. 616; 102 L.J.K.B. 775; 149 L.T. 545, C.A. 304

Brodie v. Brodie [1917] P. 271; 86 L.J.P. 140; 117 L.T. 542; 33 T.L.R. 525; 62 S.J. 71 . . . . . 730, 734

Brougham v. Brougham [1895] P. 288; 64 L.J.P. 125; 11 R. 667 481

PAGE

Brougham and Vaux's (Lord) Settled Estates, In re [1954] Ch. 24; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 465; 97 S.J. 540; [1953] 2 All E.R. 655 943
Brunsden v. Humphrey (1884) 14 Q.B.D. 141; 53 L.J.Q.B. 476; 51 L.T. 529; 49 J.P. 4; 32 W.R. 944, C.A. 1278
Bryant, Powis and Bryant v. Quebec Bank [1893] A.C. 170; 62 L.J.P.C. 68; 68 L.T. 546; 41 W.R. 600; 9 T.L.R. 322; 1 R. 336, P.C. 828
Buchler v. Buchler [1947] P. 25; [1947] L.J.R. 820; 176 L.T. 341; 63 T.L.R. 100; 111 J.P. 179; 91 S.J. 99; [1947] 1 All E.R. 319, C.A. 1014
Buckland v. Guildford Gas Light and Coke Co. [1949] 1 K.B. 410; 113 J.P. 44; 93 S.J. 41; [1948] 2 All E.R. 1086; 47 L.G.R. 75 . . . . 1008, 1010
Bugge v. Taylor [1941] 1 K.B. 198 490
Bull v. Bull [1955] 1 Q.B. 234; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 78; 99 S.J. 60; [1955] 1 All E.R. 253; 18 M.L.R. 303, 408; 19 Conv.(N.S.) 146 . . . 157, 733, 734
Burchell v. Hickisson (1880) 50 L.J.C.P. 101 1007
Burdick v. Garrick (1870) 5 Ch.App. 233; 39 L.J.Ch. 369; 18 W.R. 387, C.A. 889, 896
Burgess, In re, Ex parte Burgess (1887) 57 L.T. 200; 35 W.R. 702; 4 Morr. 186, D.C. 801
Burns v. Terry (Joseph) & Sons Ltd. [1951] 1 K.B. 454; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 349; 114 J.P. 613; 94 S.J. 837; [1950] 2 All E.R. 987; 49 L.G.R. 161, C.A. 136, 137, 1198
Bush, Beach & Gent v. Road [1939] 2 K.B. 524; [1939] 3 All E.R. 302; 108 L.J. K.B. 801; 161 L.T. 117; 55 T.L.R. 862; 83 S.J. 641 . . 1289, 1320, 1321
Butchart v. Butchart and Hill [1901] A.C. 266; 70 L.J.P. 29; 84 L.T. 209, H.L. . 558
Butler, The (1874) L.R. 4 A. & E. 178; 43 L.J.Adm. 17; 30 L.T. 475; 22 W.R. 759; 2 Asp.M.L.C. 237 265
Butler v. Standard Telephones and Cables [1940] 1 K.B. 399; 109 L.J.K.B. 238; 163 L.T. 145; 56 T.L.R. 273; 84 S.J. 189; [1940] 1 All E.R. 121 . 637, 934

Cababé v. Walton-upon-Thames Urban Council [1912] 2 K.B. 432; affirmed [1913] 1 K.B. 481, C.A.; affirmed [1914] A.C. 102; 83 L.J.K.B. 243; 110 L.T. 674; 78 J.P. 129; 58 S.J. 270; 12 L.G.R. 104, H.L. 607, 608
Cackett (orse. Trice) v. Cackett [1950] P. 253; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 723; 94 S.J. 256; [1950] 1 All E.R. 677 . . . . . 537, 674
Cairncross v. Lorimer (1860) 3 L.T. 130; 7 Jur.(N.S.) 149; 3 Macq. 827, H.L. 213, 229
Callaghan v. Fred Kidd & Son (Engineers) [1944] K.B. 560; 113 L.J.K.B. 381; 170 L.T. 368; 60 T.L.R. 409; 88 S.J. 239; 42 L.G.R. 250, C.A. . . . 1324
Calvert v. Wainwright [1947] K.B. 526; [1947] L.J.R. 1335; 177 L.T. 159; 63 T.L.R. 199; [1947] 1 All E.R. 282; 27 T.C. 475 1318
Campbell (Donald) & Co. v. Pollak [1927] A.C. 732; 43 T.L.R. 495; 71 S.J. 450, H.L. 708
Campbell (Lord Colin) (1888) 20 Q.B.D. 816; 59 L.T. 194; 36 W.R. 582; 4 T.L.R. 374; 5 Morr. 94, C.A. 802, 803
Campbeltown Coal Co. v. Duke of Argyll, 1926 S.C. 126 . . . . . 90, 93
Canada Steamship Lines Ld. v. Emile Charland Ld. [1933] Ex.C.R. 147 . 1033
Canadian Pacific Railway Co. v. Rex [1931] A.C. 414; 100 L.J.P.C. 129; 145 L.T. 129, P.C. 764, 765, 766, 767, 784, 785, 796
Capital and Provincial Property Trust v. Rice [1952] A.C. 142; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 557; [1951] 2 All E.R. 600 477
Carpenter v. Carpenter [1955] 1 W.L.R. 669; 99 S.J. 419; [1955] 2 All E.R. 449 1013
Carr v. Mercantile Produce Co. Ld. [1949] 2 K.B. 601; [1949] L.J.R. 1597; 113 J.P. 488; 93 S.J. 588; [1949] 2 All E.R. 531; 47 L.G.R. 642, D.C. . 1197
Carroll, In re [1931] 1 K.B. 317; 47 T.L.R. 125; 100 L.J.K.B. 113; 144 L.T. 383; 95 J.P. 25; 75 S.J. 98; 29 L.G.R. 152, C.A. 468
Carstairs v. Taylor (1871) L.R. 6 Ex. 217; 40 L.J.Ex. 129; 19 W.R. 723 1231, 1232, 1233
Carter v. Pickering, 113 J.P. 132; 93 S.J. 165; [1949] 1 All E.R. 340; 47 L.G.R. 267, D.C. 602
Cartwright, In re (1939) unreported motion 1241
Cave v. Dudley Co-operative Society (1934) 103 L.J.K.B. 569; 151 L.T. 448; 98 J.P. 265; 30 Cox C.C. 151; 32 L.G.R. 515, D.C. 377
Cayzer, Irvine & Co. v. Board of Trade [1927] 1 K.B. 269; 95 L.J.K.B. 134; 136 L.T. 7; 42 T.L.R. 163; 70 S.J. 347 1033
Celia (S.S.) v. Volturno (S.S.) [1921] 2 A.C. 544; 90 L.J.P. 385; 126 L.T. 1; 37 T.L.R. 969; 15 Asp.M.L.C. 374; 27 Com.Cas. 46, H.L. . . . 1248
Central Employment Bureau for Women & Students' Careers Association, In re [1942] 1 All E.R. 232 967
Central London Property Trust v. High Trees House [1947] K.B. 130; [1947] L.J.R. 77; 175 L.T. 333; 62 T.L.R. 559 795
Challoner v. Robinson [1908] 1 Ch. 49; 77 L.J.Ch. 72; 98 L.T. 222; 71 J.P. 553; 24 T.L.R. 38; 52 S.J. 28, C.A. 578, 584, 587

PAGE
Chambers v. Goldthorpe [1901] 1 K.B. 624; 70 L.J.K.B. 482; 84 L.T. 444; 49 W.R. 401; 17 T.L.R. 304; 45 S.J. 325, C.A. 1170
Chandless-Chandless v. Nicholson [1942] 2 K.B. 321; 112 L.J.K.B. 19; 167 L.T. 198; [1942] 2 All E.R. 315, C.A. 239
Chapman v. Smith [1907] 2 Ch. 97; 76 L.J.Ch. 394; 96 L.T. 662; 51 S.J. 428 . 149
Chartres, In re [1927] 1 Ch. 466; 96 L.J.Ch. 241; 137 L.T. 52 1098
Chastency v. Nairn & Co., 81 S.J. 238; [1937] 1 All E.R. 376; 35 L.G.R. 195, D.C. 1197
Chatterton v. Glanford Rural Council [1915] 3 K.B. 707; 84 L.J.K.B. 1865; 113 L.T. 746; 79 J.P. 441; 13 L.G.R. 1352 83
Chesterman v. Federal Commissioner of Taxation [1926] A.C. 128; 95 L.J.P.C. 39; 134 L.T. 360; 42 T.L.R. 121 967
Chesters, In re (1934) July 25, unreported 740
Chetty v. Chetty [1916] 1 A.C. 603; (1916) 85 L.J.P.C. 179; L.R. 43 Ind.App. 113; 114 L.T. 1002 501
Chibbett v. Joseph Robinson & Sons (1924) 9 T.C. 48 . . . . . 1319, 1320
Chichester Diocesan Fund and Board of Finance (Incorp.) v. Simpson [1944] A.C. 341; 113 L.J.Ch. 225; 171 L.T. 141; 60 T.L.R. 492; 88 S.J. 246; [1944] 2 All E.R. 60, H.L. 18
Chilton v. Chilton [1952] P. 196; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1316; 116 J.P. 313; 96 S.J. 378; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1322 385
Chinery v. Viall (1860) 5 H. & N. 288; 29 L.J.Ex. 180; 2 L.T. 466; 8 W.R. 629; 157 E.R. 1192 . . . . . 722, 723
Church v. Church [1952] P. 313; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 557; 96 S.J. 514; [1952] 2 All E.R. 441 1146
Churchman v. Churchman [1945] P. 44; 61 T.L.R. 464; [1945] 2 All E.R. 190; 114 L.J.P. 17; 173 L.T. 108; 89 S.J. 508, C.A. 390, 391
City of London Contract Corporation v. Styles (1887) 4 T.L.R. 51; 2 T.C. 239, C.A. 1318
Clark v. Thornton (1887) 35 Ch.D. 307; 56 L.J.Ch. 302; 56 L.T. 294; 35 W.R. 603; 3 T.L.R. 299 943
Clayton v. Russell (J.) & Co. [1953] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 692 472
Clegg v. Edmondson (1857) 8 De G.M. & G. 787; 26 L.J.Ch. 673; 29 L.T.(o.s.) 131; 3 Jur.(N.S.) 299; 44 E.R. 593 889
Clyde Navigation Trustees v. Glasgow Assessor, 1931 S.C. 400 1001
Clyde Navigation Trustees v. Inland Revenue Officer, 1930 S.C. 454 . . . 1001
Cockburn v. Smith [1924] 2 K.B. 119; 93 L.J.K.B. 764; 131 L.T. 334; 40 T.L.R. 476; 68 S.J. 631, C.A. 1231
Codrington v. Codrington and Anderson (1865) 4 Sw. & Tr. 63 304
Coller's Deed Trusts, In re, Coller v. Coller [1939] Ch. 277; 106 L.J.Ch. 326; 157 L.T. 84; 53 T.L.R. 859; 81 S.J. 550; [1937] 3 All E.R. 292, C.A. . 141, 143, 145
Collier v. Sunday Referee Publishing Co. [1940] 2 K.B. 647; 57 T.L.R. 2; [1940] 4 All E.R. 234; 109 L.J.K.B. 974; 164 L.T. 10; 57 T.L.R. 2; 84 S.J. 538 356
Combe v. Combe [1951] 2 K.B. 215; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 811; 95 S.J. 317; [1951] 1 All E.R. 767, C.A. 762, 764
Commissioners for Special Purposes of Income Tax v. Pemsel [1891] A.C. 531; 61 L.J.Q.B. 265; 65 L.T. 621; 55 J.P. 805; 7 T.L.R. 657; 3 Tax.Cas. 53, H.L. 968, 971
Comptoir Commercial Anversois & Power, Son & Co., In re [1920] 1 K.B. 868; 89 L.J.K.B. 849; 122 L.T. 567; 36 T.L.R. 101, C.A. 595
Compton, In re [1945] Ch. 123; 114 L.J.Ch. 99; 172 L.T. 158; 61 T.L.R. 167; 89 S.J. 142; [1945] 1 All E.R. 198, C.A. 1271
Congreve v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1948] W.N. 197; [1948] L.J.R. 1229; 92 S.J. 407; [1948] 1 All E.R. 948; 41 R. & I.T. 319; 30 T.C. 163, H.L. . 1332
Conquest, In re [1929] 2 Ch. 353; 98 L.J.Ch. 441; 141 L.T. 685 . . 943, 946
Cooden Engineering Co. v. Stanford [1953] 1 Q.B. 86; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 822; 96 S.J. 802; [1952] 2 All E.R. 915 394
Cook v. Knott (1887) 4 T.L.R. 164; 2 T.C. 246, D.C. 1089
Cooke, In re (1889) 5 T.L.R. 407 413
Cooke v. Falconer's Representatives (1850) 13 D. 157 189
Cooke v. Ingram (1893) 68 L.T. 671; 3 R. 607 618
Cooke v. Midland Great Western Railway Co. of Ireland [1909] A.C. 229; 78 L.J.P.C. 76; 100 L.T. 626; 25 T.L.R. 375; 53 S.J. 319, H.L. . 1007, 1168
Coomber v. Justices of Berks. (1883) 9 App.Cas. 61; 53 L.J.Q.B. 239; 50 L.T. 405; 48 J.P. 421; 32 W.R. 525; 2 Tax.Cas. 1, H.L. 1033
Coomes & Son v. Hayward [1913] 1 K.B. 150; 82 L.J.K.B. 117; 107 L.T. 715, D.C. 1069, 1070
Coon v. Diamond Tread Co. (1938) [1950] W.N. 343; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 8; [1950] 2 All E.R. 385 302
Cooper v. Cooper [1955] P. 99; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 867; 118 J.P. 549; 98 S.J. 822; [1954] 3 All E.R. 415, D.C. 538, 674
Copestake v. West Sussex County Council [1911] 2 Ch. 331; 80 L.J.Ch. 673; 105 L.T. 298; 75 J.P. 465; 9 L.G.R. 905 607
Corbett v. Corbett [1953] P. 205; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 1124; 97 S.J. 372; [1953] 2 All E.R. 69 311

PAGE

Corelli, In re [1943] Ch. 332; 112 L.J.Ch. 348; 169 L.T. 265; 59 T.L.R. 437; 87 S.J. 327; [1943] 2 All E.R. 519 967
Cork v. Kirby Maclean Ld. [1952] W.N. 399; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 217; 96 S.J. 482; [1952] 2 All E.R. 402; 50 L.G.R. 632, C.A. 1199
Cornish v. Stubbs (1870) L.R. 5 C.P. 334; 39 L.J.C.P. 202; 22 L.T. 21; 18 W.R. 547 762
Cornish Mutual Assurance Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1926] A.C. 281; 42 T.L.R. 255 578
Coryton v. Helyar (1745) 2 Cox 340 431
Couturier, In re [1907] 1 Ch. 470; 76 L.J.Ch. 296; 96 L.T. 560; 51 S.J. 342 . 1099
Cox v. Cox [1952] 2 T.L.R. 141, C.A. 671, 672
Cristel v. Cristel [1951] 2 K.B. 725; 95 S.J. 561; [1951] 2 All E.R. 574, C.A. 742, 1278
Crookall v. Vickers-Armstrong Ld. [1955] 1 W.L.R. 659; 99 S.J. 401; [1955] 2 All E.R. 12; 53 L.G.R. 407 . . . . . 1026, 1051, 1254
Crystal Palace Trustees v. Minister of Town and Country Planning [1951] Ch. 132; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 753; 114 J.P. 553; 94 S.J. 670; [1950] 2 All E.R. 857n 967
Cumming v. Danson (1942) 112 L.J.K.B. 145; 168 L.T. 35; 59 T.L.R. 70; 87 S.J. 21; [1942] 2 All E.R. 653, C.A. 712

Daniel v. Leyland (F.) & Co. [1951] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 59 474
Darnborough v. Darnborough and Smith (1926) 96 L.J.P. 24; 136 L.T. 384 . . 307
Darnell v. Millward [1950] W.N. 567; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 1100; 94 S.J. 822; sub nom. Darnell v. Millwood [1951] 1 All E.R. 88, C.A. 817
Darrall v. Whitaker [1923] W.N. 165; 39 T.L.R. 447; 92 L.J.K.B. 882; 129 L.T. 672; 67 S.J. 727; 21 L.G.R. 505, D.C. 477
Dart, The (1899) 8 Asp.M.L.C. 481; 80 L.T. 23 . . . . . 264, 265, 266
Dashwood v. Dashwood (1927) 64 L.J.P.C. 431; 71 S.J. 911 744
Davidson, In re [1909] 1 Ch. 567; 78 L.J.Ch. 437; 99 L.T. 222; 24 T.L.R. 760; 52 S.J. 622, C.A. 1046, 1048
Davis, In re, Davis v. Davis [1902] 2 Ch. 314; 71 L.J.Ch. 539; 86 L.T. 523; 51 W.R. 8 . . . . . 889, 896
Davis v. St. Mary's Demolition and Excavation Co. [1954] 1 W.L.R. 592; 98 S.J. 217; [1954] 1 All E.R. 578 . . . . . 1008, 1009, 1010, 1166, 1167
Davy v. Garrett (1878) 7 Ch.D. 473 1111
Day v. Bather (1863) 2 H. & C. 14; 2 New Rep. 37; 9 Jur.N.S. 444; 11 W.R. 575; 159 E.R. 6; sub nom. Bather v. Day, 32 L.J.Ex. 171; 8 L.T. 205 . 1294, 1296
Day v. Harland and Wolff [1953] 1 W.L.R. 906; 97 S.J. 473; [1953] 2 All E.R. 387; [1953] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 58 473
Debtor, In re A (No. 36 of 1952), Ex parte The Debtor v. Richardson (J. T.) [1953] Ch. 144; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 561; 97 S.J. 190; [1953] 1 All E.R. 776, D.C. . 22
Deeble v. Robinson [1954] 1 Q.B. 77; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 975; 97 S.J. 812; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1348; 46 R. & I.T. 767, C.A. 624
Defiant Cycle Co., In re [1955] 1 Ch. 490; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 932; 99 S.J. 305; [1955] 2 All E.R. 58 868
Delany, In re [1902] 2 Ch. 642; 71 L.J.Ch. 811; 87 L.T. 46; 51 W.R. 27; 18 T.L.R. 741 1046
Dellenty v. Pellow [1951] 2 K.B. 858; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 733; 95 S.J. 576; [1951] 2 All E.R. 716, C.A. 239
Dewar & Sons v. Winder (1895) 12 T.L.R. 54 1278
Dias v. De Livera (1879) 5 App.Cas. 123 1102
Dicks v. Yates (1881) 18 Ch.D. 76; 50 L.J.Ch. 809; 44 L.T. 660, C.A. . . . 714
Dickson v. Flack [1953] 2 Q.B. 464; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 571; 97 S.J. 586; [1953] 2 All E.R. 840; 51 L.G.R. 515 974
Dollar v. Winston [1950] Ch. 236; 65 T.L.R. 748; [1949] 2 All E.R. 1088n. . 817, 819
Dollfus Mieg et Compagnie S.A. v. Bank of England [1951] Ch. 33; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 559; 94 S.J. 595; [1950] 2 All E.R. 605 337
Dominion Natural Gas Co. v. Collins [1909] A.C. 640; 79 L.J.P.C. 13; 101 L.T. 359; 25 T.L.R. 831, P.C. 1234
Donoghue v. Stevenson [1932] A.C. 562; 101 L.J.P.C. 119; 147 L.T. 281; 48 T.L.R. 494; 76 S.J. 396; 37 Com.Cas. 350, H.L. . . . 551, 1008, 1162, 1167
Donovan v. Cammell Laird & Co. [1949] 2 All E.R. 82; 82 Ll.L.Rep. 642 . . 474
Donovan v. Laing, Wharton and Down Construction Syndicate [1893] 1 Q.B. 629; 63 L.J.Q.B. 25; 68 L.T. 512; 57 J.P. 583; 41 W.R. 455; 9 T.L.R. 313; 37 S.J. 324; 4 R. 317, C.A. 1160
Douglas v. Douglas and Webb [1951] P. 85; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 531; 94 S.J. 487; [1950] 2 All E.R. 748 390
Dredge v. Conway, Jones & Co. [1901] 2 K.B. 42; 17 T.L.R. 355; 70 L.J.K.B. 494; 84 L.T. 345; 49 W.R. 518; 3 W.C.C. 104, C.A. 472
Drucker, In re [1902] 2 K.B. 237; 71 L.J.K.B. 686; 86 L.T. 785; 9 Mans. 237, C.A. 1083
Drummond v. British Cleaners Ld. [1954] 1 W.L.R. 501, 1434; 98 S.J. 819; [1954] 3 All E.R. 507; 53 L.G.R. 29, C.A. 472

PAGE
Du Cros v. Ryall (1935) 19 T.C. 444 1289
Duncan v. Jones [1936] 1 K.B. 218; 105 L.J.K.B. 71; 154 L.T. 110; 99 J.P. 399; 52 T.L.R. 26; 79 S.J. 903; 33 L.G.R. 491; 30 Cox C.C. 279, D.C. . . 1209
Dunne v. Byrne [1912] A.C. 407; 81 L.J.P.C. 202; 106 L.T. 394; 28 T.L.R. 257; 56 S.J. 324, P.C. 1038, 1041, 1045, 1046, 1047, 1048
Dunster v. Abbott [1954] 1 W.L.R. 58; 98 S.J. 8; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1572, C.A. 207, 208, 209, 211, 212
Dupree's Deed Trusts, In re [1945] Ch. 16; 114 L.J.Ch. 1; 171 L.T. 384; 61 T.L.R. 50; 88 S.J. 407; [1944] 2 All E.R. 443 967
Dwina, The [1892] P. 58; 61 L.J.P. 71; 66 L.T. 862; 7 Asp.M.L.C. 173 . . 265

Eastes, In re [1948] Ch. 257; [1948] L.J.R. 917; 64 T.L.R. 216; 92 S.J. 206; [1948] 1 All E.R. 536 1038
Eastland v. Eastland [1954] P. 403; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 851; 98 S.J. 287; [1954] 3 All E.R. 159 672
Ebbs v. Whitson (James) & Co. Ld. [1952] 2 Q.B. 877; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1428; 96 S.J. 375; [1952] 2 All E.R. 192; 50 L.G.R. 563, C.A. 661, 1026, 1027, 1028, 1055, 1149
Eccles v. Wirral Rural Sanitary Authority (1886) 17 Q.B.D. 107; 55 L.J.M.C. 106; 50 J.P. 596; 34 W.R. 412; 2 T.L.R. 416, D.C. 30
Edwards v. National Coal Board [1949] 1 K.B. 704; 65 T.L.R. 430; 93 S.J. 337; [1949] 1 All E.R. 743, C.A. 136, 139, 1325
Edwards v. Railway Executive [1952] A.C. 737; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 237; 96 S.J. 493; [1952] 2 All E.R. 430, H.L. 1007
Eldridge and Morris v. Taylor [1931] 2 K.B. 416; 100 L.J.K.B. 689; 145 L.T. 499; 47 T.L.R. 516 565
Ellis (S. H.) v. Bridges (1938) 5 L.J. (Cty.Ct.) 254 564
Elms v. Foster Wheeler [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1071; 98 S.J. 523; [1954] 2 All E.R. 714 419
Enniskillen Urban District Council v. Bartlett [1947] N.I. 177, C.A. . . . 883
Errington v. Errington [1952] 1 K.B. 290; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 231; 96 S.J. 119; [1952] 1 All E.R. 149, C.A. 154
Evans, In re [1893] 1 Ch. 252; 62 L.J.Ch. 413; 68 L.T. 271; 41 W.R. 230; 9 T.L.R. 108; 37 S.J. 101; 2 R. 216, C.A. 1087
Evans v. Bartlam [1937] A.C. 473; 106 L.J.K.B. 568; 157 L.T. 311; 53 T.L.R. 689; 81 S.J. 549; [1937] 2 All E.R. 646 560
Evans v. Evans (1790) 1 Hag.Con. 35; 161 E.R. 466 672
Everitt v. Everitt [1948] W.N. 237; 65 T.L.R. 121; 92 S.J. 586; [1948] 2 All E.R. 545 316
Evon and Evon v. Noble [1949] 1 K.B. 222; [1949] L.J.R. 835; 93 S.J. 27; [1948] 2 All E.R. 987 341
Excelsior Wire Rope Co. v. Callan [1930] A.C. 404; 99 L.J.K.B. 380; 142 L.T. 531; 94 J.P. 174; 35 Com.Cas. 300; 28 L.G.R. 543, H.L. . . 1007, 1166

Farley v. Westminster Bank. See In re Ashton.
Farrar v. Beswick (1836) 1 M. & W. 682; 2 Gale 153; Tyr. & Gr. 1053; 5 L.J.Ex. 225; 150 E.R. 608 827
Farrell v. Mowlem (John) & Co. [1954] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 437 . . . . 114, 120
Favard v. Favard (1896) 75 L.T. 664 1087
Fawcett v. Whitehouse (1829) 1 Russ. & M. 132; 8 L.J.(o.s.)Ch. 50; 39 E.R. 51 . 889
Featherstonhaugh v. Fenwick (1810) 17 Ves. 298; 34 E.R. 115 . . 889, 894, 897
Fenton v. Crickett (1818) 3 Madd. 496; 56 E.R. 587 864
Ferris v. Weaven [1952] W.N. 318; 96 S.J. 414; [1952] 2 All E.R. 233 . 155, 160
Filion v. R. (1894) 4 Ex.C.R. 134 1034
Findlay v. Newman, Hender & Co., 81 S.J. 901; [1937] 4 All E.R. 58; 35 L.G.R. 621, D.C. 1197
Finn v. Kerslake [1931] A.C. 457; 100 L.J.K.B. 271; 145 L.T. 73; 95 J.P. 115; 47 T.L.R. 308; 29 L.G.R. 279, H.L. 627
Fishburn v. Fishburn [1955] P. 29; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 236; 119 J.P. 86; 99 S.J. 80; [1955] 1 All E.R. 230 1147
Fisher v. Prowse (1862) 2 B. & S. 770; 31 L.J.Q.B. 212; 6 L.T. 711; 26 J.P. 613; 8 Jur.(N.S.) 1208; 121 E.R. 1258 1022
Fitch v. Jones (1855) 5 E. & B. 238; 24 L.J.Q.B. 293; 25 L.T.(o.s.) 160; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 854; 3 W.R. 507; 3 C.L.R. 1226; 119 E.R. 470 834
Fletcher v. Rylands (1866) L.R. 1 Ex. 265; 4 H. & C. 263; 35 L.J.Ex. 154; 14 L.T. 523; 30 J.P. 436; 12 Jur.(N.S.) 603; 14 W.R. 799 1230
Fletcher & Son v. Jubb, Booth and Helliwell [1920] 1 K.B. 275; 89 L.J.K.B. 236; 122 L.T. 258; 36 T.L.R. 19, C.A. 189
Flight v. Thomas (1841) 8 Cl. & Fin. 231; West 671; 5 Jur. 811; 8 E.R. 91, H.L. 618, 619
Flinn, In re [1948] Ch. 241; [1948] L.J.R. 923; 64 T.L.R. 203; 92 S.J. 232; [1948] 1 All E.R. 541 . . . . . 1038, 1039, 1046, 1047, 1048

PAGE

Flint v. Lovell [1935] 1 K.B. 354; 104 L.J.K.B. 199; 152 L.T. 231; 51 T.L.R. 127; 78 S.J. 860, C.A. 554
Foakes, In re (1933) Feb. 21, unreported 740
Follett, In re, Barclays Bank v. Dovell [1955] 1 W.L.R. 429; 99 S.J. 275; [1955] 2 All E.R. 22, C.A. 727
Fonnereau v. Fonnereau (1745) 3 Atk. 315; 26 E.R. 983 542
Forbes v. Forbes [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1526; 119 J.P. 30; 98 S.J. 887; [1954] 3 All E.R. 461 385
Forder, In re, Forder v. Forder [1927] 2 Ch. 291; 96 L.J.Ch. 314; 137 L.T. 538; [1927] B. & C.R. 84, C.A. 198, 199
Foster v. Bush House (1952) 96 S.J. 763, C.A. 260
Foster v. Great Western Railway Co. (1882) 8 Q.B.D. 515; 51 L.J.Q.B. 233; 46 L.T. 74; 30 W.R. 398; 4 Ry. & Can.Tr.Cas. 58, C.A. 709, 713
Fowkes v. Manchester and London Life Assurance and Loan Association (1863) 3 B. & S. 917; 2 New Rep. 112; 32 L.J.Q.B. 153; 8 L.T. 309; 11 W.R. 622; 122 E.R. 343 595
Fowler v. Fowler [1952] 2 T.L.R. 143 . . . . . 537, 539
Frank v. Frank [1951] P. 430; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 404; 95 S.J. 466; [1951] 2 All E.R. 503; 49 L.G.R. 684, C.A. 678, 680
Franks, In re [1948] Ch. 62; [1948] L.J.R. 345; 63 T.L.R. 583; 91 S.J. 638; [1947] 2 All E.R. 638 . . . . . 1218, 1219
Frawley (M. and F.) v. Ve-Ri-Best Manufacturing Co., The [1953] 1 Q.B. 318; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 165; 97 S.J. 46; [1953] 1 All E.R. 50; 3 P. & C.R. 301; 46 R. & I.T. 75, C.A. 624
Fritz v. Hobson (1880) 14 Ch.D. 542; 49 L.J.Ch. 321; 42 L.T. 225; 28 W.R. 459; 24 S.J. 366 118
Fuggle (R. F.) v. Gadsden [1948] 2 K.B. 236; [1948] L.J.R. 1664; 64 T.L.R. 364; 92 S.J. 391; [1948] 2 All E.R. 160, C.A. 239

Gabriel (Thomas) & Sons v. Churchill and Sim [1914] 3 K.B. 1272; 84 L.J.K.B. 233; 111 L.T. 933; 30 T.L.R. 658; 58 S.J. 740; 19 Com.Cas. 411, C.A. . . . 151
Gadd v. Houghton (1876) 1 Ex.D. 357; 46 L.J.Q.B. 71; 35 L.T. 222; 24 W.R. 975, C.A. 150
Garrard, In re [1907] 1 Ch. 382; 76 L.J.Ch. 240; 96 L.T. 357; 23 T.L.R. 256; 51 S.J. 209 . . . . . 1038, 1040, 1043, 1047, 1048
Garrard v. Edge (1889) 37 W.R. 501 1069
Garrard v. Southey (A. E.) & Co. [1952] 2 Q.B. 174; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 630; 96 S.J. 166; [1952] 1 All E.R. 597 1157
Gatehouse v. Summers (John) & Sons [1953] 1 W.L.R. 742; 97 S.J. 386; [1953] 2 All E.R. 117; 51 L.G.R. 408, C.A. 108
Gatti v. Shoosmith [1939] Ch. 841; 161 L.T. 208; 55 T.L.R. 1023; 83 S.J. 687; [1939] 3 All E.R. 916, C.A. 22
Gauthier v. R. (1916) 56 S.C.R. 176; 40 D.L.R. 353 1034
Gestetner Settlement, In re [1953] Ch. 672; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 1033; 97 S.J. 332; [1953] 1 All E.R. 1150; [1953] T.R. 113; 46 R. & I.T. 467; 32 A.T.C. 102 . 967
Gibbs v. Gibbs [1952] P. 332; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1143; [1952] 1 All E.R. 942 . . 846
Gibby v. East Grinstead Gas and Water Co., 170 L.T. 250; [1944] 1 All E.R. 358, C.A. 1149
Gibson v. South American Stores (Gath and Chaves) [1950] Ch. 177; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 83; 93 S.J. 822; [1949] 2 All E.R. 985, C.A. 1271
Giovanni Dapueto v. Wyllie (James) & Co. (1874) L.R. 5 P.C. 482; 43 L.J.Adm. 20; 30 L.T. 887; 22 W.R. 777; 2 Asp.M.L.C. 319, P.C. 1119
Gipps v. Gipps and Hume (1863) 32 L.J.P.M. & A. 179; 2 New Rep. 135; 11 W.R. 1063; subsequent proceedings (1864) 11 H.L.Cas. 1, H.L. 390
Glasgow Corporation v. Muir [1943] A.C. 448; 112 L.J.P.C. 1; 169 L.T. 53; 107 J.P. 140; 59 T.L.R. 266; 87 S.J. 182; [1943] 2 All E.R. 44; 41 L.G.R. 173, H.L. 1008
Glasgow Corporation v. Taylor [1922] 1 A.C. 44; 91 L.J.P.C. 49; 126 L.T. 262; 86 J.P. 89; 38 T.L.R. 102; 20 L.G.R. 205, H.L. 1007
Glenboig Union Fireclay Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1922) 12 T.C. 427 . . . . . 1289, 1318
Glenister v. Glenister [1945] P. 30; [1945] 1 All E.R. 513; 114 L.J.P. 69; 172 L.T. 250; 109 J.P. 194; 43 L.G.R. 250 . . . . . 385, 386, 389
Goldsmid v. Lewis (1836) 3 Bing.N.C. 46; 2 Hodg. 142; 3 Scott 369; 5 L.J.C.P. 297; 132 E.R. 326 1119
Goldthorpe v. Bain [1952] 2 Q.B. 455; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1512; 96 S.J. 396; [1952] 2 All E.R. 23, C.A. 239
Gordon v. Gonda (1954) 71 R.P.C. 121 . . . . . 887, 890
Gosling v. Gosling (1859) John. 265; 5 Jur.(N.S.) 910; 70 E.R. 423 1099
Gossage, In the Estate of [1921] P. 194; 90 L.J.P. 201; 124 L.T. 770; 37 T.L.R. 302; 65 S.J. 274, C.A. 1241
Gough v. National Coal Board [1954] 1 Q.B. 191; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 900; 97 S.J. 811; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1283, C.A. 1011

PAGE

Grainger, In re, Dawson v. Higgins [1900] 2 Ch. 756, C.A.; reversed [1902] A.C. 1; 71 L.J.Ch. 132; 85 L.T. 763; 50 W.R. 337, H.L. 595
Graves v. Graves (1893) 69 L.T. 420 742
Gray, In re, Public Trustee v. Woodhouse [1927] 1 Ch. 242; 96 L.J.Ch. 159; 136 L.T. 401; 70 S.J. 1112 943
Great Eastern Railway Co. v. Hackney Board of Works (1883) 8 App.Cas. 687; 52 L.J.M.C. 105; 49 L.T. 509; 48 J.P. 52; 31 W.R. 769, H.L. . . . 30, 32
Great Western Railway Co. v. Bater [1922] 2 A.C. 1; 91 L.J.K.B. 472; 127 L.T. 170; 38 T.L.R. 448; 66 S.J. 365; 8 T.C. 231, H.L. 1089
Greaves, decd., In re, Greaves v. Greaves [1954] 1 W.L.R. 760; 98 S.J. 337; [1954] 2 All E.R. 109 705
Green (H. E.) & Sons v. Minister of Health [1948] 1 K.B. 34; [1948] L.J.R. 1; 111 J.P. 530; [1947] 2 All E.R. 469 . . . . . 874, 875, 876

H. v. H. [1954] P. 258; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 849; 97 S.J. 782; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1229 730
Hadden, In re, Public Trustee v. More [1932] 1 Ch. 133; 146 L.T. 190; 48 T.L.R. 9; 75 S.J. 781 740
Hadden v. Hadden (1919) The Times, Dec. 5 538
Haigh v. Brooks (1839) 10 Ad. & El. 309 571
Hale v. Beck (1764) 2 Eden 229; 28 E.R. 886, L.C. 541, 543
Hallett's Estate, In re (1880) 13 Ch.D. 696; 49 L.J.Ch. 415; 42 L.T. 421; 28 W.R. 732, C.A. 1083
Hamilton v. St. George, Hanover Square (1873) L.R. 9 Q.B. 42; 43 L.J.M.C. 41; 29 L.T. 428; 38 J.P. 405; 22 W.R. 86 1022
Hampstead Corporation v. Midland Railway Co. [1904] 2 K.B. 802; [1905] 1 K.B. 538; 74 L.J.K.B. 431; 92 L.T. 252; 69 J.P. 133; 21 T.L.R. 272; 3 L.G.R. 455, C.A. 30
Hampstead Junction Railway Co., In re Ex parte Buck (1863) 1 Hem. & M. 519; 3 New Rep. 110; 33 L.J.Ch. 79; 9 L.T. 374; 9 Jur.(N.S.) 1172; 12 W.R. 100; 71 E.R. 227 757
Hanbury v. Hanbury [1895] A.C. 417; 72 L.T. 480; 11 R. 302, H.L. 558
Harbin v. Gordon [1914] 2 K.B. 577; 83 L.J.K.B. 322; 109 L.T. 794; 58 S.J. 140, C.A. 846
Hardy v. Central London Railway [1920] 3 K.B. 459; 89 L.J.K.B. 1187; 124 L.T. 136; 36 T.L.R. 843; 64 S.J. 683, C.A. 1007
Harper v. Haden (G. N.) & Sons [1933] Ch. 298; 102 L.J.Ch. 6; 148 L.T. 303; 96 J.P. 525; 76 S.J. 849; 31 L.G.R. 18, C.A. 114, 118, 119, 123
Harris v. Brights Asphalt Contractors [1953] 1 Q.B. 617; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 341; 97 S.J. 115; [1953] 1 All E.R. 395; 51 L.G.R. 296 . . . . . 1063, 1065
Harris v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1952] A.C. 694; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1075; 116 J.P. 248; 96 S.J. 312; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1044; 36 Cr.App.R. 39, H.L. . 3
Harris v. Minister of Pensions [1948] 1 K.B. 422; [1948] L.J.R. 463; 64 T.L.R. 52; 92 S.J. 85; [1948] 1 All E.R. 191 1119
Harrison v. Hill, 1932 S.C.(J.) 13 490
Hartley v. Hymans [1920] 3 K.B. 475; 90 L.J.K.B. 14; 124 L.T. 31; 36 T.L.R. 805 762
Hartwell v. Grayson Rollo and Clover Docks [1947] K.B. 901; [1947] L.J.R. 1038; 80 Ll.L.Rep. 381, C.A. 1008, 1010
Harvell v. Foster [1954] 2 Q.B. 367; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 351; 98 S.J. 540; [1954] 2 All E.R. 736 . . . . . 461, 464
Hawkins v. Coulsdon and Purley Urban District Council [1954] 1 Q.B. 319; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 122; 118 J.P. 101; 98 S.J. 44; [1954] 1 All E.R. 97; 52 L.G.R. 117, C.A. 1007
Hawkins v. Thames Stevedore Co. Ld. and Union Cold Storage Co. Ld. [1936] 2 All E.R. 472 516
Hay (or Bourhill) v. Young [1943] A.C. 92; 111 L.J.P.C. 97; 167 L.T. 261; 86 S.J. 349; [1942] 2 All E.R. 396 1007
Haynes v. Harwood [1935] 1 K.B. 146; 104 L.J.K.B. 63; 152 L.T. 121; 51 T.L.R. 100; 78 S.J. 801, C.A. 1233
Hearn, In re (1913) 108 L.T. 452 742
Heath v. Pugh (1881) 6 Q.B.D. 345; 50 L.J.Q.B. 473; 44 L.T. 327; 29 W.R. 904, C.A.; affirmed sub nom. Pugh v. Heath (1882) 7 App.Cas. 235, H.L. . 98
Hedley's Trusts, In re (1877) 25 W.R. 529 . . . . . 541, 543, 544
Henderson v. Meade-King, Robinson & Co. (1938) 22 T.C. 97 . . . . 1289, 1318
Henley v. Murray [1950] W.N. 241; [1950] 1 All E.R. 908; 155 E.G. 224; [1950] T.R. 25; 31 T.C. 351 . . . . . 1289, 1318
Heyman v. Darwins [1942] A.C. 356; 58 T.L.R. 169; [1942] 1 All E.R. 337; 111 L.J.K.B. 241, H.L. 344
Hick v. Raymond and Reid [1893] A.C. 22; 62 L.J.Q.B. 98; 68 L.T. 175; 41 W.R. 384; 37 S.J. 145; 7 Asp.M.L.C. 233; 1 R. 125; sub nom. Hicks v. Rodocanachi, 9 T.L.R. 141, H.L. 967
Hickman v. Maisey [1900] 1 Q.B. 752; 69 L.J.Q.B. 511; 82 L.T. 321; 16 T.L.R. 274; 48 W.R. 385; 44 S.J. 326, C.A. 259

PAGE

Hicks v. Rodocanachi. See Hick v. Raymond.
Higgins v. Senior (1841) 8 M. & W. 834; 11 L.J.Ex. 199; 151 E.R. 1278 . . 150
Hill v. R. [1945] K.B. 329; 114 L.J.K.B. 438; 172 L.T. 255; 61 T.L.R. 294; [1945] 1 All E.R. 414 . . . . . 657, 658
Hindle v. Birtwistle [1897] 1 Q.B. 192; 76 L.T. 159; 61 J.P. 70; 45 W.R. 207; 13 T.L.R. 129; 41 S.J. 171; 18 Cox C.C. 508; sub nom. Birtwistle v. Hindle, 66 L.J.K.B. 173, D.C. 1185, 1190, 1192
Hoddinott v. Hoddinott [1949] 2 K.B. 406; 65 T.L.R. 266; 93 S.J. 286, C.A. . . 976
Holdman v. Hamlyn [1943] 1 K.B. 664; 113 L.J.K.B. 7; 169 L.T. 85; 87 S.J. 273; [1943] 2 All E.R. 137, C.A. 1007
Hole v. Cuzen. See Bradley-Hole v. Cusen.
Hollins v. Fowler (1875) L.R. 7 H.L. 757; 44 L.J.Q.B. 169; 33 L.T. 73; 40 J.P. 53, H.L. 828
Holt v. Rhodes (W. H.) & Son [1949] 1 All E.R. 478, C.A. 1157
Holton v. Holton [1946] W.N. 208; 62 T.L.R. 683; [1946] 2 All E.R. 534; 176 L.T. 186 403
Homer v. Homer (1878) 8 Ch.D. 758; 47 L.J.Ch. 635; 39 L.T. 3; 27 W.R. 101, C.A. 989
Hong v. Brown (A. & R) [1948] 1 K.B. 515; [1948] L.J.R. 1816; 92 S.J. 124; [1948] 1 All E.R. 185; sub nom. Hong v. Brown and Runcimans, 64 T.L.R. 132, C.A. 708
Hornby v. Lacy (1817) 6 M. & S. 166; 105 E.R. 1205 150
Horridge v. Makinson (1915) 84 L.J.K.B. 1294; 113 L.T. 498; 79 J.P. 484; 31 T.L.R. 389; 13 L.G.R. 868, D.C. 1023
Horton v. London Graving Dock Co. See London Graving Dock Co. v. Horton.
Houston v. Burns [1918] A.C. 337; 87 L.J.P.C. 99; 118 L.T. 462; 34 T.L.R. 219, H.L. 18
Hoystead v. Commissioners of Taxation [1926] A.C. 155; 94 L.J.P.C. 79; 134 L.T. 354; 42 T.L.R. 207, P.C. 1278
Hughes v. Hughes (1807) 14 Ves. 256; 33 E.R. 519 1098
Hughes v. Hughes and Williams (1915) 32 T.L.R. 62 481
Hughes v. Metropolitan Railway Co. (1877) 2 App.Cas. 439; 46 L.J.Q.B. 583; 36 L.T. 932; 42 J.P. 421; 25 W.R. 680, H.L. . . 763, 765, 766, 780, 781, 783, 795, 798
Humphries v. Cousins (1877) 2 C.P.D. 239; 46 L.J.Q.B. 438; 36 L.T. 180; 41 J.P. 280; 25 W.R. 371 1233
Hunt v. Luck [1902] 1 Ch. 428; 71 L.J.Ch. 239; 86 L.T. 68; 50 W.R. 291; 18 T.L.R. 265; 46 S.J. 229, C.A. 156
Hunter v. Attorney-General [1899] A.C. 309; 68 L.J.Ch. 449; 80 L.T. 732; 47 W.R. 673; 15 T.L.R. 384; 43 S.J. 530, H.L. 18, 967
Hunter v. Dewhurst (1930) 16 T.C. 605 1321
Huntoon Co. v. Kolynos (Incorporated) [1930] 1 Ch. 528; 99 L.J.Ch. 321; 143 L.T. 165; 46 T.L.R. 253; 47 R.P.C. 403; subsequent proceedings, 48 R.P.C. 98 . 768
Hyde v. Hyde (1888) 13 P.D. 166; 57 L.J.P. 89; 59 L.T. 529; 36 W.R. 708; 4 T.L.R. 586, C.A. 1087
Hylton (Lord) v. Heal [1921] 2 K.B. 438; 90 L.J.K.B. 606; 125 L.T. 178; 37 T.L.R. 288; 65 S.J. 311; 19 L.G.R. 196, D.C. 883
Hyman v. Van Den Bergh [1908] 1 Ch. 167; 77 L.J.Ch. 154; 98 L.T. 478; 52 S.J. 114, C.A. 618

Ikala, The. See Strathfillan S.S. Owners v. Ikala S.S. Owners.
Iles, a Solicitor, In re (1922) 66 S.J. 297 406
Indermauer v. Dames (1866) L.R. 1 C.P. 274; 35 L.J.C.P. 184; 14 L.T. 484; 12 Jur.(N.S.) 432; 14 W.R. 586; affd. (1867) L.R. 2 C.P. 311 209
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Baddeley [1955] 2 W.L.R. 552; 99 S.J. 166; [1955] 1 All E.R. 525; 48 R. & I.T. 157 . . . . . 739, 740
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Birmingham District Power and Traction Co. (1928) 141 L.T. 1 290
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Eccentric Club [1924] 1 K.B. 390 . 585, 586, 587
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Fleming & Co. (Machinery) (1951) 33 T.C. 57; [1951] T.R. 415; 45 R. & I.T. 541; 30 A.T.C. 418; 1952 S.C. 120; 1952 S.L.T. 147 . . . . . 1289, 1318
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Newcastle Breweries (1927) 42 T.L.R. 185 . . 1318
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Northfleet Coal and Ballast Co. (1927) 12 T.C. 1102 1320
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Westleigh Estates Co. [1924] 1 K.B. 390; 40 T.L.R. 208 578
Inland Revenue Commissioners v Westminster (Duke) [1936] A.C. 1; 104 L.J. K.B. 383; 153 L.T. 223; 51 T.L.R. 467; 79 S.J. 362; 19 T.C. 490, H.L. . 578
Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Yorkshire Agricultural Society [1928] 1 K.B. 611; 97 L.J.K.B. 100; 138 L.T. 192; 44 T.L.R. 59; 72 S.J. 68; 13 T.C. 58, C.A. 16, 18, 19
Inns, In re [1947] Ch. 576; [1947] L.J.R. 1207; 177 L.T. 165; 63 T.L.R. 439; 91 S.J. 468; [1947] 2 All E.R. 308 . . . . . 1106, 1218

PAGE
Jackson, In re [1930] 2 Ch. 389; 99 L.J.Ch. 450; 144 L.T 102; 46 T.L.R. 558 . 1038
Jacobs v. London County Council [1950] A.C. 361; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 659; 114 J.P. 204; 94 S.J. 318; [1950] 1 All E.R. 737; 48 L.G.R. 323, H.L. . 1007, 1008
James & Son v. Smee; Green v. Burnett [1955] 1 Q.B. 78; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 631; 118 J.P. 536; 98 S.J. 771; [1954] 3 All E.R. 273 446
Jamieson v. Jamieson [1952] A.C. 525; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 833; [1952] 1 All E.R. 875; 116 J.P. 226; 1952 S.L.T. 257 538
Jenks v. Turpin (1884) 13 Q.B.D. 505; 53 L.J.M.C. 161; 50 L.T. 808; 49 J.P. 20; 15 Cox C.C. 486, D.C. 86
Jennings v. Cole [1949] 2 All E.R. 191; 82 Ll.L.R. 837 208
Jennings v. Minister of Pensions (1953) Unreported 1119
Job v. Potton (1875) L.R. 20 Eq. 84; 44 L.J.Ch. 262; 32 L.T. 110; 23 W.R. 588 . 90
Johnson v. Stear (1863) 15 C.B.(N.S.) 330; 3 New.Rep. 425; 33 L.J.C.P. 130; 9 L.T. 538; 10 Jur.(N.S.) 99; 12 W.R. 347; 143 E.R. 812 . . . . 722, 723
Jones v. Cockroft [1945] 2 All E.R. 333 1136
Jones v. Newtown and Llanidloes Guardians [1920] 3 K.B. 381; 36 T.L.R. 758; 89 L.J.K.B. 1161; 124 L.T. 23; 84 J.P. 237; 18 L.G.R. 481 . . . 528
Jones v. Smith (1841) 1 Hare 43; 11 L.J.Ch. 83; 6 Jur. 8; 66 E.R. 943 . . 836
Jones v. Staveley Iron and Chemical Co. Ld. [1955] 2 W.L.R. 69; [1955] 1 All E.R. 6 516
Jones v. Stott [1910] 1 K.B. 893, C.A. 176
Jones v. Williams (1857) 24 Beav. 47; 30 L.T.(O.S.) 110; 3 Jur.(N.S.) 1066; 5 W.R. 775; 53 E.R. 274 836
Joslin, In re [1941] Ch. 200; 110 L.J.Ch. 65; 165 L.T. 171; 57 T.L.R. 293; 85 S.J. 105; [1941] 1 All E.R. 302 1106

Kara v. Kara and Holman [1948] P. 287; [1948] L.J.R. 1741; 64 T.L.R. 329; 92 S.J. 349; [1948] 2 All E.R. 16 . . . . . 304, 307
Kaslefsky v. Kaslefsky [1951] P. 38; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 616; 114 J.P. 404; 94 S.J. 519; [1950] 2 All E.R. 398; 48 L.G.R. 520, C.A. 1014
Kaye v. Eyre Bros. [1931] A.C. 451; 100 L.J.K.B. 271; 145 L.T. 73; 95 J.P. 115; 47 T.L.R. 308; 29 L.G.R. 279, H.L. 626
Keighley, Maxsted & Co. v. Durant [1901] A.C. 240; 70 L.J.K.B. 662; 84 L.T. 777; 17 T.L.R. 527; 45 S.J. 536, H.L. 828
Kelly v. Kelly (1870) L.R. 2 P. & D. 59; 39 L.J.P. & M. 28; 22 L.T. 308; 18 W.R. 767 538
Kelsall Parsons & Co. v. Inland Revenue, 1938 S.C. 238; 21 T.C. 608 . 1292, 1320
Kemsley v. Foot [1951] 2 K.B. 34; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 197; [1951] 1 All E.R. 331, C.A. 1111
Key v. Key (1853) 4 De G.M. & G. 73; 1 Eq.Rep. 82; 22 L.J.Ch. 641; 22 L.T. (O.S.) 67; 17 Jur. 769; 43 E.R. 435, L.JJ. 435
Kiddle v. City Business Properties [1942] 1 K.B. 269; 111 L.J.K.B. 196; 166 L.T. 302; [1942] 2 All E.R. 216 . . . . . 1231, 1232
Kiely v. Massey (1880) 6 L.R.Ir. 445 1278
King, In re [1923] 1 Ch. 243; 92 L.J.Ch. 292; 128 L.T. 790; 67 S.J. 313 . . 739
King v. Taylor [1954] 3 W.L.R. 669; [1954] 3 All E.R. 373 239
Kingston Union Assessment Committee v. Metropolitan Water Board [1926] A.C. 331; 42 T.L.R. 275; 95 L.J.K.B. 605; 134 L.T. 483; 90 J.P. 69; 24 L.G.R. 105, H.L. 510, 511
Kinloch v. Nevile (1840) 6 M. & W 795; 10 L.J.Ex. 248; 151 E.R. 633 . . . 619
Knight v. Demolition and Construction Co. Ld. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 981; 97 S.J. 507; [1953] 2 All E.R. 508; 51 L.G.R. 528 1051
Knox v. Gye (1872) L.R. 5 H.L 656; 42 L.J.Ch. 234 . . . . . 888, 893, 894
Krehl v. Park (1875) 10 Ch.App. 334 . . . . . 1078, 1079
Kunski v. Kunski and Josephs (1907) 23 T.L.R. 615 1274

Lancaster v. Lancaster [1896] P. 75; affirmed [1896] P. 118; 65 L.J.P. 34; 74 L.T. 64; 44 W.R. 440; 40 S.J. 419, C.A. 1075, 1077–1079
Lang v. Lang [1955] A.C. 402; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 762; 98 S.J. 803; [1954] 3 All E.R. 571, P.C. 526, 529, 1014
Langrick v. Langrick and Funnell [1920] P. 90; 89 L.J.P. 114; 123 L.T. 94; 36 T.L.R. 308; 64 S.J. 531 304
Latham v. Johnson (R.) [1913] 1 K.B. 398; 82 L.J.K.B. 258; 108 L.T. 4; 77 J.P. 137; 29 T.L.R. 124; 57 S.J. 127, C.A. 208, 211, 1007
Latimer v. A. E. C. [1953] A.C. 643; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 259; 117 J.P. 387; 97 S.J. 486; [1953] 2 All E.R. 449; 51 L.G.R. 457, H.L. 650
Lavey, In re [1920] 3 K.B. 625; 90 L.J.K.B. 31; [1920] B. & C.R. 182 . . 1076
Lawrence, In re (1876) 4 Ch.D. 139 23
Lawrence v. Cassel [1930] 2 K.B. 83; 99 L.J.K.B. 525; 143 L.T. 291; 74 S.J. 421, C.A. 935

PAGE

Lee v. Carter [1949] 1 K.B. 85; [1949] L.J.R. 7; 64 T.L.R. 536; 92 S.J. 586; [1948] 2 All E.R. 690, C.A. 817, 821

Lee v. Nursery Furnishings Ld., 172 L.T. 285; 61 T.L.R. 263; [1945] 1 All E.R. 387, C.A. 421, 1193

Lemmon v. Webb [1894] 3 Ch. 1; 63 L.J.Ch. 570; 70 L.T. 712; 58 J.P. 716; 10 T.L.R. 467, C.A. 637

Lever Bros. v. Masbro' Equitable Pioneer Society (1912) 106 L.T. 472; 28 T.L.R. 294; 29 R.P.C. 225, C.A. 304

Leyland Shipping Co. v. Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society [1918] A.C. 350; 87 L.J.K.B. 395; 118 L.T. 120; 34 T.L.R. 221; 62 S.J. 307; 14 Asp. M.L.C. 258, H.L. 937

Liddle v. Yorkshire (North Riding) County Council [1934] 2 K.B. 101; 103 L.J. K.B. 527; 151 L.T. 202; 98 J.P. 319; 50 T.L.R. 377; 78 S.J. 349; 32 L.G.R. 241, C.A. 1007

Lingké v. Christchurch Corporation [1912] 3 K.B. 595; 82 L.J.K.B. 37; 107 L.T. 476; 76 J.P. 433; 28 T.L.R. 536; 56 S.J. 735; 10 L.G.R. 773, C.A. . 115, 119

Linnean Society v. St. Anne (Churchwardens) (1854) 3 E. & B. 793; 118 E.R. 1338; sub nom. R. v. Linnean Society of London, 2 C.L.R. 761; 23 L.T.(o.s.) 186; 18 J.P. 504; 2 W.R. 516 915

Lister & Co. v. Stubbs (1890) 45 Ch.D. 1; 59 L.J.Ch. 570; 63 L.T. 75; 38 W.R. 548; 6 T.L.R. 317, C.A. 1084

Lloyd v. Lloyd and Leggeri [1938] P. 174; 54 T.L.R. 735; [1938] 2 All E.R. 380; 107 L.J.P. 90; 159 L.T. 258; 102 J.P. 353; 82 S.J. 397; 36 L.G.R. 471 . 385

Lloyd Del Pacifico v. Board of Trade (1930) 46 T.L.R. 476; 35 Com.Cas. 325 . . 708

Lloyds Bank v. O—— (Trustee of the Property of), A Bankrupt [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1460; 97 S.J. 832; sub nom. Lloyds Bank v. Oliver's Trustee [1953] 2 All E.R. 1443 156

Lloyds Bank v. Savory (E. B.) & Co. [1932] 2 K.B. 122, C.A.; affirmed [1933] A.C. 201; 102 L.J.K.B. 224; 49 T.L.R. 116; 38 Com.Cas. 115, H.L. 836, 837, 838

Lomas v. Jones (M.) & Son [1944] 1 K.B. 4; 113 L.J.K.B. 193; 170 L.T. 139; 60 T.L.R. 28; [1943] 2 All E.R. 548, C.A. 1157

Lomax v. Newton [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1123; 97 S.J. 573; [1953] 2 All E.R. 801; [1953] T.R. 283; 46 R. & I.T. 532; 34 T.C. 558; 32 A.T.C. 312 1090, 1091, 1093, 1094, 1096

London and North Eastern Railway Co. v. Berriman [1946] A.C. 278; 62 T.L.R. 170; [1946] 1 All E.R. 255; 115 L.J.K.B. 124; 174 L.T. 151; 38 B.W.C.C. 109, H.L. 473, 770

London and North Western Railway Co. v. Hudson (Richard) & Sons [1920] A.C. 324; 89 L.J.K.B. 323; 122 L.T. 530, H.L. 937

London and Provincial Leather Processes v. Hudson [1939] 2 K.B. 724; 55 T.L.R. 1047; 83 S.J. 733; [1939] 3 All E.R. 857 871

London Co-operative Society v. Southern Essex Assessment Committee [1942] 1 K.B. 53; 111 L.J.K.B. 113; 165 L.T. 409; 105 J.P. 399; 85 S.J. 475; [1941] 3 All E.R. 252; 39 L.G.R. 339 981

London County Council v. Davis (1897) 77 L.T. 693; 14 T.L.R. 113 874

London Graving Dock Co. v. Horton [1951] A.C. 737; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 949; sub nom. Horton v. London Graving Dock Co., 95 S.J. 465; [1951] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 389, H.L.; reversing sub nom. Horton v. London Graving Dock Co. [1950] 1 K.B. 421; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 246; 94 S.J. 14; [1950] 1 All E.R. 180; 83 Ll.L.Rep. 207, C.A. 840, 841, 842, 1156, 1162, 1163

Loredano, The [1922] P. 209; 91 L.J.P. 158; 127 L.T. 158; 38 T.L.R. 516; 15 Asp.M.L.C. 565 1033

Lovelace v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1468; [1954] 3 All E.R. 481 446

Lowe v. Lowe [1952] P. 376; [1952] T.L.R. 505; [1952] 2 All E.R. 671 486

Lowery v. Walker [1911] A.C. 10; 80 L.J.K.B. 138; 103 L.T. 674; 27 T.L.R. 83; 55 S.J. 62, H.L. 1166

Lynch v. Nurdin (1841) 1 Q.B. 29; Arn. & H. 158; 4 Per. & Dav. 672; 10 L.J. Q.B. 73; 5 J.P. 319; 5 Jur. 797; 113 E.R. 1041 1011

Lyon v. Don Bros., Buist & Co. Ld., 1944 S.C.(J.) 1 1197

Macadam, In re (No. 2), Ex p. Guillaume v. The Trustee [1950] W.N. 142; [1950] 1 All E.R. 659, C.A. 22

McArthur v. R. [1943] 3 D.L.R. 225; Ex.C.R. 77 1033

MacCabe v. Joynt [1901] 2 Ir.R. 115 742

McCarthy v. Coldair [1951] W.N. 590; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 1226; 95 S.J. 711; 50 L.G.R. 65, C.A. 1324

McCheane v. Gyles (No. 2) [1902] 1 Ch. 911 337

Maclenan v. Segar [1917] 2 K.B. 325; 86 L.J.K.B. 1113; 117 L.T. 376; 33 T.L.R. 351 . . . . . 1294, 1296

McCombe v. Read [1955] 1 W.L.R. 635; 99 S.J. 370; [1955] 2 All E.R. 458 . 934

McGowan v. Osgoldcross Assessment Committee 80 S.J. 614; [1936] 2 All E.R. 170, D.C. 624

PAGE
MacGregor, In re (1932) 32 S.R.(N.S.W.) 483; 49 N.S.W.W.N. 179 1043
Machon v. McLoughlin (1926) 11 T.C. 83, C.A. 1089
M'Intyre v. Laird, 1943 S.C.(J.) 96 . . . . . 377, 379
Mackenzie v. Mackenzie [1895] A.C. 384 538
Mackley v. Nutting [1949] 2 K.B. 55; 65 T.L.R. 255; [1949] 1 All E.R. 413; [1949] L.J.R. 803; 93 S.J. 197; 153 E.G. 120 . . . . . 503, 504
M'Lean v. Clydesdale Banking Co. (1883) 9 App.Cas. 95; 50 L.T. 457, H.L. . 835
McLeod (or Houston) v. Buchanan [1940] 2 All E.R. 179; 84 S.J. 452, H.L. . 447
Madras Electric Supply Corporation v. Boarland [1955] A.C. 667; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 632; 99 S.J. 217; [1955] 1 All E.R. 753; [1955] T.R. 57; 48 R. & I.T. 189; 35 T.C. 612; 34 A.T.C. 53; T.C. Leaflet No. 1722 . . 1033
Mainwaring v. Beevor (1849) 8 Hare 44; 14 Jur. 58; 68 E.R. 266 . . 1100, 1101
Mair, In re, Williamson v. French [1909] 2 Ch. 280; 78 L.J.Ch. 711; 101 L.T. 70 . . . . . 198, 199
Manchester Economic Building Society (1883) 24 Ch.D. 488; 53 L.J.Ch. 115; 49 L.T. 793; 32 W.R. 325, C.A. 22
Manders v. Manders (1890) 63 L.T. 627; 7 T.L.R. 149 558
Manning v. Manning and Fellows: Fellows v. Fellows [1950] W.N. 107; 94 S.J. 238; [1950] 1 All E.R. 602, C.A. 385
Markwick v. Hardingham (1880) 15 Ch.D. 339; 43 L.T. 647; 29 W.R. 361, C.A. . 98
Marris v. Marris and Burke (1862) 2 Sw. & Tr. 530; 31 L.J.P.M. & A. 69; 5 L.T. 768; 164 E.R. 1102 385
Marshall v. Gotham Co. [1954] A.C. 360; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 812; 98 S.J. 268; [1954] 1 All E.R. 937, H.L. 132, 135, 136, 138, 472, 1051
Marshall v. Matthews [1939] 1 All E.R. 156; 37 L.G.R. 194, D.C. . . . 377
Marshall (W. F.) v. Barnes and Fitzpatrick [1953] 1 W.L.R. 639; 97 S.J. 300; [1953] 1 All E.R. 970 297
Maryon-Wilson's Estate, In re [1912] 1 Ch. 55; 81 L.J.Ch. 73; 105 L.T. 692; 28 T.L.R. 49, C.A. 192, 193, 1326, 1327
Maskell v. Horner [1915] 3 K.B. 106; 84 L.J.K.B. 1752; 113 L.T. 126; 79 J.P. 406; 31 T.L.R. 332; 59 S.J. 429; 13 L.G.R. 808, C.A. 568
Matthews v. Matthews (1860) 3 Sw & Tr. 161; 29 L.J.P.M. & A. 118; 2 L.T. 472; 6 Jur.(N.S.) 659; 8 W.R. 591; 164 E.R. 1235 481
Mears v. Western Canada Pulp and Paper Co. Ld. [1905] 2 Ch. 353; 74 L.J.Ch. 581; 93 L.T. 150; 54 W.R. 176; 21 T.L.R. 661; 49 S.J. 634; 12 Mans. 295, C.A. 1085, 1086
Mediana, The [1899] P. 127; 80 L.T. 173; 8 Asp.M.L.C. 493, C.A. . . . 1248
Mersey Docks v. Cameron (1865) 11 H.L.Cas. 443 1033
Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Birkenhead Overseers (1873) L.R. 8 Q.B.D. 445 513
Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Coggins & Griffiths (Liverpool) [1947] A.C. 1; 115 L.J.K.B. 465; 175 L.T. 270; 62 T.L.R. 533; [1946] 2 All E.R. 345, H.L. 1009, 1158, 1159, 1160, 1161, 1162, 1163
Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. West Derby Assessment Committee and Bottom Ley [1932] 1 K.B. 40; 101 L.J.K.B. 8; 145 L.T. 592; 95 J.P. 186; 47 T.L.R. 468; 29 L.G.R. 576; (1926–31) 2 B.R.A. 846, C.A. . 989, 996, 997, 998
Metropolitan Water Board v. Chertsey Assessment Committee [1916] 1 A.C. 337; 32 T.L.R. 168; 85 L.J.K.B. 296; 114 L.T. 380; 80 J.P. 137; 60 S.J. 208; 14 L.G.R. 217; 1 B.R.A. 408, H.L. 510
Metropolitan Water Board v. Hertford Corporation [1953] 1 W.L.R. 622; [1953] 1 All E.R. 1047; 117 J.P. 265; 97 S.J. 299; 51 L.G.R. 267 507, 508, 512
Meyappa Chetty v. Supramanian Chetty [1916] 1 A.C. 603; L.R. 43 Ind.App. 113; 85 L.J.P.C. 179; 114 L.T. 1002, P.C. 1335
Meyers, In re [1951] Ch. 534; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 435; [1951] 1 All E.R. 538 . 967
Middleton v. Humphries (1913) 47 Ir.L.T. 160 637
Miller v. Boothman (William) & Sons [1944] K.B. 337; 113 L.J.K.B. 206; 170 L.T. 187; 60 T.L.R. 218, C.A; [1944] 1 All E.R. 333 . . . . 973, 974
Miller v. Cannon Hill Estates [1931] 2 K.B. 113; 100 L.J.K.B. 740; 144 L.T. 567, 75 S.J. 155 . . . . . 935, 936, 937
Miller, Gibb & Co. v. Smith & Tyrer [1917] 2 K.B. 141; 86 L.J.K.B. 1259; 116 L.T. 753; 33 T.L.R. 295; 22 Com.Cas. 320, C.A. 150
Mills v. Allen [1953] 2 Q.B. 341; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 356; 97 S.J. 505; [1953] 2 All E.R. 534, C.A. 237, 246
Milne v. Commissioner of Police for City of London [1940] A.C. 1; 108 L.J.K.B. 625; 161 L.T. 65; 103 J.P. 299; 55 T.L.R. 898; 83 S.J. 746; [1939] 3 All E.R. 399; 37 L.G.R. 453; 27 Cr.App.R. 90; 31 Cox C.C. 305, H.L. 85, 86, 87
Minister of Health v. Bellotti [1944] K.B. 298; 113 L.J.K.B. 436; 170 L.T. 146; 60 T.L.R. 228; [1944] 1 All E.R. 238, C.A. 797
Mist v. Toleman & Sons, 110 J.P. 149; 62 T.L.R. 131; 90 S.J. 138; [1946] 1 All E.R. 139; 44 L.G.R. 189; 38 B.W.C.C. 150, C.A. . 1055, 1056, 1149
Mitchell v. North British Rubber Co., 1945 S.C.(J.) 69 1192
Monk, In re [1927] 2 Ch. 197; 96 L.J.Ch. 296; 137 L.T. 4; 43 T.L.R. 256, C.A. 1300, 1301

PAGE

Monk v. Warbey [1935] 1 K.B. 75; 51 T.L.R. 77; 104 L.J.K.B. 153; 152 L.T. 194; 71 S.J. 783, C.A. 447
Montgomery v. Foy, Morgan & Co. [1895] 2 Q.B. 321; 11 T.L.R. 512; 65 L.J.Q.B. 18; 173 L.T. 12; 43 W.R. 691; 8 Asp.M.L.C. 36; 14 R. 575 . 337
Moodie v. Furness Shipbuilding Co. [1951] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 600 472
Moodie v. Hosegood [1952] A.C. 61; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 455; [1951] 2 All E.R. 582; 95 S.J. 499 499
Moon v. London County Council, Potteries Electric Traction Co. v. Bailey [1931] A.C. 151; 100 L.J.K.B. 153; 144 L.T. 410; 95 J.P. 64; 47 T.L.R. 154; 29 L.G.R. 131, H.L. 578, 588
Moor v. Moor [1954] 1 W.L.R. 927; 98 S.J. 438; [1954] 2 All E.R. 459, C.A. 481
Moorcock, The (1889) 14 P.D. 64; 58 L.J.P. 73; 60 L.T. 654; 37 W.R. 439; 5 T.L.R. 316; 6 Asp.M.L.C. 373, C.A. 936
Morgan v. Marquis (1853) 9 Exch. 145; 23 L.J.Ex. 21; 2 C.L.R. 276; 156 E.R. 62 827
Morgan v. Ravery (1861) 6 H. & N. 265; 30 L.J.Ex. 131; 3 L.T. 784; 25 J.P. 376; 9 W.R. 376 1294
Morris v. Mellin (1827) 6 B. & C. 446; 9 Dow. & Ry.K.B. 503; 108 E.R. 516 . 762
Mortimer v. Mortimer [1820] 2 Hag.Con. 310; 16 E.R. 753 481
Moseley v. Cressey's Co. (1865) L.R. 1 Eq. 405; 35 L.J.Ch. 360; 14 L.T. 99; 12 Jur.(N.S.) 46; 14 W.R. 246 . . . . . 1083, 1084
Moser v. Ambleside Urban District Council (1924) 89 J.P. 59 607
Mourton v. Poulter [1930] 2 K.B. 183; 99 L.J.K.B. 289; 143 L.T. 20; 35 Com.Cas. 308, sub nom. Moulton v. Poulter 94 J.P. 190; 46 T.L.R. 256; 74 S.J. 170 . . . . . 1007, 1166
Mudge v. Mudge and Honeysett [1951] P. 173; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 631; 94 S.J. 195; [1950] 1 All E.R. 607 385
Muscovitch, In re, Ex parte Muscovitch [1939] Ch. 694; 160 L.T. 184; 55 T.L.R. 364; 83 S.J. 154; [1939] 1 All E.R. 135, C.A. 22

N.V. Amsterdamsche Lucifersfabrieken v. H. and H. Trading Agencies Ld., 84 S.J. 205; [1940] 1 All E.R. 587, C.A. 1170
Naamlooze Vennootschap Handels-en-Transport Maatschappij Vulcan v. A/S J. Ludwig Mowinckels Rederi (1937) 42 Com.Cas. 200 889
Naismith v. London Film Productions [1939] 1 All E.R. 794; 83 S.J. 175, C.A. . 1324
National Association of Local Government Officers v. Bolton Corporation [1943] A.C. 166; 111 L.J.K.B. 674; 167 L.T. 312; 106 J.P. 255; 59 T.L.R. 1; [1942] 2 All E.R. 425; 40 L.G.R. 273, H.L. 578
National Coal Board v. England [1954] A.C. 403; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 400; 98 S.J. 176; [1954] 1 All E.R. 546, H.L. 1189, 1191
New York Life Insurance Co. v. Styles (1889) 14 App.Cas. 381; 59 L.J.Q.B. 291; 61 L.T. 201; 5 T.L.R. 621; 2 T.C. 460, H.L. 586
Newland v. Shephard (1723) 2 P.Wms. 194; 9 Mod.Rep. 57; 2 Eq.Cas.Abr. 329, pl. 4; 24 E.R. 696, L.C. 541, 542, 543
Newton v. Sherry (1876) 1 C.P.D. 246; 45 L.J.Q.B. 257; 34 L.T. 251; 40 J.P. 584; 24 W.R. 371 . . . . . 461, 462
Nicholls v. Austin (F.) (Leyton) Ld. [1946] A.C. 493; 115 L.J.K.B. 329; 175 L.T. 5; 62 T.L.R. 320; 90 S.J. 628; [1946] 2 All E.R. 92; 44 L.G.R. 287, H.L. 1193
Nicholson v. Nicholson (1873) L.R. 3 P. & D. 53; 29 L.T. 108 481
Nicholson v. Southern Railway Co. [1935] 1 K.B. 558; 104 L.J.K.B. 265; 152 L.T. 349; 99 J.P. 141; 51 T.L.R. 216; 79 S.J. 87; 33 L.G.R. 140 . . 1022
Nisbet Shipping Co. Ld. v. R. [1953] 1 S.C.R. 480 1035
Nolder v. Walters (1930) 46 T.L.R. 397; 47 S.J. 337; 15 T.C. 380 . 1092, 1093, 1094, 1096
Nonentities Society v. Linley and Kidderminster Borough Council (1954) 47 R. & I.T. 426, C.A. 920, 928
Norbury Natzio & Co. v. Griffiths [1918] 2 K.B. 369; 87 L.J.K.B. 952; 119 L.T. 90, C.A. 338
Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Guns and Ammunition Co. [1894] A.C. 535; 63 L.J.Ch. 908; 71 L.T. 489; 10 T.L.R. 636; 11 R. 1, H.L. 762
Norman, In re [1947] Ch. 349; [1947] L.J.R. 780; 177 L.T. 125; 91 S.J. 221; [1947] 1 All E.R. 400 1038
Norris v. Beazley (1877) 2 C.P.D. 80 338
North v. North and Ogden (1936) 105 L.J.P. 56; 154 L.T. 498; 52 T.L.R. 380; 80 S.J. 208 668
Northumberland (Duke of), In re, Halifax v. Northumberland [1951] Ch. 202; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 1045; 94 S.J. 805; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1181 . . . 943, 948
North-Western Salt Co. v. Electrolytic Alkali Co. [1914] A.C. 461, C.A. . . . 762
Nunnery Colliery Co.'s Application, In re [1924] W.N. 257 90

Oakley v. Merthyr Tydfil Corporation [1922] 1 K.B. 409; 91 L.J.K.B. 345; 126 L.T. 320; 86 J.P. 1; 38 T.L.R. 60; 66 S.J. 218; 19 L.G.R. 767, D.C. . 83

PAGE

O'Driscoll v. Manchester Insurance Committee [1915] 3 K.B. 499; 85 L.J.K.B. 83; 113 L.T. 683; 79 J.P. 553; 31 T.L.R. 532; 59 S.J. 597; 13 L.G.R. 1156, C.A. 1221, 1222
Ogden, In re (1909) 25 T.L.R. 382, C.A. 969
Oppenheim v. Henry (1853) 10 Hare 441; 20 L.T.(o.s.) 291; 1 W.R. 126; 68 E.R. 999 1102
Ord v. Ord [1923] 2 K.B. 432; 92 L.J.K.B. 859; 129 L.T. 605; 39 T.L.R. 437, D.C. 1278

Palmolive Co. (of England) v. Freedman [1928] Ch. 264; 97 L.J.Ch. 40; 138 L.T. 274; 44 T.L.R. 86; 71 S.J. 927, C.A. 762
Palser v. Grinling [1948] A.C. 291; [1948] L.J.R. 600; 64 T.L.R. 2; [1948] 1 All E.R. 1, H.L. 1131
Parkinson v. Barnes (1947) 177 L.T. 520; 45 L.G.R. 407, D.C. 1136
Parkinson v. Plumpton (H. & J.) [1954] 1 W.L.R. 75; 98 S.J. 13; [1954] 1 All E.R. 201 . . . . . 1211, 1212, 1213
Patchett v. Sterling Engineering Co. (1953) 71 R.P.C. 61, C.A. 889
Patent Agents Institute v. Lockwood [1894] A.C. 347; 63 L.J.P.C. 75; 71 L.T. 205; 10 T.L.R. 527; 6 R. 219, H.L. 755
Paterson Steamship Ld. v. Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers Ld. [1934] A.C. 538; 103 L.J.P.C. 166; 151 L.T. 549; 51 T.L.R. 5, P.C. 1033
Pattenden v. Pattenden and Herzfield (1868) 19 L.T. 612 311
Pauley v. Kenaldo [1953] 1 W.L.R. 187; 97 S.J. 49; [1953] 1 All E.R. 226 1211, 1214
Pearson v. Lambeth Borough Council [1950] 2 K.B. 353; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 561; 114 J.P. 214; 94 S.J. 269; [1950] 1 All E.R. 682; 48 L.G.R. 587, C.A. 208, 210, 211
Peat v. Powell (1760) Amb. 387; 1 Eden 479; 27 E.R. 258 . . . . . 541, 543
Peek v. Peek [1948] W.N. 342; 64 T.L.R. 429; 92 S.J. 454; [1948] 2 All E.R. 297 316
Pender and Others v. Taddei [1898] 1 Q.B. 798; 67 L.J.Q.B. 703; 78 L.T. 581; 46 W.R. 452, C.A. 337
Perry v. Sharon Development Co., 81 S.J. 1021; [1937] 4 All E.R. 390, C.A. 936–939
Peters v. Prince of Wales Theatre (Birmingham) [1943] K.B. 73; 112 L.J.K.B. 433; 168 L.T. 241; 87 S.J. 83; [1942] 2 All E.R. 533, C.A. 1232
Pettit, In re, Le Fevre v. Pettit [1922] 2 Ch. 765; 91 L.J.Ch. 732; 127 L.T. 491; 38 T.L.R. 787; 66 S.J. 667 1002
Petty v. Petty [1943] P. 101; 59 T.L.R. 385; [1943] 2 All E.R. 511; 112 L.J.P. 97; 169 L.T. 224; 87 S.J. 283, D.C. 315, 316
Philco Radio and Television Corporation of Great Britain v. J. Spurling, 65 T.L.R. 757; 93 S.J. 755; [1949] 2 All E.R. 882, C.A. 1234
Phillips, In re, Trustee, Ex parte (1895) 2 Mans. 206, D.C. 22
Phillips v. Phillips (1955) Unreported 1087
Phillips v. Welton [1948] 2 All E.R. 845 497
Phipps v. Rochester Corporation [1955] 1 Q.B. 450; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 23; 119 J.P. 92; 99 S.J. 45; [1955] 1 All E.R. 129; 53 L.G.R. 80 1007
Piddocke v. Burt [1894] 1 Ch. 343; 63 L.J.Ch. 246; 70 L.T. 553; 42 W.R. 248; 38 S.J. 141; 8 R. 104 . . . . . 888, 893
Pilkington, In re (1892) 29 L.R.Ir. 370. 1101
Pitt v. Jackson (1939) 83 S.J. 216; [1939] 1 All E.R. 129 208
Platt, In re, Sykes v. Dawson [1916] 2 Ch. 563; 86 L.J.Ch. 114; 115 L.T. 524; 61 S.J. 10 145
Pleasants, In re, Pleasants v. Attorney-General (1923) 39 T.L.R. 675 18
Plimmer v. Wellington Corporation (1884) 9 App.Cas. 699; 53 L.J.P.C. 105; 51 L.T. 475 216
Ponder, In re [1921] 2 Ch. 59; 90 L.J.Ch. 426; 125 L.T. 568; 65 S.J. 455 . . . 464
Porter (William) & Co., In re [1937] 2 All E.R. 361 . . . . . 213, 229
Powell v. Cleland [1948] 1 K.B. 262; 63 T.L.R. 626; [1947] 2 All E.R. 672; [1948] L.J.R. 250; 91 S.J. 625; [1947] 2 All E.R. 672 497
Practice Direction (Ancillary Relief) [1954] 1 W.L.R. 898; [1954] 2 All E.R. 349 703
Practice Direction (Foreign Marriages) [1955] 1 W.L.R. 668; [1955] 2 All E.R. 465 1067
Pratt v. Pratt [1939] A.C. 417; 108 L.J.P. 97; 161 L.T. 49; 55 T.L.R. 910; 83 S.J. 730; [1939] 3 All E.R. 437, H.L. 1146
Prenton v. General Steam Navigation Co. (1943) 77 Ll.L.R. 174 1010
Pretty v. Bickmore (1873) L.R. 8 C.P. 401; 28 L.T. 704; 37 J.P. 552; 21 W.R. 733 1022
Price, In re [1943] Ch. 422; 112 L.J.Ch. 273; 169 L.T. 121; 59 T.L.R. 367; 87 S.J. 282; [1943] 2 All E.R. 505 967
Price v. Price [1951] P. 413; [1951] 2 All E.R. 580n.; 115 J.P. 468n.; 95 S.J. 560 527
Prince v. Prince [1951] P. 71; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 493; 94 S.J. 533; [1950] 2 All E.R. 375 . . . . . 312, 315

PAGE

Protheroe v. Railway Executive [1951] 1 K.B. 376; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 980; 94 S.J. 823; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1093 650
Prout v. Hunter [1924] 2 K.B. 736; 93 L.J.K.B. 993; 132 L.T. 193; 40 T.L.R. 868; 69 S.J. 49; 22 L.G.R. 746, C.A. 163
Pryor v. Pryor [1947] P. 64; [1948] L.J.R. 94; 177 L.T. 329; 63 T.L.R. 208; [1947] 1 All E.R. 381 558
Puckett and Smith's Contracts, In re [1902] 2 Ch. 258; 71 L.J.Ch. 666; 87 L.T. 189; 50 W.R. 532, C.A. 934
Pugh v. Heath. See Heath v. Pugh.
Purves v. Landell (1845) 12 Cl. & Fin. 91; 8 E.R. 1332, H.L. 189

Quebec (City of) v. R. (1892) 3 Exch.C.R. 164; 24 S.C.R. 420 1034

R. v. Armstrong [1907] A.C. 500; 40 S.C.R. 229 1034
R. v. Brandt (1851) 16 Q.B. 462; 4 New Sess.Cas. 494; 20 L.J.M.C. 119; 16 L.T. (o.s.) 437; 15 J.P. 191; 15 Jur. 223; 117 E.R. 956 915
R. v. Brook [1949] 2 K.B. 138; [1949] L.J.R. 1457; 65 T.L.R. 273; 113 J.P. 219; 93 S.J. 321; [1949] 1 All E.R. 787; 47 L.G.R. 523; 33 Cr.App.R. 92, C.C.A. 181, 182
R. v. Christchurch Inhabitants (1848) 12 Q.B. 149; 3 New Sess.Cas. 320; 18 L.J. M.C. 28; 12 L.T.(o.s.) 214; 12 J.P. 192; 12 Jur. 1072; 116 E.R. 823 . . 1119
R. v. Corfield (1922) 128 L.T. 305; 86 J.P. 216, D.C. 602
R. v. Cruise (1852) 2 I.Ch.R. 65 1033
R. v. Goole Local Board [1891] 2 Q.B. 212; 60 L.J.Q.B. 617; 64 L.T. 595; 55 J.P. 535; 39 W.R. 608, D.C. 83
R. v. Hampstead and St. Pancras Rent Tribunal, Ex parte Goodman [1951] 1 K.B. 541; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 37; 115 J.P. 77; [1951] 1 All E.R. 170; 49 L.G.R. 263, D.C. 7
R. v. Harden (1853) 2 E. & B. 188; Saund. & M. 135; 22 L.J.Q.B. 299; 21 L.T. (o.s.) 102; 17 J.P. 614; 17 Jur. 804; 1 C.L.R. 520 . . . . . 38, 40
R. v. Industrial Disputes Tribunal, Ex parte Banstead Urban District Council (1952) unreported 954
R. v. Industrial Disputes Tribunal, Ex parte Derbyshire County Council (1952) unreported 953, 954, 956, 958
R. v. Industrial Disputes Tribunal, Ex parte Practical Banking [1952] 2 Q.B. 662; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1448; 96 S.J. 378; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1370, D.C. . . . 954
R. v. Industrial Disputes Tribunal, Ex parte Technaloy [1954] 2 Q.B. 46; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 932; 98 S.J. 316; [1954] 2 All E.R. 75, C.A. . 953, 955, 956, 958, 959, 960, 963
R. v. Institution of Civil Engineers (1879) 5 Q.B.D. 48; 49 L.J.M.C. 34; 42 L.T. 145; 44 J.P. 265; 28 W.R. 253, D.C. 915
R. v. Jones [1949] 1 K.B. 194; 64 T.L.R. 616; 113 J.P. 18; 92 S.J. 648; [1948] 2 All E.R. 964; 33 Cr.App.R. 33; 47 L.G.R. 135, C.A. 3
R. v. Judge Fraser Harrison, Ex parte The Law Society [1955] 1 Q.B. 287; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 220; 99 S.J. 79; [1955] 1 All E.R. 270 . . . . . 683, 685, 686
R. v. Linnean Society of London. See Linnean Society v. St. Anne (Churchwardens).
R. v. Local Government Board (1882) 10 Q.B.D. 309; 52 L.J.M.C. 4; 48 L.T. 173; 47 J.P. 228; 31 W.R. 72, C.A. 29, 30, 31, 32
R. v. Lomas (1913) 110 L.T. 239; 78 J.P. 152; 30 T.L.R. 125; 58 S.J. 220; 23 Cox C.C. 765; 9 Cr.App.R. 220, C.C.A. 1, 2, 3, 4
R. v. McLeod (1882) 8 S.C.R. 1 1033
R. v. Middlesex Justices, Ex parte Bond [1933] 2 K.B. 1; 102 L.J.K.B. 432; 148 L.T. 544; 97 J.P. 130; 49 T.L.R. 247; 31 L.G.R. 169; 29 Cox C.C. 620, C.A. 558
R. v. Mile End Old Town Overseers (1847) 10 Q.B. 208; 2 New Mag.Cas. 240; 3 New Sess.Cas. 13; 16 L.J.M.C. 184; 9 L.T.(o.s.) 312; 11 J.P. 505; 11 Jur. 988; 116 E.R. 80 510
R. v. Nash, In re Carey (1883) 10 Q.B.D. 454; 52 L.J.Q.B. 442; 48 L.T. 447; 31 W.R. 420, C.A. 468, 469
R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal, Ex parte Keable Press [1943] 2 All E.R. 633, C.A. 954
R. v. National Arbitration Tribunal, Ex parte South Shields Corporation [1952] 1 K.B. 46; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 791; 115 J.P. 594; 95 S.J. 685; [1951] 2 All E.R. 828; 49 L.G.R. 742, D.C. 954
R. v. Noel [1914] 3 K.B. 848; 84 L.J.K.B. 142; 112 L.T. 47; 24 Cox C.C. 486; 10 Cr.App.R. 255, C.C.A. 855
R. v. Oliver [1944] K.B. 68; 60 T.L.R. 82; [1943] 2 All E.R. 800; 113 L.J.K.B. 119; 170 L.T. 110; 108 J.P. 30; 29 Cr.App.R. 137; 42 L.G.R. 37, C.C.A. 327, 328
R. v. Proprietors of the West Middlesex Waterworks (1859) 1 E. & E. 716; 28 L.J. M.C. 135; 32 L.T.(o.s.) 388; 23 J.P. 164; 120 E.R. 1078 510
R. v. St. John Tugboat Co. [1946] S.C.R. 466 1033

PAGE

R. v. Schrobounst [1925] S.C.R. 458 1033
R. v. Sheffield Recorder. See Wake v. Sheffield Corporation.
R. v. Taylor, R. v. Amendt [1915] 2 K.B. 593; 84 L.J.K.B. 1489; 113 L.T. 167; 79 J.P. 332; 31 T.L.R. 317, D.C. 601, 602
R. v. Tuttle (1929) 146 L.T. 701; 45 T.L.R. 357; 21 Cr.App.R. 85; 28 Cox C.C. 610, C.C.A. 856
R. v. Zoological Society of London. See St. Marylebone Vestry v. London Zoological Society.
Railway Assessment Authority v. Great Western Railway Co. [1948] A.C. 234; [1948] L.J.R. 244; 63 T.L.R. 635; 112 J.P. 88; 92 S.J. 83; [1947] 2 All E.R. 794; 46 L.G.R. 1, H.L. 624
Raleigh v. Goschen [1898] 1 Ch. 73; 14 T.L.R. 36; 67 L.J.Ch. 59; 77 L.T. 429; 46 W.R. 90; 42 S.J. 46 337
Ramsden v. Dyson (1866) L.R. 1 H.L. 129; 12 Jur.(N.S.) 506; 14 W.R. 926, H.L. 216
Reed v. Gray [1952] Ch. 337; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 114; [1952] 1 All E.R. 241 . . . 399
Regional Properties Co. v. Frankenschwerth and Chapman [1951] 1 K.B. 631; 95 S.J. 106; [1951] 1 All E.R. 178, C.A. 817, 883
Reid v. Powers (1884) 28 S.J. 653 1069
Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland v. Forbes (1896) 60 J.P. 393; 3 T.C. 415 578
Richards v. Fry (1838) 7 Ad. & El. 698; 3 Nev. & P.K.B. 67; 1 Will.Woll. & H. 116; 7 L.J.Q.B. 68; 2 Jur. 641; 112 E.R. 632 618
Richards v. Highways Ironfounders (West Bromwich) [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1049; 99 S.J. 580; [1955] 3 All E.R. 205, C.A. 1254
Rickard v. Rickard and Bond (1921) 37 T.L.R. 511 486
Rickards v. Lothian [1913] A.C. 263; 82 L.J.P.C. 42; 108 L.T. 225; 29 T.L.R. 281; 57 S.J. 281, P.C. 1232, 1234
Ricketts v. Colquhoun [1925] 1 K.B. 725; affirmed [1926] A.C. 1; 95 L.J.K.B. 82; 134 L.T. 106; 90 J.P. 9; 42 T.L.R. 66, H.L. 1091, 1093, 1094
Ridge's Trusts, In re (1872) 7 Ch.App. 665; 41 L.J.Ch. 787; 27 L.T. 141; 20 W.R. 878, L.JJ. 431
Rigby v. Rigby [1944] P. 33; 113 L.J.P. 33; 170 L.T. 254; 60 T.L.R. 238; [1944] 1 All E.R. 336, C.A. 810, 811
Rimmer v. Rimmer [1953] 1 Q.B. 63; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 767; [1952] 2 All E.R. 863 733, 736
Rippon v. Port of London Authority [1940] 1 K.B. 858; 56 T.L.R. 415; 109 L.J. K.B. 369; 162 L.T. 325; 104 J.P. 186; 84 S.J. 273; [1940] 1 All E.R. 637; 38 L.J.R. 188; 31 Cox C.C. 366 474
Rishton v. Haslingden Corporation [1898] 1 Q.B. 294; 67 L.J.Q.B. 387; 77 L.T. 620; 62 J.P. 85; 14 T.L.R. 155, D.C. 607, 608
Ritz Cleaners v. West Middlesex Assessment Committee [1937] 2 K.B. 642; 106 L.J.K.B. 398; 157 L.T. 423; 101 J.P. 307; 53 T.L.R. 588; 81 S.J. 337; [1937] 2 All E.R. 368; 35 L.G.R. 309, C.A. 625, 634
Roach v. Yates [1938] 1 K.B. 256; 107 L.J.K.B. 170; 81 S.J. 610; [1937] 3 All E.R. 442, C.A. 1066
Roberts v. Dorman Long & Co. Ld. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 942; 97 S.J. 487; [1953] 2 All E.R. 428; 51 L.G.R. 476, C.A. 661, 1051, 1186, 1187, 1189
Robins v. National Trust Co. [1927] A.C. 515; 96 L.J.P.C. 84; 137 L.T. 1; 43 T.L.R. 243; 71 S.J. 158, P.C. 607, 609, 613
Robinson, In re [1951] Ch. 198; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 132; 94 S.J. 839; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1148 . . . . . 1300, 1301
Robinson v. Robinson and Dearden [1903] P. 155; 72 L.J.P. 63; 89 L.T. 74 . . . 385
Rogers' Question, In re [1948] 1 All E.R. 328, C.A. 733
Roppel v. Bennett [1949] 1 K.B. 115; [1948] L.J.R. 1929; 64 T.L.R. 452; 92 S.J. 470; [1940] 2 All E.R. 627, C.A. 124, 129
Rose v. Ford [1937] A.C. 826; 106 L.J.K.B. 576; 157 L.T. 174; 53 T.L.R. 873; 81 S.J. 683; [1937] 3 All E.R. 359, H.L. 1064, 1065
Rose and Frank Co. v. Crompton (J. R.) & Bros. [1923] 2 K.B. 261 976
Ross v. Fedden (1872) L.R. 7 Q.B. 661; 41 L.J.Q.B. 270; 26 L.T. 966; 36 J.P. 791 1231
Rossiter v. Langley [1925] 1 K.B. 741; 94 L.J.K.B. 400; 133 L.T. 42; 41 T.L.R. 304; 23 L.G.R. 269, D.C. 238
Rotch v. Crosbie (1909) 54 S.J. 30, C.A. 304
Royal Choral Society v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 112 L.J.K.B. 648; 169 L.T. 100; 87 S.J. 336; [1943] 2 All E.R. 101; 25 T.C. 263, C.A. 915, 967
Royal College of Music v. Vestry of St. Margaret's and St. John's, Westminster [1898] 1 Q.B. 809; 67 L.J.Q.B. 540; 78 L.T. 441; 62 J.P. 357; 14 T.L.R. 351, C.A. 918, 920, 928, 929, 930
Russell v. Russell [1895] P. 315; 64 L.J.P. 105; 73 L.T. 295; 44 W.R. 213; 11 T.L.R. 579; 39 S.J. 722, C.A. 671
Rylands v. Fletcher (1868) L.R. 3 H.L. 330, H.L. 1230, 1232, 1233

Safford v. Safford [1944] P. 61; 113 L.J.P. 54; 171 L.T. 29; 60 T.L.R. 439; 88 S.J. 273; [1944] 1 All E.R. 704, C.A. 679, 680

PAGE

St. Marylebone Vestry v. London Zoological Society (1854) 3 E. & B. 807; 118 E.R. 1343; sub nom. R. v. Zoological Society of London, 2 C.L.R. 766; 23 L.J.M.C. 139; 23 L.T.(o.s.) 171; 18 J.P. 489; 18 Jur. 786; 2 W.R. 491 . 915
Salisbury (Lord) v. Nugent (1882) 9 P.D. 23 . . . . . 13, 14
Sanday (Samuel) & Co. v. Cox, McEuen & Co. (1922) 10 Ll.L.Rep. 409 . 646, 1305
Sanders v. Hamilton (1907) 96 L.T. 679; 23 T.L.R. 389, D.C. 1278
Sarason v. Frénay [1914] 2 Ch. 474; 83 L.J.Ch. 909; 111 L.T. 919, C.A. . . 762
Savage v. Hubbard [1953] C.P.L. 416; 161 E.G. 711 155
Savoy (Overseers of) v. Art Union of London [1896] A.C. 296; 65 L.J.M.C. 161; 74 L.T. 497; 60 J.P. 660; 45 W.R. 34; 12 T.L.R. 377, H.L. . . 923, 930
Schloss Brothers v. Stevens [1906] 2 K.B. 665; 75 L.J.K.B. 927; 96 L.T. 205; 22 T.L.R. 774; 10 Asp.M.L.C. 331; 11 Com.Cas. 270, C.A. 938
Scottish Shire Line v. Lethem (1912) 6 T.C. 91 279
Sedgwick v. Watney, Combe, Reid & Co. [1931] A.C. 447; 100 L.J.K.B. 271; 145 L.T. 73; 95 J.P. 115; 47 T.L.R. 308; 29 L.G.R. 279, H.L. . . . 625, 634
Sedgworth v. Overend (1797) 7 Term Rep. 279; 101 E.R. 974 830
Sedleigh-Denfield v. O'Callaghan [1940] A.C. 880; 164 L.T. 72; 56 T.L.R. 887; 84 S.J. 657; [1940] 3 All E.R. 349; sub nom. Sedleigh-Denfield v. St. Joseph's Society for Foreign Missions, 109 L.J.K.B. 893, H.L. . . . 1023
Self v. Self [1954] P. 480; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 119; 98 S.J. 439; [1954] 2 All E.R. 550 297–299, 302, 396, 397–399
Selwyn v. Hamill, 92 S.J. 71; [1948] 1 All E.R. 70, C.A. 477
Sexton v. Scaffolding (Great Britain) Ld. [1953] 1 K.B. 153; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 986; 96 S.J. 850; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1085; 51 L.G.R. 41, C.A. 1203
Shakespeare Memorial Trust, In re [1923] 2 Ch. 398; 92 L.J.Ch. 551; 130 L.T. 56; 39 T.L.R. 676; 67 S.J. 809 970
Shaw's Will Trusts, In re [1952] Ch. 163; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 1249; 95 S.J. 803; [1952] 1 All E.R. 49 967
Shelley v. London County Council [1949] A.C. 56; [1949] L.J.R. 57; 64 T.L.R. 600; 113 J.P. 1; 93 S.J. 101; [1948] 2 All E.R. 898; 47 L.G.R. 93, H.L. . 558
Shirlaw v. Southern Foundries (1926) [1939] 2 K.B. 206; 108 L.J.K.B. 747; 160 L.T. 353; 55 T.L.R. 611; 83 S.J. 357; [1939] 2 All E.R. 113, C.A. . . 595
Shore v. Wilson (1839) 9 Cl. & F. 355 216
Short v. Henderson (J. & W.) Ld. (1946) 115 L.J.P.C. 41; 174 L.T. 417; 62 T.L.R. 427; 39 B.W.C.C. 62, H.L. 1211
Short Bros. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1927) 12 T.C. 955 1318
Shove v. Dura Manufacturing Co. (1941) 85 S.J. 349; 23 T.C. 779 1318
Shrewsbury (Earl), In the Estate of, McLeod v. Shrewsbury (Earl) [1922] P. 112; 91 L.J.P. 46; 126 L.T. 415; 38 T.L.R. 203 13
Shuttleworth (W. S.) (Slough) v. Lane (1953) 46 R. & I.T. 103 630
Sifton v. Sifton [1939] P. 221; 108 L.J.P. 131; 55 T.L.R. 339; 83 S.J. 97; [1939] 1 All E.R. 109 1146
Silkstone and Haigh Moor Coal Co. v. Edey [1901] 2 Ch. 652; 70 L.J.Ch. 774; 85 L.T. 300; 45 S.J. 705, C.A. 864, 868
Silver Bros., In re [1932] A.C. 514; 101 L.J.P.C. 107; 146 L.T. 556; sub nom. Attorney-General for Quebec v. Attorney-General for Canada, 48 T.L.R. 238 . 1033
Simcock v. Simcock [1932] P. 94; 101 L.J.P. 38; 147 L.T. 17; 96 J.P. 226; 48 T.L.R. 374; 76 S.J. 345; 30 L.G.R. 216; 29 Cox C.C. 445, D.C. . 1273, 1274
Simmonds v. Simmonds [1955] 3 W.L.R. 129; 99 S.J. 436; [1955] 2 All E.R. 481 703
Simpson v. Charrington & Co. [1934] 1 K.B. 64; 103 L.J.K.B. 49; 150 L.T. 103; 50 T.L.R. 46, C.A.; affirmed in part [1935] A.C. 325; 104 L.J.K.B. 226; 152 L.T. 469; 51 T.L.R. 270; 79 S.J. 144, H.L. 699
Simpson v. Hartopp (1744) Willes 512; 125 E.R. 1295 584
Simpson v. Simpson [1951] P. 320; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 1019; 115 J.P. 286; [1951] 1 All E.R. 955, D.C. 674
Sinclair v. Brougham [1914] A.C. 398; 83 L.J.Ch. 465; 111 L.T. 1; 30 T.L.R. 315; 58 S.J. 302, H.L. 548
Skinner v. Geary [1931] 2 K.B. 546; 100 L.J.K.B. 718; 145 L.T. 675; 95 J.P. 194; 47 T.L.R. 597; 29 L.G.R. 599, C.A. 154
Skull v. Skull [1954] P. 458; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 1049; 98 S.J. 355; [1954] 1 All E.R. 1030 311
Smart (J. W.) (Modern Shoe Repairs) Ld. v. Hinckley and Leicestershire Building Society [1952] W.N. 484; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 684; 96 S.J. 763; [1952] 2 All E.R. 846, C.A. 1130, 1131, 1132
Smith, In re [1948] Ch. 49; [1949] L.J.R. 765; 63 T.L.R. 608; 91 S.J. 664; [1947] 2 All E.R. 708 . . . . . 431, 434, 435, 437, 726
Smith, In re, Vincent v. Smith [1930] 1 Ch. 88; 99 L.J.Ch. 27; 142 L.T. 178 . 943
Smith v. Giddy [1904] 2 K.B. 448; 73 L.J.K.B. 894; 91 L.T. 296; 53 W.R. 207; 20 T.L.R. 596; 48 S.J. 589 637
Smith v. Jackson (1823) 1 L.J.(o.s.)Ch. 231 . . . . . 1099, 1100
Smith v. Prime [1923] W.N. 131; 39 T.L.R. 403; 129 L.T. 441; 67 S.J. 557; 21 L.G.R. 368, N.P. 477
Smith v. Smith [1945] W.N. 104; 114 L.J.P. 30; 173 L.T. 8; 61 T.L.R. 331; [1945] 1 All E.R. 584 734

PAGE

Smith (John) & Son v. Moore [1921] 2 A.C. 13; 90 L.J.P.C. 149; 125 L.T. 481; 37 T.L.R. 613; 65 S.J. 492; 12 T.C. 266, H.L. 1289, 1318
Smithwick v. National Coal Board [1950] 2 K.B. 335; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 173; 94 S.J. 270; 48 L.G.R. 509, C.A. 136, 1190, 1193, 1197
Smyth (Ross T.) & Co. (Liverpool) v. Lindsay (W. N.) (Leith) [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1280; 97 S.J. 744; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1064; [1953] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 378 . 646, 1305
Sochacki v. Sas [1947] 1 All E.R. 344 . . . . . 1294, 1298
Société des Hôtels Réunis (Société Anonyme) v. Hawker (1914) 30 T.L.R. 423, C.A. 305
Solicitor, In re A, Ex parte Law Society [1912] 1 K.B. 302; 28 T.L.R. 50; 81 L.J.K.B. 245; 105 L.T. 874; 56 S.J. 92, D.C. 416
Sowter v. Steel Barrel Co. Ld. (1935) 154 L.T. 85; 99 J.P. 379; 33 L.G.R. 376, D.C. 1197
Spensley's Will Trusts, In re [1954] Ch. 233; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 145; 98 S.J. 77; [1954] 1 All E.R. 178, C.A. 1039, 1040, 1043, 1046
Spilsbury v. Spofforth [1937] 4 All E.R. 487; 21 T.C. 247 1001
Squire v. Squire [1949] P. 51; [1948] L.J.R. 1345; 64 T.L.R. 371; 112 J.P. 319; 92 S.J. 323; [1948] 2 All E.R. 51; 46 L.G.R. 289, C.A. 538, 1013
Stapley v. Gypsum Mines [1953] A.C. 663; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 279; 97 S.J. 486; [1953] 2 All E.R. 478, H.L. 1188, 1189, 1191, 1194
Starkowski (orse. Urbanski) v. Attorney-General [1954] A.C. 155; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 942; 97 S.J. 810; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1272, H.L. 331
Statham v. Statham [1929] P. 131; 98 L.J.P. 113; 140 L.T. 292; 45 T.L.R. 127; 72 S.J. 847, C.A. 200, 204, 205
Stevenson (Hugh) & Sons v. Akt. für Cartonnagen-Industrie [1918] A.C. 239; 87 L.J.K.B. 416; 118 L.T. 126; 34 T.L.R. 206; 62 S.J. 290, H.L. . 889, 894, 897
Stewart v. Austin (1866) L.R. 3 Eq. 299; 36 L.J.Ch. 162; 15 L.T. 407; 15 W.R. 122 1085
Stewart v. Stewart [1948] 1 K.B. 507; 64 T.L.R. 115; [1948] L.J.R. 799; 92 S.J. 111; [1947] 2 All E.R. 813, C.A. 733
Stiklestad, The [1926] P. 205; 95 L.J.P. 161; 136 L.T. 479; 42 T.L.R. 720; 17 Asp.M.L.C. 191 . . . . . 264, 265, 267
Stoddart v. Hawke [1902] 1 K.B. 353; 71 L.J.K.B. 133; 85 L.T. 687; 66 J.P. 67; 50 W.R. 93; 18 T.L.R. 23; 46 S.J. 31; 20 Cox C.C. 111, D.C. . . . 86
Stone v. Stone [1949] P. 165; 64 T.L.R. 542; 92 S.J. 633, C.A. 1244
Stowell v. Railway Executive [1949] 2 K.B. 519; [1949] L.J.R. 1482; 65 T.L.R. 387; 93 S.J. 540; [1949] 2 All E.R. 193 208
Strathfillan, S.S. (Owners) v. S.S. Ikala (Owners), The Ikala [1929] A.C. 196; 98 L.J.P. 49; 140 L.T. 177; 17 Asp.M.L.C. 555, H.L. . . . 1248, 1250
Stratton, In re [1931] 1 Ch. 197; 100 L.J.Ch. 62; 144 L.T. 169; 47 T.L.R. 32; 74 S.J. 787, C.A. 1038
Street v. Denham [1954] 1 W.L.R. 624; [1954] 1 All E.R. 532 . . . . 155, 160
Sullivan v. Lipton (1955) The Times, February 23 1007
Summers (John) & Sons Ld. v. Frost [1955] 2 W.L.R. 825; 99 S.J. 257; [1955] 1 All E.R. 870; 53 L.G.R. 329, H.L. 1191
Surrey Revenue Officer v. Gridley Miskin & Co. (1931) 2 Eng.De-Rating Cas. 236 . 631
Sutherland Settlement Trusts, In re [1953] Ch. 792; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 1163; 97 S.J. 387; [1953] 2 All E.R. 27 . . . . . 943, 946
Sutton v. Bootle Corporation [1947] K.B. 359; 177 L.T. 168; 111 J.P. 81; [1947] 1 All E.R. 92; 45 L.G.R. 162, C.A. 1007
Suzuki & Co. v. Benyon (T.) & Co. (1926) 95 L.J.K.B. 397; 134 L.T. 449; 42 T.L.R. 269; 17 Asp.M.L.C. 1; 31 Com.Cas. 183, H.L. 595
Swanson v. Forton [1949] Ch. 143; [1949] L.J.R. 632; 65 T.L.R. 178; [1949] 1 All E.R. 135; 152 E.G. 464 . . . . . 817, 818, 820, 821
Swanson's Agreement, In re, Hill v. Swanson [1947] L.J.R. 169; 176 L.T. 25; 62 T.L.R. 719; 90 S.J. 643; [1946] 2 All E.R. 628 817
Swymer v. Swymer [1955] P. 11; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 803; 98 S.J. 819; [1954] 3 All E.R. 502, C.A. 680
Sykes Brewery Co. v. Chadwick (1891) 7 T.L.R. 258 1285

Tatam v. Haslar (1889) 23 Q.B.D. 345; 58 L.J.Q.B. 432; 5 T.L.R. 593; 38 W.R. 109 834
Taylor v. Ellerman's Wilson Line [1952] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 144 473
Taylor v. Needham (1810) 2 Taunt. 278; 127 E.R. 1084 . . . . 213, 225, 229, 231
Taylor v. R. and H. Green and Silley Weir [1951] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 345 . . . 1324
Taylor v. Taylor and Darg (1899) 68 L.J.P. 116; 81 L.T. 494, D.C. 311
Tennants (Lancashire) v. Wilson (C. S.) & Co. [1917] A.C. 495; 86 L.J.K.B. 1191; 116 L.T. 780; 33 T.L.R. 454; 61 S.J. 575; 23 Com.Cas. 41, H.L. . 1305
Theodorou v. Chester [1951] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 204 937
Thetis, The (1869) L.R. 2 A. & E. 365; 38 L.J.Adm. 42; 22 L.T. 276; 3 Mar. L.C. 357 265
Thomas v. Sutters [1900] 1 Ch. 10; 69 L.J.Ch. 27; 81 L.T. 469; 48 W.R. 133; 16 T.L.R. 7; 44 S.J. 24; 19 Cox C.C. 418; 63 J.P.J. 724, C.A. . . . 112
Thomas v. Thomas, 62 T.L.R. 166; [1946] 1 All E.R. 170 528

PAGE

Thompson, In re, Ex parte Thompson (1919) 88 L.J.K.B. 646; [1918–19] B. & C.R. 150, D.C. 801
Thomson v. Cremin [1953] 2 All E.R. 1185, H.L. 934
Thomson v. Davenport (1829) 9 B. & C. 78; Dan. & Ll. 278; 4 Man. & Ry.K.B. 110; 7 L.J.(o.s.)K.B. 134; 109 E.R. 30 150
Thoreson v. Graham & Co. (1887) 3 T.L.R. 373 337
Thornber v. Wilson (1855) 3 Drew. 245; 24 L.J.Ch. 667; 25 L.T.(o.s.) 309; 19 J.P. 675; 3 W.R. 388; 61 E.R. 897 1046
Thurogood v. Van Den Berghs and Jurgens [1951] 2 K.B. 537; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 557; 95 S.J. 317; 49 L.G.R. 504; 115 J.P. 237; [1951] 1 All E.R. 682, C.A. 982
Thynne v. Salmon [1948] 1 K.B. 482; 64 T.L.R. 63; [1948] 1 All E.R. 49; [1948] L.J.R. 506; 92 S.J. 83 497
Tickle v. Brown (1836) 4 Ad. & El. 369; 1 Har. & W. 769; 6 Nev. & M.K.B. 230; 5 L.J.K.B. 119; 111 E.R. 826 618
Timmings v. Timmings (1792) 3 Hag.Ecc. 76; 162 E.R. 1086 385
Toogood & Sons v. Green [1932] A.C. 663; 101 L.J.K.B. 453; 147 L.T. 201; 96 J.P. 249; 48 T.L.R. 463; 76 S.J. 458; 30 L.G.R. 301, H.L. 628
Tottenham, In re, Public Trustee v. Tottenham (1946) 115 L.J.Ch. 170; 174 L.T. 367; 62 T.L.R. 245; 90 S.J. 152 544
Travers v. Holley [1953] P. 246; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 507; [1953] 2 All E.R. 794 . 424
Travers (Joseph) & Sons v. Cooper [1915] 1 K.B. 73; 83 L.J.K.B. 1787; 111 L.T. 1088; 30 T.L.R. 703; 12 Asp.M.L.C. 561; 20 Com.Cas. 44, C.A. . . . 937
Trebanog Working Men's Club and Institute v. MacDonald [1940] 1 K.B. 576; 109 L.J.K.B. 288; 162 L.T. 305; 104 J.P. 171; 56 T.L.R. 404; 84 S.J. 357; [1940] 1 All E.R 454; 38 L.G.R. 160; 31 Cox C.C. 372, D.C. 578
Tudor Accumulator Co. Ld. v. China Mutual Steam Navigation Co. Ld. [1930] W.N. 200 1069
Tungsten Electric Co. v. Tool Metal Manufacturing Co. (1950) 69 R.P.C. 108 . 780
Turner v. Arding and Hobbs (1949) 93 S.J. 756; [1949] 2 All E.R. 911 . . . 208
Turpin v. Middlesbrough Assessment Committee [1931] A.C. 451; 100 L.J.K.B. 271; 145 L.T. 73; 95 J.P. 115; 47 T.L.R. 308; 29 L.G.R. 279, H.L. 625, 626, 627, 632, 633

Uchida Kisen Kabushiki Kaisha of Kobe v. Smith (C. Henry) (1922) 10 Ll.L.R. 456 595
Underwood (A. L.) v. Bank of Liverpool [1924] 1 K.B. 775; 93 L.J.K.B. 690; 131 L.T. 271; 40 T.L.R. 302; 68 S.J. 716; 29 Com.Cas. 182, C.A. . 827, 828, 829, 835, 836, 1187
Union Cold Storage Co. v. Moon [1932] 2 K.B. 648; 101 L.J.K.B. 791; 147 L.T. 487; 96 J.P. 432; 30 L.G.R. 433, C.A. 997, 998
Universal Permanent Building Society v. Cooke [1952] Ch. 95; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 962; [1951] 2 All E.R. 893, C.A. 156
Universal Steam Navigation Co. v. McKelvie (J.) & Co. [1923] A.C. 492; 92 L.J.K.B. 647; 129 L.T. 395; 39 T.L.R. 480; 67 S.J. 593; 16 Asp.M.L.C. 184; 28 Com.Cas. 353, H.L. 146

Van den Berghs v. Clark [1935] A.C. 431; 104 L.J.K.B. 345; 153 L.T. 171; 51 T.L.R. 393; 19 T.C. 390, H.L. 1291, 1318
Vanderpant v. Mayfair Hotel Co. [1930] 1 Ch. 138; 99 L.J.Ch. 84; 142 L.T. 198; 94 J.P. 23 115
Van Wart, In re (1911) The Times, February 17 1044
Vaughan v. Archie Parnell and Alfred Zeitlin Ld. (1940) 23 T.C. 505 . . . 1289
Vaughan v. Vaughan [1953] 1 Q.B. 762; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 236; 97 S.J. 65; [1953] 1 All E.R. 209, C.A. 154
Victoria Laundry (Windsor) v. Newman Industries [1949] 2 K.B. 528; 65 T.L.R. 274; 93 S.J. 371; [1949] 1 All E.R. 997, C.A. 187
Vokes v. Heather (1945) 62 R.P.C. 135, C.A. 889
Volturno, The. See The Celia.
Vowles v. Armstrong-Siddeley Motors [1938] W.N. 385; 55 T.L.R. 201; 82 S.J. 1048; [1938] 4 All E.R. 796, C.A. 1197
Vyner v. Waldenberg Bros. Ld. [1946] K.B. 50; 115 L.J.K.B. 119; 173 L.T. 330; 110 J.P. 76; 61 T.L.R. 545; [1945] 2 All E.R. 547; 44 L.G.R. 155, C.A. 421, 1055
Vyner v. Wirral R. D. C. (1909) 73 J.P. 242; 7 L.G.R. 628 . . . . 607, 609

Wagstaff v. Jacobowitz [1884] W.N. 17 1285
Waite v. Jennings [1906] 2 K.B. 11; 75 L.J.K.B. 542; 95 L.T. 1; 54 W.R. 511; 22 T.L.R. 510, C.A. 571
Wake v. Sheffield Corporation (1883) 12 Q.B.D. 142; sub nom. R. v. Sheffield Recorder, 53 L.J.M.C. 1; 50 L.T. 76; 48 J.P. 197; 32 W.R. 82, C.A. . 30
Wakelin v. London & South Western Railway Co. (1886) 12 App.Cas. 41; 56 L.J.Q.B. 229; 55 L.T. 709; 51 J.P. 404; 35 W.R. 141; 3 T.L.R. 233, H.L. 607
Walker v. Bletchley Flettons [1937] 1 All E.R. 170 . . . . . 137, 1196

PAGE

Wallington v. Townsend [1939] Ch. 588; 108 L.J.Ch. 305; 160 L.T. 537; 55 T.L.R. 531; 83 S.J. 297; [1939] 2 All E.R. 225 . . . 216, 217, 221, 222
Walsh v. Secretary of State for India (1863) 10 H.L.Cas. 367; 2 New Rep. 339; 32 L.J.Ch. 585; 8 L.T. 839; 9 Jur.(N.S.) 757; 11 W.R. 823; 11 E.R. 1068, H.L. 1139
Walsham v. Walsham [1949] P. 350; [1949] 1 All E.R. 774; [1949] L.J.R. 1142; 93 S.J. 238 537
Walthamstow Local Board v. Staines [1891] 2 Ch. 606; 60 L.J.Ch. 738; 65 L.T. 430; 7 T.L.R. 446, C.A. 30
Walton v. Rikof [1937] W.N. 360; 81 S.J. 941, C.A. 351
Warburton v. Warburton (1953) The Times, July 10, C.A. 672
Ward v. Larkins (1923) 130 L.T. 184; 67 S.J. 657 883
Ward v. Robins (1846) 15 M. & W. 237; 7 L.T.(O.S.) 114; 153 E.R. 837 . . 618
Wardlaw v. Bonnington Castings, 1955 S.L.T. 225 1051
Warman v. Barclays Bank [1954] 1 W.L.R. 191; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1575 . 298, 299
Waterpark (Lord) v. Fennell (1859) 7 H.L.Cas. 650; 33 L.T.(O.S.) 374; 23 J.P. 643; 5 Jur.(N.S.) 1135; 7 W.R. 634; 11 E.R. 259, H.L. 216
Watson, In re (1912) 107 L.T. 783, C.A. 1083
Watson v. People's Refreshment House Association [1952] 1 K.B. 318; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 361; 96 S.J. 151; [1952] 1 All E.R. 289 1294
Watts v. Enfield Rolling Mills (Aluminium) Ld. [1952] 1 T.L.R. 733; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1013, C.A. 516, 1051
Webb v. Stenton (1883) 11 Q.B.D. 518; 52 L.J.Q.B. 584; sub nom. In re Hatton, Webb v. Stenton, 49 L.T. 432, C.A. 1221
Webber v. Norfolk Naturalists' Trust (1952) 45 R. & I.T. 6 915
Webster v. General Accident Fire and Life Assurance Corporation [1953] 1 Q.B. 520; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 491; 97 S.J. 155; [1953] 1 All E.R. 663; [1953] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 123 . . . . . 870, 871
Weigall v. Westminster Hospital (1936) 52 T.L.R. 301; 80 S.J. 146; [1936] 1 All E.R. 232, C.A. 208, 210
Welch v. Bank of England [1955] 2 W.L.R. 757; 99 S.J. 236; [1955] 1 All E.R. 811 831
West London Philanthropic Burial Society, In re, Cordery v. Greaves (1869) 20 L.T. 972; 33 J.P. 614 30
West of England Road Metal Co., In re, 155 L.T. 478; 80 S.J. 817; [1936] 2 All E.R. 1607 . . . . . 89, 91, 95
Westall v. Westall (1949) 65 T.L.R. 337, C.A. 671, 672
Westgate v. Crowe [1908] 1 K.B. 24; 77 L.J.K.B. 10; 97 L.T. 769; 24 T.L.R. 14; 52 S.J. 13, D.C. 708, 1170
Wharton v. Wharton, 116 J.P. 604; [1952] 2 All E.R. 939n., D.C. 814
White v. Altrincham Urban District Council [1936] 2 K.B. 138; 105 L.J.K.B. 366; 154 L.T. 656; 52 T.L.R. 441; 80 S.J. 365; [1936] 1 All E.R. 923; 29 B.W.C.C. 105, C.A. 302
White v. St. Marylebone Borough Council [1915] 3 K.B. 249; 84 L.J.K.B. 2142; 113 L.T. 447; 13 L.G.R. 977; 79 J.P. 350 874
White (orse. Berry) v. White [1948] P. 330; 64 T.L.R. 332; [1948] 2 All E.R. 151; [1948] L.J.R. 1476; 92 S.J. 325 537
Whiteley v. Hilt [1918] 2 K.B. 808; 87 L.J.K.B. 1058; 34 T.L.R. 592; 62 S.J. 717, C.A. 722, 723, 724
Whiteman Smith Motor Co. v. Chaplin [1934] 2 K.B. 35; 103 L.J.K.B. 328; 150 L.T. 354; 50 T.L.R. 301, D.C. 698, 699, 700, 702
Whitley v. Lowe (1858) 25 Beav. 421; 31 L.T.(O.S.) 5; 4 Jur.(N.S.) 197; 6 W.R. 236; 53 E.R. 697 98
Whittaker v. Collings (1938) unreported 377, 379
Whorwood, In re (1887) 34 Ch.D. 446; 56 L.J.Ch. 340; 56 L.T. 71; 35 W.R. 342; 3 T.L.R. 307, C.A. 1271
Wilder v. Wilder (1912) 56 S.J. 571, C.A. 1069
Wilkinson v. Haygarth (1847) 12 Q.B. 837; 16 L.J.Q.B. 103; 8 L.T.(O.S.) 465; 11 Jur. 104; 116 E.R. 1085 . . . . . 827, 830
Wilks v. Williams (1861) 2 J. & H. 125; 5 L.T. 445; 10 W.R. 55; 70 E.R. 997 541, 543
Williams v. Cardiff Corporation [1950] 1 K.B. 514; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 243; 114 J.P. 126; 94 S.J. 161; [1950] 1 All E.R. 250; 48 L.G.R. 143, C.A. . . 1007
Williams v. Linnitt [1951] 1 K.B. 565; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 94; [1951] 1 All E.R. 278 1294
Williams v. Sykes & Harrison Ld. [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1180; 99 S.J. 776; [1955] 3 All E.R. 225, C.A. 1199
Willmott v. Barber (1880) 15 Ch.D. 96; 49 L.J.Ch. 792; 43 L.T. 95; 28 W.R. 911, C.A. 223
Willoughby v. Willoughby [1951] P. 184, C.A. 560
Wilson Sons & Co. v. Balcarres Brook Steamship Co. [1893] 1 Q.B. 422; 41 W.R. 486; 7 Asp.M.L.C. 321; 4 R. 286; sub nom. Wilson, Son & Co. v. Killick, 62 L.J.Q.B. 245; 68 L.T. 312, C.A. 339

PAGE

Wimpey v. British Overseas Airways Corporation [1955] A.C. 169; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 932; 98 S.J. 868; [1954] 3 All E.R. 661, H.L. 1022

Winans v. Attorney-General [1904] A.C. 287; 20 T.L.R. 510; 73 L.J.K.B. 613; 90 L.T. 721 425

Winkworth v. Raven [1931] 1 K.B. 652; 100 L.J.K.B. 206; 144 L.T. 594; 47 T.L.R. 254; 75 S.J. 120, D.C. 1293, 1294, 1295, 1296, 1297

Winter v. Winter [1942] P. 151; 58 T.L.R. 365; [1942] 2 All E.R. 390; 111 L.J.P. 95; 86 S.J. 323 315

Winter Garden Theatre (London) v. Millennium Productions [1948] A.C. 173; [1947] L.J.R. 1422; 177 L.T. 349; 63 T.L.R. 529; 91 S.J. 504; [1947] 2 All E.R. 331, H.L. 786

Witt v. Corcoran (1876) 2 Ch.D. 69; 45 L.J.Ch. 603; 34 L.T. 550; 24 W.R. 501; 2 Char.Pr.Cas. 115, C.A. 714

Wood v. London County Council [1941] 2 K.B. 232; 110 L.J.K.B. 641; 165 L.T. 131; 105 J.P. 299; 57 T.L.R. 499; [1941] 2 All E.R. 230; 39 L.G.R. 289, C.A. 981

Woodcock (Jess B.) & Sons v. Hobbs [1955] 1 W.L.R. 152; 99 S.J. 129; [1955] 1 All E.R. 445, C.A. 733

Wright v. Williams (1836) 1 M. & W. 77; 1 Gale 410; Tyr. & Gr. 375; 5 L.J.Ex. 107; 150 E.R. 353 618

Wynn, decd., In re, Public Trustee v. Newborough [1952] Ch. 271; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 278, sub nom. In re Wynn's Will Trusts, Public Trustee v. Newborough (Baron), 96 S.J. 120; [1952] 1 All E.R. 341 942

Yates v. Morris [1951] 1 K.B. 77; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 707; [1950] 2 All E.R. 577, C.A. 239

Yorkshire Dale S.S. Co. v. Minister of War Transport [1942] A.C. 691; 111 L.J. K.B. 512; 167 L.T. 349; 58 T.L.R. 263; 86 S.J. 359; [1942] 2 All E.R. 6, H.L. 1188, 1199

STATUTES, ETC., JUDICIALLY CONSIDERED

Public General Statutes

		Page
1774	Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act (14 Geo. 3, c. 78), s. 86	1293
1832	Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will 4, c. 71), ss. 2, 4	616
1837	Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), ss. 9, 20	1240
1843	Scientific Societies Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 36), s. 1	907
1845	Lands Clauses Consolidation Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), ss. 81, 82, 83	439, 751
1853	Betting Act (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), ss. 1, 3, 4	84
1860	Charitable Trusts Act (23 & 24 Vict. c. 136), ss. 2, 3, 4, 5	42
1861	Offences against the Person Act (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 38	493
1869	Debtors Act (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 13 (1)	1125
1875	Public Health Act (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 268	29
1878	Threshing Machine Act (41 & 42 Vict. c. 12), s. 1	444
1881	Army Act (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58) (as re-enacted), ss. 18, 41	715
1882	Married Women's Property Act (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 17	731
1883	City of London Parochial Charities Act (46 & 47 Vict. c. 36), s. 34	42
	Bankruptcy Act (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 32 (2) (b)	800
1885	Criminal Law Amendment Act (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s. 3	181
	Prevention of Crimes Amendment Act (48 & 49 Vict. c. 75), s. 2	1207
1886	Guardianship of Infants Act (49 & 50 Vict. c. 27)	335
1890	Public Health Act Amendment Act (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 35 (1)	1021
1892	Private Street Works Act (55 & 56 Vict. c. 71)—
	ss. 5, 6	603
	s. 7	333, 603
	s. 8	603
1901	Factory and Workshop Act (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 149 (1) (c)	573
1907	Patents and Designs Act (7 Edw. 7, c. 29), s. 38 (1)	761
1911	Coal Mines Act (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 50), ss. 49, 102 (8)	132
1914	Bankruptcy Act (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59)	545
	s. 26 (4)	800
	ss. 102, 109 (4), 147 (1)	20
1916	Larceny Act (6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50)—
	s. 2	715
	s. 43 (2)	848
1920	Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17)—
	ss. 2 (1) (b), (3), 5 (1)	272
	s. 12 (1) (g)	495
	s. 12 (2) (i)	123
	s. 12 (2) (iii) (6)	160
1922	Finance Act (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 21	289
	Criminal Law Amendment Act (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 56), s. 3	181
1923	Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 1 (1)	88
	Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 32)—
	s. 4 (2)	237
	s. 10 (1)	123
1925	Settled Land Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 18), s. 73 (1)	940
	Trustee Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 27	459
	Law of Property Act (15 Geo. 5, c. 20)—
	s. 109 (2)	96
	s. 144	566
	Administration of Estates Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 23), s. 5	495
	Guardianship of Infants Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 45)	335
	Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49)—
	s. 27 (2)	557, 559
	s. 51	843
	s. 68 (2)	351
	Criminal Justice Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), s. 11 (1)	331
	Rating and Valuation Act (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 22	504
1926	Legitimacy Act (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 60), s. 1 (1)	409
	Sale of Food (Weights and Measures) Act (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 63), s. 6	372
1927	Moneylenders Act (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 21), s. 6	563
	Landlord and Tenant Act (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 36)—
	ss. 4, 5 (5)	693
	s. 19 (3)	566
1928	Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 44)—
	s. 3	573
	s. 3 (1) (4)	621
	ss. 5 (1) (c), (2) (c), (3), 6	982
1929	Companies Act (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 23), s. 306 (1)	96

		Page
1930	Road Traffic Act (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43)—
	s. 4 (1)	325
	s. 6	48
	s. 7 (4)	858, 1103
	ss. 35 (1), 121 (1)	325, 488
1931	Statute of Westminster (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 4), ss. 1, 2	192
1933	Evidence (Foreign, Dominion and Colonial Documents) Act (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 4)	668
	Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 32)—
	s. 3 (1)	706
	s. 3 (3) (b)	475
	Sch. I (b)	706
	Local Government Act (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 249 (4)	110
1934	County Courts Act (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), ss. 40, 43, 51	38
	Betting and Lotteries Act (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 58), s. 24 (1)	54, 67
1936	Finance Act (25 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 34), s. 18 (1) (2)	1329
	Public Health Act (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 49)—
	s. 56 (1)	82
	s. 92	110
	Housing Act (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 51), s. 188	872
1937	Finance Act (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 54)—
	s. 19	289
	s. 22	277
	s. 22 (1) (2)	289
	Factories Act (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67)—
	s. 13 (1)	1195
	s. 14 (1)	971, 1180
	s. 25 (2)	648
	s. 47 (1)	659, 1025, 1049, 1148, 1252
	s. 49	76
	s. 151 (1) (6)	980
1938	Evidence Act (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 28)—
	s. 1	400
	s. 1 (1) (3)	340
	Inheritance (Family Provision) Act (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 45)	703
	s. 1 (1) (b)	1105
1939	Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 71), s. 3 (3)	160
	Matrimonial Causes (Northern Ireland) Act (2 & 3 Geo. 6 (N.I.), c. 13), s. 26	422
1943	War Damage Act (6 & 7 Geo. 6, c. 21), ss. 84 (1), 104	655
	Catering Wages Act (6 & 7 Geo. 6, c. 24), ss. 1 (4), 9 (1)	1210
1945	Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 28), ss. 1, 4	113
	Family Allowances Act (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 41), ss. 1, 3 (2), 21 (7)	899
1946	Acquisition of Land (Authorisation Procedure) Act (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 49), Sch. I, art. 16	380
	Coal Industry Nationalisation Act (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 59), s. 25	167
1947	Finance Act (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 35)—
	s. 31 (2)	289
	s. 38 (3)	277
	Crown Proceedings Act (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 44), s. 10	1116
1948	Local Government Act (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 26), s. 48	6, 426
	Companies Act (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38)—
	s. 51	1080
	s. 294	163
	s. 366	96
	Sch. I, Table A, para. 107	352
	Children Act (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 43), s. 1	899
	Criminal Justice Act (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 58)—
	s. 14 (1) (c)	181
	s. 17 (2)	858
	Agricultural Holdings Act (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 63), ss. 1 (1), 81 (1), Sch. III, Pt. II, para. 23	940
1949	Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 40), s. 11	348
	Legal Aid and Advice Act (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 51)—
	s. 1 (5)	1072
	s. 2 (2) (a)	172
	s. 2 (2) (e)	692
	s. 3	1220
	s. 3 (4)	681
	Sch. III	395, 843
1950	Matrimonial Causes Act (14 Geo. 6, c. 25)—
	s. 1 (1)	1272
	s. 1 (1) (d), (2) (a) (d)	675
	s. 4	1235
	s. 4 (1) (2)	1242
	s. 18 (1) (a)	422
	s. 23	254
	Adoption Act (14 Geo. 6, c. 26), s. 21	52
	Shops Act (14 Geo. 6, c. 28), ss. 1, 53 (1) (13)	1121
1952	Income Tax Act (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 10), Sch. IX, rr. 5, 9	1087
	Family Allowances and National Insurance Act (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 29), s. 52	899
	Magistrates' Courts Act (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 55)—
	s. 1 (2) (b)	331
	s. 61	520
	s. 107 (2)	858
	Intestates' Estates Act (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 64), s. 2 (1) (1A)	703

		Page
1953	Accommodation Agencies Act (1 & 2 Eliz. 2, c. 23), s. 1 (1) (b)	102
	Licensing Act (1 & 2 Eliz. 2, c. 46)—
	s. 7	600
	s. 100 (1) (a), (2) (c)	1133
	s. 151 (1)	1207
1954	Housing Repairs and Rents Act (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 53)—
	s. 33 (1) (9)	872
	s. 35 (1) (a)	475
	Landlord and Tenant Act (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 56)—
	ss. 23, 24 (1) (3) (b), 25	248
	s. 30 (1) (f) (g), (2)	1127
	ss. 66, 68 (2)	248

Other Statutes

Canada—Shipping Act, 1934, c. 44, ss. 649, 712 . . . 1031
Kenya—Increase of Rent (Restriction) Ordinance, 1949 (Kenya), s. 16 (1) (i), (2) (6) 877
Malaya—Advocates and Solicitors Ordinance, No. 4 of 1947, ss. 26, 27 . . . 405
Malta—Civil Code (c. 23), s. 1520 (1) (2) . . . 1137
Malta—Code of Organisation and Civil Procedure (c. 15), ss. 314, 356 . . . 1137
Niger Lands Transfer Ordinance, 1916, c. 86 (as amended by Ordinance Nos. 22 and 61 of 1945), s. 14 (now s. 15 of c. 149 of the Laws of Nigeria, 1948 Rev.) 231

Rules and Orders

Bankruptcy Rules, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 2113 (L.14)), rr. 4 (1), 8 (1) (g) (2), 9, 31, 32, 261, 389 . . . 20
Bread Order, 1953 (S.I. 1953, No. 1283), arts. 1, 3 . . . 372
Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1145)—
reg. 2 . . . 416, 1202
regs. 22, 24 . . . 416
reg. 31 (3) (a) and (b) . . . 1202
Coal Industry Nationalisation (Company Adjustment) Regulations (S.I. 1948, No. 2360), regs. 2 (5), 23 . . . 167
Companies (Winding-Up) Rules, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 330 (L.4))— rr. 1, 4 (3) . . . 862
r. 134 . . . 163
County Court Rules, 1936 (S.R. & O. 1936, No. 626/L.17)—
Ord. 47, r. 1 . . . 706
Ord. 47, r. 21 (4) . . . 747
Docks Regulations, 1934 (S.R. & O. 1934, No. 279), reg. 43 . . . 514
Evidence (France) Order in Council, 1937, No. 515 . . . 1066
Industrial Disputes Order, 1951 (S.I. 1951, No. 1376), arts. 2 (b), 10, 12 (1) . . . 949
Landlord and Tenant (Notices) Regulations, 1954 (S.I. 1954, No. 1107) . . . 248
Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1359)—
reg. 14 (3) . . . 172
reg. 14 (5) . . . 843
reg. 16 (6) . . . 1220
Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1940 (L.27))—
r. 36 (1) . . . 309
r. 44 (1) . . . 703
Non-Contentious Probate Rules, 1954 (S.I. 1954, No. 796), r. 53 (1) . . . 847
Protection of Eyes Regulations, 1938 (S.R. & O. 1938, No. 654), Sch. . . . 76
Regulations for the Generation, Transformation, Distribution and Use of Electrical Energy, 1908 (S.R. & O. 1908, No. 1312) . . . 106
Royal Warrant of May 24, 1949 (Cmd. 7699), arts. 37, 65 . . . 1116
Shipbuilding Regulations, 1931 (S.R. & O. 1931, No. 133), reg. 1 . . . 470
Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1953 (S.I. 1953, No. 117/L.1) . . . 439, 751
Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1883 (S.R. & O. 1882) . . . 439, 751
Solicitors' Remuneration (Registered Land) Order, 1925 (S.R. & O. 1926, No. 2/L.2) . . . 439
para. 1 (D) (i), (G), (H) . . . 751
Solicitors' Remuneration (Registered Land) Order, 1944 (S.R. & O. 1944, No. 204/L.6) . . . 439, 751
Solicitors' Remuneration (Registered Land) Order, 1953 (S.I. 1953, No. 118/L.2) 439, 751
Wages Regulation (Unlicensed Place of Refreshment) Order, 1953 (S.I. 1953, No. 1611) . . . 1210
Wages Regulation (Unlicensed Place of Refreshment) (Amendment) Order, 1955 (S.I. 1955, No. 386) . . . 1210
Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922 (S.R. & O. 1922, No. 1196), reg. 10 . . . 971

		Page
R.S.C.,	Ord. 3, r. 6	1275
	Ord. 11, r. 1 (e)	545
	Ord. 14, rr. 1, 4	1275
	Ord. 14A	688
	Ord. 16, r. 11	336
	Ord. 19,
	r. 6 (2)	1109
	r. 25A	12
	r. 27	1109
	Ord. 25, r. 4	1109
	Ord. 27	1109
	Ord. 30.	898
	Ord. 37A, r. 1	639
	Ord. 45, r. 1	1220
	Ord. 47, r. 1	1314
	Ord. 50, r. 3	1068
	Ord. 55, r. 15	427
	Ord. 55A, r. 6 (2)	1239
	Ord. 58, r. 8	351
	Ord. 59, r. 4 (2)	862
	Ord. 65, r. 27, reg. 39	603

THE WEEKLY LAW REPORTS
Volume I

Containing those cases of value to practitioners which are not intended to be included in The Law Reports and also practice notes and directions.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.]

C. C. A.

1954
Dec. 6.

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Devlin JJ.

*REGINA v. BULLOCK.

Criminal Law—Accessory before the fact—Knowledge of crime—How specific — Motor-car over which appellant had control used for purposes of housebreaking—Appellant's knowledge that motor-car was being used for criminal purpose—Whether necessary to direct jury as to knowledge of some particular crime in view.

The appellant was charged on two counts alleging breaking and entering on two separate occasions, one house being in Leicestershire and the other in Wiltshire. There was sufficient evidence to suggest that the appellant had some connexion with both crimes and on each occasion a (different) car hired by him was seen in the vicinity of the house broken into. The appellant's defence was an alibi and at the trial the case for the prosecution and the summing-up proceeded on the basis that he was concerned in the breaking and entering. After the jury had been absent for about three-quarters of an hour they returned and asked the judge what was the law regarding a person who had knowledge of the fact that his car was being used for an unlawful purpose. The judge directed the jury, in effect, that if they were not satisfied that the appellant was present at the house broken into but found that to his knowledge the car was being driven by a thief or thieves, and he knew beforehand that it was going to be used for that purpose, then the appellant would be an accessory before the fact. The appellant was convicted of being an accessory before the fact and, relying on Rex v. Lomas (1913) 9 Cr.App.R. 220; 30 T.L.R. 125, he appealed on the ground that the judge's direction was, in the circumstances, inadequate:—

Held, that the direction to the jury had to be considered in the background of the facts. The appellant had had control of the car, and if he knew that it was going to be used, he must have formally or informally lent it for a specific purpose, and, therefore, once the jury were satisfied that he knew it was going to be used for an unlawful purpose there was, in the circumstances of the case, and in view of the defence, no need to give an elaborate direction as to whether the unlawful purpose was merely a general purpose or the intent to commit one or other of the crimes. The direction, accordingly, was adequate, and the appeal failed.

C. C. A.

1954

REGINA v. BULLOCK.

Rex v. Lomas (1913) 9 Cr.App.R. 220; 30 T.L.R. 125 distinguished.

The second part of the headnote to Rex v. Lomas, 9 Cr.App.R. 220, "there must be some particular crime in view," is not derived from anything in the judgment to that case.

Quaere, whether mere suspicion that something lent may be used by the borrower for a general criminal purpose is sufficient to make the lender an accessory before the fact.

APPEAL against conviction.

The appellant and one Beyer were jointly charged with between January 14 and 17, 1954, breaking and entering a house in Leicestershire, and alternatively, with receiving articles stolen from the house. The same indictment also contained another count charging the appellant alone with, between November 23 and 26, 1953, breaking and entering a house in Wiltshire from which a quantity of property was stolen.

Motor-cars were used for the purposes of both crimes and, although different cars, the car seen in the vicinity at the time of each crime had been hired by the appellant. His explanation was that he had in fact hired the two cars on those two occasions but that their use for the purposes of the robberies was entirely unknown to him, and he could only suggest that on each occasion the car had been taken away from the place where it had been parked at night, used for the robbery, and brought back again without his being any the wiser. In one case the car had done a considerable mileage and, as he had already stated that he had never used it outside London, the appellant found some difficulty in giving an adequate explanation of the mileage.

The appellant's defence was that on neither occasion could he have been away from London, and at the trial the case was presented by the prosecution, and summed up to the jury, on the basis that the appellant was himself concerned with the breaking and entering and that he had produced an alibi.

After the jury had been out for about three-quarters of an hour they came back.—

The foreman: "What is the law regarding a person who has "knowledge of the fact that his car is being used for an unlawful "purpose?"

The judge: "That is rather difficult. I do not understand "the question."

The foreman: "May I continue? We are of the opinion— "but we have not finally decided—that Bullock may have driven "the car to Misterton Hall. We cannot reach a unanimous "decision on that point and the other members of the jury—"

The judge: "Is it this you want to know: if you are not "satisfied that he was there, whether to his knowledge the car "was being driven by a thief or thieves?"

The foreman: "Yes."

The judge: "Although he may not have been the person "driving the car, he knew beforehand that it was going to be "used for that purpose?"

The foreman: "Yes."

The judge: "Then he would be an accessory before the fact "and would be liable to be punished accordingly."

The jury found that the appellant was an accessory before the fact to the breaking and entering in each case and he was convicted as such. Relying on Rex v. Lomas,[1] he appealed against his conviction on the ground that the judge's direction was wrong in law; alternatively, that the question asked by the foreman of the jury had put a new complexion on the case and that the judge's answer, even if it was right in law, was inadequate having regard to the nature of the case and the circumstances.

F. H. Lawton for the appellant.
J. A. Grieves for the Crown.

The following cases were referred to in argument: Rex v. Lomas[2]; Rex v. Jones[3]; and Harris v. Director of Public Prosecutions.[4]

LORD GODDARD C.J.: I will ask Devlin J. to give the judgment of the court in this case.

DEVLIN J. stated the facts as set out above and continued: There was abundant evidence to suggest that the appellant had some connexion with both the crimes. It was too much to ask the jury to believe that on two separate occasions separated by a couple of months and with two separate cars, the car had in each case been used without his knowledge.

The way in which the case was presented at the trial and the way it was summed up to the jury was on the basis that the appellant was concerned with the breaking and entering and that he had produced an alibi to show that upon neither of these occasions could he have been away from London. There was, however, an alternative possibility, which apparently suggested itself to the jury during their deliberations, that it was conceivable that the alibi might have been true and that the two sets of facts could be reconciled if, although he did not go himself, the appellant had lent his car for the purpose on each occasion. Accordingly, after they had been out about three-quarters of an hour, the jury came back and the foreman of the jury put this question.

[1] (1913) 9 Cr.App.R. 220; 30 T.L.R. 125.
[2] 9 Cr.App.R. 220.
[3] [1949] 1 K.B. 194; 64 T.L.R. 616; [1948] 2 All E.R. 964; 33 Cr.App.R. 33.
[4] [1952] A.C. 694; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1075; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1044; 36 Cr.App.R. 39.

C. C. A.
1954
REGINA v. BULLOCK.

[His Lordship stated the questions put by the foreman and the answers of the judge, as set out above, and continued:] That direction has been criticized on the ground that in the circumstances of this case it was not adequate enough, and in particular that the jury ought to have been told that unless the appellant knew that his car was being used for this particular crime and did something by way of encouragement, there was not enough to constitute being an accessory before the fact in law. No doubt, had the case for the prosecution been more directed towards that alternative, the summing-up would probably have dealt with it more elaborately than it did, but the judge was dealing with the question which was put to him after he had concluded his summing-up, and the only point which we have to determine is whether he answered it sufficiently clearly and gave the jury an adequate direction for the purposes of this case. We think that he plainly did.

Mr. Lawton has cited and relied upon Rex v. Lomas.[1] The headnote to that case reads: "Mere knowledge that the principal "intends to commit crime does not constitute an accessory before "the fact: there must be some particular crime in view." The first part of that headnote, that is, "Mere knowledge that the "principal intends to commit crime does not constitute an "accessory before the fact" is unexceptionable as far as it goes; mere knowledge is not of itself enough, there must be something further. But in the circumstances of this case, once it was plain that the appellant had hired the car and had control of it, it was equally plain, if he knew that it was being used, that he must also have permitted it to be used. He must formally or informally have lent it for that purpose, and that is certainly enough. Rex v. Lomas[2] is upon this point quite different. The appellant in that case had a jemmy which belonged to the burglar, a man named King, and he handed back to King King's own jemmy. The appellant was not in a position to withhold the jemmy or permit King to use it. In the present case, where the appellant had control of the car, the position is quite different.

The second part of the headnote to Rex v. Lomas,[2] "there "must be some particular crime in view," is not derived from anything contained in the very short judgment of Lord Reading C.J. The conclusion which is there stated is[3]: "it is sufficient "for us to say that the facts as found by the jury are not enough "to constitute the offence." The reference to a particular crime in view comes from the rider or something in the nature of a rider which the jury attached to their verdict. The jury found the accused guilty and[4] "that he had a certain knowledge that "the jemmy was wanted for an illegal purpose—that he handed "the jemmy to King with the knowledge that it was wanted for "a burglary. He did not know that it was wanted for this

[1] 9 Cr.App.R. 220.
[2] 9 Cr.App.R. 220.
[3] Ibid. 222.
[4] Ibid. 220.

C. C. A.
1954
REGINA v. BULLOCK.

"particular burglary." But there is nothing in the judgment to show that that point was taken by the court as being the decisive point, and the case could have been decided equally well on the ground that the accused had no control over the jemmy. It is no doubt true that if an accused person merely suspects that if he lends something it may be used for a general criminal purpose, that may not be enough to make him an accessory before the fact; it is not necessary, for the purposes of this case, that we should express a view one way or another on that point. If an accused person lends a man a revolver believing that it may be used to commit a crime of violence but with nothing specific in mind, it may not be enough, but this is not a case of that sort. This is a case in which a man had hired a car and, having hired it, he was plainly not going to put it at the disposal of anybody who wanted to borrow it; it must have been borrowed, if borrowed at all, for a specific purpose. If the appellant's case had been: "Yes, I did lend the car to Beyer. "I had not an idea what he wanted it for, and I lent it to him "without knowing that he was going to commit any particular "crime," then it might be that a more careful direction than the one given was required. But we must consider the direction given in this case with the background of the admitted facts. The appellant was saying that he had never lent the car to anybody, and that he did not use it or know that it was being used for any unlawful purpose. Once the jury were satisfied, as they apparently were, that he did know that it was being used for an unlawful purpose, there was no need to give an elaborate direction as to whether the unlawful purpose was merely a general purpose or the intent to commit one or other of these crimes. In our judgment the direction was, in the circumstances, quite adequate and the appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Sampson & Co.; B. F. Chapman, Leicester.

J. F. L.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* In re BRIXHAM URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.
In re SALCOMBE URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.
In re TOTNES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

1954
Oct. 4.

Hilbery, Lynskey and Parker JJ.

PRACTICE NOTE.

Rates and Rating—Practice—Appeal—Appeal by valuation officer to local valuation court—Rating authority in agreement with valuation officer's proposal—No steps taken by rating authority in reliance on valuation officer's proposal—Withdrawal of appeal by valuation officer—Rating authority not entitled to be heard—Local Government Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 26), s. 48.

1954

BRIXHAM URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, In re.

APPLICATIONS ex parte for leave to apply for orders of mandamus.

In the application by the Brixham Urban District Council the following were among the facts relied upon: A local valuation officer made a proposal to alter the valuation list and, objection having been made, served notice of appeal on the local valuation court under section 48 of the Local Government Act, 1948. The applicants, the rating authority, were in complete agreement with the valuation officer's proposal and therefore they took no steps themselves. When the appeal was due to be heard the valuation officer wrote to the clerk of the valuation court withdrawing his appeal, and when the court sat he did not appear. The court refused to hear the rating authority or to determine the appeal, and the rating authority applied for leave to apply for an order of mandamus directing the valuation court to hear and determine the appeal of the valuation officer on the grounds that, once notice of appeal had been given, a duty was imposed by section 48 [1] on the valuation court to hear it, and that, since subsection (3) entitled certain persons to appear as parties to the appeal, those persons had a right to have the appeal heard.

The other two applications turned upon the same point.

[1] Local Government Act, 1948, s. 48: (1) "Where notice of appeal "to a local valuation court is served "... by or on the valuation officer, "the valuation officer shall forthwith "notify the clerk to the local valuation panel from the members of "which the local valuation court "which is to hear the appeal falls "to be constituted, and it shall be "the duty of the chairman of that "panel to arrange for the convening "of such a court. (2) The procedure "of local valuation courts shall, subject to such regulations, if any, as "may be made in that behalf by "the Minister, be such as the court "in question may determine, and "every such court—(a) shall, unless "the court otherwise order, on the "application of any party to the "appeal and upon being satisfied "that the interests of either party "would be prejudicially affected, sit "in public; ... (3) On the hearing "of an appeal to a local valuation "court—(a) the appellant; and (b) "the valuation officer, when he is not "the appellant; and (c) the owner "or occupier of the hereditament to "which the appeal relates, when he "is not the appellant; and (d) the "rating authority for the area in "which the hereditament in question "is situated, when that authority is "not the appellant; and (e) in the "case of an appeal against an objection, the objector, where he is not "one of the persons aforesaid, shall "be entitled to appear and be heard "as parties to the appeal and to "examine any witness before the "court and to call witnesses. (4) "After hearing the persons mentioned in the last preceding subsection, or such of them as desire "to be heard, the local valuation "court shall give such directions with "respect to the manner in which the "hereditament in question is to be "treated in the valuation list as "appear to them to be necessary to "give effect to the contention of the "appellant if and so far as that contention appears to the court to be "well founded, and the valuation "officer shall incorporate in the list "as settled, or, as the case may be, "cause to be made in the list, such "alterations as are necessary to give "effect to those directions."

G. D. Squibb for the applicants. Proceedings were set on foot by the local valuation officer. In reliance on that, the rating authority did nothing, relying upon the right given to them by subsection (3) to appear as parties to the appeal. It is submitted that, even if the valuation officer did not want to appear to support his own appeal, the appeal was still there, and the rating authority were entitled to be heard as a party to it.

[HILBERRY J. But the appellant is in control of whether he wants to go on with an appeal or not. What is there in the Act to show that once such a notice of appeal had been given it could not be withdrawn?]

The inference is that once a notice of appeal has been given there is a duty imposed by subsection (1) to hear it, and there is a right to have it heard conferred by subsection (3) because the persons named in subsection (3) are entitled to appear as parties to the appeal.

[HILBERY J. It does not say that there is a right to have it heard; it says that on the hearing of the appeal the parties shall have certain rights. That presupposes the hearing, for the simple reason that you cannot hear an appeal if there is no appeal.]

The duty to hear arises because a notice of appeal has been served under subsection (1). Where a notice of appeal has been served, the Act specifically says that it is the duty of the chairman to arrange for the convening of a court.

[HILBERY J. Is your point that it was not an effective withdrawal or that he had not power to withdraw?]

It can be put on both grounds. The document which the valuation officer wrote had no legal effect at all; for there was another appellant, namely, the rating authority.

[LYNSKEY J. They were not appellants; they were a party entitled to be heard.]

Yes, on whichever side they liked. The rating authority were lulled into a sense of false security; they themselves could have made a proposal, but it was obviously foolish for both them and the valuation officer to do so.

[HILBERY J. They could have given a cross notice of appeal if they had wished.]

They were in entire agreement with the proposal made by the valuation officer.

[HILBERY J. In Rex v. Hampstead and St. Pancras Rent Tribunal, Ex parte Goodman[2] the tribunal said: "No, you "cannot withdraw like that as you have given us seisin of this "matter. We have a right to act on the res in the matter," that is, the premises; "we shall do what we think is right with "regard to them," and we held that they could not do it.]

[PARKER J. My recollection is that one of the arguments against the power to withdraw was that the local authority had a right to be heard. I think that was the argument.]

[2] [1951] 1 K.B. 541; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 37; [1951] 1 All E.R. 170.

1954

BRIXHAM URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, In re.

[HILBERY J. It was almost precisely this point in connexion with another Act.]

In that case the tribunal were saying: "No, you cannot "withdraw this appeal; we are going on, even though you do "not want to." It was not a case of the borough council saying: "No, you cannot do it because we have an interest." It is true that the fact that the borough council could have appeared was used in argument, but that it not quite this case because here the local authority themselves are aggrieved, and it is they who are saying that it ought to go on.

[LYNSKEY J. You are ignoring the provisions of subsection (4). Subsection (4) only gives the authority the right to deal with the contentions of the appellant, and if an appellant chooses to withdraw his appeal there is no contention of the appellant before them. How can they say: "We will listen to the local "authority and listen to the contentions and come to a con- "clusion upon them"?]

Under subsection (3) the rating authority are entitled to be heard as a party to the appeal. A party can be a respondent, and if he chooses to be heard as an appellant it is his contentions to which effect have to be given under subsection (4). A rating authority cannot appear as party to an appeal without taking sides. They must appear as appellant or respondent, and they can choose to put themselves in the position of appellant even if the original appellant has put forward no contentions at all on the hearing.

[LYNSKEY J. Subsection (3) in terms distinguishes between the appellant and the parties because under (a) it says that the court shall hear the appellant, and the rating authority is not the appellant.]

As soon as the rating authority exercise the right which is given them by the subsection to appear as parties, they can then either become appellant or respondent at their choice. In this case they would have chosen to be appellant and then their contentions would have been the appellant's contentions. If this had been a case in which the local valuation court in the absence of the appellant and in the absence of the rating authority had said: "A notice of appeal having been given, we are going to "hear it, although there is nobody here," that would have been like the landlord and tenant case as I understand it, but here it was not the case of the court themselves taking the bit between their teeth; there were persons appearing before them who wanted to be heard.

[HILBERY J. They only had a right to be heard on the appeal. There was nothing before the court and nothing to hear them upon.]

Under section 48 (1), once a notice of appeal has been served —and a notice of appeal had been served—it became the duty of the chairman to convene the court.

1954

BRIXHAM URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, In re.

[HILBERY J. That only means what it says, that having got a notice of appeal, that somebody wants to appeal, he is to convene a court. When the court was convened, it had notice that the appellant abandons his appeal; then there was nothing upon which the parties having a right to be heard on the appeal had a right to be heard upon.]

It is submitted that the appellant had not any right, having given a notice of appeal, to abandon his appeal once other persons had an interest in the proceedings through him. Amongst the powers and duties conferred by statute upon the valuation officer are the powers of making proposals and putting in notices of appeal. He is given no power at all to withdraw an appeal once he has given notice of it. If he is the only person interested in the appeal, he can secure the same effect merely by not attending or by attending and saying that he does not wish to put forward any contention. He cannot withdraw his appeal because there are other persons interested in having the appeal heard.

[HILBERY J. There are other persons who have a right to be heard and put forward their contentions and, if they were successful, to have those contentions made effective on the hearing of the appeal.]

The only reason why effect should be given to the contentions of the third party is that they would have become the contentions of the appellant under subsection (4). If effect is given to the contentions, it is because they have to be themselves in the position of appellant.

HILBERY J. You have a right to appeal against our decision on this point, but we are of opinion that this application must be refused.

Applications refused.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. for T. Owen Davies, Brixham.

J. F. L.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

*WARD v. LEWIS AND OTHERS.

C. A.

1954
Dec. 3.

[1953 W. No. 2227.]

Denning and Morris L.JJ.

Libel and Slander — Slander — Conspiracy — No allegation of special damage—Amendment of statement of claim alleging conspiracy and special damage—No nexus alleged between slanders and damage—Amendment refused.

In an action for slander the plaintiff, an osteopath, in answer to the defendants' request for particulars of damage replied that

C. A.

1954

WARD
v.
LEWIS.

no special damage was alleged. In his pleadings he alleged conspiracy between the defendants "wrongfully to make and publish "false and malicious oral and written statements defamatory of" [him]. That allegation of conspiracy was struck out by the master on the ground that it omitted any allegation of damage—an essential averment. In those circumstances the plaintiff obtained from the master leave to amend the pleadings by substituting an allegation of conspiracy by the defendants to defame, whereby he had suffered damage by reason of a severe falling off in his practice. Gerrard J. affirmed the master's order, and the defendants appealed:—

Held, that the allegation of conspiracy failed for the reason that no nexus was alleged between the falling off in the plaintiff's practice and the alleged slanders. The amendment should therefore not have been allowed and the appeal succeeded.

APPEAL from Gerrard J.

The following facts are substantially taken from the judgment of Denning L.J.:—

The plaintiff in the action, Mr. Stephen Ward, an osteopath, sued the defendants for alleged slander. The defendants asked for particulars of the damage and the plaintiff replied "No special "damage is alleged." But in the same pleading, by paragraph 8, he alleged that "the defendant Lewis conspired with the defen- "dants Taylor and Tracey wrongfully to make and publish false "and malicious oral and written statements defamatory of the "plaintiff." He gave particulars of overt acts but they were simply the alleged slanders. That allegation of conspiracy was struck out by the master because it omitted an essential averment, viz., an allegation of damage. In those circumstances counsel who then appeared for the plaintiff sought and obtained from Master Clayton leave to amend the allegation of conspiracy by substituting for paragraph 8 the following: "From in or about "July, 1952, until the month of November, 1952, or thereabouts, "the defendant Lewis conspired with the defendants Taylor and "Tracey and the defendant company [London Express News- "papers Ltd.] by their servants or agents as alleged in para- "graph 1 aforesaid, wrongfully to make and publish false and "malicious oral and written statements defamatory of the "plaintiff, whereby the plaintiff has suffered damage." In the particulars of special damage the plaintiff said: "The plaintiff "alleges that as a result of the allegations herein contained the "practice of the plaintiff has suffered severely and the value "thereof has been approximately halved." He gave the names of some 12 or 15 persons who, he alleged, no longer attended him.

Gerrard J. having on November 9, 1954, affirmed the master's order, the defendants appealed.

Bernard Gillis Q.C. for Lewis.
H. P. Milmo for the London Express Newspapers Ltd.
Colin Duncan for the plaintiff.

DENNING L.J., having stated the facts, continued: The question is whether the plaintiff should be given leave to amend his statement of claim in the way proposed. The important thing to notice about the new allegation is that no connexion is shown between the slanders and the damage. There is no allegation that the slanders which are charged against the defendants were either authorized to be republished by anyone or were likely to be republished, nor that they were in fact republished by anyone. In the slander action some such allegation would be a necessary averment, because a man who speaks a slander is not responsible for its republication unless he authorizes it or he knows or ought to know it is likely to be republished.

But Mr. Duncan, for the plaintiff, says that on the conspiracy allegation it is only necessary to allege conspiracy to injure or to do an unlawful act, and then to allege damage without alleging the connexion between the two. I cannot agree. It is important to remember (and we had a case only last week on this point) that when a tort has been committed by two or more persons an allegation of a prior conspiracy to commit the tort adds nothing. The prior agreement merges in the tort. A party is not allowed to gain an added advantage by charging conspiracy when the agreement has become merged in the tort. It is sometimes sought, by charging conspiracy, to get an added advantage, for instance in proceedings for discovery, or by getting in evidence which would not be admissible in a straight action in tort, or to overcome substantive rules of law, such as here, the rules about republication of slanders. When the court sees attempts of that kind being made, it will discourage them by striking out the allegation of conspiracy, on the simple ground that the conspiracy adds nothing when the tort has in fact been committed.

In this case the allegation of conspiracy fails for the simple reason that there is no nexus alleged between the falling off in the practice and the slanders which are alleged. I understand that the judge thought this was a borderline case. I have come to the conclusion that this is on the other side of the line. Leave to amend should not be granted in regard to the proposed paragraphs 8 and 16 of the statement of claim. I suppose that the other and minor amendments are unobjectionable and I need say nothing about them. I would allow the appeal accordingly.

MORRIS L.J. I agree, and there is very little I would desire to add. In the original statement of claim the concluding paragraphs alleged that the plaintiff had suffered damage. Particulars which were asked for were delivered in July of 1953 and it was said categorically that no special damage was alleged. Following upon that, in November, 1953, paragraph 8 of the statement of claim was struck out. The present application is for leave to amend the statement of claim. It does not seem to me that leave should be given unless the new plea is in adequate form.

C. A.
1954
WARD v. LEWIS.
Morris L.J.

The particulars given under the desired new paragraph 8 seem to me simply to be stating that at one date the practice was in a certain state and that at a later date it had declined. It does not seem to me that there is any sufficient allegation in the pleading of connexion between the conspiracy and the pleaded special damage. I think this is emphasised, inasmuch as the particulars still stand which say that no special damage is alleged in regard to the slanders. It is, of course, quite right, as Mr. Colin Duncan has pointed out, that it may not be necessary when considering the claims made in reference to the slanders themselves to allege any special damage having regard to the nature of the alleged slanders; but the fact remains that it is still said that there is no special damage from the slanders. There is no allegation that there was any likelihood or intention that the slanders would be repeated. In my judgment, in the present form of the application it would not be proper to give leave to amend.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Zeffertt, Heard & Morley Lawson; Allen & Overy; Summer & Co.

A. W. G.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1954
Dec. 3.
Denning and Morris L.JJ.

* In re REYNOLDS, DECD.
PEARKES v. REYNOLDS.

[1953 R. 2179.]

Probate—Practice—Particulars—Allegation that testator was not of sound mind—Request for detailed particulars of allegation—Extent to which particulars must be supplied—R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 25A.

Order 19, r. 25A, of the Rules of the Supreme Court provides: "In the Probate actions it shall be stated with regard to every "defence which is pleaded what is the substance of the case on "which it is intended to rely: and further where it is pleaded "that the testator was not of sound mind, memory, and under-"standing, particulars of any specific instances of delusion shall "be delivered before the case is set down for trial."

In an action in which the plaintiff sought probate of a will of which he was an executor, the defendant pleaded that the testatrix at the time that she made the will was not of sound mind, memory or understanding. In reply to the plaintiff's application for particulars giving specific incidents relied upon, with dates and places, the defendant gave at considerable length incidents on which he based his defence, but was unable, in most cases, to specify the dates. The plaintiff having obtained an order for further and better particulars from Davies J., affirming an order of the registrar, the defendant appealed:—

Held, that Order 19, r. 25A, did not require a highly detailed and particularized statement of incidents on which a defendant relied, and the defendant having stated the substance of his case had complied with the rule and no further particulars should be ordered.

Dictum of Cotton L.J. in Salisbury (Lord) v. Nugent (1882) 9 P.D. 23, 26 applied.

APPEAL from Davies J., affirming an order of Registrar Kinsley.

The plaintiff, Pearkes, a solicitor, put forward for probate three wills made by Mrs. Prudence Reynolds, deceased, in February, 1949, March, 1951, and April, 1952. He was himself a residuary legatee in the last will. The defendant, Anthony Bernard Reynolds, as executor of the will of Francis Godfrey Bailie Reynolds, deceased, husband of Prudence, contended that, at the time of making the wills, she was not of sound mind, memory or understanding. He pleaded that: "The deceased had for many "years been of unstable temperament, and for several years prior "to her death [July, 1953] had been addicted to excessive con- "sumption of alcohol which caused a continuous process of "mental deterioration," and in nearly a page of pleading further stated the substance of the defence. The plaintiff applied for particulars giving "the date from which it is alleged that the "deceased became of unstable temperament, stating how the "alleged instability manifested itself and giving any specific "incidents relied upon, with dates and places." In answer to that application the defendant stated that the deceased was in the habit of flying into unreasonable rages and of swearing violently in public; that on many occasions, the dates of which the defendant could not now specify, she in public restaurants kissed the waiters, flew into a temper with the guests whom she was entertaining, and sent for the police to "sling them out," and (among a number of general allegations) that, in 1946, she insisted on going for a drive when there was not enough petrol, and when the petrol ran out hit her husband over the head with an umbrella.

In the above circumstances the plaintiff obtained from the registrar an order for still further particulars, setting out facts or specific incidents relied on, with dates or approximate dates. Davies J., on November 2, 1954, affirmed the registrar's order, and the defendant now appealed against that order.

A. H. Ormerod for the defendant.
A. Richard Ellis for the plaintiff.

Salisbury (Lord) v. Nugent,[1] and In re Shrewsbury[2] were referred to in argument.

DENNING L.J. This is a probate action. Mrs. Reynolds died in July, 1953. She made three wills, one in February, 1949, another in March, 1951, and another in April, 1952. The plaintiff,

[1] (1882) 9 P.D. 23, 26.
[2] [1922] P. 112; 38 T.L.R. 203.

C. A.
1954
REYNOLDS, DECD., In re. PEARKES v. REYNOLDS.
Denning L.J.

Mr. Pearkes, who was her solicitor, is putting them forward for probate. The defendant says that at the time she was not of sound mind, memory or understanding. At one time in the Probate Division it was not the practice to order particulars of an allegation of unsoundness of mind. There were reasons which appeared good to the judges of that time. Lindley L.J. said in Salisbury (Lord) v. Nugent [1]: "the case may depend on a multitude of circumstances of which it is impossible to give particulars." Fry L.J. said [2]: "to adopt any other form of order would lead to great prolixity and to expensive contests as to the sufficiency of the particulars." So no particulars were ordered at that time.

In 1901 R.S.C., Ord. 19, r. 25A was brought in, which provided: "In the Probate actions it shall be stated with regard to every defence which is pleaded what is the substance of the case on which it is intended to rely: and further where it is pleaded that the testator was not of sound mind, memory, and understanding, particulars of any specific instances of delusion shall be delivered before the case is set down for trial." That rule, of course, altered the practice; it brought it into line with what Cotton L.J. thought was the proper way. In the case to which I have already referred he said [3]: "If we were dealing with a new practice I should say that it was reasonable to require from the defendant a general statement of the facts on which he means to rely." Order 19, r. 25A, carries into operation Cotton L.J.'s view.

In the present case the defendant set forward in her original particulars nearly a page of the substance of the case saying that "The deceased had for many years been of unstable temperament, and for several years prior to her death had been addicted to excessive consumption of alcohol which caused a continuous process of mental deterioration. . . ." There was nearly a page in the original pleading which stated the substance of the case. Particulars were asked, especially of the first allegation, of: "The date from which it is alleged that the deceased became of unstable temperament, stating how the alleged instability manifested itself and giving any specific incidents relied upon, with dates and places." In answer to that application the defendant gave two and a half pages more showing how the testatrix was of unstable temperament. For example: "The deceased was in the habit of flying into unreasonable rages. The deceased was in the habit of swearing violently in public. On many occasions the dates of which the defendant cannot now specify the deceased in public restaurants kissed the waiters . . . On many occasions the dates of which the defendant cannot now specify the deceased flew into a temper with the guests whom she was entertaining at her house, 32 Grove End Road,

[1] (1882) 9 P.D. 23, 26.
[2] Ibid.
[3] Ibid. 25.

" and sent for the police to ' sling them out.' " There are a number of general allegations of that kind together with some specific occasions such as an incident when in 1946 she insisted on going for a drive when there was not enough petrol, the petrol ran out and she hit her husband over the head with an umbrella.

The plaintiff now asks for still more particulars. There is a whole series of requests going halfway through the alphabet and they have been ordered by the registrar and by the judge. The first request is for particulars " Of the unreasonable rages alleged, " setting out any facts or specific incidents relied on, with dates " or approximate dates." Then: " Of the deceased's swearing " in public," setting out dates and places and so forth. Then: " Identifying the occasions on which it is alleged that the deceased " kissed the waiters in public restaurants," and so on. In other words, it is a whole series of further applications demanding further particulars, needing further investigation. The question is whether Order 19, r. 25A, requires particularity to such an extent. In my judgment, it does not. Cotton L.J. referred to a " general " statement of facts," not to a highly detailed and particularized statement. The rule requires the " substance of the case " to be stated, not all the details. I think that the substance of the case has already been sufficiently stated and we should not order these further particulars. Applications of this kind make litigation much too expensive and cause too many delays. In my judgment, the order which has been made goes beyond that which the rule warrants, and I do not think any further order should be made upon the defendant, but that the case should be brought to trial.

I, therefore, would allow this appeal and vary the order which has been made. I am encouraged in taking this view by the fact that Davies J. himself must have hesitated as to how far particulars ought to be given, as he gave leave to appeal in this case. It seems to me that his doubts were well-founded, and I would allow the appeal accordingly.

MORRIS L.J. I entirely agree, and I do not think that there is anything that I can usefully add to what my Lord has said.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Arnold, Fooks, Chadwick & Co.; Pettiver & Pearkes.

A. W. G.

[PRIVY COUNCIL.]

J. C.† 1954 Dec. 13.

* CLARICE HADAWAY, ADMINISTRATRIX OF THE ESTATE OF W. H. C. BOARDMAN (DECEASED) . APPELLANT;

AND

WILMOT HENRY HADAWAY AND ANOTHER . RESPONDENTS.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR THE WINDWARD ISLANDS AND LEEWARD ISLANDS.

Charity—Agriculture—Bank—Will—Trust to establish bank—Primary object to assist planters with loans at low interest—Whether valid charitable trust — Construction — Not confined to "the general "improvement of agriculture"—Windward and Leeward Islands.

A testator by his will devised and bequeathed the residue of his personal estate upon trust for the purpose of establishing and founding a bank, and declared by clause 8 that "the object of the "bank will be primarily to assist the planters and agriculturalists "of St. Vincent by way of loans at a sufficiently low rate of "interest as is compatible with the proper operation of the "bank":—

Held, that the trust was not a valid charitable trust. A trust for the granting of loans at a low rate of interest to a class of persons carrying on a particular trade or business or profession could not be regarded as charitable unless at least there was a condition that loans so made should be employed for a purpose which could itself be regarded as charitable. Accepting as good law the statement by Lawrence L.J. in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Yorkshire Agricultural Society [1928] 1 K.B. 611, 636; 44 T.L.R. 59, 61 that "the general improvement of agriculture is "a charitable purpose," the will here could not, on construction, be regarded as creating a trust for the general improvement of agriculture only or for such a purpose and purely ancillary purposes only, for it would be competent for the directors of the bank to make loans to planters in any financial emergency whether due to crop failure or other farming disaster or to some personal distress. Such loans which might or might not be used for agricultural purposes could not properly be described as made for the general promotion of agriculture, however much the individual planters might benefit. Restrictive words confining the loans to agricultural purposes should not be imported into the terms of the trust, and without them the trust was invalid.

Judgment of the Court of Appeal for the Windward Islands and Leeward Islands reversed.

APPEAL (No. 36 of 1953), by special leave, from a judgment of the Court of Appeal for the Windward Islands and Leeward Islands (August 6, 1952) which reversed a judgment of Jackson C.J. (October 9, 1951).

The following facts are taken from the judgment of the Judicial Committee: By his will, dated November 28, 1944, the testator, Henry Langlie Wilmot Hayward, who died on † Present: VISCOUNT SIMONDS, LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON and LORD SOMERVELL OF HARROW.

June 2, 1946, after appointing William Horatio Boardman and Wilmot Henry Hadaway to be his executors and trustees, devised and bequeathed to them all his property upon trust for conversion and after payment of his funeral and testamentary expenses to hold (subject as to some parts thereof to certain life interests) upon the trusts set forth in paragraphs 4 to 8 thereof, which were as follows:—

"4. Upon trust as to my personal estate to set aside and "invest in proper securities a sum sufficient to produce an "annuity to be paid as follows:—

"To William Horatio Boardman the sum of £100 per annum "payable in equal monthly instalments for the term of his "natural life. Provided nevertheless that my executors may in "their discretion invest the sum to be set aside under this para- "graph in the shares, securities or stock of the bank to be "established in accordance with my direction hereinafter "contained.

"5. Upon trust as to the residue of my personal estate to "pay and transfer the same to a body corporate established under "the laws of Saint Vincent for the purpose of establishing and "founding a bank within two years of the grant of the probate "of this my will on the terms, directions and conditions herein- "after set out.

"6. I hereby direct my trustees to use their best endeavours "in corporating by statute a body to manage and direct the "said bank, the directors of which shall be composed of the "Administrator, the Colonial Treasurer and four other persons "to be appointed annually at the general meeting of the body "corporate or if any vacancy necessitates it by the Executive "Council of Saint Vincent.

"7. I hereby empower the said directors to appoint or dismiss "a managing director of the bank, who is to be subject to their "control and discretion.

"8. I hereby declare that the object of the bank will be "primarily to assist the planters and agriculturalists of Saint "Vincent by way of loans at a sufficiently low rate of interest "as is compatible with the proper operation of the bank."

The will was in due course proved by the executors named therein, of whom William Horatio Boardman was stated to be the sole heir and next-of-kin of the testator. The residuary estate amounted to about £80,000.

In those circumstances an originating summons was issued in the Supreme Court of the Windward Islands and Leeward Islands, in which the testator's executors were plaintiffs and the respondent, the Attorney-General of the Windward Islands, was defendant, to have it determined whether the trust contained in clauses 5 to 8 of the will was a valid and effectual public or charitable trust or failed for uncertainty or any other reason, and for certain consequential relief.

J. C.
1954
HADAWAY
v.
HADAWAY.

That summons coming on for hearing before the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court (Jackson C.J.), that judge, in a long and careful judgment, in the course of which he recited many of the leading authorities in this branch of the law, concluded that the will did not effectually create a charitable trust and declared that the testator's residuary estate was divisible among the next-of-kin of the testator as upon an intestacy.

From that judgment the respondent Attorney-General appealed to the Court of Appeal, and that court by a majority (Cools-Lartigue and Manning JJ., dissentiente Date J.), allowed the appeal. The majority of the court in effect held that the trust in question was intended to benefit, and would benefit, agriculture, and further that any profit made by the bank by any business other than loans to persons engaged in agriculture could only ultimately be used for the dominant and primary purpose of assisting agriculture, and that consequently any activities of the bank other than the assistance of planters and agriculturists must be ancillary or subservient to that primary or dominant object. Therefore, they held, the trust was charitable. In his dissenting judgment, on the other hand, Date J. took the view that, if the testator intended the loans to be expended on the promotion of agriculture, he had failed to use words which adequately conveyed that intention and that the trust was not beneficial to the community in a sense which the law recognized as charitable and was therefore invalid.

In the meantime William Horatio Boardman had died, and the appellant Clarice became his representative by virtue of a grant of administration of his estate with the will annexed made on May 2, 1952. She had by special leave appealed from the order of the Court of Appeal, the respondents being the surviving executor, Wilmot Henry Hadaway, and the Attorney-General of the Windward Islands.

1954. November 17. L. M. Jopling for the appellant.

Pascoe Hayward Q.C. and Denys Buckley for the Attorney-General of the Windward Islands.

Peter Foster for Wilmot Henry Hadaway.

The following cases were cited in argument: Houston v. Burns [1]; Chichester Diocesan Fund and Board of Finance (Incorp.) v. Simpson [2]; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Yorkshire Agricultural Society [3]; Hunter v. Attorney-General [4]; and In re Pleasants, Pleasants v. Attorney-General. [5]

December 13. The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by VISCOUNT SIMONDS, who stated the facts set out above and

[1] [1918] A.C. 337, 342; 34 T.L.R. 219.
[2] [1944] A.C. 341, 370; 60 T.L.R. 492; [1944] 2 All E.R. 60.
[3] [1928] 1 K.B. 611; 44 T.L.R. 59.
[4] [1899] A.C. 309; 15 T.L.R. 384.
[5] (1923) 39 T.L.R. 675.

continued: In this appeal no general question of law arises, but the issue depends on the construction of the will of the testator. At the hearing before their Lordships much argument was directed to the nature of the machinery by which the trust declared by paragraph 8 of the will was to be brought into existence, and it may be conceded that in this respect the testator's intentions are not very clearly expressed. But it does not appear to their Lordships that there is any materiality in the argument, for ultimately the only question is whether the trust set out in paragraph 8 is a valid trust, and upon this question they are of opinion that the judgments of the Chief Justice and Date J. are correct. It appears to them to be impossible to regard as charitable a trust for the granting of loans at a low rate of interest to a class of persons carrying on a particular trade or business or profession, unless at least there is a condition that loans so made should be employed for a purpose which could itself be regarded as charitable. Their Lordships do not wish to cast any doubt upon the correctness of the decision in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Yorkshire Agricultural Society.[1] "It is plain to my "mind," said Lawrence L.J. in that case, "that the general "improvement of agriculture is a charitable purpose falling within "the fourth class of Lord Macnaghten's well known classification "of legal charities in Pemsel's case.[2]" Their Lordships accept this as an accurate statement of the law, but it appears to them impossible to regard the will of the testator as creating a trust for the general improvement of agriculture only or for such a purpose and purely ancillary purposes only. But it is conceded by the appellant that, unless the will can be thus construed, the appeal must fail: for if the trust fund may be devoted either to charitable or to non-charitable purposes the gift is invalid. This is the question of construction upon which, as has already been said, apart from any other difficulties, the issue in this case turns. Their Lordships do not dissent from the general proposition, which has been stated in various terms, to the effect that, where possible, a benignant construction in favour of charity should be adopted. But this does not justify the insertion of words in order to restrict the plain meaning of an expression and thus give validity to an otherwise invalid bequest. If there is a real ambiguity, it may be resolved in favour of charity: where there is no ambiguity, no question arises: the plain meaning of the words must be accepted and so must the ensuing legal effect.

In the present case their Lordships entertain no doubt that the ambit of the trust is wide enough to include loans which could not fairly be described as being for the promotion of agriculture or as being ancillary to that purpose, and that it is only by inserting restrictive words that loans could be so confined. For it is clear that it would be competent for the directors of the bank, which is to be established under the will, to make loans to planters in [1] [1928] 1 K.B. 611, 636. [2] [1891] A.C. 531; 7 T.L.R. 657.

J. C.
1954
HADAWAY v. HADAWAY.

any financial emergency, whether due to crop failure or other farming disaster or to some personal distress. But such loans which might or might not be used for agricultural purposes cannot be properly described as made for the general promotion of agriculture however much individual planters may benefit. The promotion of agriculture is a charitable purpose, because through it there is a benefit, direct or indirect, to the community at large: between a loan to an individual planter and any benefit to the community the gulf is too wide. If there is through it any indirect benefit to the community, it is too speculative and remote to justify the attribution to it of a charitable purpose. It would be equally easy and equally wrong to regard as charitable a trust for the granting of loans on generous terms to any member of any other class which performs a useful function in the social or economic life of the country. If their Lordships had come to a different conclusion on this point, the respondent had other difficulties to meet. It is, however, sufficient to say that their Lordships, being of opinion that upon a proper construction of the will restrictive words cannot be imported into the terms of the trust and that without them the trust is invalid, will humbly advise Her Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, the order of the Court of Appeal except so far as it relates to costs set aside, and the order dated October 9, 1951, of the Chief Justice restored.

In the special circumstances of this case their Lordships think it right to direct that the costs of all parties to this appeal should be paid as between solicitor and client out of the testator's estate.

Solicitors: Hy. S. L. Polak & Co.; Burchells; Druces & Attlee.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1954
Dec. 6, 7.
Jenkins and Hodson L.JJ., Vaisey J.

* In re VANBERGEN (A BANKRUPT).
Ex parte THE TRUSTEE v. VANBERGEN.

[No. 218 of 1954.]

Bankruptcy—Appeal—Extension of time—Application to registrar ex parte out of time—Dismissal by registrar of motion by trustee to set aside order extending time for appeal—Right of trustee to have order set aside—Discretion of registrar to extend time for good cause shown—Whether established practice should be altered by judicial direction—Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59), ss. 102, 109 (4), 147 (1)—Bankruptcy Rules, 1952 (S.I. 1952, No. 2113 (L. 14)), rr. 4 (1), 8 (1) (g) (2), 9, 31, 32, 261, 389.

On June 21, 1954, the trustee in bankruptcy of a debtor served on the wife of the debtor, who claimed to be a creditor entitled to prove in the bankruptcy, a notice of rejection of her proof of debt. On July 19, 1954, one week after the expiry of the 21-day period allowed for appeals, the wife applied ex parte to the registrar for extension of time for appeal; and on July 20, the registrar made an order extending the time to August 3. On October 22, the trustee applied to the registrar to have the order set aside. The registrar dismissed that motion on October 26 without considering the merits. On appeal by the trustee:—

Held, that as the effect of the expiry of time for appealing from the rejection of a proof of debt was to vest in the trustee a right to the bankrupt's estate which could be disturbed only if good cause were shown, the registrar should not have entertained an ex parte application for extension of time for appeal after the time for appealing had expired, though he might, if good cause were shown, make such an order in the presence of both parties. The order made on the ex parte application must accordingly be set aside by allowing the trustee's appeal from the registrar's refusal to set it aside.

Decision of Mr. Registrar Cunliffe reversed.

APPEAL from order of Mr. Registrar Cunliffe.

The facts, as stated by Jenkins L.J., were as follows: In January, 1954, Ethel Anne Vanbergen, the wife of a debtor, Charles Vivian Vanbergen, put in a proof of debt in respect of a sum of £20,245, claiming to be a creditor entitled to prove in the debtor's bankruptcy. The trustee in bankruptcy rejected that proof and gave notice of rejection on June 21, 1954. The time for appealing from such rejection, as provided by rule 261 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1952, being 21 days, the last day for appealing was July 12, 1954. On July 19, one week after the time had expired, the wife applied ex parte to the registrar for an extension of time; and on July 20 the registrar made an order extending the time by 14 days from the date of his order, namely, to August 3.

Having obtained that extension on her ex parte application, the wife gave notice of appeal; but that notice contained no reference to the order, of which the trustee had not otherwise been apprised, so that it appeared, on the face of it, to be irregular. The trustee, nevertheless, made an application for particulars of the matters stated in the affidavit in support of the wife's notice of motion of appeal. For the trustee it was said that that was done merely in order that the trustee might be ready if the notice, on the face of it appearing to be irregular, was upheld as a good notice. There were subsequent applications, but these, or one of them at least—an application for discovery—was expressed to be made without prejudice to the trustee's rights to contend that the notice was bad. On October 22, 1954, the trustee applied to the registrar by motion to have the ex parte order of July 20 set aside. That motion was dismissed with costs by order of the registrar dated October 26, 1954. The trustee appealed from that order, asking that the order of July 20 be set aside.

Muir Hunter for the trustee.

I. H. Jacob for the wife.

C. A.

1954

VANBERGEN (A BANKRUPT), In re. Ex parte THE TRUSTEE v. VANBERGEN.

The following cases were cited in the argument: In re Phillips, Ex parte Trustee [1]; In re Barley [2]; In re A Debtor (No. 36 of 1952), Ex parte The Debtor v. Richardson [3]; In re Muscovitch, Ex parte Muscovitch [4]; In re Manchester Economic Building Society [5]; In re Macadam (No. 2), Ex parte Guillaume v. The Trustee [6]; Gatti v. Shoosmith. [7]

JENKINS L.J. stated the facts as set out above, said that there was no substance in the submission for the creditor that any irregularity in the notice must be taken as having been waived by the trustee, and continued: Mr. Muir Hunter for the trustee takes three points. First, he says that the order extending the time for the creditor's appeal ought not to have been made ex parte and, therefore, should be set aside. Secondly, he says that on the true construction of the Act and the rules made thereunder, which are now the Bankruptcy Rules, 1952, an application for the extension of time for appealing from a rejection of proof is a matter not within the jurisdiction of the registrar, but one which should be dealt with by the judge in bankruptcy in court. Thirdly, he says that, on the merits, no "good cause" (to use the language of the rule) was here shown for an extension of time.

The Bankruptcy Rules and provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, so far as are material to Mr. Muir Hunter's first submission, are as follows: by rule 261, "No application to reverse or vary "the decision of an Official Receiver or trustee rejecting a proof "shall be entertained after the expiration of twenty-one days "from the date of the decision." That is subject to section 109 (4) of the Act, which provides: "Where by this Act, or by "general rules, the time for doing any act or thing is limited, the "court may extend the time either before or after the expiration "thereof, upon such terms, if any, as the court may think fit to "impose." Then, by rule 389: "The court may, for good cause "shown, extend or abridge the time appointed by these rules or "fixed by an order of the court for doing any act or taking any "steps in any proceedings." It thus appears that the strict provision of rule 261, that no application to reverse or vary a decision rejecting a proof shall be entertained after the expiration of 21 days, is relaxed to the extent of allowing the court, for good cause shown, to extend the time and, as appears by section 109 (4), to extend it as well after as before the time limited by the rule has expired.

It is next necessary to consider whether, after the time for appealing from a rejection of a proof has expired, as in the present

[1] (1895) 2 Mans. 206.
[2] [1923] 1 Ch. 177.
[3] [1953] Ch. 144; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 561; [1953] 1 All E.R. 776.
[4] [1939] Ch. 694; 55 T.L.R. 364; [1939] 1 All E.R. 135.
[5] (1883) 24 Ch.D. 488.
[6] [1950] W.N. 142; [1950] 1 All E.R. 659.
[7] [1939] Ch. 841; 55 T.L.R. 1023; [1939] 3 All E.R. 916.

case, an application for the extension of time can properly be made ex parte. The relevant rules on that appear to be these: Rule 31: "Except where these rules otherwise provide, every "application to the court shall, unless the court otherwise directs, "be made by motion supported by affidavit"; rule 32: "(1) Where any party other than the applicant is affected by "the motion, no order shall be made except with the consent of "that party, or upon proof that notice of the motion and a copy "of the affidavits in support thereof have been duly served upon "him: Provided that where the court is satisfied that serious "mischief may result from delay caused by proceeding in the "ordinary way, it may make an order ex parte upon such terms "as to costs and otherwise, and subject to such undertaking, if "any, as the court thinks just. (2) Any party affected by an "order made ex parte may move to set it aside."

Those are the relevant provisions bearing on Mr. Muir Hunter's first submission. Having regard to those provisions, I am satisfied that the order extending time in this case ought not to have been made ex parte and, accordingly, that the registrar ought, if he had strictly adhered to the proper practice, to have set it aside. The expiry of the time limited by rule 261 for appealing from the rejection of the proof had the effect of conclusively determining that the creditor was not entitled to share in the assets of the bankrupt, and that was a benefit or advantage conferred on the trustee as representing the general body of creditors, inasmuch as by the rejection of the proof the fund available for distribution among the effectively proving creditors would be increased. Accordingly, it is clear that the trustee, in his representative capacity, was a person who would be prejudiced by an extension of the time for appealing against such rejection, for an order extending it would have the effect of depriving him of a vested interest. Therefore, it seems plain on principle and on the rules that the application ought to have been made by motion on notice, as contemplated by rule 32. That is in accordance with the practice in regard to appeals to this court, for I understand it to be well settled that an ex parte application for the extension of time will not be entertained after the time for appealing has expired. That appears from In re Lawrence.[1]

I have said that, in my view, strict adherence to the rules demanded that the registrar should set aside the order of July 20 on the trustee's application. I should qualify that statement by referring to section 147 of the Act, subsection (1) of which is in these terms: "No proceeding in bankruptcy shall be invalidated "by any formal defect or by any irregularity, unless the court "before which an objection is made to the proceeding is of "opinion that substantial injustice has been caused by the defect "or irregularity, and that the injustice cannot be remedied by "any order of that court." On that principle, it might be open

[1] (1876) 4 Ch.D. 139.

C. A.

1954

VANBERGEN (A BANKRUPT), In re. Ex parte THE TRUSTEE v. VANBERGEN.

Jenkins L.J.

to the registrar in a case of this sort, while holding that the order ought not to have been made ex parte and should be set aside, to proceed nevertheless on an application by the party aggrieved to set aside the order, to hear the matter de novo in the presence of both parties, and either to make a fresh order extending the time or, for convenience, allow the order made ex parte to stand, if satisfied that this would have been the result if he had heard both parties on the original occasion. But, in my view, the registrar cannot, by reference to his note, be taken to have disposed of the matter in that way. There was some difference of recollection between counsel about what exactly happened before him, but the position he took in the matter is reasonably plain from the following passage in his note. He made a note that Mr. Muir Hunter wanted to know if he was entitled to be heard on the merits. Then follows this: "(Self): It does not "seem to me to be necessary. I have decided on an application "conforming with the practice of this court of upwards of 60 "years, i.e. ex parte to the registrar—that a good prima facie "case has been made out for extending the time for Mrs. "Vanbergen appealing against the trustee's rejection of her "proof. I see no good reason for altering that decision. "After all, I am not allowing Mrs. Vanbergen's appeal; I "am only exercising my discretion as to whether in the "circumstances she shall be allowed an extension of time "for bringing that appeal." That passage from his note makes it reasonably plain that the registrar was adhering to the view, on which he had previously acted, that the regular procedure was that an ex parte application after time expired for extension of the time for appeal from rejection of proof was an application which could properly be entertained, and, having made an order, as he thought a regular and valid order, on such an ex parte application, he saw no good reason for altering it. In my view, the registrar was in error in treating the matter in that way, and the result must therefore be, in accordance with what, in my judgment, is the strict and proper procedure, that the order of July 20 extending the time ex parte should be set aside. That does not involve entertaining here, by a side wind, an appeal out of time from the order of July 20. The appeal is from the order of October 26, 1954, refusing to set aside the order of July 20; and the order which ought to have been made on October 26 was an order setting aside the order of July 20; thus, if the appeal is allowed, that will follow as a necessary consequence.

That is sufficient to dispose of this case; but, since the matter has been discussed before us, it would, I think, be right that I should say something about the jurisdiction of the registrar. The relevant provisions as to that are to be found, first, in section 102 of the Act, which provides as follows: "(1) The "registrars in bankruptcy of the High Court, and the registrars "of county courts having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, shall have "the powers and jurisdiction in this section mentioned, and any " order made or act done by such registrars in the exercise of " the said powers and jurisdiction shall be deemed the order or " act of the court. (2) Subject to general rules limiting the " powers conferred by this section, a registrar shall have power " —then a number of matters are set out, beginning with " (a) To " hear bankruptcy petitions," and " (b) To hold the public " examination of debtors." There follows: " (f) To make any " order or exercise any jurisdiction which by any rule in that " behalf is prescribed as proper to be made or exercised in " chambers." Then, in the Bankruptcy Rules, 1952, r. 4 (1) provides: " ' The court ' includes a registrar when exercising the " powers of the court." By rule 8: " The following matters shall " be heard and determined in open court." A number of matters are then set out, of which the relevant one is " (g) Appeals " against the rejection of a proof, or applications to expunge or " reduce a proof, where the amount in dispute exceeds £200." Rule 8 (2) provides: " Any other matter or application may be " heard and determined in chambers." Rule 9, which is headed " Jurisdiction of Registrars " provides: " The registrar may, " under the general or special directions of the judge, hear and " determine any matter or application referred to in section 102 (2) " of the Act." So, by the joint effect of section 102 and rules 8 and 9, the registrar has jurisdiction to hear and determine the matters mentioned in section 102, including matters proper to be dealt with in chambers, but there is no express reference to the particular matter here in question, namely, applications for the extension of time within which to appeal from the rejection of a proof. On the other hand, the actual appeal from rejection of a proof is one of the matters which, according to the rules, are to be heard in open court. Mr. Muir Hunter, if I followed his argument correctly, says that by implication that means that an application to extend the time for appealing should be dealt with in the same way, inasmuch as the effect of rule 8 (1) (g) is to make the appeal itself a matter for the judge. That submission seems to me to be not without substance; and, so far as I am able to judge, it would probably be more convenient and more suitable if the judge who was going to hear an appeal from an order rejecting a proof should also deal with any question as to the extension of time within which to perfect and lodge an appeal of that kind; but, speaking for myself, I cannot find any sufficiently clear indication in the rules to enable me to hold that, as matters stand at present, applications for the extension of time are not proper to be dealt with by the registrars in bankruptcy. It seems that, according to the long-standing practice in bankruptcy, the registrars have consistently entertained these matters. Instances of their having dealt with them can be found extending over as long as 60 years. Accordingly, I wish to say nothing in this case to alter or cast doubt on a well-settled practice; but it might conceivably be worth consideration by the judges of the Chancery Division exercising the bankruptcy

C. A.

1954

VANBERGEN (A BANKRUPT), In re. Ex parte THE TRUSTEE v. VANBERGEN.

Jenkins L.J.

jurisdiction whether the practice in this respect might not advantageously be altered by a suitable direction, so that applications to extend the time for these appeals should be heard by the judge in bankruptcy, as are the appeals themselves.

There remains the third matter, namely, whether in any case good cause was here shown for an extension of time if the extension of time had been applied for in a regular manner. In view of the conclusion I have reached on Mr. Muir Hunter's first submission, this also is a point with which, strictly speaking, it is unnecessary for me to deal for the purposes of our actual decision, but I feel obliged to say that the affidavit in support of the ex parte application for extension of time seems to me to have fallen far short of showing any good cause at all for an extension of time. It was sworn by one Dawson, a managing clerk, who says by paragraph 1: "My firm act for Ethel Anne "Vanbergen who claims to be a creditor in the bankruptcy for "the sum of £20,245. A proof of debt of this amount was "lodged with the trustee who has given notice of rejection of the "same dated June 21, 1954. (2) The said Ethel Anne Vanbergen "is the wife of the above-named debtor who is now serving a "term of imprisonment. The claim of the said Ethel Anne "Vanbergen is in respect of various loans and other sums payable "to her by the above-named debtor over a period of approxi-"mately seven years and the total amount is made up of "numerous payments. (3) In the circumstances, my firm were "not able to obtain full instructions to enable the proceedings to "apply to reverse the trustee's decision to be commenced within "the time limited. The said debtor had been seriously ill in "prison hospital and owing to this illness it was some time "before he could be seen to obtain certain information which was "required so that details of the claim could be given. (4) It is "respectfully requested that in the circumstances the time for "applying to reverse the trustee's decision in rejecting the proof "of debt of the said Ethel Anne Vanbergen may be extended for "14 days." That affidavit is made, not by the creditor herself, but by a managing clerk. It gives no details; it condescends to no particulars. Although the creditor was able to lodge a proof, presumably a bona fide proof, for £20,245, it is here said in quite general terms that the information necessary for the purposes of lodging the appeal has not yet been obtained. There are no dates and no details whatsoever. The affidavit comes to no more than a mere statement that the creditor is not ready, with a submission that because the creditor is not ready the time ought to be extended. It is also not without significance that apparently this creditor, in order to make out her claim, found it necessary to consult her husband, the debtor. Why or for what purpose that should be necessary, if there is a bona fide claim, I find it difficult to see.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the trustee's appeal should here succeed on the first of the three grounds which I have considered, and I would make an order accordingly, the effect of which will be to set aside the order of July 20, 1954, by allowing the appeal from the registrar's refusal to set it aside by the order of October 26, 1954.

HODSON L.J. I entirely agree with the judgment already delivered. On the question of jurisdiction, it appears from rule 8 that certain matters are to be heard and determined in open court. Those matters include, under rule 8 (1) (g), "Appeals against "the rejection of a proof, or applications to expunge or reduce a "proof, where the amount in dispute exceeds £200." That covers this case. Then, by rule 8 (2): "Any other matter or "application may be heard and determined in chambers"; and, looking at the Act, section 102 (f), the registrars in bankruptcy of the High Court have power "To make any order or exercise "any jurisdiction which by any rule in that behalf is prescribed "as proper to be made or exercised in chambers." It appears, therefore, on the face of it, as if an application for an extension of time can, by the combined effect of section 102 and rule 8 (2), be made to a registrar in bankruptcy; but I agree that there is force in the argument of Mr. Muir Hunter that, the judge alone having jurisdiction to hear and determine the appeal against rejection of proof, that would naturally carry with it the duty of considering applications for extension of time, and I would like to support the suggestion which has been made that in future, notwithstanding the long practice which has existed in the past, the judges of the Chancery Division might consider the making of a direction to the end that they should themselves hear applications for extension of time in these matters.

It seems to me an exceedingly important matter, because, as was pointed out to us in argument, after the time for appeal against rejection of proof has expired, the trustee in bankruptcy, on behalf of the general body of creditors, has acquired a vested right to the estate of the bankrupt which cannot be disturbed, as the rules show, without good cause.

I cannot forbear to add that it passes my understanding how the observations contained in the affidavit of Mr. Dawson could be regarded as good cause. I do not propose to add anything further to the criticisms on that affidavit which my Lord has made, which, in my opinion, are thoroughly well founded.

I agree that the appeal should be allowed and that the order which has been proposed should be made.

VAISEY J. I agree.

Appeal allowed.
Order for extension of time set aside.
Leave to appeal to the House of Lords refused.

Solicitors: Ward, Bowie & Co.; S. Rutter & Co.

M. M. H.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1954
Dec. 17.

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Devlin JJ.

* REGINA v. FRY.

PRACTICE NOTE.

Criminal Law — Sentence — Conditional discharge — Breach — Further offence committed — Sentence of Borstal training — No sentence imposed for previous offence—Desirability of nominal sentence.

APPLICATION for leave to appeal against sentence.

The applicant, George Thomas Fry, was convicted at Essex quarter sessions for office breaking, larceny, and attempted store breaking, and was sentenced to Borstal training. At the hearing it appeared that he had previously been found guilty of larceny by a court of summary jurisdiction and conditionally discharged. Quarter sessions imposed no sentence in respect of that offence.

The applicant applied for leave to appeal against the sentence of Borstal training.

The applicant did not appear and was not represented.

DEVLIN J. The court thinks that the sentence of Borstal training is perfectly proper and does not propose to interfere with it, but the matter for which the applicant was before quarter sessions was not only the fresh offence he had committed but also the breach of the conditional discharge, which meant that he could be sentenced for the offence for which he had been conditionally discharged. Quarter sessions took the view, however, that since they were passing a Borstal sentence for the substantive offence before them, it would not be proper to pass any sentence in respect of the previous offence. They were quite right in thinking that they could not pass a substantial sentence of imprisonment because that would have been inconsistent with the Borstal sentence, but it was suggested to them that they should pass a nominal sentence of one day's imprisonment. They decided, however, not to do so and in that respect this court thinks that they were wrong. Normally it is not desirable to impose nominal sentences of one day's imprisonment, but in this particular case it is the only way of surmounting the difficulty which would otherwise occur. If no sentence at all is passed in respect of the offence for which the applicant was conditionally discharged, it does not rank as a conviction. The result is that if hereafter he were to commit further offences and questions were to arise on which it was necessary to prove previous convictions, such as for corrective training, the offence for which he ought now to be sentenced since he has broken his conditional discharge would not rank for that purpose. The court does not feel that it can now interfere by imposing a sentence of one day's imprisonment in respect of that matter because the only sentence which the applicant has appealed from is the sentence of Borstal training and the powers of this court are, therefore, restricted to dealing with that; but the court desires to draw attention to this matter so that in future it should be noted that this is one of the rare cases in which a nominal sentence should be imposed.

1954

REGINA v. FRY.

Application dismissed.

Solicitors: Registrar, Court of Criminal Appeal.

E. M. W.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* REGINA v. MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT. Ex parte FINCHLEY BOROUGH COUNCIL.

1954
Dec. 14, 15.

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Devlin JJ.

Highway—Street works—Expenses—Apportionment—Appeal—Power of Minister—Points of law—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 268.

Where a memorial under section 268 of the Public Health Act, 1875, has been addressed to the Minister by a person aggrieved by the decision of a local authority, the Minister has the widest powers to decide what, in the circumstances, is fair and reasonable, and to consider, if necessary, any points of law which may arise.

Reg. v. Local Government Board (1882) 10 Q.B.D. 309 applied.

Per Devlin J. The word "equitable" in section 268 is not, in my judgment, enough to require us to say as a matter of construction that points of law are excluded from the purview of the Minister.

A local authority demanded from the London Transport Executive the proportionate amount of expenses incurred by the authority in making up streets abutting on land owned by the Executive. The Executive appealed to the Minister under section 268, on the ground, inter alia, that they were not "owner" of the land within the meaning of the Act because it was extra commercium. The Minister allowed the appeal:—

Held, that an application by the authority for an order of certiorari quashing that decision must be refused.

APPLICATION for an order of certiorari.

On May 18, 1950, the applicants, the Finchley Borough Council, served notices under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, on the London Transport Executive requiring the Executive to make up such parts of Heatherton Terrace, Squires Lane, Finchley, as fronted, adjoined or abutted on the land owned by the Executive. The works not having been carried out by the Executive, the council carried out the works themselves and demanded from the Executive the sums of £86 12s. and £906 10s. 7d. as the proportionate amount of the expenses incurred by the council in carrying out the work and alleged to be payable by the Executive in respect of that part of the

1954

REGINA v. MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT. Ex parte FINCHLEY BOROUGH COUNCIL.

Executive's railway track as abutted on the street and the embankment supporting an approach road to a bridge over the railway.

By a memorial under section 268 [1] of the Act of 1875 the Executive appealed to the Minister of Housing and Local Government against the decision of the council on the ground that the land in question was vacant land, had no commercial purpose, and could not be let at a rack-rent.

On March 10, 1954, the Minister ordered that the appeal of the Executive be allowed and that no amount should be payable in respect of the land. The council applied for an order of certiorari to quash the decision of the Minister.

G. D. Squibb for the applicants.
Rodger Winn for the Minister.
H. A. P. Fisher for the London Transport Executive.

The following cases were cited in argument: Reg. v. Local Government Board [2]; Walthamstow Local Board v. Staines [3]; Great Eastern Railway Co. v. Hackney Board of Works [4]; Hampstead Corporation v. Midland Railway Co. [5]; Wake v. Sheffield Corporation [6]; In re West London Philanthropic Burial Society [7]; Eccles v. Wirral Rural Sanitary Authority. [8]

LORD GODDARD C.J. stated the facts, read section 268 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and continued: I cannot find in section 268 any limitation on the right of appeal, or anything which indicates that, when an appeal is made by a person aggrieved, the Minister is not able to go in the widest way into everything put before him and come to a decision. Mr. Squibb has maintained that the only question in the case is whether the Transport Executive are to be considered as owners. He says that the question of whether they are or are not is a question of law which the Minister cannot decide because, he says, the local authority has no power to decide it and this appeal is only given against a decision of the local authority. That seems to me to be very subtle reasoning and I confess that I cannot follow it. It seems to me that the widest power is given to the Local

[1] Public Health Act, 1875, s. 268: "Where any person deems himself "aggrieved by the decision of the "local authority in any case in which "the local authority are empowered "to recover in a summary manner "any expenses incurred by them, or "to declare such expenses to be "private improvement expenses, he "may, within twenty-one days after "notice of such decision, address a "memorial to the Local Government "Board, stating the grounds of his "complaint, and shall deliver a copy "thereof to the local authority; the "Local Government Board may make "such order in the matter as to the "said Board may seem equitable, and "the order so made shall be binding "and conclusive on all parties."

[2] (1882) 10 Q.B.D. 309.

[3] [1891] 2 Ch. 606; 7 T.L.R. 446.

[4] (1883) 8 App.Cas. 687.

[5] [1904] 2 K.B. 802; [1905] 1 K.B. 538; 21 T.L.R. 272.

[6] (1883) 12 Q.B.D. 142.

[7] (1869) 20 L.T. 972.

[8] (1886) 17 Q.B.D. 107; 2 T.L.R. 416.

Government Board, now represented by the Ministry of Housing and Local Government,* to decide what is equitable, which I think means fair and reasonable. When section 268 was first read I confess that my mind went that way at once, but when I heard Mr. Squibb's argument my mind fluctuated. Having read two or three passages from the judgment in Reg. v. Local Government Board,[1] however, I came to the conclusion that my first impressions were right or at any rate had been so held to be by the Court of Appeal, and their decision is binding upon us. There are two passages in that case in the judgment of Brett L.J. which seem to me to be very important. He said[2]: "It is "assumed on the part of these appellants that the only question "which the Local Government Board can inquire into, is whether "the local board equitably ought to have made the owner pay "the sum which has been apportioned against him, or whether "they ought to make the whole expenses private improvement "expenses. Now what are the words which would oblige us to "come to that narrow conclusion? It would be most narrow "if after what I have said, there could be no appeal to the "Local Government Board upon the question whether the works "which are ordered to be done, ought as against an individual to "have been ordered." That seems to me to be clear enough. Later in his judgment, where he was dealing with the question whether the Local Government Board, as it then was, could consider a matter which had not been specifically set up by the owner in his memorial, he said[3]: "I should have been very "sorry to say because he has not mentioned that ground or any "other ground of complaint in the memorial, that therefore the "Local Government Board, if they think it right or equitable, "should not inquire into it, because he had not complained of "it. I think they ought to have the largest powers and the "largest discretion to inquire into everything, to examine every "fact which may lead them to a fair conclusion as between "the local authority and the individual who has presented the "memorial."

Those words seem to indicate that in the opinion of the Court of Appeal in 1882, the Minister, on a memorial being presented to him under section 268, has the widest possible powers; and I can find no words in the section which limit his powers as to what he may inquire into or limit the grounds on which he may allow or disallow an appeal. It seems to me that he is given a perfectly wide and general power so that if a person says: "Here are these private street works in respect of which "I have been asked to pay a sum of money and I say it is not "right, fair or equitable that I should have to pay," the Minister is given power to decide that point.

* See S.I. 1951, Nos. 142, 1900.

[1] (1882) 10 Q.B.D. 309.

[2] Ibid. 324.

[3] Ibid. 326.

1954

REGINA v. MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT. Ex parte FINCHLEY BOROUGH COUNCIL.

Lord Goddard C.J.

We are told, though I am not basing my decision on this ground, that ever since Reg. v. Local Government Board,[4] the Minister has regarded it as a most useful decision on the powers given to him by the section, because it enables him to decide many cases of small property owners who, instead of having to appeal to petty sessions, and then be taken to quarter sessions, and then very likely to this court by means of case stated, the case can be put before the Minister and he can be asked by the person aggrieved to intervene and say whether he is to pay or not. If the Minister decides against him, the person complaining has lost any other right of appeal and he will have to pay. If, on the other hand, the Minister says that he is not to pay, the local authority cannot enforce the order against him.

There is only one other matter which I think it is necessary to mention. The Minister, in deciding in favour of the Transport Executive, applied Great Eastern Railway Co. v. Hackney Board of Works.[5] I do not think that the facts are quite on all fours with the present case, but the decision of the court in that case was that where one had property considered to be extra commercium, that is to say, of no possible commercial value, it was not equitable or fair that this class of charge should be made upon it. The land in the present case no doubt is rather different from that in the Great Eastern Railway Co. case,[5] but both cases concerned property which the railway company were bound to maintain. The Minister applied the principle which was laid down there because it seemed to him that this embankment was extra commercium. In fact the only purpose for which it is suggested that the embankment could be used is as an advertising station. That was suggested in the Great Eastern Railway Co. case,[5] but here one has a site which has been in existence since the 1860's in a growing neighbourhood which so far has escaped the attention of Messrs. Pears and Guinness and no one has thought it a suitable place for advertising or anything at all. So I should think that the Minister was well justified in coming to the conclusion that there was really no value to be attached to this land.

It is enough to say that, in my opinion, the matter appears to fall exactly within section 268 as a fit subject for appeal, and as I can find no limitation on the Minister's powers which have been held in Reg. v. Local Government Board[6] to be of the widest possible nature, it follows that this application fails and must be dismissed with costs.

CASSELS J. I agree that this motion fails. The applicants, the Finchley Borough Council, come before this court and ask for relief on the ground that the decision of the Minister was not within his powers under section 268 of the Public Health

[4] 10 Q.B.D. 309.
[5] (1883) 8 App.Cas. 687.
[6] 10 Q.B.D. 309.

Act, 1875, and further, that the decision was bad in law. The question of the jurisdiction of the Minister was raised at first, but disappeared from the argument, and everything seems now to turn on section 268. I think it is important that that section should be read, at any rate the first paragraph. [He read it, concluding:] "... the Local Government Board may make such "order in the matter as to the said Board may seem equitable, "and the order so made shall be binding and conclusive on all "parties."

How useful those last words have turned out to be is indicated I suppose by the number of cases that have reached these courts on the discussion of the meaning of that section and by the fact that Mr. Squibb, on behalf of the Finchley Borough Council, is paying his first visit to this court and doubtless is on his way to other courts.

The position seems to me to be perfectly clear. The procedure as there devised is for the purposes of making a consideration by the Local Government Board, as it then was, easy to hold. The matter goes before the Minister by presentation of a memorial —not an appeal—on behalf of the person aggrieved. He is the person who is entitled to present his case. The Minister is the person who has power under section 268 to decide it and that decision is supposed to be final and conclusive upon all parties. As to the word "owner," section 4 of the Act provides: "'Owner' means the person for the time being receiving the "rack rent of the lands or premises in connexion with which the "word is used, whether on his own account or as agent or trustee "for any other person, or who would so receive the same if such "lands or premises were let at a rack rent:". These premises are not let at a rack-rent; no money is forthcoming for their use. The sole purpose to which this land is devoted is to hold up the road. It is then said on behalf of the applicants: "If you "could find advertisers ready and willing to pay money for the "purpose of putting up a hoarding on this land you would get "a rack-rent," to which the Railway Executive say: "That "would blind people coming up this road to traffic on the road "so that they would not be able to keep their eye upon the road "and, therefore, it is not available." The land never has been let. It has been there ever since the embankment was constructed in the sixties of the last century and nobody has thought fit to pay so much as a bean for the use of the land for advertising purposes. The Minister came to the conclusion under section 268 that it would be inequitable for the Railway Executive to be called upon to make the contribution demanded from them, and that being his decision there seems to me to be no reason why this motion should prevail or a writ of certiorari should be issued.

DEVLIN J. I agree. I would refer merely to section 150 of the Act to point out that the local authority, once it has executed the works, may recover the expenses in one of two ways: it may recover them in a lump sum in a summary manner "from "the owners in default, according to the frontage of their "respective premises," or it may "by order declare the expenses "so incurred to be private improvement expenses." The difference between the two is that, in the first case, the local authority may get the sum as a lump sum from the owners of the adjoining land, and, in the second case, it may by section 213 levy a rate on the occupiers of the adjoining land and thus recover the sum over a period of 30 years.

1954

REGINA v. MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT. Ex parte FINCHLEY BOROUGH COUNCIL.

Devlin J.

Having those two choices before it, the local authority in the present case decided that it would recover the sum from the owners of the adjoining land, that is, the Transport Executive, and the Transport Executive, while agreeing that they were the owners in one sense, said that they were not owners within the meaning of the Act because the land was extra commercium. Into the merits of that contention it is not necessary for the purposes of my judgment that I should go; I merely mention it to show that it was one of the matters in dispute.

That was the decision of the local authority and that brought into play section 268 of the Act and the only question, as it seems to me, is whether that is a decision within the meaning of that section. If it is, then that section comes into operation and the Minister has power to make such order in the matter as to him seems equitable. The opening words of the section are: "Where "any person deems himself aggrieved by the decision of the "local authority in any case in which the local authority are "empowered to recover in a summary manner any expenses "incurred by them, or to declare such expenses to be private "improvement expenses, he may" address a memorial. It has to be, therefore, a decision of the local authority in any case which comes within the words I have just read. That it is a decision of the local authority is beyond dispute. That it is made in a case which comes within the words which I have just read is also not disputed. But it must be observed that, to make it such a case, it does not matter whether the persons upon whom the sum is levied are owners or not. The case has to be one in which the local authority may exercise the choice either of levying the sum from the owners or imposing a rate on the occupiers, and it is, therefore, admitted that this is such a case. Then why is it not a case within the meaning of the Act? Mr. Squibb submits that it is not, because, he says, it must be a decision which the Minister is empowered to give. I can find no ground for reading such words of limitation into the section. It must be a case in which the local authority is empowered to do one thing or the other and there is nothing further in the section and nothing, in my judgment, which can be properly implied to mean that it is not a decision at which the local authority is empowered to arrive. It has to be—it obviously is or it would not be a matter about which anybody was aggrieved—an appealable decision. But it may be an appealable decision because the local authority has acted outside its powers, or because it has not done something which it ought to have done under the Act, or because the decision is unfair or unjust. There is nothing, in my judgment, which limits the class of appealable decisions to one or the other or which excludes the Minister, once he has properly got seisin of the case, from reviewing any bad decision given in that case, no matter on what ground it was given.

The word "equitable" to which I have referred was relied upon by Mr. Squibb as showing that the Minister was not intended in these sort of proceedings to consider points of law, and here he was invited to and has in fact determined what is, if not a pure point of law, at any rate very largely a point of law, whether the Railway Executive were or were not owners within the meaning of this section. The word "equitable" might suggest that what was intended by the section was that the Minister should deal only with the just amount, whether the works had been properly done, whether the cost was reasonable, and so forth, and not to deal with questions of law. I do not think that by using the word "equitable" Parliament intended to allow the Minister to depart altogether from principles of law. Prima facie, principles of law are equitable and it would need much stronger words than the words which are used in the section to satisfy me that the Minister would be entitled to disregard any principles of law. But that does not mean that the word may not be appropriately used so as to signify that the Minister has powers wider than the application of principles of law might confer upon him. For example, if, as in this case, the local authority has chosen to make its decision to recover the sum from the owners in a lump sum, it might be said as a matter of law that all that the Minister could do would be to say whether that decision was good or bad. The words used are plainly—and this is conceded by Mr. Squibb—such as to give him wider powers than that. He might say: "I am not going "to say whether your decision is good or bad. I have complete "control of this matter and I am going to substitute for it an "order that you should get the sum by levying a rate on the "occupiers and not by a lump sum from the owners." That is the sort of power the language used by the section is wide enough to give and that is why I think the word "equitable" is used; but it does not mean that by using that word Parliament intended to exclude points of law from the purview of the Minister. I have no doubt that Parliament thought it unlikely that any points of law would arise. I have no doubt if Parliament thought legal points would be likely to play a great part in inquiries of this sort, it would not have entrusted it to the Minister; it may be so. Parliament perhaps did not foresee the complications to which questions of ownership might subsequently give rise; it probably thought it would be a simple matter to determine who was or was not the owner of any particular land. However that may be, the word "equitable" is not, in my judgment, enough to require us to say as a matter of construction that points of law are excluded from the purview of the Minister. The Minister has, therefore, dealt with the decision in a matter with which he is empowered to deal; he has given his decision upon it and I can see no grounds for setting it aside or quashing it and I agree, therefore, that the motion fails.

1954

REGINA v. MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT. Ex parte FINCHLEY BOROUGH COUNCIL.

Application dismissed.

Solicitors: Lees & Co.; Solicitor, Ministry of Health; M. H. B. Gilmour.

J. D. P.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1954

PRACTICE DIRECTIONS.

*PRACTICE DIRECTIONS.
(APPLICATIONS : AFFIDAVITS : MORTGAGES.)

Practice and Procedure—Chancery Division—Applications ex parte—Affidavits—Office copies—Mortgage—Redemption and foreclosure—Notice—Place of redemption.
Mortgage—Practice.

The judges of the Chancery Division have directed that the following Practice Directions shall be substituted for those issued under date November 3, 1954.[1]

1. EX PARTE APPLICATIONS.

Where, by any rule or practice, orders or directions may be sought in chambers ex parte supported by affidavit, it shall not be necessary to issue a summons for such purpose unless required by the rule under which the application is made or the judge shall otherwise direct.

Examples.

(1) Garnishee order nisi.
(2) Change of parties upon devolution of interest.
(3) Appointment of next friend or guardian ad litem of an infant or person under disability in the stead of such a person who has died.
(4) Substituted service of writ and other process.

2. OFFICE COPIES OF AFFIDAVITS.

Unless the court or a judge in any particular instance shall otherwise direct, it shall not be necessary to bespeak for the use of the court or judge office copies of affidavits intended to be filed in connexion with interlocutory or procedural matters, as distinct from affidavits forming part of the evidence in a suit or dealing with the merits of the case; as to which latter the existing practice shall continue.

[1] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1389; [1954] 3 All E.R. 364.

Examples where office copies will NOT usually be required.

(1) Of fitness to act as receiver, manager, next friend or guardian ad litem or guardian of an infant.

(2) Verifying the security of a surety or a receiver's, manager's or guardian's account.

(3) Proving service of process (including notices to prove a claim or the allowance thereof).

(4) In support of applications under R.S.C., Ord. 7, r. 4; Ord. 14; Ord. 18, r. 2; Ord. 31, r. 19A (3) and Ord. 57, etc.

Note. A more extensive list can be inspected in the Masters' Summons Rooms.

3. REDEMPTION AND FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGED PROPERTY.

(1) In order to make it unnecessary to go to the expense of preparing deeds, powers of attorney and form of receipt to hand over in case a mortgagor should attend to redeem at the time and place appointed by the master's certificate for redemption; all orders for foreclosure or redemption unless the court otherwise directs will provide (i) that the mortgagor shall give seven days' notice of his intention to attend and redeem, and (ii) if no such notice is given but the mortgagor in fact attends at the appointed time and place then at the option of the mortgagee the time for redemption shall be extended for one week. This will give the mortgagee's solicitor time to prepare the necessary documents.

(2) The master's certificate pursuant to an order nisi (or the order itself if thereby a certificate is avoided) shall nominate as the place of redemption the office of the mortgagee's solicitors if it be within five miles of the Royal Courts of Justice, Strand, or such other place as may be agreed between the parties and recorded in the order or certificate. In all other cases the place for redemption shall be recorded as Room 138 of the Royal Courts of Justice, Strand, W.C.2.

M. G. WILLMOTT,
Chief Master.

December 21, 1954.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1954
Dec. 13.

Evershed M.R., Birkett and Romer L.JJ.

*LEA v. MOORE.

County Court—Jurisdiction—Question of title to land—Lease—Assignment or guarantee—County Courts Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 53), ss. 40, 43, 51.

By the County Courts Act, 1934, ss. 40 and 51, where the title to a hereditament is in question, the jurisdiction of a county court is limited to cases where neither the value nor the rent of the hereditament exceeds £100 per year.

The plaintiff brought proceedings in the county court to recover a sum of money alleged to have been paid by him on behalf of the defendant under the terms of an alleged assignment of a lease to the plaintiff himself, the defendant and one other jointly whereby each of the assignees covenanted to pay the rent of £300 a year. The defendant denied that he was an assignee and stated that if he had signed any assignment he had done so under the impression that he was signing a guarantee. On appeal against a decision in favour of the plaintiff:—

Held, that the defence brought into question the title to land the rent of which was admittedly above the statutory limits of the jurisdiction of the county court. Accordingly, the county court had had no jurisdiction to decide the question whether the defendant was or was not an assignee.

Reg. v. Harden (1853) 2 E. & B. 188 applied.

APPEAL from Judge Forbes sitting at Birmingham County Court.

The defendant Moore was the headmaster of a school carried on in premises known as "Wick House," held under a term of 21 years granted in April, 1947, to one Simpson at a rent of £300 per annum. In 1948 it was proposed to form a limited company to take over the school, but the landlord was unwilling to allow the lease to be assigned to a limited company. An assignment was, therefore, taken by the chairman of the parents' committee (the plaintiff Lea), one Winders and the defendant Moore. By the terms of the assignment, which was dated March 9, 1948, each of the assignees covenanted with the lessor to pay the rent charged. The company was later formed but did not prosper and the premises became vacant.

As a result of certain proceedings the plaintiff paid a sum of money to the landlord and he then claimed to recover about £75 as being the defendant's share of the amount which he had been called upon to pay. The defendant, who appeared in person in the county court, disputed the plaintiff's claim on the following grounds, as stated on a document put in by him: "(1) I never "signed a deed of assignment of a lease; (2) if I did it was "because of fraudulent misrepresentation on the part of the "plaintiff; (3) if I did the lease is no longer binding on me," and he counterclaimed for damages for fraudulent misrepresentation. The county court judge gave judgment for the plaintiff and the defendant appealed.

The defendant Moore appeared in person.
J. Malcolm Milne for the plaintiff.

No case other than the case referred to in the judgment was cited in argument.

EVERSHED M.R., having stated the facts: The substance of the defendant's case was that what he had been asked to do, and what he thought he had done, was to sign, merely, a guarantee. The judge was troubled on the issue of fact raised before him, and from his notes and from his careful judgment it is to me apparent that he applied himself most fully and thoroughly to it. I say that because I am sorry to see that the first ground of the appeal is that the judge interrupted the defendant too much and, therefore, embarrassed him in conducting the case. The question of fact was that the defendant said: "I was asked merely to sign a guarantee; if I did sign the document," and eventually he admitted that he did sign this document or another which was entirely the same, "I signed it in ignorance of its true nature, "having been misled into supposing that it was a mere guaran-"tee." Judging from the judge's notes, there was obviously something to be said for that point of view. But on that question of fact, the judge decided against the defendant. It is right that I should say so, because the charge of fraudulent misrepresentation was a charge of a very grave character and the judge, having heard the witnesses, acquitted the plaintiff of it. The defendant, however, took another point. He said: "You, the county court, "have no jurisdiction to go into this matter, for this is a case in "which the title to land is in question, and the value of land is "above the limit which alone is within the competence of the "county court to debate upon." That argument rests upon certain sections of the County Courts Act, 1934. Section 40 provides: "(1) A county court shall have jurisdiction to hear and "determine any action founded on contract or on tort where the "debt, demand or damage claimed is not more than £100, "whether on balance of account or otherwise: Provided that a "county court shall not, except as in this Act provided, have "jurisdiction to hear and determine . . . (b) any action in which "the title to any hereditament or to any toll, fair, market or "franchise is in question."

The exceptions referred to are to be found in certain other sections. By section 43: "If, with respect to any action assigned "for the time being to the King's Bench Division of the High "Court, the parties to the action agree, by a memorandum signed "by them or by their respective solicitors, that a county court "specified in the memorandum shall have jurisdiction in the "action, that court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine "the action accordingly."

It will be convenient if I deal at this stage with one point raised by Mr. Milne. He said that, by the form of the pleadings

C. A.
1954
LEA
v.
MOORE.
Evershed M.R.

including the counterclaim, the defendant had, in effect, together with the plaintiff, "signed a memorandum" so as to confer jurisdiction on this county court. I am quite unable to accept that submission. In my judgment, section 43 applies only where an action has in fact been instituted and has been "assigned" to, and so is proceeding in, the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court. The section only relates to those cases where the parties to that existing action sign a memorandum of the kind indicated. I am clear that not only was there no action of the relevant kind on foot, but that no memorandum, as contemplated by that section, was ever signed.

By section 48: "A county court shall have jurisdiction to hear "and determine any action for the recovery of land where neither "the value of the land in question nor the rent payable in respect "thereof exceeds the sum of £100 by the year."

Finally, in section 51 it is provided that: "A county court "shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any action in "which the title to any hereditament comes in question, being an "action which would otherwise be within the jurisdiction of the "court— . . . (a) . . . if neither the value nor the rent of the "hereditament in respect of which the easement or licence is "claimed, or on, through, over or under which the easement or "licence is claimed, exceeds the sum of £100 by the year."

The question is whether, having regard to the nature of these proceedings, the title to a hereditament is in question. It is not in dispute that the leasehold term, the outstanding 14 years of the term comprehended in the original lease of April, 1947, is a hereditament within the meaning of the relevant sections. For that proposition some authorities are quoted in Halsbury's Laws of England, vol. 9, pp. 148, 149, and Mr. Milne has not suggested the contrary. But it is true that this is not at first sight the kind of case which would be described as litigation about the title to land. On the other hand, I have come to the clear conclusion, with all respect to the county court judge, that since the whole of the plaintiff's claim depended on the essential assertion that the defendant, together with the plaintiff and one other, had vested in them a particular term of years, and since the first line of defence put in by the defendant was that he was not such an assignee of the term of years, it seems to me inevitable that the title to this land is in question.

Sections 48 and 51, which I have read, point to the distinction between cases relating to the recovery of land and cases where the title to the land is in question. The short note in the English and Empire Digest of Reg. v. Harden,[1] seems clearly to support the view that the title to land will properly be said to be in question when the liability with which the defendant is charged depends upon the alleged circumstance that he is the proprietor of a particular landed interest. I, therefore, have come to the conclusion that this appeal must succeed.

[1] (1853) 2 E. & B. 188.

The county court judge dealt at length with the defence of non est factum and also of fraudulent misrepresentation, and decided adversely to the defendant. If that decision was right, then, of course, the title was no longer in question; but it is, I think, clear that if, on the face of the proceedings, the title was in question, the judge could not go into the matter at all, not even to the extent of determining the matter of fact, which was essentially involved in the question of the title to the land. I have said, and my brethren have said also, that the result may be something of a Pyrrhic victory for the defendant. But it is not for us to animadvert upon that matter, save, perhaps, to repeat my hope that in this very unfortunate state of affairs the persons who now appear to be, on the face of the document at any rate, liable for a substantial sum of rent for a substantial number of years might take whatever steps they can to put an end at the earliest possible moment to this recurring risk without prejudice to whatever their rights one against the other might be. Subject, however, to that possibly irrelevant observation, I conclude in this case that the appeal must be allowed.

BIRKETT L.J. I am of the same opinion.

ROMER L.J. I agree fully with both the judgments which have just been delivered, and on the legal question which has been argued I merely desire to say that it appears to me that the view is inescapable that this case raises a question of the title to a hereditament, because the whole case depends on whether the defendant is, or is not, an assignee of these premises, Wick House. If he is an assignee of the premises, then the legal interest in the premises for the term granted by the original lease of April 9, 1947, became vested by the assignment jointly in the plaintiff, the defendant and Mr. Winders. If that assignment is not binding on the defendant, as he says it is not, then the legal interest in that term of years is either vested in the plaintiff and Mr. Winders, or if they could escape from the liability under the assignment on the ground that it was intended to be a joint assignment, and that if it is not binding on the defendant, then it is not binding upon them either then, presumably, the legal interest in the term of years remains vested in the assignor, Mr. Simpson, who was the original lessee. Accordingly, the whole question concerns the legal interest in the premises, and that is essentially a question of title and is, therefore, within section 40 of the Act. I agree, therefore, that the appeal must succeed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Glaisyer, Porter & Mason, Birmingham.

E. D.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1954
Dec. 1.

Roxburgh J.

*LONDON PAROCHIAL CHARITIES TRUSTEES v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL AND OTHERS.

[1953 L. 132.]

Charity — Scheme — Modification — Scheme for administration made under statute and approved by Order in Council—Article of scheme enabling Charity Commissioners to modify it "by schemes made "in the exercise of their ordinary jurisdiction"—Application to court to modify scheme—Jurisdiction of court—Charitable Trusts Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 136), ss. 2, 3, 4, 5—City of London Parochial Charities Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 36), s. 34.

Section 33 of the City of London Parochial Charities Act, 1883, provided that the Charity Commissioners might formulate in relation to the City of London Parochial Charities schemes requiring the approval of Her Majesty in Council. Section 34 provided: "No scheme shall of itself have any operation, but the "same, when and as approved by Her Majesty in Council, shall ". . . have full operation and effect in the same manner as if it "had been enacted in this Act."

In 1891, the scheme known as the Central Scheme was formulated under the Act and was approved by Her Majesty in Council. Article 58 of the scheme provided: "The commissioners [i.e., the "Charity Commissioners] may from time to time by schemes made "in the exercise of their ordinary jurisdiction modify the provisions "of this scheme." In 1953 the plaintiffs, the London Parochial Charities Trustees, took out this summons asking, inter alia, that the scheme might be modified as in the summons indicated:—

Held, that article 58 by implication cast on the commissioners a statutory duty to consider whether the scheme ought or ought not to be modified, and that, as the scheme had statutory force, the court had no jurisdiction to modify it.

In re Berkhamsted Grammar School [1908] 2 Ch. 25; 24 T.L.R. 514 considered and applied.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

By Order in Council dated February 23, 1891, a scheme was approved which was known as the Central Scheme and was made by the Charity Commissioners for England and Wales, under the City of London Parochial Charities Act, 1883, for the administration of the funds vested under that Act in the City of London Parochial Charities Trustees (hereinafter called the plaintiffs). By this summons, which was taken out on January 15, 1953, the plaintiffs asked, inter alia, that the scheme might be modified as in the summons indicated, and that any necessary consequential alterations might be made in the scheme. There were thirteen defendants to the summons.

The relevant statutory provisions and articles of the scheme are set out in the judgment of Roxburgh J.

Geoffrey Cross Q.C. and G. H. Newsom for the plaintiffs.

Denys B. Buckley for the Attorney-General.

The second defendants, the London County Council, did not appear.

Andrew Blackett-Ord for the Working Men's College Corporation.

Charles Russell Q.C. and R. O. Wilberforce Q.C. for the chairmen of Regent Street Polytechnic, Battersea Polytechnic Institute and Borough Polytechnic Institute, the governor of Chelsea Polytechnic, the chairmen of the City of London College, Northampton Polytechnic Institute and Northern Polytechnic Institute, the governor of the North-Western Polytechnic and the chairman of the Morley College.

J. A. Plowman Q.C. and D. Gidley Scott for a trustee of the Bishopsgate Foundation.

ROXBURGH J. This is an application to modify a scheme for the administration of certain charities, which was approved by Her Majesty in Council on February 23, 1891, and was made under the City of London Parochial Charities Act, 1883.

At the threshold of the hearing the question arises whether the court has jurisdiction to modify the scheme, and it is on that point alone that I am now giving judgment.

Section 2 of the City of London Parochial Charities Act, 1883, provided: "The Charity Commissioners for England and Wales "(hereinafter called the Commissioners) shall be Commissioners "under this Act and have the following powers for the purposes "thereof." I call attention to that provision because it shows that the Charity Commissioners, in addition to their ordinary duties under what I may call the general Acts relating to charitable trusts, have special duties and powers for the purposes of this Act of 1883.

The Act provided by section 33—I need not go into detail about this—for the formulation of schemes by the Charity Commissioners in relation to the City of London Parochial Charities which require the approval of Her Majesty in Council. Section 34 provided: "No scheme shall of itself have any operation, but the "same, when and as approved by Her Majesty in Council, shall ". . . have full operation and effect in the same manner as if it "had been enacted in this Act." Therefore, the scheme is given statutory validity.

Section 36 provided: "The Order in Council approving a "scheme shall be conclusive evidence that such scheme was "within the scope of and made in conformity with this Act, and "the validity of such scheme and order shall not be questioned in "any legal proceedings whatever." Therefore, I am not concerned here with any question of ultra vires. That is not unimportant because when I come to deal with one particular provision in this scheme there might well have been some argument as to whether it was ultra vires or not, but for that provision which makes it quite plain that any such point cannot be taken.

1954

LONDON PAROCHIAL CHARITIES TRUSTEES v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

Roxburgh J.

I will now turn to the scheme, which, as I have said, has statutory validity, and no question of ultra vires can arise in relation to it. Article 57 provides: "Any question as to the "construction of this scheme, or as to the regularity or validity "of any acts or proceedings done or taken or about to be done "or taken under this scheme, shall be determined conclusively "by the commissioners, upon such applications made to them for "the purpose as they think sufficient." Pausing there, that means the Charity Commissioners. I am not concerned today with the question whether the functions which are under the scheme assigned to the Charity Commissioners ought or ought not now to be exercised by the Minister of Education. I want to make that quite plain. I shall continue to refer to the Charity Commissioners, but that is without prejudice to the question whether now their functions ought or ought not to be exercised by the Minister of Education. I make that reservation because I understand that there is some doubt on that point which has not been argued before me. I am therefore leaving it.

Article 57 creates a difficulty. If on other grounds I had felt that I had jurisdiction, I should have had to reach a final conclusion on the meaning of article 57, but as I think that there are sufficient grounds to be found elsewhere on which to base my judgment that I have no jurisdiction, I desire to leave open the question what article 57 means. As a mere matter of grammar, it appears to me to lay on the commissioners an imperative duty to determine any of the questions embraced in article 57, and to provide that when they have determined them their determination is conclusive. I realize, however, that such a construction might give rise to far-reaching difficulties, and therefore I wish to say that I also think it possible that any court that was really faced with construing article 57 might find a way of giving to those words a construction which I do not think they prima facie bear. It must at least be said, however, that on no view are they inconsistent with the decision which I am about to reach.

Article 58 provides: "The commissioners may from time to "time by schemes made in the exercise of their ordinary juris-"diction modify the provisions of this scheme."

Before I turn to the Charitable Trusts Act, 1860, in order to discover what is meant by the words "in the exercise of their "ordinary jurisdiction," I will summarize the position up to this point, which is as follows: the scheme has the effect of a statute, and therefore the court has no inherent jurisdiction to modify it. Any power to modify it must be found in the scheme itself, though I agree that it is possible that power to modify might be implied from words in the statute itself if the words properly lead to an implication of that character. Mr. Cross, I think, said as much; but whether he did so or not, it is really clearly decided by Warrington J. in In re Berkhamsted Grammar School.[1] The Act there in question was not the same, but it had sufficient similarity to make the words which Warrington J. used about the scheme before him applicable to the scheme now before me—not all of his words, but those which I am going to quote. He said [2]: "It is said, and said with truth, that by virtue of the "operation of section 45 of the Act of 1869"—that Act, namely, the Endowed Schools Act, 1869, for these purposes may be treated as indistinguishable from the Act of 1883—"the scheme of 1877" —which for these purposes may be treated as indistinguishable from the scheme of 1891—"is as much an Act of Parliament as "if it had been enacted by that Act. Then it is said, and said "also with truth, that the Board of Education"—that is the Board of Education as successors in this regard to the functions of the Charity Commissioners—"have no greater powers than "those which the court had always exercised prior to the original "Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, and that the powers exercised by "the court did not extend to enable it to alter the provisions of a "statute." As I have said, in my view, those words are directly applicable here.

[1] [1908] 2 Ch. 25; 24 T.L.R. 514.

Later, Warrington J. says [3]: "It is exactly the same as if the "scheme of 1877 had been originally a statute and that statute "had provided that the Board"—meaning the Board of Education as successors to the Charity Commissioners—"may from "time to time frame schemes altering this scheme." Therefore, first and foremost, I have to decide whether article 58 confers any jurisdiction on the court to alter this scheme. Admittedly, it does not expressly do so; but it is argued that it does so by implication.

In order to explain the argument, I must now refer to the general powers of the Charity Commissioners, which are to be found for this purpose in sections 2, 3, 4 and 5 of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1860. Section 2 provides: "The Board of Charity Commissioners for England and Wales, subject to the restrictions "and rights of appeal hereinafter provided, shall have power from "time to time, upon the application" of certain persons ". . . to "make such effectual orders as may now be made by any judge "of the Court of Chancery sitting at chambers" or by certain other bodies ". . . for the appointment or removal of trustees "of any charity" or for a number of other purposes which I need not read, "or"—and this is the important one—"for "the establishment of any scheme for the administration of any "such charity."

Section 3 provides: "The said Board, previously to making "any order under the jurisdiction vested in them by this Act, "shall notify to the trustees or administrators (if any) of the "charity to be affected thereby their intention of exercising such "jurisdiction, by notice in writing. . . ." Pausing there, in my view that is one of the restrictions referred to in section 2. Section 4 provides: "The said Board shall not make any order,

[2] [1908] 2 Ch. 25, 43.

[3] [1908] 2 Ch. 25, 44.

1954

LONDON PAROCHIAL CHARITIES TRUSTEES v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

Roxburgh J.

" under the jurisdiction vested in them by this Act, with respect " to any charity of which the gross annual income, exclusively of " the yearly value of any buildings or land used wholly for the " purposes thereof, and not yielding any pecuniary income, shall " amount to fifty pounds or upwards, except upon the application " of the trustees or persons acting in the administration of the " charity, or a majority of them. . . ." That is another of the restrictions referred to in section 2.

Section 5 provides: " The said Board also shall not exercise " the jurisdiction hereby vested in them in any case which, by " reason of its contentious character, or of any special questions " of law or of fact which it may involve, or for other reasons, " they may consider more fit to be adjudicated on by any of the " judicial courts." With regard to the charitable trusts to which the Act of 1860 normally applies, the court, of course, has concurrent jurisdiction, and I certainly do not think it possible to construe section 5 as authorizing the board to confer on the court jurisdiction which it does not otherwise possess. There is no difficulty about the scheme of the general Act. The difficulty is about the special scheme with which I am today concerned. The court normally has concurrent jurisdiction, and this merely means that the Charity Commissioners need not exercise their jurisdiction in a case within the scope of section 5. If they do not, then the court has jurisdiction because all the time it has concurrent jurisdiction; but when one comes to apply that sort of legislation to a case in which the court has not concurrent jurisdiction—and this is admittedly such a case—then, as so often happens with referential legislation, the sort of difficulty arises which has arisen in the present case.

The argument was very ably put before me by Mr. Cross, who contended that the words " in the exercise of their ordinary " jurisdiction " must import the whole system of administration of charities envisaged by sections 2 to 5 inclusive of the Act of 1860. Those sections envisage a concurrent jurisdiction of the court. Therefore, it was argued, article 58 must also envisage a concurrent jurisdiction of the court, and therefore the court, taking an extremely heavy penful of ink, must expand article 58 to provide as follows: " The commissioners may from time to " time by schemes made in the exercise of their ordinary juris- " diction, or the court, if, under section 5 of the Act of 1860, " the commissioners do not desire to exercise their jurisdiction, " may modify the provisions of this scheme." One cannot apply to the construction of a statute the principle of falsa demonstratio, but one must, I think, give effect to the language of the statute if it is reasonably plain.

In my judgment, there is really no ambiguity about article 58. It provides quite definitely that the modifications are to be by schemes made by the commissioners. That appears to me to exclude schemes made by the court. As I say, there is no concurrent jurisdiction. Therefore, I have to get out of these words something conferring jurisdiction on the court. How can I get that out of words which say that the schemes are to be made by the commissioners? It is the very negation of what the words say. The argument is that if I take that view I am giving no meaning to the words " in the exercise of their ordinary jurisdic- " tion." I cannot take that view. Two alternative explanations can be offered for those words. I think that in a way they are cumulative. One is that the contrast is between the special jurisdiction conferred on the commissioners ad hoc for the purposes of the Act of 1883, which was of limited duration, and the ordinary jurisdiction conferred on them by the Act of 1860, which is of unlimited duration. Again, the words " in the exercise of their " ordinary jurisdiction " may be a restriction on the enabling power conferred by article 58. If those words were struck out, the commissioners would presumably be able to make their own rules of procedure with a view to modifying the provisions of the scheme, whereas article 58 seems to me plainly to incorporate the restrictions, if and so far as they are relevant, imposed by sections 3 and 4.

It is contended that it would be ridiculous if the commissioners could disclaim jurisdiction under section 5 of the Act of 1860 and leave the court powerless. In my judgment, however, the commissioners have no power to disclaim jurisdiction under section 5 of the Act of 1860 because I can see no reason to import that section into article 58. It seems to me that the provision in the scheme that " The commissioners may . . . in the exercise " of their ordinary jurisdiction modify the provisions of this " scheme," necessarily implies that the commissioners should consider whether they ought to modify the provisions of the scheme. In other words, it seems to me that by implication a statutory duty is cast upon them to consider whether or not this particular scheme ought to be modified.

Therefore, in the result, I am of opinion that by virtue of the fact that this is a scheme having the force of a statute, no jurisdiction exists in this court to modify it.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: J. W. French; Treasury Solicitor; Coward, Chance & Co.; Bartlett & Gluckstein; Ernest G. Scott & Co.

K. R. A. H.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1954
Dec. 13, 14.

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Devlin JJ.

* PETHERICK v. BUCKLAND.

Road Traffic — Disqualification — Limitation of disqualification to vehicles of a particular description—"Class or description"—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), s. 6.

The defendant, having committed offences under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, was disqualified for "holding or obtaining a licence for "driving 5 hundredweight vehicles for 12 months." On appeal by the prosecutor the question for the opinion of the court was whether "5 hundredweight vehicles" was a "class or description" of vehicles within the meaning of section 6 of the Act, which provided that a court might limit a disqualification "to the driving of a "motor vehicle of the same class or description as the vehicle in "relation to which the offence was committed":—

Held, that although section 2 of the Act of 1930 divided motor vehicles into classes the Minister when making regulations under the Act divided vehicles into different descriptions; accordingly, if the Minister could divide vehicles into "descriptions" there was no reason in law why the justices could not limit a disqualification to vehicles of a particular description.

Per curiam. In future, when justices wish to limit a disqualification under section 6 they must limit it to vehicles referred to under a particular class in the Act or under a particular description in the regulations.

Quaere, whether the Minister had power to prescribe different descriptions when making regulations.

CASE STATED by Essex justices.

The prosecutor preferred an information against Peter James Buckland charging him with permitting, on March 10, 1954, John Albert Southgate, who at the material time was under 17 years, to drive a goods van contrary to section 9 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, and with permitting Southgate to use the van without a third party insurance policy being in force with regard to its use contrary to section 35 of the Act. At the hearing of the information the justices found, inter alia, that on March 10, Southgate drove a Morris van which was "a "delivery van of a size or capacity sometimes known as a '5-"'hundredweight',"' when he was under the age of 17, while the defendant walked beside the van. At the end of the prosecution's case the defendant changed his plea to one of guilty to the offence under section 35. Having heard the defence to the charge under section 9, the justices found the information proved. After hearing the defendant's solicitor on the question of disqualification, the justices were of the opinion that there were no special reasons for not ordering disqualification, but decided that, having regard to the fact that the defendant earned his livelihood by driving motor vehicles and having regard to the provisions of section 6 * of the Act, the disqualification could properly be limited to the driving of vans of a size and capacity of 5 hundredweight. The justices therefore ordered that the defendant should pay a fine of £2 for the offence under section 35 and be disqualified for holding or obtaining a licence for driving 5 hundredweight vehicles for 12 months.

The question for the opinion of the High Court was whether "5 hundredweight vehicles" was a "class or description" of vehicles within the meaning of section 6 of the Act.

F. H. Lawton for the prosecutor.

The defendant did not appear and was not represented.

Rodger Winn for the Minister of Transport and Civil Aviation as amicus curiae.

The following cases were cited in argument: Whittall v. Kirby †; Burrows v. Hall ‡; and Dennis v. Tame.§

LORD GODDARD C.J. This is a case stated by justices for the County of Essex before whom the defendant was charged with certain offences in connexion with a motor vehicle. It is not necessary to go into the particular offences because the matter we have to decide is entirely a matter of the provisions as to disqualification of a person who has committed an offence which carries with it the penalty of disqualification.

The vehicle with which the justices were concerned was said by them to be "a delivery van of a size or capacity sometimes "known as a '5-hundredweight'." The case might not be so difficult if they had said it was a vehicle well known in the motor trade or something of that sort. They decided that there was no special ground for not disqualifying the defendant, and said "that having regard to the fact that the [defendant] "earned his livelihood by driving motor vehicles"—which we have tried to point out ever since Whittall v. Kirby [1] is an immaterial matter—"and having regard to the provisions of "section 6 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, the disqualification "could properly be limited to the driving of vans of a size and "capacity of 5 hundredweight."

Mr. Lawton on behalf of the Chief Constable of Essex says that there is no such description or class of vehicle as a 5-hundredweight vehicle. It is curious that this point which

* Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 6 (1): "Any court before which a person is "convicted of any criminal offence in "connection with the driving of a "motor vehicle . . . (a) may in any "case, . . . and shall where so "required by this Part of this Act, "order him to be disqualified for "holding or obtaining a licence . . . "Provided that, if the court thinks "fit, any disqualification imposed "under this section may be limited "to the driving of a motor vehicle "of the same class or description as "the vehicle in relation to which the "offence was committed."

† [1947] K.B. 194; 62 T.L.R. 696; [1946] 2 All E.R. 552.

‡ [1950] 2 K.B. 476; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 1102; [1950] 2 All E.R. 156.

§ [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1338n.

[1] [1947] K.B. 194; 62 T.L.R. 696; [1946] 2 All E.R. 552.

BIBL. LONDIN UNIV.

1954

PETHERICK v. BUCKLAND.

Lord Goddard C.J.

might have arisen ever since the Road Traffic Act, 1930, came into force has never arisen until the case was before us the last time this court was sitting, when we thought the case raised such a difficult and novel point that we should ask for the assistance of the Minister of Transport as the defendant was not represented, and Mr. Rodger Winn has attended on his behalf to assist the court as amicus curiae. It is not Mr. Winn's fault if I say, with all due respect to him, that his argument has left the matter as difficult as it was before. It is an extraordinarily difficult position and it is one which I do not hesitate to say the Minister ought, as there is a Road Traffic Bill which has already been introduced into Parliament —it had its first reading recently in the House of Lords and the second reading is next week—to have cleared up.

The position is this: the Road Traffic Act, 1930, Part I, which deals with the regulation of motor vehicles, commences with the sub-heading "Classification of Motor Vehicles," and section 2 provides: "Motor vehicles shall, for the purposes of "this Act and the regulations, be divided into the following "classes." I pause there to point out that the classification is not for the purposes of Part I of the Act alone; it is for the purposes of the whole Act and of the regulations. The section then proceeds to give the classes—heavy locomotives, light locomotives, motor tractors, heavy motor cars, motor cars—quite a long description of those—motor cycles and invalid carriages. In almost every other part of the Act one finds, instead of the word "class" being used, the words "class or description," and section 6, with which we are concerned, and which deals with disqualification, provides "Provided that, if the court "thinks fit, any disqualification imposed under this section may "be limited to the driving of a motor vehicle of the same class "or description as the vehicle in relation to which the offence "was committed." If it was of the same class, no difficulty would arise, but here one gets for the first time "class or "description" and there is nothing in the Act which states what "description" means or who is to prescribe any particular descriptions or how vehicles of a class are to be divided so far as descriptions are concerned; the Act is entirely silent about it. It uses the words "class or description" in a great many sections, but the curious thing is that when one turns to the First Schedule to the Act, which of course is part of the Act, which deals with limits of speed, one finds there that the limits of speed vary according to the class of vehicle. Then one finds that there are vehicles which do not fall exactly within any of the classes laid down in section 2 but may be said to be, I suppose, classes or descriptions. Section 10 provides: "It "shall not be lawful for any person to drive a motor vehicle "of any class or description on a road at a speed greater than "the speed specified in the First Schedule to this Act . . ."

Then, when one turns to the First Schedule one does not find class or description of vehicle, one finds class of vehicle.

At one time, it seemed to some members of the court, that the words " class or description " might be merely tautologous. Mr. Winn told us that such a construction terrified the Minister, because he said that if that was so a great many of the regulations would be ultra vires. They may be, I do not know; some day we may have to decide that, because the regulations deal with descriptions of vehicle and there is nothing in the Act which apparently enables the Minister to prescribe the different descriptions. Section 2, as I have already said, deals with classes; that is the only division of motor vehicles, but the Minister has throughout apparently divided up motor cars into different descriptions and then one keeps on finding in the Act the expression " class or description." Somebody must be able to say whether a vehicle is of a particular description or not and if the Minister can do it, I cannot see any reason why the justices cannot do it. The Minister apparently makes his own descriptions. He has to do certain things to carry out the sections which refer to class or description; so have the justices and if the justices, therefore, like to say that a man shall not drive a car of this particular description, we cannot say in law that they cannot do it. But it is inconvenient they should do it in this way.

While the court thinks that in this particular case they cannot interfere with the disqualification which the justices have imposed, they direct that in future where the justices are limiting the disqualification under the terms of the proviso to section 6, they should limit it to vehicles which can be found under a particular class in the Act or under a particular description in the regulations. One finds in the Act and the Schedules goods vehicles, passenger vehicles, heavy vehicles, light vehicles and so forth and the only way in which this limited disqualification can work satisfactorily is if the justices will take one of the descriptions which is to be found either in the Schedules of the Act or in the regulations and say " We apply the disqualifi- " cation to that vehicle or class of vehicle and to no other." We are not blaming the justices in any way for what they did because this case has given the court very great difficulty. We uphold the disqualification, and dismiss the appeal.

CASSELS J. I agree.

DEVLIN J. I agree. The reason for the direction which my Lord has indicated and the justification for it seems to me to be this: if justices compose their own description, as we have held under the words of the Act they are entitled to do, they would obviously have to be descriptions which are most carefully defined because any person driving a vehicle of that character while disqualified commits an offence as a result of which he must be sent to prison unless there are special circumstances. Therefore, by far the most convenient course is for the justices to take one of those descriptions—and there are plenty of them—in the Act or regulations because those descriptions contain their own definitions: then there can be no difficulty about the enforcement of their order.

1954

PETHERICK v. BUCKLAND.

Devlin J.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. for D. E. Morgan, Chelmsford; Treasury Solicitor.

C. J. E.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1954
Dec. 13.

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Devlin JJ.

* REGINA v. CHELSEA JUVENILE COURT. In re AN INFANT.

Adoption—Adoption order—Alleged error—Court's power to correct particulars—Adoption Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 26), s. 21.

Section 21 (1) of the Adoption Act, 1950, which provides, "The court by which an adoption order has been made . . . may, "on the application of the adopter . . . amend the order by the "correction of any error in the particulars contained therein," gives the court power to correct particulars incorrectly stated in the adoption order and is not merely a slip rule.

The adopter applied to the juvenile court under section 21 to amend an adoption order on the ground that it appeared from certain evidence that the adopted child was younger than the age attributed to him in the order. The court held that they had no jurisdiction. On an application for an order of mandamus directing the court to hear and determine the application:—

Held, granting the application for mandamus, that the court had power, if they came to the conclusion after hearing the evidence that there had been an error, to amend the order with regard to the child's date of birth and to make any necessary consequential amendments.

APPLICATION for order of mandamus.

On June 20, 1951, the Chelsea Juvenile Court granted the applicant an adoption order in respect of a child, with whom she had become acquainted in June, 1946, when the child was in the care and custody of the London County Council, and who had been boarded out with her since June, 1949. In the adoption order the child was described as a foundling and was said to be a child identical with an entry made on July 16, 1942, in the Register of Births for a registration district in London (the birth certificate there referred to showed that the child was found at a railway station on September 21, 1938) and that the child's probable date of birth appeared to be August 1, 1938. On September 29, 1954, the applicant applied to the Chelsea Juvenile Court under section 21 of the Adoption Act, 1950,[1] to amend the particulars in the adoption order relating to the child's date of birth on the ground that it appeared from certain medical and other evidence that the probable date of the child's birth was about the beginning of 1941. The applicant applied to the juvenile court to delete the words " a foundling " and the recital of the child's identity in the adoption order and to substitute January 1, 1941, for August 1, 1938, as the probable date of the child's birth. The court, without hearing the applicant's witnesses, refused to amend the particulars in the order on the ground that they had no jurisdiction to do so.

H. E. Francis for the applicant.
F. H. Lawton for the juvenile court.
Paul Wrightson for the London County Council.

No cases were cited in argument.

LORD GODDARD C.J. stated the facts and continued: Section 21, under which the application was made, provides: " (1) The court by which an adoption order has been made under " this Act or the Adoption of Children Act, 1926, or the Adoption " of Children (Scotland) Act, 1930, may, on the application of " the adopter or of the adopted person, amend the order by the " correction of any error in the particulars contained therein. . . ." Section 21 (1) is in the widest possible terms and it has been suggested to us that that is only what is called a slip rule. Those words are not appropriate to a slip rule at all. A slip rule applies where the court makes an order and by a slip the order drawn up does not represent what the court has said. That is the true function of a slip rule. Power is obviously being given in this section to correct particulars which in the case of these children from unknown parentage may be very easy to get wrong in an order.

Subsection (2) of the section provides: " Where the adoption " order was made before the first day of January, nineteen " hundred and fifty, the power of the court under the foregoing " subsection shall include power to amend the order—(a) by the " insertion of the country of the adopted person's birth; (b) (where " the order does not specify a precise date as the date of the [1] Adoption Act, 1950, s. 21: " (1) The court by which an adoption " order has been made under this Act " or the Adoption of Children Act, " 1926, or the Adoption of Children " (Scotland) Act, 1930, may, on the " application of the adopter or of the " adopted person, amend the order by " the correction of any error in the " particulars contained therein . . . (2) " Where the adoption order was made " before the first day of January, " 1950, the power of the court under " the foregoing subsection shall in- " clude power to amend the order— " (a) by the insertion of the country " of the adopted person's birth; (b) " (where the order does not specify " a precise date as the date of the " adopted person's birth) by the inser- " tion of the date which appears to " the court to be the date or probable " date of his birth. . . ."

1954

REGINA v. CHELSEA JUVENILE COURT. In re AN INFANT.

Lord Goddard C.J.

"adopted person's birth) by the insertion of the date which "appears to the court to be the date or probable date of his "birth. . . ." We have not explored very fully what the position was before the first day of January, 1950, but if the court is expressly given power to make that alteration, it seems to me that it is because there may have been some doubt about the power to do that under the old order and it is recognized under this section that orders made since then can be amended. There is no doubt, in our opinion, that the justices have power to amend the order and, although it may be, if they do amend the order with regard to the date of birth, they may have to make some consequential amendments, there is no confusion as to the child that was adopted. There may be some confusion as to the date of birth of the adopted child or where it came from, but the child adopted was the child that this lady who made the application had in her custody and whom the justices could see and no doubt did see.

In my opinion the justices were wrong in refusing jurisdiction. We are not attempting to dictate how they are to decide it when the matter comes before them. No doubt there will be strong evidence on the one side and on the other, and it will be for the justices to come to a conclusion when they have heard the evidence as to the particulars. If they come to the conclusion that there was no error, then of course they will refuse the amendment. Therefore, in my opinion, the order for mandamus must go.

CASSELS J. I agree.

DEVLIN J. I also agree.

Order of mandamus.

Solicitors: T. D. Jones & Co.; Samuel Coleman; J. G. Barr, The Solicitor, London County Council.

C. J. E.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1954
Dec. 14, 17.

* MAYNARD v. WILLIAMS AND OTHERS.

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Devlin JJ.

Gaming—Lottery—"Private lottery"—Supporters' Club of Football Club—Money raised by various means including a weekly lottery—Whether club "conducted for purposes not connected with . . . "lotteries"—Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 58), s. 24 (1).

The respondents, members of the Torquay United Supporters' Club, were convicted of offences under the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934, in connexion with weekly lotteries run by the club. On appeal, quarter sessions found that the aims and objects of the supporters' club were the welfare of the Torquay United Football Club and to obtain funds for that purpose. The supporters' club's activities included numerous social activities all primarily aimed at raising money, providing voluntary services for the football club, improving the amenities of the football ground, organizing and making arrangements for running the football club's "A" team, providing transport for "away" matches, maintaining and repairing playing kit and raising money by means of lotteries. For eleven weeks the supporters' club ran a weekly lottery, tickets for which could only be obtained by members of the supporters' club on payment of 1s. About 5,000 tickets were sold each week. After deducting expenses, 60 per cent. of the receipts from the lottery were devoted to the provision of prizes and 40 per cent. used by the supporters' club for the benefit of the football club, the latter amounting to an average of £90 a week. Quarter sessions, allowing the respondents' appeal, held that the running of the lottery was only incidental and ancillary to the other methods and enterprises used by the supporters' club to carry out its declared purpose of helping the football club and that no offences were committed. The question for the court was whether the club "was established and conducted for purposes not connected with "... lotteries" so that the lottery was a "private lottery" within the meaning of section 24 (1), which exempted private lotteries from the provision in section 21 of the Act that all lotteries were unlawful:—

Held (Devlin J. dissenting) that on the facts as found by quarter sessions, the supporters' club was conducted for a purpose connected with lotteries; the club, although it raised money by other means, was, as part of its business, raising money by means of lotteries; accordingly the lottery was unlawful and offences had been committed.

Held also, that there was nothing in the Act which provided that if the running of the lottery was ancillary or incidental to the other business of the club, it was a lawful lottery.

Per Cassels J. A society might be established for one purpose and conducted for another. The supporters' club was established to help the football club financially, but conducted for a purpose connected with lotteries. The frequency of the lotteries was an important feature in deciding whether the club was conducted for a purpose connected with lotteries.

Per Devlin J. The test was not whether the club conducted lotteries, but whether its affairs were so conducted that the untainted purposes for which it was established had been overthrown or joined by a tainted purpose. What had to be considered was not the immediate act of running the lottery, but the purpose of the association of the people forming the club. The conduct of the club was only material if it affected a change in the purposes for which the club was established.

CASE STATED by Devon Quarter Sessions.

The respondents, Leslie Walter Williams, Frederick Gordon Down, Frederick Maurice Wolff and James Leonard Burgoyne were convicted on informations preferred by the appellant, Harold Samuel Maynard, of unlawfully using the club room of the Torquay United Supporters' Club for purposes connected with the promotion or conduct of a lottery contrary to section 22 (1) (f) of the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934, and other connected offences.

At the hearing before quarter sessions the following facts were proved or admitted. The Torquay United Football Club was a professional club with a ground at Plainmoor, Torquay. The Torquay United Supporters' Club was formed over 30 years ago. Its aim and objects in the terms of its own rules were the welfare of the football club and for that purpose to obtain funds and to use them in such manner and for such purposes as its executive committee might direct. Membership of the supporters' club was open to all persons without distinction and the annual subscription was 1s. The membership exceeded 7,000. The management of the supporters' club was vested in the executive committee of which the respondents were members. The activities of the supporters' club in furtherance of its aims and objects were numerous and varied. They comprised, inter alia: (i) social activities frequently throughout the year such as dances, whist drives, jumble sales, darts and skittle matches, all primarily aimed at raising money; (ii) providing gatemen, stewards and other voluntary services at home matches and the entertaining of visiting supporters; (ii') improving the amenities of the Plainmoor ground by means of voluntary labour on the part of members of the supporters' club. A notable instance was the construction of a terraced bank along the whole of one side of the ground which made it possible to accomodate approximately 5,000 additional spectators; (iv) organizing and making all necessary arrangements for the running of the football club "A" team; (v) organizing transport arrangements for supporters wishing to attend "away" matches; (vi) maintaining and repairing playing kit; (vii) raising money by means of lotteries. The football club incurred an annual deficit of about £5,000 and the unpaid services and financial support provided by the supporters' club had been essential to its continued existence. The gross income of the supporters' club from all sources excluding lotteries had been about £4,000 to £4,500 per annum and that had enabled the supporters' club to pay to the football club a yearly total of about £2,000. In the course of the last five years, the supporters' club had at times, in addition to its other activities, conducted lotteries for the express purpose of raising funds. In October, 1953, a lottery on football results was conducted by the supporters' club for two to three weeks and again between November, 1953, and March, 1954, a weekly lottery was organized. They were discontinued due to objections by the police.

1954

MAYNARD v. WILLIAMS.

On March 24, 1954, the executive committee of the supporters club appointed by resolution a sub-committee in order to organize the promotion of a fresh lottery on such conditions as would comply with the requirements of the law. The respondents were the effective members of the sub-committee. The sub-committee organized a weekly lottery on football results which was called "The Torquay United Supporters' Club Private Lottery Com-"petition" and which ran for 11 weeks from March 27 to June 7, 1954, when the institution of proceedings against the respondents caused a cessation of that effort to raise funds. The respondents individually participated in the conduct of the lottery in such a manner as justified their conviction on the several charges preferred against them unless the lottery was a "private "lottery" within the meaning of section 24 of the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934.[1] Tickets in the lottery could only be obtained by members of the supporters' club through duly authorized members on payment of 1s. for each ticket. The number of tickets sold each week amounted to an average of approximately 5,000, some members buying more than one ticket. The conditions prescribed by the Betting and Lotteries Act, section 24 (2) were strictly observed. After deducting the cost of printing and stationery, 60 per cent. of the net receipts was devoted to the provision of prizes and the other 40 per cent. used by the supporters' club for the benefit of the football club. The accountants' fee for auditing the accounts of the lottery was paid out of the general funds. The money retained by the supporters' club averaged about £90 a week and that sum was forthwith remitted to the football club. The lottery was capable of considerable expansion if the demand so warranted and the club desired to extend it. The tickets printed were, however, limited to the number of 5,000 because of the large amount of clerical work involved and because a lottery of that size was sufficient to yield such a profit to the supporters' club which, together with the proceeds from its other activities, would cover the normal annual deficit of the football club. The supporters' club room at Plainmoor was used, among other things, for carrying out the administrative and clerical work involved in keeping the records of the lottery. The sub-committee met weekly at the club room to check returns, sort the results and to work out the prize money. Tickets were also prepared for printing for the succeeding week and it was estimated that of the 7,187 members of the supporters' club about one third purchased tickets in the lottery.

It was contended on behalf of the respondents that the supporters' club was a society established and conducted for purposes not connected with gaming, wagering or lotteries and that accordingly the lottery was a "private lottery" within the meaning of section 24 of the Act.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the supporters' club was neither established nor conducted for purposes not connected with gaming, wagering or lotteries and that the exemption provided under section 24 did not apply.

[1] Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934, s. 21: "Subject to the provisions of "this Part of this Act, all lotteries "are unlawful."

S. 24 (1): "In this section, the "expression 'private lottery' means "a lottery in Great Britain which is "promoted for, and in which the sale "of tickets or chances by the promoters is confined to, either—(a) "members of one society established "and conducted for purposes not connected with gaming, wagering or "lotteries; or (b) persons all of whom "work on the same premises; or (c) "persons all of whom reside on the "same premises. . . ."

1954

MAYNARD v. WILLIAMS.

Quarter sessions were of the opinion that the running of the lottery was only incidental and ancillary to the other methods and enterprises used by the supporters' club to carry out its declared purpose of helping the football club, the contention of the respondents was correct and the appeals were allowed. They were satisfied that the conditions laid down in subsection (2) of section 24 had been fully and conscientiously complied with.

Sir Harry Hylton-Foster Q.C., S.-G., Rodger Winn and J. T. Molony for the appellant.

Dingle Foot Q.C. and T. O. Kellock for the respondents.

The following cases were cited in argument: Stacey v. Wilkins [2] and Hudson v. Chamberlin.[3]

Cur. adv. vult.

December 14. LORD GODDARD C.J. This is a case stated by the Appeal Committee of the Devon Quarter Sessions, who allowed an appeal by the respondents against convictions for offences against the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934.

It is not disputed that unless the lottery is protected by section 24 of the Act the offences have been committed, and the only question for this court is whether or not the appeal committee were right in holding, on the facts which they found, that the lottery was a private lottery within the meaning of section 24 of the Act. It is to be observed that in the Act of 1934 all lotteries are declared to be illegal subject to the provisions of the Act, that is to say, subject to the exceptions which are found in sections 23 and 24.

[His Lordship read the material words of section 24 and continued:] The case arises out of the practice which has been going on all over the country whereby supporters of local football clubs, I think mostly professional clubs, form themselves into a club for the purpose of assisting financially the local professional football club. They raise money in a variety of ways. [His Lordship stated the facts found by the appeal committee and continued:] So far as the matter is a question of fact, we are bound by the findings of quarter sessions but, taking the facts, this court has to consider whether quarter sessions have directed themselves properly and have applied the law to the facts. The first comment I make on the findings of quarter sessions that they are of opinion "that the running of the lottery was only inci- "dental and ancillary to the other methods and enterprises used "by the supporters' club," is that I find nothing in the Act which says that if the running of the lottery is ancillary or incidental to the business or other part of the business carried on by the club, it becomes a lawful lottery. The words of the Act, I repeat, are: "members of one society established and

[2] [1946] K.B. 271; 62 T.L.R. 243; [1946] 1 All E.R. 293.

[3] [1949] W.N. 501.

" conducted for purposes not connected with gaming, wagering or " lotteries."

What is the object here of the promoters of this lottery? It is to raise money. That is their business, or part of their business, to raise money for the purpose of handing that money over to the football club. If that is part of their business, as it clearly is, and is so found by quarter sessions, the fact that they are raising money by means of lotteries seems to me to show that this society is conducted for purposes connected with a lottery. I cannot for myself see any material difference between this case and Pearse v. Hart,[1] the case of the Gloucester Football Club, except that there were certain differences in the facts there. It may be said that it was easier in the Gloucester case to find that the business was nothing but the business of running a lottery. But here, although the supporters' club raised money by other means, they undoubtedly raised money by means of lotteries, and the declared object of the club is to raise money in order that they may hand over that money to the football club and so assist the football club to keep going. For myself, I can see no material difference between this case and Pearse v. Hart [1] and I do not think it is a question whether the lottery is incidental or ancillary to the declared business of the club.

One has first of all to see what is the business of the supporters' club and then see if it is conducted in a way connected with lotteries. If, for the purpose of raising income to enable them to maintain the football club, they conduct lotteries I confess it seems to me that the words come exactly within the words I have read. It is true that the provision is put in a negative form: it must be for purposes not connected with lotteries, but if the business is connected with lotteries, it follows that an offence has been committed. In fact, I have asked myself this question: If, on these facts, it is to be held that there is no offence, I am wondering whether it would be possible to say that no offence would be committed if the directors of a commercial company conducted a lottery which was confined to shareholders in the company for the purpose of raising money to enable the company to continue or to enable the company to extend its operations. These are weekly lotteries held to provide a weekly sum of money, and if that is not conducting a business in connexion with lotteries, I find great difficulty in understanding what would be. In my opinion, the decision of the justices was right, the decision of quarter sessions must be set aside and the convictions upheld, and I would allow the appeal accordingly.

CASSELS J. I agree with the judgment which Lord Goddard C.J. has just delivered. As the court is not unanimous on this particular case I desire to indicate my reasons. [His Lordship referred to the facts and continued:] Quarter sessions were of [1] Post, p. 67.

1954

MAYNARD v. WILLIAMS.

Cassels J.

the opinion that the running of the lottery was only incidental and ancillary to the other methods, like dances, whist drives, jumble sales, darts and skittle matches, to carry out the declared purpose of the supporters' club to help the football club. I do not understand the use in this connexion of these words "incidental" and "ancillary"; I think "additional" would have been a better word.

Section 21 of the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934, declares all lotteries to be unlawful, and section 24 exempts private lotteries, which means a lottery "promoted for, and in which the "sale of tickets or chances by the promoters is confined to, "either—(a) members of one society established and conducted "for purposes not connected with gaming, wagering or lotteries; "or (b) persons all of whom work on the same premises; or "(c) persons all of whom reside on the same premises." I need not trouble about (b) and (c). On the facts shown by the case this was a society conducted for purposes connected with lotteries. Where Parliament uses two words, as here, "established" and "conducted," I think Parliament intended to convey two separate meanings. A society may be established for one purpose and conducted for another. This society was established to help the football club financially. It was conducted for a purpose connected with lotteries. I think frequency is an important feature. Here there was a weekly lottery. If frequency is not to be regarded there would seem to be nothing to prevent a society established for other purposes adding to and probably vastly increasing its funds by daily lotteries on the results of racing events or other chances. If scale is not to be regarded, there would seem to be nothing to prevent a society established for other purposes adding to and probably vastly increasing its funds by attracting many thousands of people who, on a nominal payment, could belong to the society and would then indulge in participation in a lottery which had a prize fund amounting to 60 per cent. of the net receipts.

In the present case, the respondents formed a sub-committee which conducted these lotteries. Such sub-committee, having organized the printing and sale of the tickets, checked the returns, sorted the results and worked out and distributed the prize moneys. The supporters' club was being conducted for purposes connected with a lottery. It is not, in my opinion, necessary that it should be the sole purpose of the supporters' club. I think it was at the material times its main purpose, and indeed the result was to pay over to the football club a sum of money which was larger than the sum of money which came from all the other efforts combined; it was whist drives and the other activities which were incidental and ancillary to the lotteries, if those words are to be used.

I think on the facts found in the case stated, quarter sessions arrived at a wrong conclusion in law, and they should have upheld the convictions by the justices. There is no magic about this being a supporters' club or a football club or any other club engaged in sport or games. If the respondents are within the law then a society formed for any purpose, political, social or otherwise, provided it is not an illegal purpose, can have a supporters' club to collect funds for it, and that supporters' club can conduct weekly lotteries along with some dances and whist drives, and make those lotteries its main method of collecting these funds and attract an enormous membership on a merely nominal subscription, and the lucky members who have bought one or two tickets can share a big percentage of the net money return on the sale of tickets in the lotteries and a smaller percentage can be given to the society and yet it would have to be held that the supporters' club was conducted for purposes not connected with lotteries. If that be so, then there is nothing to prevent such a club from running a gaming or wagering establishment as well as handing over the proceeds of the society, and section 24 (1) becomes a nullity. I do not believe that that was the intention of the legislature. I do not believe that that is the construction that has to be put on the Act.

I agree that this appeal succeeds, and I agree with what my Lord has said about these convictions having to be restored.

DEVLIN J. The Torquay United Supporters' Club has existed for over 30 years and its object, as its name indicates, is to support the Torquay United Football Club. The football club could not carry on if it had to rely simply on gate-money. The supporters' club helps it in two ways, first by giving unpaid labour for the maintenance of the ground, by the provision of gatemen and stewards and by discharging other similar duties; and secondly, by raising money. Money is raised by a number of social activities, such as dances, whist drives and so forth, and recently the supporters' club has taken to raising additional money by means of weekly lotteries. By activities other than lotteries the supporters' club had previously succeeded in raising enough money to hand over to the football club about £2,000 per annum. This left an annual deficit of more than twice that amount, and by means of the weekly lotteries the club has raised enough money to hand over to the football club about £90 a week to cover this deficit. The club has over 7,000 members but only 5,000 tickets are issued for each lottery, as these produce enough to raise the amount required for the deficit. A member may take more than one ticket, and in fact only about one-third of the members participate in each lottery.

The question to be determined is whether in these circumstances the supporters' club is "conducted for purposes not "connected with gaming, wagering or lotteries" within the meaning of section 24 (1) (a) of the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934. The Torquay magistrates thought that it was not so conducted and they convicted the respondents. The Appeal

1954

MAYNARD v. WILLIAMS.

Devlin J.

Committee of the Devon Quarter Sessions allowed the appeal and stated a case for the opinion of this court.

There is no doubt that the supporters' club now raises a large proportion of its funds, about two-thirds, by holding regular lotteries. Does this mean that one of the purposes for which the society is conducted is the holding of lotteries? Very few societies exist merely for the purpose of raising funds; the raising of funds is done in pursuance of one or more of the society's objects. On the other hand, very few societies exist for purposes, the furtherance of which does not require the provision of funds. Mr. Foot argues that the raising of funds is not by itself one of the purposes of this club, and that because it raises funds so as to further its true purposes, the raising of the fund is not in itself to be described as a purpose. He concedes, however, that a society might adopt a particular means of raising funds, such as a lottery, on such a scale that the means dwarfed the ends, with the result that the holding of the lottery became one of the purposes for which the society was conducted.

The Solicitor-General does not accept this distinction between means and purposes. He does not submit that the mere fact that some part of the funds is raised by means of a lottery is of itself enough to constitute "a purpose," but he says that it becomes a purpose if it is done on a sufficient scale to form part of the society's business. It is, he says, a matter of degree and in determining the question one must look at all the circumstances. In this case he relies on the regularity and frequency with which lotteries are now held and the large amount of money which they now raise. Questions of degree are, he concedes, primarily questions of fact for the Appeal Committee to determine, but he submits that in this case the raising of funds by means of lotteries is so considerable that no magistrates who directed their minds to the proper question could rightly come to any other conclusion than that it is one of the purposes for which the society is now being conducted.

Part II of the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934, begins with section 21 which, subject to the provisions thereafter set out in Part II, makes all lotteries unlawful. The exemptions from this general provision are contained in sections 23 and 24 and from their nature it is apparent that, while Parliament intended to prohibit entirely any large lotteries open to the public generally, it did not intend to prohibit small lotteries restricted to groups of people, provided they were conducted in accordance with a number of specified conditions. Section 23 exempts small lotteries which are promoted as an incident of certain entertainments such as bazaars, sales of work, etc. Section 24 exempts private lotteries, and the question in this case is whether the lottery falls within the definition of a private lottery in subsection (1). This subsection defines three classes of private lottery, and there is a common element in each definition, that common element being the limitation of the sale of tickets to a limited group of persons. Two of these groups are very simply described and are easily identifiable because the nexus is physical in character. The former consists of persons who work on the same premises, and the latter of persons who reside on the same premises. A common place of employment or a common residence are the factors which respectively unite these groups. The remaining group—the first to be specified—is " members of one " society." Here the nexus is mental and not physical. People do not belong to one society unless the society is formed for a common purpose or purposes. The common purpose is thus the factor which unites the members of this group.

But the terms of the definition are not restricted to " members " of one society." If they were, there would be an easy means of evasion. Societies would be formed for the common purpose of holding lotteries. That would produce an absurd result and the Act uses words to exclude it; the words are wide. If an expressed purpose of the society were to hold lotteries, naturally it would stand condemned; but if the objects are tainted by any such purpose, likewise it is condemned. So the respondents are required to show that their purposes are " not connected with " gaming, wagering or lotteries."

Another possible evasion that Parliament has foreseen is that a society might be formed for one purpose and conducted for another. The original purpose might be lost sight of or become a façade for some other purpose. The society's affairs might be so conducted that a new purpose not contained in its original objects grows up and becomes one of the purposes of the society. Therefore the Act uses the phrase " established and conducted." The respondents must show that their society is neither established nor conducted for a tainted purpose.

This reference to the conduct of the society naturally leads to an inquiry into what it is doing. Its objects are to be judged not merely by the aims which it declares upon establishment but also by its deeds. But its deeds are to be scrutinised only in order to see what light they throw upon the purpose of the association. One must not lose sight of the fact that the object of this definition is not to forbid a course of conduct but to define a group. If the group comes within the subsection it may hold as many lotteries as it likes. If the lottery is a private lottery—the word " private " is I think used to show that the distinction to be emphasised is concerned primarily with character and not with size—the Act imposes no limitation on the amount of money which the lottery raises or on the frequency with which it is held. This is clearly shown by reference to the other groups within the subsection whose definition is beyond doubt. Thus there may be a large number of people working on the same premises, I suppose many hundreds work in this building where we are now sitting. Such people may form a committee to organize lotteries and may hold lotteries as often as they like, raise any amount of money they like and do what they like with the money. The conduct of their affairs is unrestricted. It is indeed irrelevant to inquire how they conduct themselves, so long as they observe the special conditions. It is worth noting that under section 24 the condition which forbids the sending of tickets through the post must of itself be restrictive of size. But the inquiry into "conduct" under section 24 is relevant only if it throws light on the bond of purpose which unites the members.

1954

MAYNARD v. WILLIAMS.

Devlin J.

The Solicitor-General does not contend that this society was established for a tainted purpose. He submits that it is now conducted for such a purpose. I think that a misconstruction of the word "conducted" in the section leads to a fallacy underlying the Solicitor-General's argument. The question is not whether the society conducts lotteries, nor even whether it conducts a business consisting largely of lotteries, but whether its affairs are so conducted that the untainted purposes for which it was established have either been overthrown or joined by a tainted purpose. Of course, in one sense every time the club holds a lottery it might be said to be conducting itself for the purpose of holding a lottery. If this were the right test of purpose, it would make nonsense of the definition, for it would be impossible to hold a lottery and remain within it. What the subsection refers to is not these smaller purposes which govern the doing of the individual act but the larger purposes which unite the members of the society. No doubt each activity of the society, whether it be a lottery, a whist drive or cutting the grass, is done with the immediate purpose of doing the act itself. In that sense you may say that the society has as many purposes as it has activities. But if a measurement of its activities had been intended as the test, it would have been a simple matter to have phrased the definition as one which covered any society which held enough lotteries to amount to a substantial part of its activities, and exempted only those which held occasional lotteries. That sort of test is contemplated by section 23, where one of the conditions (subsection (2) (d)) provides that "the "facilities for participating in lotteries shall not be the only, or "the only substantial, inducement to persons to attend the "entertainment." No doubt the word "conducted" in section 24, if taken by itself, might suggest that what one has to look at is what the society is doing, and not what the society is aiming at. But on the true construction of the section, I think that the word "conducted" is used in order to broaden the word "established." What has to be considered is not the immediate purpose of the act but the purpose of the association. The conduct of the society is material only if it effects a change in the purposes for which the society was established.

If this construction is right, then the matter which the magistrates have to inquire into is whether the holding of lotteries has joined the proclaimed objects of the society as one of its purposes. That such a thing may happen is illustrated by Pearse v. Hart [2] which this court decided earlier this week. In that case a supporters' club, similar to the one we are now considering, started holding lotteries in January, 1953. It had then 1,400 members. Within six months its membership rose to 12,500. It is only reasonable to suppose that the vast majority of these new members were attracted solely by the idea of joining in the lotteries. If the magistrates thought that 80 or 90 per cent. of the members had joined the society without any particular sympathy for its proclaimed objects, but with the object of having a flutter, they would manifestly be entitled to find that the holding of lotteries had become one of the common purposes which held the members together. Whether or not it had become one of the society's purposes is a question of fact; and there was certainly in that case ample evidence on which the magistrates could so hold.

In the present case the appeal committee have, I think, applied their mind to the right question. It would perhaps have been better if they had expressed their finding in the terms which the Act uses and had found specifically that none of the purposes for which the club was established or conducted was connected with gaming, wagering or lotteries. I have noted before that justices seem reluctant to express their findings of fact in the express terms which the Act specifies, perhaps because they fear that they may be thought to be deciding the point of law which is being submitted to the court. They might consider employing the formula much used in commercial arbitrations: "In so far as it is a question of fact we find, and in so far as it "is a question of law we hold, etc." That leaves it to the superior court to decide what is fact and what is law, but also leaves the superior court in no doubt, if it turns out to be a question of fact, about the conclusion of the justices on it. Here the appeal committee has expressed the opinion "that the "running of the lottery was only incidental and ancillary to "the other methods and enterprises used by the supporters' "club to carry out its declared purpose of helping the "football club." I think this finding shows that they have applied what I believe to be the right test. They have distinguished between purposes and the means adopted for the carrying out of such purposes, and they have held in effect that the raising of money by lottery is only one of the means and has not changed the purposes for which the club was established. I think that this is a conclusion which they could reasonably reach on the evidence, and it is a question of fact for them. The holding of lotteries now forms a substantial part of the club's activities, but I am unable to say that as a matter of law it had grown to such

[2] p. 67, post.

1954

MAYNARD v. WILLIAMS.

Devlin J.

overwhelming proportions that the appeal committee could only hold that it had become one of the purposes of the association.

A failure to distinguish between purposes and means leads to difficulties which are inherent in the Solicitor-General's argument. Is the raising of funds per se one of the purposes of the club? I can understand an argument that it is. I can follow an argument that if a club has a number of objects and those objects require the raising of money, then the raising of money for those objects must itself become one of the purposes of the club. But then if the raising of funds is one of the purposes of the society, and the raising of funds is "connected with . . . "lotteries," the society is outside the subsection. The raising of funds would be connected with lotteries (the words are extremely wide) if any part of the funds was raised by lotteries. This would mean that a single lottery held for the purpose of raising funds would take the society outside the subsection. The Solicitor-General shrinks from this conclusion. But if this conclusion is not accepted, it can only be because for the purposes of this subsection the raising of funds for the society's objects is not to be regarded as one of the purposes of the society but only as a means for achieving its purpose. Of course the means may grow so great as to swamp the ends: the holding of the lotteries may be indulged in on such a scale as to be no longer a means of raising money but an end in itself. But that is simply to express in other words the test I have already applied.

I can see no warranty in the Act for any half-way house or for saying that it is all right to hold an annual or quarterly or maybe a monthly lottery, but not to hold a weekly one; or that it is all right to raise, say, 10 per cent. of the society's funds by means of a lottery but not to raise 50 per cent. or more. The definition is not in my view, as I have already said, concerned with limiting the frequency or size of lotteries, but simply with ascertaining the nature of the common bond defining the group within which the sale of tickets is to be confined.

For these reasons, I think that the decision of quarter sessions was right and I would uphold it.

Appeals allowed.
Convictions restored.

Solicitors: The Director of Public Prosecutions; Arthur & Co.

C. J. E.

NOTE.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* PEARSE AND OTHERS v. HART.

1954
Dec. 14.

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Devlin JJ.

Gaming — Lottery — "Private lottery" — Supporters' club of football club—Money raised by various means including weekly lotteries— Whether club "conducted for purposes not connected with . . . "lotteries"—Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934 (24 & 25 Geo. 5, c. 58), s. 24 (1).

CASE STATED by Gloucester justices.

Informations were preferred by the respondent, William Hart, against the first and second appellants, Norman Sidney Pearse and Albert Francis Gerald Leach, charging them with unlawfully selling on April 10 and 17, 1954, a ticket in a lottery known as the Gloucester City Association Football Club Supporters' Club Private Lottery Competition contrary to section 22 (1) (b) of the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934, and against the third appellants, Hempsted Press (Gloucester) Ld., charging them with unlawfully printing tickets for use in the lottery contrary to section 22 (1) (a).

At the hearing of the informations the justices found the following facts. The first and second appellants had each sold to persons who were members of the Gloucester City Association Football Club Supporters' Club tickets in a lottery promoted by certain members of the supporters' club, which had been printed by the third appellants. The supporters' club was established in 1936 for purposes not connected with gaming, wagering or lotteries. Its members assisted at the ground of the Gloucester City Association Football Club, supported the matches of the football club and organized social activities. In 1939 the membership was between 400 and 500 members and during the war the supporters' club continued its activities on a reduced scale. In 1948 the supporters' club had 1,000 members. Members assisted at the football club's ground. They organized dances, whist drives, variety shows, dinners, social evenings and a pantomime, and the proceeds were donated to the football club and other local bodies connected with sport. In April, 1954, the supporters' club had over 16,000 members. Each member paid an annual subscription of 1s. to the supporters' club. The objects of the club were set out in rule 2 of the rules of the club and were: (a) to promote among the citizens of Gloucester and the neighbouring district the furtherance of association football and to foster a common interest in and support for it and to further the interest, existence and future of the Gloucester football club; (b) to encourage athleticism particularly among the young people and make grants for that purpose; (c) to provide funds to support the football club; (d) to provide funds to support the football club for various particularized purposes and any object which would, in the opinion of the football club, promote its activities and welfare; (e) to provide facilities to enable members of the club to attend away matches; (f) to promote social activities among members of the club; (g) to acquire premises for the use of the supporters' club.

The governing body of the supporters' club was the executive committee and there were a number of sub-committees to organize various activities including the competition committee which was wholly and solely concerned with running the lottery competition. The members of the supporters' club assisted at the football club ground in various ways and provided transport for away matches. In February, 1954, the supporters' club acquired certain premises where they organized various social activities and where the club's committees met each week. In January, 1953, the supporters' club commenced a lottery called the Gloucester City Association Football Club Supporters' Club Private Lottery Competition in which the sale of tickets was confined to members of the supporters' club. The annual membership fee for the lottery competition was 1s. At the end of 1952 the membership of the supporters' club was about 1,400 but by June, 1953, the membership had risen to 12,500. After deducting expenses incurred for printing and stationery, 75 per cent. of the proceeds of the lottery was devoted to the provision of prizes in the lottery and 25 per cent. to the purposes of the supporters' club set out in the rules of the club. On April 10, 1954, 14,784 chances were sold and on April 17, 14,726 were sold. Without taking into account the results of the lottery the provisional accounts for the supporters' club for the current year showed an estimated income of £2,920. For 1953 the proceeds of the lottery amounted to about £34,000, of which 25 per cent. was £8,600. None of the conditions required by section 24 (2) to be observed in connexion with promotion and conduct of a "private lottery" had been broken.

1954

PEARSE v. HART.

It was contended by the appellants that the lottery was one which by virtue of the provisions of section 24 was deemed not to be unlawful since the supporters' club was a society established and conducted for purposes not connected with gaming, wagering and lotteries. The promotion of the lottery was not a purpose of the supporters' club within the meaning of section 24 (1). Alternatively, if it were held that the club was conducted for a purpose connected with a lottery, it was contended that as the club was a society established and conducted also for purposes not connected with gaming, wagering or lotteries, it was entitled to the exemption under section 24.

It was contended by the respondent that section 24 contemplated small and occasional and not substantial and regular lotteries. The lottery competition, because of its regularity, substance and the disproportionately large income derived from it compared with other sources, had become one of the purposes for which the club was conducted and accordingly the club was not entitled to the exemption claimed under section 24 and therefore the lottery was unlawful.

The justices were of the opinion that the lottery competition was not a lottery within section 24 (1) (a) and found the appellants Guilty.

Harold Heathcote-Williams Q.C. and Christopher Priday for the appellants.

Sir Harry Hylton-Foster Q.C., S.-G., Rodger Winn and Paul Wrightson for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD C.J. In 1934, Parliament passed the Betting and Lotteries Act and by section 21 Parliament declared "Subject to the "provisions of this Part of this Act, all lotteries are unlawful."

On all these matters people differ profoundly in their views whether or not the restrictions put by law on these things are justified or unjustified, whether the objects of lotteries and so forth are good or bad, but we have nothing to do with that. We have only to apply the law as Parliament has laid it down and Parliament made two exceptions with regard to lotteries. One exception provided for in section 23 with which we are not directly concerned today, is with regard to what were called small lotteries and which, it is quite obvious from the wording of the Act, were intended to deal with what I may call the ordinary bazaar raffle. The other section, section 24, is no doubt more difficult. [His Lordship read section 24 (1) and continued:] We have to see whether the lottery is confined to "members of one

"society established and conducted for purposes not connected with "gaming, wagering or lotteries," and I find nothing in this section—I say this, although this will be more material to the other case in which we have reserved judgment [1]—about the lottery being incidental or ancillary.

The lottery in question in the present case was connected with a football club at Gloucester. It would be idle for any member of this court to pretend that he does not know that great numbers of clubs are running lotteries in connexion with football clubs or other clubs. Apparently the way that the matter begins is that there is an organization called "Supporters of the Football Club" which is so far as Gloucester is concerned—the case does not tell us but I imagine this is so—a professional club; but whether it is a professional club or an amateur club I think makes no difference. I have no doubt that the supporters or I believe the technical expression in football circles is "fans," who go to the matches of the club and watch the twenty-two gladiators on the field are very anxious that the club should be supported because otherwise their Saturday afternoon amusement would suffer. So the football club supporters' club—almost a club within a club—is formed and the one at Gloucester goes in for looking after the ground, organising social activities which consist of dances, whist drives, variety shows, dinners, social evenings and a pantomime, so it is a very active club. But to get money it seems that they have to rely very largely on running lotteries because it is found that you pay one shilling to become a member of the supporters' club and then if you like to pay another shilling you qualify for entering lottery competitions. The lottery competitions seem very popular with the people of Gloucester because the numbers of the supporters' club, at first 1,400, very quickly rose to 12,500; and after deducting the expenses incurred for printing and stationery "the proceeds of the lottery are devoted as to seventy-five per cent. "to the provision of prizes in the lottery and as to twenty-five per cent. "to the purposes of the supporters' club set out in rule 2 of the rules "of the club." In April there were 14,784 chances sold the first week and the next following week, 14,726 chances were sold. So the matter went on and the police who considered it to be their duty to prosecute—and of course it is the duty of the police to prosecute whether they sympathize with the objects or not and no one suggests that this lottery was otherwise than honestly held—brought the matter before the justices. The justices came to the conclusion that it was an unlawful lottery because the defendants had not shown that it was a private lottery.

The reason why the justices were justified in coming to that conclusion was because on the facts they found that it was quite impossible to say, although it was only members of one society who could take tickets, that the club was not conducted for a purpose connected with lotteries; it was their way of raising money because, as I have said, there was first of all a club and then a separate club within a club, at any rate a department of it because one paid an extra shilling for membership of the lottery competition.

I do not propose to go all through the facts in this case because it is very largely a question of fact. It is a question of fact provided a proper reading is given to the section and the justices apply their minds and direct themselves correctly as to what the section means. I do not think that because the club no doubt supports other activities that affects the matter at all. It is not a question whether the club has one purpose and one purpose only. The club may have a variety of purposes. I have no doubt that the supporters' club had, but if

[1] Maynard v. Williams (p. 54, ante).

1954

PEARSE v. HART.

Lord Goddard C.J.

one of their purposes is connected with lotteries, it seems to me that it ceases to be a private lottery and is, therefore, not exempted from section 21 of the Act which says that all lotteries are unlawful. I repeat that there is no suggestion here that the lottery was run for improper purposes, still less that it was not properly run, but that is not a matter with which this court is concerned any more than the justices were concerned. The simple question is whether the defendants who were the promoters of the lottery can manage to bring themselves within the exemption contained in section 24 because it gives a defence. It takes a certain class of lottery outside the Act. It is for them to prove that and they have not proved it. The justices were amply justified in coming to the conclusion they did and in the present case I do not think that they could have come to any other decision.

For these reasons the appeal is dismissed.

CASSELS J. I agree. It was in 1936 that this supporters' club was founded. It had a few hundred members. It struggled through the war period. It had reached a membership of 1,400 by the end of 1942. In January of 1953 the supporters' club commenced a lottery called "the Gloucester City Association Football Club Supporters' Club "Private Lottery Competition" and as soon as that was started the membership jumped from 1,400 to 12,500 and that was what it was by the month of June of 1953. The amount of money which passed, through the lottery competition part of the supporters' club's activities, was considerable and the benefit to the football club was also considerable.

The question which the justices had to decide in this case was whether section 24 (1) of the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934, exempted this body from the offence of running a lottery and coming within section 21 of the Act which declares all lotteries to be unlawful. The justices came to the conclusion that this was a society conducted for purposes connected with gaming, wagering or lotteries. There was ample evidence to support their finding to that effect. I think this is quite clearly a case in which this particular supporters' club with a very long name has for one of its purposes the running of a lottery and, therefore, they come within the mischief of the Act, they were properly convicted and I think this appeal must be dismissed.

DEVLIN J. The meaning and effect of section 24 of the Betting and Lotteries Act, 1934, is one of the matters which the court will consider in the case in which it has reserved judgment [2] and, therefore, all that I think it is necessary to say in the present case is this: that even if the construction most favourable to the appellants were adopted, there would still be ample evidence to justify the conclusion of the justices that one of the purposes for which this society was conducted is connected with gaming, wagering or lotteries. Accordingly I agree that the question stated in the case should be answered in the affirmative and that the convictions should be upheld.

Appeal dismissed.
Convictions upheld.

Solicitors: Devonshire & Co. for Bretherton & Sons, Gloucester; Director of Public Prosecutions.

C. J. E.

[2] Maynard v. Williams (p. 54, ante).

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* JARVIS v. WILLIAMS.

C. A.

1954
Dec. 13, 14.

[1951 J. 6218.]

Evershed M.R., Birkett and Romer L.JJ.

Detinue—Plaintiff's property in goods—Immediate right to possession—Contractual right—Goods sold and delivered—In possession of third party—Agreement between buyer and seller for return—Whether seller entitled to sue third party in detinue.

In January, 1948, J. delivered bathroom fittings to W. at P.'s request. P. did not pay for them and in September, 1949, it was agreed, between J. and P., that J. should take back the goods, collecting them from W. at P.'s expense. W., however, refused to deliver up the goods to J. J. claimed in detinue against W. for the return of the goods:—

Held, that J. could not maintain an action in detinue against W. since the property in the goods, which had passed to P. on delivery to W. at P.'s request, had remained vested in P., notwithstanding the agreement that J. should recover the goods.

APPEAL from Judge Glazebrook sitting at Tonbridge County Court.

In 1947, one Paterson ordered from the plaintiff, Jarvis, bathroom fittings at a price of £72 15s. and in January, 1948, he requested the plaintiff to deliver them to the defendant, Williams of Tottingworth Park, Heathfield, Sussex. In May, 1949, the goods had not been paid for and were still lying at the defendant's premises. The plaintiff wrote to Paterson saying that he would be prepared to take the goods back if Paterson was prepared to pay the cost of collection. Paterson did not reply and the plaintiff wrote a second letter to which Paterson replied on September 14, 1949, saying "I had the impression "that you had collected long ago, but as you evidently have not "will you kindly do so, and I agree to pay the cost of collection." On receipt of the letter the plaintiff sent his lorryman, one Sands, with the letter to the defendant to collect the goods, but he was informed that he could not take the fittings away. Two years later, in 1951, the plaintiff commenced proceedings in the High Court against Paterson claiming £72 15s. for goods sold and delivered. He joined Williams as defendant claiming against him in detinue for the return of the goods and further or alternatively damages for detention of the goods. He then discontinued the proceedings against Paterson and brought the present proceedings against the defendant in the county court. The county court judge held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover against the defendant. The defendant appealed.

The facts are more fully stated in the judgment of Evershed M.R.

G. B. M. Reed for the defendant.
J. H. S. Elliott for the plaintiff.

C. A.
1954
JARVIS
v.
WILLIAMS.

In addition to the case referred to in the judgments the following cases were cited in argument: Emanuel v. Dane [1]; Gordon v. Harper.[2]

EVERSHED M.R. The action which now comes before us on appeal appears originally to have been an action brought in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court by the plaintiff Jarvis against one Paterson, and was for the sum of £72 15s. for goods sold and delivered. The items are set out in the special indorsement on the writ, and I will refer to them hereafter as bathroom fittings. That writ was issued in October, 1951, some four years or more after the date of the original alleged sale, so that it is not surprising if some of the facts are a little obscure. However that may be, the later history of the proceedings was that the plaintiff joined as a defendant one Williams, the present defendant, and as against him claimed in detinue for the return of the goods with, further or alternatively, damages for detention of the same goods. At or about the time that Williams was joined, I understand that the plaintiff discontinued the proceedings against Paterson.

The only question which arises here is whether the plaintiff has a good cause of action in detinue against the defendant in respect of these goods. The judgment of the county court judge makes most of the matter plain; thus, as he points out in his judgment, the bathroom fittings in question which had been ordered by Paterson from the plaintiff, were delivered at Paterson's request not to his house, but to the premises of the defendant and there they remained for a considerable time.

In May, 1949, a question arose between the plaintiff and Paterson whether or not the plaintiff would take these goods back, and the plaintiff appears to have written to Paterson in May, 1949. That letter is not before us, and all we know of it is that, according to the plaintiff's affidavit when he sought to obtain summary judgment against Paterson on the original claim, he said: "I wrote to the defendant Paterson as to whether he "wished to retain the fittings, and, if not, I would, under the "circumstances, be prepared to take them back if he was pre-"pared to pay me for collection." It appears that that letter was unacknowledged, and that the plaintiff wrote again at the beginning of September in the same year. The second letter brought forth the reply which is set out in the county court judge's judgment. It was from Paterson to the plaintiff, dated September 14, 1949, and ran thus: "I am obliged for your "letter of September 9, and please accept my apologies for not "replying to yours of May 6, 1949. I had the impression that "you had collected long ago, but as you evidently have not will "you kindly do so, and I agree to pay the cost of collection."

[1] (1812) 3 Camp. 299.

[2] (1796) 7 T.R. 9.

On receipt of that letter the plaintiff sent his foreman or lorryman, one Sands, armed with the letter to the premises of the defendant. He, Sands, asked that the bathroom fittings should be delivered to him, but he was told by someone, who may, or may not, have been Mrs. Williams, that he could not take the bathroom fittings away, and so he left empty-handed. It was after that episode that the present proceedings started; though the plaintiff, for some reason or another, allowed a period of some two years to elapse before he began the proceedings, and it was another three years before eventually they were tried in the county court.

The first question is, what was the effect of the arrangement made as a result of the letter of September 14, 1949? The two letters therein referred to are not before the court but the judge said that he had some evidence from the plaintiff which explained the terms of the letter, and he concluded first (and Mr. Elliott for the plaintiff relied strongly on this) that the effect of the arrangement was: "I, the plaintiff, agree to take the fittings "back; he (that is Paterson) to pay the carriage." After stating the subsequent narrative which I have stated, the judge said: "It is clear to me that the arrangement of 1949 to take the "goods back never transferred the property back to the plaintiff. "It remained in Paterson because the plaintiff in fact never got "the goods back, and never intended the property to revert "until he got them back. This is confirmed by the writ for the "price of goods sold and delivered." I think that the county court judge was quite right in that conclusion.

Mr. Elliott submitted that the question was really one of fact, and was determined in his favour by the brief statement by the judge of the effect of the arrangement. The question, in my view, which is one of mixed fact and law, if not, indeed, really of law, is what was the effect of this arrangement as regards the vesting or revesting of the property in these fittings? There is no doubt (at least I so assume as we have heard no argument to the contrary), that when these fittings were first delivered at Paterson's request to the defendant's house, the property in them, as on an ordinary sale of specific goods, passed to Paterson, and he became liable to pay their price accordingly. The question is whether this vague arrangement of 1949 revested the property in the plaintiff? Mr. Elliott referred to section 18 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. I am not satisfied that the transaction of 1949 could properly be described in any circumstances as a sale of goods. But even if the rules in that section were applicable, they are expressed to be subject to the formula "unless a different intention appears." If Mr. Elliott is right it seems to me, that it would follow from the revesting of the property in the plaintiff, eo instanti, on the receipt of the letter of September 14, that Paterson ceased to be liable for the price of those goods. The most that he would be liable for, on this view, would be for a breach of the contract or bargain for putting

C. A.
1954
JARVIS
v.
WILLIAMS.
Evershed M.R.

an end to the original sale when his agent the defendant refused to permit the plaintiff to re-collect the goods. In my judgment, that argument cannot be sustained, nor can I attach any significance to the statement made by the plaintiff in the course of his evidence: "I say the goods are mine because of this letter "from Paterson accepting my offer" (meaning the letter of September 14, 1949). The plaintiff was answering questions in cross-examination, and no doubt stated in answer to counsel's suggestion what his case was. I observe, indeed, that in answer to the judge he said later: "When the arrangement with Pater-"son that I should collect the goods came to nothing, I suppose "the goods still remained goods sold to him which he had not "paid for"; so there he is stating an opposite view of the legal consequences of the arrangement. However I am of opinion that the county court judge rightly interpreted the arrangement made and its essential character.

That, however, leaves the question, which the judge decided in favour of the plaintiff, whether at the date of the demand, which I take to be the demand by Sands when he called at the defendant's house, the plaintiff was entitled to sustain an action for detinue in respect of these goods against the defendant. The relevant part of the county court judge's judgment is to this effect: "But the plaintiff says that detinue can be brought by "anyone entitled to possession. Counsel for the defendant put "up a number of defences to that. It is clear that under the "agreement the plaintiff was entitled to these goods. True, it "was all done very informally." After referring to the call of Sands at the defendant's house the county court judge proceeded: "Therefore the villain of this piece is Paterson who owes both "the plaintiff and the defendant money: there are some merits "in the plaintiff, but it is not a question of merits at all, but a "legal question. The plaintiff is entitled to recover the goods "or their value, and if they have deteriorated, damages for their "detention."

I take that to mean that the contractual right which the plaintiff had vis-à-vis Paterson to go and collect these goods from Paterson's agent was a right of a sufficient character to enable the plaintiff to bring an action in detinue against the agent of the owner of the property in these goods. But, with all respect to the county court judge, I am unable to accept that as a good proposition of law. Certain classes of persons, as for example bailees, have, no doubt, a special right to sustain actions in trover and detinue, but the general rule is, I think, correctly stated in the text of Halsbury's Laws of England, 2nd ed., vol. 33 at p. 62, para. 98. "In order to maintain an action of trover or detinue, "a person must have the right of possession and a right of "property in the goods at the time of the conversion or detention; "and he cannot sue if he has parted with the property in the "goods at the time of the alleged conversion, or if at the time of " the alleged conversion his title to the goods has been divested " by a disposition which is valid under the Factors Act, 1889."

The point arose in this court in Rosenthal v. Alderton & Sons Ld.[1] The question there was, whether the value of goods, which had disappeared, ought to be ascertained, for the purpose of giving to the successful plaintiff damages for their wrongful detention, as at the date of the detention or as at the date of the judgment. No such question, of course, arises here. But in the course of the judgment of the court in that case, it is stated[2]: " It is further to " be noted that the action of detinue was essentially a proprietary " action implying property in the plaintiff in the goods claimed," and then a reference is made to Viner's Abridgment vol. 8, p. 23 and Holdsworth, History of English Law, vol. 7, pp. 438 and 439. " It was, and still is, of the essence of an action of detinue " that the plaintiff maintains and asserts his property in the goods " claimed. . . ."

Although it is, no doubt, true in a sense, and certainly in its original medieval conception, that when speaking of property in chattels there is in mind the right to their immediate possession, nevertheless the sense of property in chattels is now well understood. It is involved in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, itself. Even though, by contract between himself and Paterson, the plaintiff may have had a right which, if infringed, could form the subject-matter of an action for breach of contract, and though he had a right to go and possess himself of these goods, nevertheless, until he has done so, there was in him according to my contruction of the arrangement, no proprietary interest in the goods, in the sense in which that term is now, as I think, commonly understood. It seems to me therefore, that he had not, on the authorities which I have mentioned, the necessary foundation on which to sustain an action for detinue against the defendant. He, no doubt, could sue Paterson either for the price of the goods or for damages or for damages for breach of this arrangement for the return of the goods when the defendant refused to deliver them over. But I think that the rights of the plaintiff as regards these goods were not such as entitled him to bring an action in detinue against the defendant, in whose possession they were, as agent, at the time, of the person in whom the property in the goods was then vested.

For these reasons I think that this appeal must be allowed and that the action against the defendant should have been dismissed.

BIRKETT L.J. I am of the same opinion. My Lord has dealt with both points fully. One was the construction of the letter of September 14, 1949—whether or not that letter revested the goods in the plaintiff, and the second question, if it did not, did

[1] [1946] K.B. 374; 62 T.L.R. 236; [1946] 1 All E.R. 583.

[2] [1946] K.B. 374, 377.

C. A.

1954

JARVIS v. WILLIAMS.

that letter, or the arrangement then made, give to the plaintiff a contractual right to collect the goods or a sufficient proprietary interest for him to maintain or to sustain an action in detinue? I agree with the judgment of my Lord on both points.

ROMER L.J. I also agree and I propose to add nothing, notwithstanding that we are differing from the county court judge.

Appeal allowed with costs.
Action dismissed with costs on scale 3.

Solicitors: Powell, Skues & Graham Smith for J. E. Rodgers & Pembroke, Bexhill-on-Sea. Simmons and Simmons for Sprott and Sons, Tunbridge Wells.

E. D.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1954
Dec. 17, 20.

Denning, Morris and Parker L.JJ.

*DANIELS v. FORD MOTOR CO. LD.

[1953 D. No. 1158.]

Factory—Eyes—Protection—Provision of goggles or effective screens—"Suitable"—Fettling process involving special risk of eye injury—Misting of goggles—Duty of employers—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 67), s. 49—Protection of Eyes Regulations, 1938 (S.R. & O. 1938, No. 654), Sch.

The plaintiff, while engaged in the defendants' factory in fettling—a process specified by regulations as involving special risk to the eyes and therefore one for which section 49 of the Factories Act, 1937, required that suitable goggles should be provided to protect the eyes of persons employed on it—was wearing goggles provided by the defendants. The lenses having misted over he pulled the goggles away from his nose sufficiently to insert his finger and thumb to cleanse the lenses, and while he was so doing a bit of metal entered his right eye and caused injury. He claimed damages from the defendants, alleging a breach by them of their statutory duty:—

Held, that section 49 [1] did not impose on employers an absolute duty to provide goggles which would ensure full protection for the eyes, and that the defendants, having provided goggles which while in use were suitable to protect the eyes, were not in breach of the section.

Decision of Finnemore J. reversed.

APPEAL from Finnemore J.

The plaintiff Daniels was at the time in question employed

[1] Factories Act, 1937, s. 49: "Protection of eyes in certain processes. In the case of any such process as may be specified by regulations of the Secretary of State, being a process which involves a special risk of injury to the eyes from particles or fragments thrown off in the course of the process, suitable goggles or effective screens shall, in accordance with any directions given by the regulations, be provided to protect the eyes of the persons employed in the process."

in the "knockout" department of the defendants' factory at Dagenham. He, with others, was engaged in fettling, a process in which there is admittedly considerable risk of injury to the eyes and accordingly section 49 of the Factories Act, 1937, applied and the defendant employers were under a duty to provide the plaintiff with "suitable goggles . . . to protect the eyes." The defendants had in fact provided several types of goggles and the plaintiff was wearing goggles which, though said to be favoured by the workmen, had the defect of misting over. When this happened the plaintiff pulled the goggles an inch or two away from his nose for the purpose of cleaning the lenses with his finger and thumb, and unfortunately a bit of metal, presumably knocked off by a fellow-workman, entered his right eye, causing injury, for which he claimed damages from the defendants.

Finnemore J. held in effect that section 49 imposed an absolute duty and that the defendants were in breach of that statutory duty, because although, as he found, they had given very careful consideration to the problem, they had not provided a perfect set of goggles which afforded full protection to the eyes. He awarded the plaintiff damages.

The defendants appealed.

F. W. Beney Q.C. and Bernard Caulfield for the defendants.

R. Marven Everett Q.C. and D. P. Croom-Johnson for the plaintiff.

DENNING L.J. I will ask Parker L.J. to give the first judgment.

PARKER L.J. This is an appeal by the Ford Motor Co. Ld. from a judgment of Finnemore J., given on October 28, 1954, awarding the plaintiff, who was an employee of theirs, damages for an eye injury which he suffered while at work. He was working at the time in what is called the "knockout" department at the defendants' factory at Dagenham, where castings are apparently brought along conveyor belts and have to be knocked out. Admittedly the plaintiff and the others working in that department were engaged in the process of fettling—a process in which there is a well-known risk of injury to the eye, not merely from sand and dust but from fragments of metal flying. It is one of the processes to which section 49 of the Factories Act, 1937, applies, and accordingly it became the duty of the defendants to provide the plaintiff (to use the words of the statute) with "suitable goggles . . . to protect the eyes."

On the day on which he met his accident the plaintiff was wearing goggles of a type which were referred to throughout the evidence as the "red" goggles. They were, however, apt (as indeed all goggles are, to some greater or less extent) to mist over, either from perspiration from the wearer or from condensation of the outside atmosphere, or, indeed, as one of the witnesses

C. A.
1954
DANIELS
v.
FORD MOTOR CO. LD.
Parker L.J.

said, by the wearer's breath. While at work on this day the goggles misted over and the plaintiff then pulled them an inch or two away from the nose (they being attached by an elastic to the back of the head) sufficiently to insert a finger and thumb and clean the lenses. Most unfortunately, on this occasion, although the goggles at the time they were pulled away must still have afforded some 90 per cent. protection, and although the man had his hands up there holding the goggles and cleaning the lenses, a bit of metal, knocked off by a fellow worker presumably, hit his right eye, causing injury, which happily turned out not to be serious.

The position with regard to these goggles is stated by the trial judge in the following way, which is abundantly borne out by the evidence: "I think the fair result of the evidence, first of all, is "this—and I think it ought to be said—that there is no doubt "at all that the Ford Motor Company have given very careful "consideration to this problem. They have considered all kinds "of goggles. They have had various kinds on display. They "offer to their workmen different sorts, so that each man, within "reasonable limits, can make his own choice. Everybody knows "that men can be extremely fussy about goggles. Not only have "the men had a measure of choice, but obviously from the "evidence of Mr. Thomas—nobody challenged it, or wished to "challenge it—inquiries have been made and tests have been "made and a considerable amount of attention and experiment "has been given to this matter by the defendant company, to "try to produce a perfect set of goggles. The result of it all is "that so far nobody has produced, so far as I can see, a perfect "set of goggles."

Mr. Thomas, who had been the safety officer of the Ford Motor Company for some 11 years, was quite clearly a witness who impressed the judge, who later in his judgment said: "Mr. "Thomas summarized admirably all the points which had to be "considered, whether you should use triplex safety glass or "whether you should use perspex, whether the sides should be "opaque, such as aluminium with holes in it, or gauze, or "perspex again, and points for and against these goggles were "paraded before me. I think the result is that whatever pair "of goggles in fact you adopt there are advantages and there "are disadvantages. It may well be that, in the result, the red "pair of goggles, which the Ford Motor Company say, in spite "of the other models they have had produced, are still preferred "by the great majority of their men who work in the foundry, "are as good and as useful a pair as has been produced."

Unfortunately, as I have said, one of the disadvantages of these red goggles is that apparently they are apt to mist over to some degree more than other goggles. On the other hand, they certainly have marked advantages for fettling over other goggles which can be obtained. One of the matters, apparently, that weighed with the defendants was that if one had merely gauze at the sides or openings which would allow considerable ventilation, there would be the grave disadvantage in that it would not afford adequate protection from flying metal. The judge, however, while at pains to point out that no sort of blame attached to the defendants, held that they were in breach of their statutory duty in that these goggles had to be rubbed clean from time to time and when this was being done they did not (as, indeed, this accident shows) afford full protection to the eyes. In other words, he has decided this case quite irrespective of any negligence or blame on the part of the defendants, but merely on the basis that the duty imposed by section 49 is an absolute duty.

It would indeed be a surprising result if employers who provided the most well-adapted goggles which the wit of man has so far produced should be guilty not only of a criminal offence but of a breach of a statutory duty. However, Mr. Everett, quite rightly, does not shrink from that and he points out that in many cases that result follows when considering other sections of the Act. He instances in particular Galashiels Gas Co. v. O'Donnell.[1] Speaking for myself, I do not think, however, that the words of section 49 drive one to such a drastic conclusion. Going by stages, "suitable" there, as Mr. Beney has pointed out, cannot mean "perfect." The word "suitable" is not apt to mean any such thing. It is a matter that can be comparative; something may be more suitable than something else. I think that in its context it must mean well-adapted for the process under consideration (because there are a number of different processes, involving different risks, albeit all to the eyes) and well adapted for the wearer in that they must fit him.

I think that the argument, if one stops there, would be quite untenable; but the words that follow must be read: the goggles are to be "suitable to protect the eyes"; and it has been urged —and I think that this influenced the trial judge—that that phrase is equivalent to and should be read as "suitable goggles "to ensure the protection of the eyes," or "suitable goggles that "will protect the eyes." Again I see no reason to read the phrase as a whole in any such sense. It seems to me that the words "to protect the eyes" are merely describing the end which is sought to be achieved by the provision of the goggles, and are not to be read as equivalent to ensuring protection. In other words, while the obligation to provide suitable goggles is quite clearly an absolute obligation, there is no absolute obligation that the goggles so provided shall ensure protection. In that respect the words are quite different from the words used in other sections of the Act which have been used to impose an absolute obligation —words such as "shall be securely fenced" in section 14.

Mr. Everett raised before this court a second point. He said that if he is wrong and that the section should be read as meaning that the duty is complied with if goggles are provided which are

[1] [1949] A.C. 275; 65 T.L.R. 76; [1949] 1 All E.R. 319.

C. A.
1954
DANIELS
v.
FORD MOTOR CO. LD.
Parker L.J.

well adapted for the process in question, yet even so the defendants failed to provide such goggles in this case. It seems to me that the difficulty in his way there is the finding of the judge, to which I have referred, which can be abundantly supported by the evidence, that in this case no blame at all attached to the defendants. The argument was really to this effect, that the fettling process on which the plaintiff was engaged was, in this case, of such a nature that the work was particularly strenuous and that in those circumstances goggles should be provided, whatever other disadvantages they had, which were properly ventilated.

It seems to me that the judge has in fact found in this case that the defendants were in no way to blame, and I see no reason for interfering with that finding. In those circumstances I would allow this appeal.

MORRIS L.J. I have reached the same conclusion. There is very little that I would desire to add to what my Lord has said, but as I have formed a view different from that entertained by the judge I would just state my reasons in a few sentences.

The question involves a consideration of the words that have been used in section 49 of the Act, and in particular the words "suitable goggles . . . shall . . . be provided to protect the eyes "of the persons employed in the process." That is the only wording which we have to consider and not any alternative wording that might possibly have been used, such as that "goggles shall be provided which will protect the eyes of the "persons employed in the process." It seems clear from the evidence that it does on occasion happen that there is either condensation caused by the atmosphere, or that, as a result of the perspiration of the wearer of goggles, there may be misting of the goggles. To that extent there may be a criticism of the goggles which the defendants provided, but a criticism only in this limited sense that, as the defendants themselves acknowledge, the goggles are not perfect goggles for the reason that such misting does at times occur.

The judge summarized the way in which the matter was put by the defendants in these sentences of his judgment: "On the "other side it is said 'Well, in the sense that suitable goggles "'mean perfect goggles, then these goggles are not perfect, "'because there are times when the wearer has to do this "'cleaning. It is a very short time indeed. If he does it "'carefully with a piece of rag and uses his hands sensibly he "'can still protect his eyes, because at that moment, of course, "'he has got two hands and he has not got to look at his work "'or carry out any operation, and you ought to construe the "'word "suitable" in a reasonable sense as meaning goggles "'which are suited to this kind of work, which are suited to the "'man who wears them, and the mere fact that from time to "'time he removes them altogether is something which does not " ' prevent them being still described as " suitable." ' " In that passage various points are indicated. It has been said by the defendants that the occurrence that gave rise to this litigation was an extraordinary mischance. It has further been said that when somebody finds occasion to wipe goggles because of misting, it could be done by merely withdrawing the goggles a short distance from the brow, by pulling the elastic, and that the clearing could be done while protecting the eyes completely with the two hands which are then free for that operation.

In a later part of his judgment the judge said: " Now, it can " be said—this is the whole point—that if goggles are provided, " however excellently they are designed (and I say not a word " against them) owing to the particular kind of work which was " being done by the plaintiff, and they had to be removed some- " times, thereby leaving the eyes unprotected, could those " goggles, within the meaning of section 49, be said to be suit- " able goggles to protect the eyes of the person, in this case the " plaintiff, employed in the process to which the section of the " regulations has been applied?" I quote that sentence because the judge is saying that he has not a word against the design of these goggles. He uses the words " however excellently they " are designed (and I say not a word against them)." It seems to me that when the goggles became misty, on the judge's finding if they had remained on they were still goggles that would protect the eyes of the wearer though he could not continue to do his work as he would wish to do it while that misting remained. Because of the layout and planning of the work there might in this case have been some difficulties in withdrawing far from the work in order to clear the goggles some distance away; but the goggles as such, according to the judge's finding, remained goggles that would protect the eyes. The judge really held that the goggles supplied to the plaintiff were goggles that fitted him; they were goggles that were suitable when worn to protect the eyes; and subject only to the question of misting, they were goggles which were suited to the kind of work.

It seems to me that the question becomes ultimately one of fact whether the goggles supplied to the plaintiff were goggles that were suitable to protect the eyes in the process upon which he was employed; and, on the judge's findings, notwithstanding that some misting could and did occur, I do not think it was shown that there was a breach of this section. I would allow the appeal.

DENNING L.J. I agree with both the judgments of my Lords and have nothing to add. The result is that the appeal will be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: A. E. Wyeth & Co.; Pattinson & Brewer.

A. W. G.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

Jan. 14. 1955

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Lynskey JJ.

*BURSTED PROPERTIES LD. v. DENTON URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

Public Health—Drainage—Garden path—Leading to front and back doors of dwelling-house—Whether "passage giving access to a "house"—Public Health Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 49), s. 56 (1).

By section 56 (1) of the Public Health Act, 1936, "If any court "or yard appurtenant to, or any passage giving access to, a house "is not so . . . flagged, asphalted, or paved . . ." as to allow of satisfactory drainage the local authority may by notice require the owner of the house to remedy the defect.

A local authority served a notice under section 56 (1) on the owners of a dwelling-house requiring them to flag, asphalt or pave a path leading from the street to the front and back doors of the house. Part of the path crossed the front garden and part of it was bounded on one side by the house and on the other by a grass verge leading to the boundary fence. A court of summary jurisdiction dismissed the house-owners' appeal against the notice, but quarter sessions allowed their appeal, holding that the notice was not justified by the section, as in their opinion the path was not "a passage giving access to a house" within the meaning of section 56 (1). On appeal by the local authority:—

Held, that the words "any passage giving access to a house" in section 56 (1) were intended to refer to a passage in the nature of a court and that the word "passage" was not apt to describe the path concerned in the present case. Accordingly, quarter sessions had come to a correct decision on the facts found and the appeal must be dismissed.

CASE STATED by the Appeal Committee of Lancashire quarter sessions.

On January 22, 1954, Bursted Properties Ld., owners of dwelling-houses at Denton, Lancashire, appealed, pursuant to section 290 of the Public Health Act, 1936, to a court of summary jurisdiction against a notice served on them by the Denton Urban District Council under section 56 (1) [1] of the Act requiring them to execute certain works, namely, to flag, asphalt or pave the path leading from the street to the front and back doors of a dwelling-house at Fairbourne Road, Denton. The company contended that the notice was not justified by the terms of the subsection. The court of summary jurisdiction dismissed their appeal and against that decision the company appealed to quarter sessions.

[1] S. 56 (1) of the Public Health Act, 1936, provides: "If any court or "yard appurtenant to, or any passage "giving access to, a house is not so "formed, flagged, asphalted, or paved, "or is not provided with such works "... as to allow of the satisfactory "drainage of its surface or subsoil to "a proper outfall, the local authority "may by notice require the owner of "the house to execute all such works "as may be necessary to remedy the "defect."

The appeal committee found the following facts. The path leading from the street to the front and back doors of the house was made of asphalt, but was not formed, flagged, asphalted or paved or provided with such works as to allow of the satisfactory drainage of its surface or subsoil to a proper outfall. The part of the path lying between the front gate and front door crossed a garden some 30 feet wide and was flanked on each side by flower beds while the part which ran from the front to the back door of the house was bounded on one side by the house and on the other by grass and flower beds reaching to the boundary fence. The path, to which access from the street was gained through a gate, provided the only means of access from the street to the front and back doors of the house. Paths similar to the path in the question were normally described as "paths" and not as "passages."

The appeal committee, being of opinion on the facts found that the path was not "a passage giving access to a house" within the meaning of section 56 (1), held that the notice served by the district council was not justified, and allowed the appeal. The district council appealed to the Divisional Court.

W. D. T. Hodgson for the urban district council.
L. J. Solley for the property company.

The following cases were cited in argument: Oakley v. Merthyr Tydfil Corporation [2]; Reg. v. Goole Local Board [3]; Chatterton v. Glanford Rural District Council. [4]

LORD GODDARD C.J. read section 56 (1) of the Public Health Act, 1936, and continued: If a notice is served on the owner of a house and he desires to dispute it, he can appeal to the court of summary jurisdiction and from that court there is an appeal to quarter sessions. If quarter sessions state a case it comes to this court. That is rather a long chain of court proceedings to decide a comparatively small point, but no doubt the point is of some importance because it would appear that the Denton Urban District Council is serving notices on several owners of small property in front of which there is what is commonly called a front garden—a little enclosure between the public highway and the front door.

In the present case the council has regarded the way by which a person goes through his front garden to his front door as a passage and have called on the company which owns several of these houses to flag, asphalt or pave those passages. The justices held that they were passages. On appeal, quarter sessions set out all the facts and said that in their opinion they were not passages. Among other things they say: "Paths similar to "the said path are normally described as 'paths' and not as

[2] [1922] 1 K.B. 409; 38 T.L.R. 60.
[3] [1891] 2 Q.B. 212.
[4] [1915] 3 K.B. 707.

1955

BURSTED PROPERTIES LD. v. DENTON URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

Lord Goddard C.J.

" ' passages.' " In fact, this is a path over the front garden of the house. Section 56 (1) provides: " If any court or yard " appurtenant to, or any passage giving access to, a house is " not so formed. . . ." Of course, if there is a court or yard appurtenant to a house, it is within the curtilage; it would pass with the grant of a house and its appurtenances.

It has not been suggested here, and Mr. Hodgson does not feel inclined to argue, that a court or a yard would include a garden and there is no reason why it should. If there is a court or yard appurtenant to a house where, for example, cars may be washed, no doubt it is desirable that the water should be made to drain away, especially if the court or yard is flagged or made hard in some form or another. Different conclusions might apply to a mere path, but the words are not: " . . . any court or yard " or passage appurtenant to a house "; they are " any passage " giving access to a house." I think the section aims at a passage in the nature of a court. One knows perfectly well that in towns there are passages down which people go to reach houses. I do not think the word " passage " is apt to describe what the council wish to have paved here, which is merely the way a man may walk from his front gate to his door and round the side of the house to the back door. At any rate I am not prepared to differ from the conclusion to which quarter sessions came and, therefore, I would dismiss this appeal.

CASSELS J. I agree.

LYNSKEY J. I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., for James Smith (Clerk of Denton Urban District Council); Capel Cure & Clarke.

E. M. W.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1955
Jan. 18.

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Streatfeild JJ.

* BAXTER v. KELDON.

Gaming—Betting—Ready-money betting—Receiving money in street on behalf of bookmaker—Defendant charged with assisting in conducting a betting business contrary to section 3 of the Betting Act, 1853—Defendant guilty of offence under section 4—No offence committed under section 3—Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), ss. 1, 3, 4.

Sections 3 and 4 of the Betting Act, 1853, are quite distinct, for section 3 imposes a maximum penalty of £100 or a sentence of six months' imprisonment upon the person who opens a betting house, keeps it, or permits it to be kept and assists in conducting the business there, while section 4 imposes a less severe penalty of £50 or three months' imprisonment upon a person acting for or on behalf of the owner or occupier of a betting house, or in any manner assisting in conducting the business there " who shall receive directly " or indirectly any money " in respect of betting.

Where, therefore, a bookmaker's runner acting on behalf of a person who conducted the business of a betting house received money and betting slips in the street and took them to the office to be sorted and recorded, was charged with assisting in conducting the business contrary to section 3 of the Act:—

Held, that since section 4 created a substantive offence upon a person doing the very acts which the defendant had done, he had committed an offence under that section and not under section 3, and he should not, therefore, have been rendered liable to the more severe penalty by being charged with assisting in the commission of an offence under the latter section.

Observations of Lord Maugham L.C. in Milne v. Commissioner of Police for the City of London [1940] A.C. 1, 13; 55 T.L.R. 898; [1939] 3 All E.R. 399 applied.

CASE STATED by the metropolitan magistrate sitting at Lambeth.

An information was preferred against the defendant that he on divers days between and including October 14 and 29, 1953, did assist in conducting the business of a certain place situate at 354 Kennington Road, S.E.11, which was then being used by one Thomas Brindle for the purpose of money being received on his behalf as the consideration for an undertaking to pay thereafter money on events and contingencies relating to horse or dog races, contrary to section 3 [1] of the Betting Act, 1853.

The following facts were found by the magistrate: During the whole of the relevant period one Thomas Brindle, a brother-in-law

[1] Betting Act, 1853, s. 1: " No " house, office, room, or other place " shall be . . . used for the purpose " of . . . betting . . . or for the pur- " pose of any money or valuable thing " being received by or on behalf of " such owner, occupier, keeper, or " person . . . as or for the considera- " tion for any . . . undertaking . . . " to pay . . . thereafter any money " . . . on any event or contingency " of or relating to any horse race. " . . ."

S. 3: " Any person who being the " owner or occupier of any house, " office, room, or other place, or a " person using the same, shall open, " keep or use the same for the pur- " poses hereinbefore mentioned, . . . " and any person who being the " owner or occupier of any house, " room, office, or other place, shall " knowingly and wilfully permit the " same to be opened, kept, or used by " any other person for the purposes " aforesaid . . . and any person " having the care or management of " or in any manner assisting in con- " ducting the business of any house, " office, room, or place opened, kept, " or used for the purposes aforesaid " . . . shall, on summary conviction " . . . be liable to forfeit . . . £100 " . . . or . . . may be committed to " . . . gaol . . . for . . . six calendar " months."

S. 4: " . . . any person acting for " or on behalf of any such owner or " occupier, or any person having the " care or management or in any " manner assisting in conducting the " business . . . who shall receive, " directly, or indirectly, any money or " valuable thing as a deposit on any " bet on condition of paying any sum " of money . . . on the happening of " any event or contingency of or " relating to a horse race or any " other race . . . or as or for the con- " sideration for any . . . undertaking " . . . to pay or give thereafter any " money . . . on any such event or " contingency, . . . shall, upon sum- " mary conviction . . . forfeit . . . " £50 . . . or . . . may be committed " to . . . gaol . . . for . . . three " calendar months."

1955

BAXTER v. KELDON.

of the defendant, was conducting a betting business at 354 Kennington Road, S.E.11, and in the course thereof was using that place for the purpose of money being received on his behalf as the consideration for an undertaking to pay thereafter money on events and contingencies relating to horse and dog races. The office of the business was at 354 Kennington Road. Money and betting slips were accepted on Brindle's behalf by his agents at a number of different sites (known as " pitches ") in the streets, brought to the office and there sorted and recorded in a set of books. On October 14, 15, 16 and 17, 1953, the defendant was at one of the pitches, with two other men, for between 1½ and 2 hours, leaving on each occasion a few minutes after 2 p.m. At the pitch on each occasion the defendant received from men money and betting slips. At other times when he was not present one of the other men would and did accept money and betting slips. In accepting the money and betting slips the defendant was acting on behalf of Brindle and in the course of the latter's business. On leaving the pitch the defendant drove on each occasion in his van to the office for the purpose of delivering the money and betting slips to Brindle. He went inside the office and remained there for periods of 15 minutes and upwards. Besides those occasions the defendant was at the office on October 28 and 29, 1953, arriving in his van a few minutes after 2 p.m. The defendant never took any part in the work done inside the office.

It was contended by the prosecution that by assisting in the carrying on of Brindle's business in that manner the defendant was assisting in conducting it.

It was contended by the defendant that in accepting money and betting slips on behalf of Brindle he had offended against section 4 of the Betting Act, 1853, and not against section 3 of the Act.

The magistrate was of the opinion that the contention of the defendant was right and accordingly he dismissed the information.

The prosecutor appealed.

H. F. Cassel and E. J. P. Cussen for the prosecutor.

Mervyn Griffith-Jones for the defendant.

The following cases were referred to in argument: Milne v. Commissioner of Police for the City of London [2]; Jenks v. Turpin [3] and Stoddart v. Hawke.[4]

LORD GODDARD C.J. referred to the facts and continued: On those facts the magistrate held, on the submission being made to him, that the information failed because the defendant should have been charged with an offence against section 4 and not against section 3.

[2] [1940] A.C. 1; 55 T.L.R. 898; [1939] 3 All E.R. 399.

[3] (1884) 13 Q.B.D. 505.

[4] [1902] 1 K.B. 353; 18 T.L.R. 23.

1955

BAXTER v. KELDON.

Lord Goddard C.J.

This case is a striking instance of the curiously unsatisfactory state the betting laws are in. No blame attaches to the police for having brought this prosecution under section 3, but, in my opinion, the point taken by the defendant, who has really no merits, is perfectly good. If he has committed an offence, it is under section 4 and not under section 3.

The point arises in this way: Under the Betting Act, 1853, it is an offence to keep a house for, to put it concisely, ready-money betting, and section 3 imposes a maximum penalty of £100 or six months on the owner or occupier of a betting house. [His Lordship read section 3 and continued:] That is with reference to the person who opens the betting house, keeps it, or permits it to be kept and assists in conducting the business there.

What the defendant did was to act as the bookmaker's runner in the streets; he took money from people who wanted to bet with the betting house keeper, that is, ready-money betting. But section 4 of the Act provides: "Any person . . . acting for or on "behalf of any such owner or occupier . . ."—and it is found that the defendant was acting on behalf of the owner or occupier—"or in any manner assisting in conducting the business thereof, "who shall receive, directly, or indirectly, any money . . . as a "deposit on any bet . . ." shall be liable to a penalty, not of £100 or six months' imprisonment, as under section 4, but £50 or three months. Where an Act creates a substantive offence upon a person doing a certain thing, and the evidence shows that a defendant did that very thing, it seems to me that by all the canons of construction he must be prosecuted for that offence, and the prosecution must not, by inference, try to get him made liable to a more severe penalty by saying that, in so doing that thing he in some way aided and abetted—because that is what the argument comes to—the commission of an offence under the previous section.

The matter is put beyond doubt by the speech of Lord Maugham L.C. in Milne v. Commissioner of Police for the City of London,[1] who analysed the two sections with great care, specifying the categories of persons who could commit an offence under section 3. Then he dealt with section 4 and said[2]: "Some points on these somewhat artificial provisions are worth "noting. Section 1 deals with the user of the place for one of "two defined purposes, and the user is made a common nuisance "and illegal. The sanctions are in sections 3 and 4 and they "both refer to the user of the place for one or other of the "purposes mentioned; but the sanctions are more severe under "section 3 than under section 4. It may be noted in passing that "under section 3 the persons mentioned in six of the categories "above mentioned (the owner, occupier, keeper, the person using, "the person managing, and the person conducting the business)

[1] [1940] A.C. 1, 8; 55 T.L.R. 898; [1939] 3 All E.R. 399.

[2] [1940] A.C. 13.

1955

BAXTER v. KELDON.

Lord Goddard C.J.

" are made liable, but it omits the persons procured, and the " persons employed on behalf of the owner, etc., and the agent " of the manager. Section 4 inflicts the lower penalty on all the " nine classes or categories who receive money, etc., as a deposit " or on a promise to pay, or who give an acknowledgment or " receipt."

That seems to me to show that the two sections are quite distinct. If the acts which are relied on in the present case as a breach of the statute, the acts of receiving money on behalf of the owner of the house, are proved, then the defendant has committed an offence under section 4 and not under section 3. For these reasons I think that the magistrate was right in the decision to which he came and this appeal is dismissed.

CASSELS J. I agree.

STREATFEILD J. I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Solicitor for the Metropolitan Police; Henry I. Sydney & Co.

J. F. L.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1954
Nov. 12, 16.

Harman J.

* In re EAST YORKSHIRE GRAVEL CO. LD.'S APPLICATION.

[1952 E. 569.]

Mines and Minerals—Working facilities—Lease—Notice to quit at termination of lease—Lease of beds of gravel and sand under two fields—Application to Ministry for right to work made several days before expiration of lease—Matter later referred to High Court—"Without the concurrence of two or more persons"—"Having an "interest in them"—Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 1 (1).

By a mining lease, dated February 15, 1932, certain quarries and beds of gravel and sand under two fields, which formed part of a farm, were demised to tenants for a period of 20 years.

On July 24, 1951, notice to quit and deliver up possession on February 15, 1952, the date of the expiration of the lease, was given by the landlords to the tenants.

Several days before the expiration of the term the tenants (a limited company to whom the lease had been assigned) applied to the Ministry of Fuel and Power for a grant of the right to continue to work the minerals, and the Ministry referred the matter to the High Court.

An originating summons was taken out on March 21, 1952, by the company, in which the court was asked to confer on the applicants a right to work the minerals.

On July 9, 1954, an application was made by summons for the determination of the following preliminary questions of law:

(1) Whether on the true construction of section 1 (1) of the Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923, and on certain agreed facts (a) the minerals were not capable of being worked "without "the concurrence of two or more persons" within the meaning of subsection (1) (a) of section 1 of the Act, and (b) the applicants were a person "having an interest" in the said minerals within the meaning of that section:—

Held, that (1) there had been no time when the minerals were not capable of being worked without the concurrence of two persons; as before the lease ended they could be worked without interference by the applicants, and on the termination of the lease they could be so worked by the landlords; (2) the "interest" which by section 1 (1) an applicant must possess must be a proprietary interest, vested at the time when the order granting the right to work is to be made in the applicant as owner in fee simple, or as lessee of the minerals, or as the holder of a licence not presently revocable to work the minerals and carry them away; whereas the applicants' lease had determined before the hearing of the summons.

In re West of England Road Metal Co. Ld. [1936] 2 All E.R. 1607 discussed.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

By a lease dated February 15, 1932, there was demised to the lessees for a period of 20 years from February 15, 1932, "all the quarries strata seams and beds of gravel and sand which "may be got by quarrying and excavations from the surface and "open to the daylight and not by underground workings within "or under the lands . . . forming part of the High Stonehills "Farm situate in the Parish of Bawnston in the County of "York and comprising fields 99 and 100 on the Ordnance Sheet "for the said parish."

Pursuant to the lease the lessees entered on the said fields and carried out the operations of winning and working the gravel and sand in accordance with the terms of the lease.

On March 21, 1934, the lease was taken over by the applicant company by arrangement with the lessors but without formal assignment, and the company continued to carry on the business and operations of winning and working the minerals.

In November, 1947, the company purchased freehold a portion of the field No. 100 amounting to one acre in extent.

On July 24, 1951, the Glendon Estates of Harrogate (who had recently become the owners of the High Stonehills Farm) served on the company what purported to be a notice to quit the land comprised in the lease (less the one acre above referred to) on February 15, 1952.

On February 7, 1952, an application was made to the Ministry of Fuel and Power, under the Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923, on behalf of the company for a grant of the right to work the minerals, and on March 14 the Ministry gave notice under R.S.C., Ord. 54, r. 4, that the matter was to be referred to the High Court.

On March 21, 1952, a summons was taken out by the company in which it was stated that "whereas there is a danger

1954

EAST YORKSHIRE GRAVEL CO. LD.'S APPLICATION, In re.

" of the said minerals being left permanently unworked by reason " of them being comprised in and/or lying under land which is " subject to a lease and/or which said minerals are not capable " of being worked without the concurrence of two or more persons, " a right to work the said minerals may be conferred on [the " company] being persons having an interest in them, together " with such ancillary right, or rights, as may be reasonably " necessary for this said purpose, pursuant to the provisions of " the above mentioned Mines (Working Facilities and Support) " Act, 1923, and that an order shall be made giving directions " as to the procedure to be followed before the summons is set " down for hearing in court. This application is made under the " Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923, ss. 1, 3, 4 " and 5."

On July 9, 1954, an application was made by the company by summons for an order under R.S.C., Ord. 34, r. 2, for the preliminary argument of points of law, and on July 15, 1954, an order was made for the preliminary argument of the points of law, namely, " whether on the true construction of sections 1 [1] " and 3 of the Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923, " and on the agreed facts set forth in the schedule hereto— " (a) the minerals the subject-matter of the application herein " are not capable of being worked without the concurrence of " two or more persons within the meaning of subsection (1) (a) " of section 1 of the said Act; (b) the applicants are a person " having an interest in the said minerals within the meaning of " section 1 of the said Act."

H. Edmund Davies Q.C., Raymond Walton and Desmond Neligan for the applicant company.

John W. Mills for the landlords.

Cases referred to in argument: In re West of England Road Metal Co. Ld.[2]; In re Nunnery Colliery Co.'s Application[3]; Campbeltown Coal Co. v. Duke of Argyll[4]; Job v. Potton.[5]

HARMAN J. stated the facts and continued: Before the court would be able to determine whether the order asked for by the

[1] Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923, s. 1 (1): " Where " there is danger of minerals being " left permanently unworked—(a) by " reason of the minerals being com- " prised in or lying under land which " is or has been copyhold land, or " land subject to a lease exception " reservation restriction covenant or " condition, or otherwise not being " capable of being worked without the " concurrence of two or more persons; " (b) by reason of the minerals being " owned in such small parcels that " they cannot be properly or con- " veniently worked by themselves; a " right to work the minerals may be " conferred in the manner and sub- " ject to the provisions hereinafter " appearing on any person having an " interest in them, or, in the case of " minerals owned in small parcels, in " minerals adjacent to them, who is " desirous of working them either by " himself or through his lessees."

[2] [1936] 2 All E.R. 1607.

[3] [1924] W.N. 257.

[4] 1926 S.C. 126.

[5] (1875) L.R. 20 Eq. 84.

originating summons should be granted, a large body of evidence would have to be considered, including expert testimony about the state of the sand and gravel trade, and whether it would be in the national interests that the working should be continued; and it appears to have occurred to the parties that a short cut could be taken, because it was the respondents' contention that, even assuming that the applicants proved that the other requirements of the Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923, were satisfied, nevertheless the applicants were not persons to whom any grant could be made, because they were not qualified as grantees. The broad grounds of the objections on the part of the respondents were, first, that the applicants had no such interest in the quarries or the ground as would support an application, and, secondly, that this was not a case where the concurrence of two or more persons was required for the working of the quarries, and, consequently, a condition precedent had not been fulfilled. The parties, therefore, agreed the questions which I am asked to answer today under R.S.C., Ord. 34, r. 2, which empowers the court, if it be of the opinion that there is a question of law convenient to be decided before evidence is given, to refer that question of law for trial as a kind of preliminary point. It is much the same as a proceeding by way of demurrer. I have never seen this kind of procedure applied to proceedings by originating summons before, but I see no reason, ex facie, why that should not be done, because an originating summons is a "cause or matter" within R.S.C., Ord. 34, r. 2, as much as is an action by writ. I think, therefore, although preliminary points of this kind often lead to trouble, that the procedure is justified on this occasion.

[His Lordship stated the questions which were to be determined, read section 1 (1), and continued:] Therefore, before a grant can be conferred under section 1, an applicant has, first, to prove that there is a danger of minerals being left permanently unworked. For the purposes of the present proceedings I must assume that this first requirement can be satisfied. An applicant then has to show that the danger exists for one of the reasons set out in section 1 (1). The first two grounds stated in paragraph (a) do not apply in the present case, and, so far as I know, paragraph (b) does not arise, but it is of interest in connexion with a case to which I shall refer later. The applicants in the present case have, therefore, to rely on the last part of paragraph (a): "... or otherwise not being capable of being worked "without the concurrence of two or more persons."

The first point which I have to consider is the meaning of the words "without the concurrence of two or more persons," and the second point is the meaning of the words "having an interest "in them," in the latter part of section 1 (1).

Section 3 of the Act empowers what are called ancillary rights to be granted to a person already having some rights to work minerals which are hampered. Section 4 (1) lays down

1954

EAST YORKSHIRE GRAVEL CO. LD.'S APPLICATION, In re.

Harman J.

limitations, and reads: "Neither the right to work minerals nor "an ancillary right shall be granted under this Act unless it is "shown that it is not reasonably practicable to obtain the right "in question by private arrangement for any of the following "reasons: . . . (d) that the person with power to grant the right "unreasonably refuses to grant it or demands terms which, "having regard to the circumstances, are unreasonable."

For the present purpose I shall assume, without deciding the point, that section 4 (1) (d) applies. Section 5 shows the way in which an application under the Act is to be made. Section 5 (1) reads: "Any person having an interest in any minerals "who is desirous of working, either by himself or through a "lessee, those minerals, or any adjacent minerals, and who "considers that the circumstances are such that a right to work "the minerals can be granted under this part of this Act, may "send to the Board of Trade an application for the grant of such "a right." For "Board of Trade" we now read "Minister of "Fuel and Power." An application was made to the minister under that subsection. Section 5 (4) reads: "The Board [now "the Minister] shall consider the application, and shall, unless "after communication with such other parties interested (if any) "as they may think fit they are of opinion that a prima facie "case is not made out, refer the matter to the Railway and Canal "Commission."

By the Railway and Canal Commission (Abolition) Act, 1949, section 1, the matter is to be referred to the High Court. Under a proviso to section 5 (4) of the Act of 1923 it was essential for the Ministry to communicate with the respondents, who had refused to grant the right, before referring the application to the court. As, apparently, the Minister referred the matter to the court, I must assume that he did not think that no prima facie case was made out, and that he did communicate with the respondents.

Section 6 (1) of the Act of 1923 reads: "Where a matter is "so referred to the Commission, the Commission, if satisfied "that the requirements of this Part of this Act are complied "with in the case of the applicant, and that it is expedient in "the national interest that the right applied for should be granted "to him, may, by order, grant the right on such terms and "subject to such conditions, and for such period, as the Com-"mission may think fit. . . ."

Section 6 (2) provides for compensation to the owner. Section 6 (3) provides: "In determining the duration of any right to be "granted the Commission shall have regard to the time reason-"ably necessary to enable the minerals to be fully worked, and "where the applicant's interest in any minerals in virtue of "which he is entitled to make the application is an interest as "lessee, shall have regard to the duration of such interests."

In 1926 the position was altered so far as concerned coal mining, and, by the Mining Industry Act, 1926, s. 13, a person who wished to search for coal could have rights granted to him by the Commission without proving that he had any interest in the subject-matter. That is only of interest as showing that in the case of minerals such as sand and gravel, the applicant must have an interest in the minerals, while, in the case of certain other minerals he does not have to have an interest. Precisely what kind of interest the applicant is required to have is not stated.

The first point is about concurrence. The applicants have to show, under section 1 (1) (a) of the Act of 1923, that the minerals are "not capable of being worked without the concurrence of "two or more persons." I do not think that I need to decide whether "not . . . capable of being worked" means that physically the minerals cannot be worked, or that lawfully they may not be worked. The words "not . . . capable of being "worked without the concurrence of two or more persons" mean that there must be someone able and willing to work, and someone else who is able to prevent the working, and who is not willing to give his assent or to concur. Not more than two persons are needed, because the words in section 1 (1) (a) are "two or more "persons," but there must be, at least, two persons, and each must, vis-à-vis the other, be in a position to work the coal only with the concurrence of that other. That is illustrated by Campbeltown Coal Co. v. Duke of Argyll,[1] a decision of the Railway and Canal Commissioners in Scotland, cited in a note to section 1 (1) of the "Act of 1923" in Halsbury's Statutes of England (first ed.), vol. 12, p. 182. The note begins with these words: "The section applies as between a landlord and a tenant "of minerals." I think that it is now conceded in the present case, although it was not conceded when the hearing began, that that statement is right, subject to the limitation that there must be something in the demise to the tenant which prevents him from working the minerals without the assent or the concurrence of the landlord, who is the other person concerned. In Campbeltown Coal Co. v. Duke of Argyll[1] that was exactly the position. The lessee had a lease of certain mines, but the lessor had obtained an interdict from the Scottish courts restraining him from working the minerals under a farmhouse, and the lessee applied for permission to work them under section 1 of the Act of 1923. That was, obviously, a case in which the concurrence of two persons was required. The tenant could not work without the landlord's leave because of the interdict, and the landlord could not work because he had demised the subject-matter to the tenant and, therefore, was not in possession of the mines. In the present case it is contended on behalf of the applicants that the tenants (the applicants) were not in a position to work the minerals without the concurrence of the landlords (the respondents), because when the lease ran out the tenants could not

[1] 1926 S.C. 126.

1954

EAST YORKSHIRE GRAVEL CO. LD.'S APPLICATION, In re.

Harman J.

continue to work unless the landlords would allow them to do so, and that, therefore, section 1 (1) of the Act of 1923 applied.

The respondents, in answer to that contention, submitted that, while it was true that the applicants could not work the minerals without the concurrence of the respondents after the lease had expired, the respondents could do so without the concurrence of the applicants; that, until the lease expired, the applicants could work the minerals without the concurrence of the respondents; and that, therefore, there never was a time when the applicants and the respondents had to concur in order that the minerals should be capable of being worked. That seems to me to be a good point, and the answer to this case. I do not think that there was, in the circumstances stated in the schedule to the order of July 15, 1954, a time when the minerals were incapable of being worked without the concurrence of two persons. Before the lease ended the applicants could work them, and were working them, and after the lease ended the respondents could work them and the applicants had no right to interfere.

The second question which I have to determine is whether the applicants were a "person having an interest" in the minerals, within the meaning of section 1 (1) of the Act of 1923. Under section 5 (1) the only persons who may apply for rights are "persons having an interest in any minerals." When the application was made to the Minister in this case the applicants, undoubtedly, had an interest in these minerals. It is true that they were only interested in them for another week, but they had an interest, and it seems to me, therefore, that they were qualified to make the application. When one turns back to section 1, however, to look for the persons on whom the right to work may be conferred, one finds that they are persons "having "an interest in them." In them? In what? In the minerals. Consequently the court, when considering possible grantees of this right, is confined to persons having an interest in the minerals. It is quite obvious that, after the application under section 5 (1) was made, at least a week would have to elapse before the matter could be adjudicated on by the court, and the court would come to the conclusion, when considering who was the person on whom to confer the rights, that the applicants had no proprietary rights in the minerals and, therefore, were not eligible for a grant of rights if, as is contended by the respondents, "interest," in section 1 (1) (a), must mean a proprietary interest of some sort.

A proprietary interest, in my judgment, may be of, at least, three kinds, that is to say, one may be the owner of the minerals in fee simple, or the lessee of the minerals, or a person having a licence not presently revocable to work the minerals and carry them away. It is clear that one of the people having an interest is the lessee, because section 6 (3) reads: ". . . where the "applicant's interest in any minerals in virtue of which he is "entitled to make the application is an interest as lessee . . ."

It was submitted by the respondents that that, or some similar interest, was necessary before a person could show that he was qualified to have a right granted to him under Part I of the Act of 1923. The answer of the applicants was that it was enough to have had an interest at the date when the original application was made. That contention, as I have already said, seems to me to be incorrect. Secondly, they contended that an interest might be a commercial interest, namely, to have a true business reason for working, and they went on to say that they had a commercial interest in the quarries, because they had their machinery installed on the land and they had been working the minerals and carrying on their established business.

Is that enough? I should have thought not. I should have thought that "an interest," within the meaning of section 1 (1) (a), must mean such an interest as the law will recognize. In In re West of England Road Metal Co. Ld.,[2] a case before the Railway and Canal Commission in 1936, such an interest, however, was not shown. In that case the applicants were a quarrying company, who wished to acquire the right to extend their quarry over certain adjacent fields. They had no proprietary interest in the adjacent fields or in the minerals under them, and so they were not qualified in that way, but they could have qualified by being interested in adjacent minerals if it were true that the minerals which were the subject of the application were "owned "in such small parcels that they [could] not be properly or "conveniently worked by themselves." That, however, was not proved in the case. The point was never taken, I do not know why. Counsel of the greatest eminence in matters of this sort were employed, and one would have expected every point to be taken that could be taken. That seems to me to be very far from a decision that a proprietary interest is not necessary. The decision may have been made per incuriam, or there may have been circumstances which the reporter failed to notice, which made such a point untenable, or not worth taking in that particular case, and I cannot regard In re West of England Road Metal Co. Ld.[2] as a case which indicates to me that I should take a view of the nature of the interest different from that which I should have gathered from the Act itself.

There are some expressions of opinion in textbooks that these interests must be proprietary interests. There is such a statement in Bowen on the Coal Act, 1938, p. 287, in a note to section 1 of the Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923. See also Bamber on the Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Act, 1923, p. 8. There is, however, no authority on the matter which has been brought to my attention. As a matter of construction, however, that is what seems to me to be the true view, more especially as the Mining Industry Act, 1926, s. 13, so far as coal is concerned, and the Mines (Working Facilities) Act, 1934, so

[2] [1936] 2 All E.R. 1607.

1954

EAST YORKSHIRE GRAVEL CO. LD.'S APPLICATION, In re.

Harman J.

far as certain other minerals are concerned, deliberately cut out the necessity of an applicant having an interest for the purposes of those minerals.

The minerals with which we are concerned in the present case are not in either of those categories, and I think that counsel for the respondents is, therefore, right in saying that it is still necessary to satisfy the conditions in section 1 (1) of the Act of 1923, and one of those conditions is that an applicant must have a proprietary interest in the minerals, or, in a small parcels case, in the adjacent minerals. In the present case the applicants, in my judgment, have neither of those interests, because by the time when the application comes before the court the applicants' estate and interest have ended and they are trespassers if they enter on the land. For those reasons it seems to me that both the preliminary points should be answered in the way that the respondents suggest.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Smith & Hudson for Mainprize, Rignall & Whitworth, Hull; Stafford Clark & Co. for Armitage, Speight & Ashworth, Leeds.

J. L. D.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1954
Nov. 2.

Wynn-Parry J.

*PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. GALLWEY AND ANOTHER.

[1953 P. 873.]

Mortgage—Receiver—Corporate body—Limitation of action—Acknowledgment — Action against sureties 13 years after original default of mortgagor company—Appointment of bodies corporate as successive receivers—Periodical sums paid by receivers to mortgagees —Limitation Act pleaded by sureties—Appointment of receivers a nullity—Receivers not agents of mortgagor—Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 109 (2)—Companies Act, 1929 (19 & 20 Geo. 5, c. 23), s. 306 (1)—Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), s. 366.

Limitation of Action.

In 1936 premises were mortgaged by a company to the plaintiffs, and in 1939 the company defaulted with the result that sureties (party to the mortgage deed) became liable to pay moneys due. Thereafter the rents and profits were paid to corporate bodies appointed (by other mortgagees) as receiver.

In 1953 the plaintiffs brought an action against the sureties to recover sums due under their covenants as sureties. The defendants pleaded, inter alia, the Limitation Act, 1939; they contended that periodical payments made to the plaintiffs from time to time on behalf of the receivers were not acknowledgments within the Act, as an appointment of a corporate body as receiver was a nullity by virtue of section 306 (1) of the Companies Act, 1929 (now section 366 of the Companies Act, 1948), so that the ostensible receivers were not the agents of the mortgagors under section 109 (2) of the Law of Property Act, 1925:—

Held, dismissing the action, that the effect of section 306 (1) of the Companies Act, 1929, was to prevent a body corporate from being the receiver of the property of a company; so that any attempt to appoint a body corporate as such was a nullity, and failed to create any contractual relations between the body corporate in question and the company over whose property it purported to be appointed receiver.

ACTION.

By a mortgage deed dated September 28, 1936, a company mortgaged certain premises to the plaintiffs, the first defendant and a person of whom the second defendant was personal representative being joined as sureties. There was in existence a prior mortgage of the premises in favour of other mortgagees dated February 25, 1936, which provided for the immediate appointment of a receiver, and a firm of solicitors had been appointed to act as such.

By a deed executed simultaneously with the mortgage of September 28, to which the prior mortgagees, the mortgagors and the plaintiffs were parties, the prior mortgage was postponed to the plaintiffs' mortgage. In 1939 the mortgagees defaulted in their payments under the plaintiffs' mortgage, so that in February, 1940, the sureties became liable to pay the moneys due. The mortgagor company was dissolved on February 15, 1949.

In 1938 the prior mortgagees appointed a corporate body to act as receiver, and in 1941 another corporate body was appointed as receiver in their place. Throughout the relevant period, until some date after the dissolution of the mortgagor company, the actual collection of the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises continued to be carried out by the solicitors as agents for the receivers, and such rents and profits were from time to time paid to the plaintiffs.

In 1953 the plaintiffs brought an action against the defendants to recover sums due under their covenants as sureties. The defendants pleaded, inter alia, the Limitation Act, 1939; they contended that the periodical payments made to the plaintiffs from time to time on behalf of the receivers were not acknowledgments within the Act, as an appointment of a corporate body as receiver was a nullity by virtue of section 306 (1) of the Companies Act, 1929 [1] (see now section 366 of the Companies Act, 1948), so that the ostensible receivers were not the agents of the mortgagors under section 109 (2) of the Law of Property Act, 1925.

Denys Buckley for the plaintiffs.

J. G. Monroe for the first defendant.

R. B. S. Instone for the second defendant.

[1] Companies Act, 1929, s. 306 (1): "A body corporate shall not be qualified for appointment as receiver of the property of a company."

1954

PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. GALLWEY.

Cases referred to in argument: Heath v. Pugh [2]; Markwick v. Hardingham [3]; Whitley v. Lowe.[4]

WYNN-PARRY J. In this action the plaintiffs, as mortgagees under a mortgage dated September 28, 1936, sue the two defendants as sureties, or, in the case of the second defendant, as representing the estate of a deceased surety, they having guaranteed the payment of moneys due under the mortgage by the mortgagor company, S. G. Properties Ld.

At the date of that mortgage there was in existence a prior mortgage on the same property dated February 25, 1936, in favour of a company called Tudor Investment Trust Ld. Under that document provision was made for the immediate appointment of a receiver, and in fact a firm of solicitors, Messrs. Shirley Woolmer & Co., as they then were, were appointed and acted as receivers. The evidence shows that it was part of the bargain represented by the mortgage of September 28, 1936, that the prior mortgage should be postponed and, indeed, by a document of even date with the mortgage, the prior mortgage was postponed so as to rank after the mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs. Messrs. Shirley Woolmer & Co. acted as receivers under the mortgage of February 25, 1936, until July 27, 1938, when, by a deed of that date made between the Tudor Investment Trust Ld., Messrs. Shirley Woolmer & Co. and the Temple General Investment Co. Ld., which recited that Messrs. Shirley Woolmer & Co. were desirous of being discharged and the mortgagees were desirous of appointing the Temple General Investment Co. Ld. as receivers in their place, it was provided by clause 1: "The "mortgagees" [Tudor Investment Trust Ld.] "in exercise of "the powers conferred on them by the principal deed" [of February 25, 1936] "or by statute or otherwise hereby appoint "the receiver to be receiver of the rents and profits and income "of the premises comprised in the principal deed in the place of "the solicitors." By clause 3 the mortgagees released the solicitors from the provisions of the principal deed, which included their appointment as receivers, and from all moneys received or which ought to have been received pursuant to the provisions therein contained. By clause 4 they gave to the solicitors a complete and full indemnity.

The new receivers, Temple General Investment Co. Ld., continued to act until August 11, 1941, when, by a deed of that date, they were removed and a company called Hallingbury Trust Ld. were appointed receivers in their place. Throughout the whole of the material period the actual collection of money continued to be made by Messrs. Shirley Woolmer & Co., and a partner in that firm, Mr. Storrs, gave evidence before me to the effect that in each case his firm collected the rents as solicitors and agents for the limited company in question.

[2] (1881) 6 Q.B.D. 345.
[3] (1880) 15 Ch.D. 339.
[4] (1858) 25 Beav. 421.

This procedure continued down to and, indeed, subsequent to, February 15, 1949, when the mortgagors, S.G. Properties Ltd., were dissolved pursuant to section 353 of the Companies Act, 1948. I ought then to add that the mortgagors made default in payment of the monthly sums reserved and made payable by the mortgage of September 28, 1936, in November, 1939, and accordingly under the provisions of that mortgage the mortgagees' power of sale became exercisable and the moneys owing to the plaintiffs from the two defendants as sureties became due and payable in February, 1940.

The two defendants plead the Limitation Act, 1939, and prima facie that is a good plea. It is met by the reply delivered by the plaintiffs to the two defences which is to the effect that, as a result of the relevant documents to which I have referred, Hallingbury Trust Ld. became and remained until February 15, 1949—that is the date of the dissolution of the company—the agents of the mortgagors. The reply shows, and the evidence confirms, that payments were made to the plaintiffs by Messrs. Shirley Woolmer & Co. or their successors almost down to the present time, and it is pleaded that Hallingbury Trust Ld., as agents for the mortgagors, paid or procured to be paid to the plaintiffs those moneys.

Now, two points are taken by Mr. Instone for the second defendant. The first is that the deed of September 28, 1936, postponing the prior mortgage, is not pleaded and that, therefore, the plaintiffs are not entitled to rely on the fact of postponement and, accordingly, that the payments which the receivers made must be taken not to have been in accordance with the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 109 (8), which applied as they were receivers of the income under that Act and required them to make payments in accordance with the document [i.e., the mortgage of February 25, 1936] in right of which they were appointed. Counsel says that those wrongful payments cannot be attributed to the mortgagors. To that, counsel for the plaintiffs replies, and in my view with force, that the receivers must be taken to have directed the payments by Messrs. Shirley Woolmer & Co., and as the receivers were, by virtue of section 109 (2) of the Act of 1925, throughout the agents of the mortgagors, it does not lie either in the mouth of the mortgagors or the sureties to question what they did. Therefore, whether or not the court is apprised of the deed postponing the prior mortgage is immaterial. I think that the point is well taken, and, therefore, I do not accept the first submission of counsel for the second defendant. But he has another and, to my mind, much more formidable submission.

He draws attention to the fact that under the Companies Act, 1929, s. 306, re-enacted substantially by section 366 of the Companies Act, 1948, a body corporate shall not be qualified for appointment as receiver of the property of a company. In 1936, section 306 of the Act of 1929 applied and that section was slightly different in form from section 366 of the Act of 1948, because it was necessary to make an exception in 1929 as regards bodies corporate which had been appointed receivers prior to August 3, 1928. Section 306 is divided into two subsections, subsection (1) containing the disqualification and subsection (2) dealing with the exception. At the end of subsection (2) it is provided that "Subject as aforesaid any body corporate which "acts as receiver as aforesaid shall be liable to a fine not "exceeding £100." On the basis of that section it is submitted that the appointment, first, of the Temple General Investment Co. Ld. and, secondly, of the second company, Hallingbury Trust Ld., was a nullity, and that therefore it must follow that the plea on which the plaintiffs rely, that Hallingbury Trust Ld. became and remained until February 15, 1949, the agent of the mortgagors is not sustained.

1954

PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. GALLWEY.

Wynn-Parry J.

It was urged on me by Mr. Buckley that I should recognize that in fact the parties proceeded all through on the basis that whatever defect in law there might be in the appointment of the Temple General Investment Trust Ld. and Hallingbury Trust Ld., they were receivers and they should therefore be treated as agents of the mortgagors for whom Messrs. Shirley Woolmer & Co. acted as agents.

I must, I think, proceed strictly on the basis of the pleadings. The point is purely a point of law, which is taken by counsel for the second defendant, and, therefore, if I come to the conclusion in his favour that the effect of his point is to destroy the plea that Hallingbury Trust Ld. became and remained the agent of the mortgagors, then the plaintiffs ought not to succeed.

The point is a very short one. The language of section 306 is: "A body corporate shall not be qualified for appointment as "receiver of the property of a company." In my view, the language is perfectly clear and it is intended to prevent, and has the effect of preventing, a body corporate from being the receiver of the property of a company. It has, in my view, the effect of making it ultra vires any body corporate to act as receiver, and it follows, in my judgment, that any attempt to appoint a body corporate as receiver of the property of a company must be a nullity and must fail to create any contractual relations between the body corporate in question and the company over whose property it is purported to be appointed receiver.

Now, the evidence of Mr. Storrs is that, from the time when his firm ceased to act as receivers his firm acted as solicitors and agents, first for the Temple General Investment Trust Ld. and, secondly, for the Hallingbury Trust Ld., but I cannot conclude from that, as Mr. Buckley would have me conclude, that they went on acting as agents for the mortgagors to collect and hand over the money to the plaintiffs. It may be that on differently drafted pleadings the point might be taken, and I say nothing as to what might have been the outcome; but, on the case as it is presented, I do not see that that point is open.

1954

PORTMAN BUILDING SOCIETY v. GALLWEY.

Wynn-Parry J.

The sole point put forward in the reply is that the Hallingbury Trust Ld. were throughout the material period of the dissolution the agents of the mortgagors as receivers, and, in my view, I am forced, for the reasons which I have given, by the language of section 306 (1) of the Companies Act, 1929, to hold to the contrary.

For these short reasons, therefore, I come to the conclusion, not without the reluctance which the court usually feels on a successful plea of the Limitation Act, 1939, that the plea in this case is successfully taken by each of the defendants, and that therefore I must dismiss the action with costs.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors: Hewlett & Co.; Lewis Lloyd & Co.; Edwin E. Clark & Son.

J. L. D

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

*COWLISHAW v. CHALKLEY.

1955
Jan. 20.

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Streatfeild JJ.

[PRACTICE NOTE.]

Justices—Case stated—Drafting of case—Desirability of submitting case to both sides—No contentions in fact—Contentions stated in case—Remission to different justices.

CASE STATED.

Justices dismissed an information preferred by the police against Donald Edward Chalkley made under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 12, for alleged dangerous driving. They stated a case in which they set out certain facts (which are not relevant to this report) and also set out contentions alleged to have been made by the prosecutor and the defendant.

At the hearing of the appeal by the prosecutor, counsel for the prosecutor and counsel for the defendant informed the court that no contentions were in fact made on either side, as after the witnesses for the prosecution had been called and cross-examined by a solicitor acting on behalf of the defendant, the latter went into the witness-box and took the oath, whereupon the justices said that they wished to hear no more of the case, that no case had been made out, and that they would accordingly dismiss the information.

Paul Wrightson for the prosecutor.
C. G. L. Du Cann for the defendant.

LORD GODDARD C.J., having set out the facts, continued: I imagine that in stating that certain contentions were made on behalf of the defendant the justices are really stating their recollections of the line his solicitor took in cross-examination, because obviously he was cross-examining on those lines. But we are assured by both counsel that no submissions were made, and it is said on behalf of the defendant that while he is not disputing that the evidence set out in the case was given he wanted to give his own evidence because he wished to put a different complexion upon it. Whether he could have done it or not, I do not know, nor is it material at this stage. As Mr. Wrightson agrees that that was the course taken at the hearing—and the court is bound to say that the course was an improper one, and that the case is improperly stated—we have decided to send the case back to the justices with a direction that it is to be reheard before other justices than those who stated the case.

1955

Cowlishaw v. Chalkley.

We also desire to say that as a rule it is by far the better practice, though it cannot be insisted upon, that where justices agree to state a case, if they state it themselves or cause their clerk to state it, it should be submitted to both sides, and in case of any complication it should be left to the parties themselves to draft the case and submit it to the justices for their consideration. A point like this would not then arise.

Case remitted.

Solicitors: Solicitors for the Metropolitan Police; Pierron & Morley.

E. M. W.

[Queen's Bench Division.]

1955
Jan. 19.

*McINNES v. CLARKE.

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Streatfeild JJ.

Agency—Estate agent—Accommodation agency—Deposit required on supplying list of addresses—Balance of fee paid on client obtaining accommodation—Deposit returned to unsatisfied clients—Accommodation Agencies Act, 1953 (1 & 2 Eliz. 2, c. 23), s. 1 (1) (b).

An estate agent carried on a business of finding for persons requiring it furnished accommodation. On a person making an inquiry for accommodation he would be told that the fee payable by him, if accommodated, was a sum equal to one week's rent of the premises and that a deposit of approximately half of the weekly rental which he was willing to pay would be asked for. If the client was willing to pay the deposit an agreement was entered into between the client and the estate agent. Either before or after the agreement was signed a list of addresses would be given to the client. After a client had obtained accommodation, he would return and pay the balance of the fee due. Unsatisfied clients received their deposits back in full:—

Held that, on the facts, the estate agent was demanding or accepting payment in consideration of supplying addresses contrary to section 1 (1) (b) of the Accommodation Agencies Act, 1953, and he was guilty of an offence.

Case stated by a magistrate sitting at West London Magistrates' Court.

On June 1, 1954, an information was preferred by the respondent against the appellant, Douglas George McInnes, charging him that he on February 18, 1954, at 15 Hogarth Place, S.W.5, did accept a cheque for £3 from Hazel Phillis Berens in consideration of supplying or undertaking to supply to her addresses or other particulars of houses to let, contrary to section 1 (1) (b) of the Accommodation Agencies Act, 1953,[1] and further that on March 1, 1954, he demanded £4 from Derick Eustace Adkins for the same consideration contrary to section 1 (1) (b).

The following facts were found by the magistrate: The appellant carried on the business of an estate agent in the firm name of Douglas West, and his business was that of finding furnished accommodation. His method of business was as follows: On a person making an inquiry for accommodation, he would be asked his requirements and what rent he was willing to pay. He would then be told that the fee payable by him, if accommodated, was a sum equal to one week's rent of the premises taken by him and that a deposit of approximately half of the weekly rental which he was willing to pay would be asked for. In the event of the client being willing to pay the deposit, an agreement would be entered into and signed by the client and for and on behalf of the firm. Sometimes before and sometimes after the agreement was signed a list of addresses would be given to the client. After a client had obtained accommodation he would return and pay the balance of the fee due. Unsatisfied clients who had asked for a return of their deposit had received it back in full.

On February 18, 1954, Hazel Phillis Berens went to the firm and applied for accommodation. She was interviewed by one Stait, a servant or agent of the appellant, who produced a form of agreement which she read and subsequently signed. She paid the firm £3 in pursuance of the agreement as 50 per cent. of the approximate weekly rental. She was then given a list of addresses, probably before the agreement was signed, and thereafter received other lists daily for two weeks, from one of which she found accommodation for herself. She received no other assistance from the firm than the delivery of the lists. Having obtained the accommodation she later, in pursuance of the agreement, paid to the firm a further sum of £3 6s., making in all £6 6s., being equal to one week's rent of the premises taken by her.

[1] Accommodation Agencies Act, 1953, s. 1: "(1) Subject to the provisions of this section, any person who, during the continuance in force of this Act,—(a) demands or accepts payment of any sum of money in consideration of registering, or undertaking to register, the name or requirements of any person seeking the tenancy of a house; (b) demands or accepts payment of any sum of money in consideration of supplying, or undertaking to supply, to any person addresses or other particulars of houses to let; . . . shall be guilty of an offence."

1955

McInnes v. Clarke.

In the case of Adkins the procedure was substantially the same, except that before the agreement was read Stait said that a deposit would be required and Adkins paid the firm £4.

The magistrate found that the appellant was carrying on an honest business.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the supplying of addresses or other particulars of houses to let was only incidental to the agreement and was not the consideration for the demanding or accepting of the sums of money, the true consideration for which was the obtaining by the appellant for the clients of living accommodation.

It was contended on behalf of the respondent that the appellant was guilty of the offences charged in that, as the payment of money was a condition precedent to the supplying of lists of accommodation, the money demanded and accepted respectively in each case was in consideration of the supplying or undertaking to supply addresses or other particulars of houses to let.

The magistrate was of opinion from the evidence and the terms of the agreements that unless the sums in the agreements described as deposits were first paid, neither applicant could obtain any list of addresses, and that the only assistance given by the appellant to the applicants was the delivery of the lists, from which each client had to seek accommodation for himself, and therefore, that the transactions were contrary to section 1 (1) (b) of the Act of 1953. He found the appellant guilty on each information, fining him 40s. on each with five guineas costs on the first.

Melford Stevenson Q.C. and Roger Willis for the appellant.
John Phipps for the respondent.

Lord Goddard C.J. This is a case stated by Mr. Guest, one of the metropolitan magistrates, before whom the appellant was summoned for breaches of the Accommodation Agencies Act, 1953. [His Lordship read section 1 (1) (a) and (b), stated the facts found by the magistrate, and continued:] The magistrate has also found that the appellant was conducting his business honestly, that is to say, it was not a mere catch-penny affair and he returned money to people who asked for their money back. That, of course, had a very great influence on the magistrate in the penalty he imposed because whereas the Act provides for a penalty not exceeding £100, he only imposed a penalty of 40s. and five guineas costs.

The magistrate was of opinion from the evidence and the terms of the two agreements that it was clear that, "unless the "sums in the [agreements] described as deposits were first paid, "neither applicant could obtain any list of addresses and I was "further of opinion that the only assistance given by the appel-"lant to the applicants was the delivery of the said lists from "which each client had to seek accommodation for himself, and " therefore that the transactions were contrary to section 1 (1) (b) " of the Accommodation Agencies Act, 1953."

The two agreements show that what the appellant did was to say to a person: " If you give me a deposit of approximately half " the week's rent I will send you some names and addresses, " particulars of houses, and if you take one of them you have " to pay me the rest of the sum, which is to be equivalent to a " week's rent. If I cannot satisfy you I will give you your " deposit back." Having read the facts and the section I should have thought that the case was unarguable, because it seems to me that what the appellant has done clearly is to accept payment in consideration of supplying addresses or other particulars of houses to people who have applied to him. That he has also undertaken to give back the money which has been deposited if the transaction does not result in the client getting anything, does not seem to me to be here or there. The statute might have made some provision for the case where a man is honestly conducting a business, but it has not; what it says is, that he must not demand or accept payment of any sum of money in consideration of supplying, or undertaking to supply, to any person addresses or other particulars of houses to let. The appellant did. That was why he received the deposit, and the deposit was to be treated as part payment if the person took one of the houses on the list supplied; I do not think there is any doubt about it. I think the magistrate was right and this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Cassels J. I agree. I think that this Act was passed in order to meet a mischief. The mischief aimed at is an agent to whom a client applies in order to get some particulars of accommodation which that agent may have on his books which might meet the desires of the client. Evidently the practice which has been adopted by the appellant to avoid the application of the Act to his method of carrying on his business is to require a commission from the client who is making such an application. That commission is said to be a sum equivalent to the first week's rent. He further requires that there shall be a deposit of one half, and as soon as the client has put down the deposit of one half, the appellant agrees to supply the client with a list of addresses. In one of these agreements it is said that the client should get a daily list for eighteen consecutive working days. What was the consideration for that? The payment of half of the first week's rent, not to be credited against the rent, but to be credited against the demand which was being made by the appellant. But the Act has distinctly said: " Any person " who, during the continuance in force of this Act—(a) demands " or accepts payment of any sum of money in consideration of " registering, or undertaking to register, the name or requirements " of any person seeking the tenancy of a house: (b) demands or " accepts payment of any sum of money in consideration of

1955

McINNES v. CLARKE.

CASSELS J.

"supplying or undertaking to supply, to any person addresses or "other particulars of houses to let . . . shall be guilty of an "offence."

It seems to me that so far from avoiding this Act, this particular practice simply put the appellant straight into it, and any client who had approached him and had walked out with an address would not be far wrong from telling the truth if in answer to the question he had said: "I have a list of addresses," and if the inquirer said: "What have you paid for them?" he said: "I have paid £3." Yet in the ordinary way of business, if you go into a house agent's and ask him if he has any houses, you expect to walk out with particulars of those houses on his books, not that you would walk out minus a sum of money. I think the magistrate came to the right conclusion on the facts and I agree that the appeal fails.

STREATFEILD J. I agree, and I have only to add that in view of the finding of the magistrate, that unless the sums described as deposits were paid, neither of the applicants could obtain any list of addresses, which in fact was the only assistance which the appellant afforded them, it seems to me idle to contend that the wording of these contracts in which the consideration is expressed to be a client accepting accommodation, can other than be regarded as a colourable evasion or attempted evasion of this Act of Parliament. I think in view of the finding of the magistrate it is quite clear that the real consideration, looking at the facts of the case, was that this money was paid in consideration of the supply of addresses to these clients. In those circumstances I agree that that is within the mischief aimed at by this Act of Parliament, and this appeal must fail.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Willis & Willis; Director of Public Prosecutions.

J. D. P.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* LANE v. LONDON ELECTRICITY BOARD.

1955
Jan. 17, 18.

Parker L.J. (sitting as an additional judge).

[1952 L. No. 2380.]

Electricity — Regulations — "Danger" — Electricity sub-station with open duct on floor—Fall of electrician while inspecting premises—Parts of premises where apparatus placed to be "adequately lighted "to prevent danger"—"Danger from shock, burn, or other injury" —"Other injury" ejusdem generis with "shock, burn"—Construction—Regulations for the Generation, Transformation, Distribution and Use of Electrical Energy, 1908 (S.R. & O. 1908, No. 1312), s. 26.

Ejusdem generis rule—Statute.

The definition of "danger" in the Regulations for the Generation, Transformation, Distribution and Use of Electrical Energy, 1908, is "danger to health or danger to life or limb from shock, "burn, or other injury to persons employed, or from fire attendant "upon the generation, transformation, distribution, or use of "electrical energy."

An electrician employed by the defendants, while inspecting the premises of an electricity sub-station in course of reconstruction prior to installing some electric lighting, fell into an open duct on the floor between two pieces of apparatus and injured his knee. In an action for damages for personal injuries he alleged that the premises where the duct was situated were "inadequately lighted to "prevent danger" contrary to regulation 26 of the regulations:—

Held, that the words "or other injury" must be construed strictly ejusdem generis with the words "shock, burn" and referred to injuries resulting from the generation, transformation, distribution, or use of electrical energy; that the electrician's fall could not therefore be an injury resulting from a "danger" within the meaning of the regulations.

ACTION.

The plaintiff, James Lane, an electrician, was instructed by his employers, the defendants, to instal additional lighting at their sub-station at Downham, Kent, which was in course of reconstruction. He arrived at the sub-station at 8.15 a.m. on November 29, 1949. The sub-station was an entirely enclosed compartment with a large roller shutter, and was lighted by electric light, but daylight could be admitted by rolling up the shutter. On the morning in question the plaintiff and a maintenance fitter (also working in the sub-station) decided to keep the shutter closed and the two men accordingly depended for light on three electric lights suspended from the roof. In order to inspect the premises for the purpose of deciding where certain conduit tubing should be placed, the plaintiff had to look each way behind certain apparatus, in particular a transformer and the switchgear which were placed side by side against the wall there being between them a narrow space on the floor of which was a duct 21 inches deep and 18 inches wide used for carrying cables. The plaintiff alleged that in order to look behind those two pieces of equipment he had to go sideways into the space between them, and to put his foot across the duct. Having looked behind the transformer he went into the space again to look behind the switchgear, but in doing so his left foot missed the duct and he fell and injured his knee.

The plaintiff sought damages for personal injuries, alleging negligence by the defendants in failing to cover the duct with a grill, and negligence and breach of regulation 26 of the Regulations for the Generation, Transformation, Distribution and Use of Electricity, 1908,[1] in failing adequately to light that part of the sub-station where the duct was situated. The defendants denied negligence and any breach of the regulation.

[1] Electricity Regulations, 1908 (S.R. & O. 1908, No. 1312), reg. 26: "All those parts of premises in which "apparatus is placed shall be ade- "quately lighted to prevent danger."

1955

Lane v. London Electricity Board.

On the issue of negligence, Parker L.J. found that there was no lack of reasonable care on the part of the defendants by their failure to cover the duct between the transformer and the switchgear. He rejected the plaintiff's evidence that the centre light in the sub-station had failed, thus causing a shadow in the space where the duct was situated; and found that the light was not inadequate. Accordingly, he held that there was no breach by the defendants of their common law duty towards the plaintiff.

The case is reported only on the question of breach of statutory duty.

Humfrey Edmunds for the plaintiff.
W. L. Mars-Jones for the defendants.

The following case was cited in argument: Gatehouse v. John Summers & Sons Ld.[2]

Parker L.J. stated the facts, reviewed the evidence, held that there was no breach by the defendants of their common law duty, and continued: Lastly there remain the regulations. The wording of regulation 26 is: "All those parts of premises in which "apparatus is placed shall be adequately lighted to prevent "danger." That is an absolute obligation, irrespective of questions of reasonable care which arise at common law.

It is argued on the part of the defendants that although that regulation admittedly applied because the sub-station was in part working, the injury to the plaintiff did not result from any danger within the meaning of the regulation, "danger" being defined by the regulations in the following terms: "Danger means danger "to health or danger to life or limb from shock, burn, or other "injury to persons employed, or from fire attendant upon the "generation, transformation, distribution, or use of electrical "energy."

In my opinion the words "or other injury" must be read in this context strictly ejusdem generis with "shock" or "burn"; in other words with "or other injury" due to electrical energy, for this reason: it is to be observed that whenever the phrase "so as "to prevent danger" and the like appears in the regulations, as it does, for example, in regulations 2, 3, 5, 7, 8, the regulations are all clearly referring to danger from electricity. On the other hand there are certain regulations where that form of words is not used: for example, regulation 6, which provides that "every "electrical joint and connection shall be of proper construction "...", and regulation 30, which provides: "Every sub-station "shall be substantially constructed, and shall be so arranged "that no person other than an authorised person can obtain

[2] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 742; [1953] 2 All E.R. 117.

" access thereto otherwise than by the proper entrance, or can " interfere with the apparatus or conductors therein, from " outside; and shall be provided with efficient means of ventila- " tion and be kept dry " which, of course, refers to matters quite apart from the risks arising from the use of electricity.

1955

LANE v. LONDON ELECTRICITY BOARD.

Parker L.J.

In my view the plaintiff cannot bring himself within regulation 26, although even if he could, he has not satisfied me that the lighting in this case was inadequate.

In those circumstances this claim must fail.

Judgment for defendants.

Solicitors: Rowley, Ashworth & Co.; Gardiner & Co.

E. M. W.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.]

*REGINA v. ROSSI.

1955
Jan. 24.

[PRACTICE NOTE.]

Cassels, Streatfeild and Slade JJ.

Criminal Law—Practice—Report on prisoner—Age—Date of birth to be stated in police and prison reports.

APPLICATION for leave to appeal against sentence.

Jacob Yahuda for the appellant.
H. F. Cassel for the Crown.

CASSELS J. The appellant pleaded guilty at the Middlesex Sessions to shopbreaking and was sentenced by the assistant chairman to three years' corrective training. He now appeals against his sentence. He does not appeal against his conviction because he cannot very well. He seems to have been the driver of a motor-car, and in fact was arrested close to it, which had been used in some shopbreaking of jeweller's premises. When he was arrested, a stolen clock and some other articles were found in his pocket. It was a serious case meriting serious punishment and, indeed, it was pointed out to the court that he had on December 20, 1939, at the Clerkenwell magistrates' court been convicted of two cases of larceny and sentenced to five and five months' imprisonment concurrent, and on April 3, 1943, he had been sentenced at the North London court to three and three months' imprisonment consecutive for receiving. Those two convictions, if they had been given at the requisite age, would now have qualified the appellant for a sentence of corrective training which in fact was passed, but the evidence which was put before the court was that he was 31. We are now informed that that was due to a mistake made by prosecuting counsel and that in fact he was 32, so that in truth he was really qualified for corrective training, but the evidence before the court that he was 31 clearly indicated that he was under 17 when the first of the qualifying convictions was passed upon him. That being so, and bearing in mind that for 12 years he has kept himself free from trouble, that he has certain responsibilities, and that this offence may well have been attributable to a certain amount of drink taken and keeping bad companions, this court has come to the conclusion in the circumstances of the case that there may be a reduction made in the sentence passed.

1955

REGINA v. ROSSI.

But there is one other observation the court desires to make and that is that where age is of importance for the consideration of the court, it is necessary that in police or prison reports which are presented to the court the prisoner's date of birth should be stated lest any mistake should be made in calculating what his age was at the time when he received the necessary qualifying conviction. If the date of birth is not stated and merely his age is given, which in the present case was stated to be 31, it is easy for the court to make a mistake in calculating what the prisoner's age really was at any particular time. As the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, makes provision for so many different types of sentences to be passed, and many of them depend upon the actual age of the prisoner at the time, this seems to the court to be of very great importance. We, therefore, suggest that in future no report about a prisoner should omit the date of his birth if the prisoner is being put before the court as one requiring a sentence either of corrective training or preventive detention.

In the circumstances of the present case this court reduces the sentence from three years' corrective training to imprisonment for 18 months.

Sentence varied.

E. M. W.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1955
Jan. 20.

*MORRISSEY v. GALER.

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Streatfeild JJ.

Public Health—Nuisance—Animal—Statute providing that "animals "kept in such a place or manner as to be prejudicial to health or "a nuisance" shall be a statutory nuisance—By-law prohibiting the keeping of noisy animals causing nuisance—Whether ultra vires —"Serious"—Public Health Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 & 1 Edw. 8, c. 49), s. 92—Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 51), s. 249 (4).

By-law—Validity.

Justices convicted a man for an offence against a local authority by-law prohibiting the keeping in any premises "any noisy animal "which shall be or cause a serious nuisance to residents in the " neighbourhood." Quarter sessions quashed the conviction holding that the by-law was ultra vires as it dealt with the same subject-matter as section 92 of the Public Health Act, 1936, under which " any animal kept in such a place or manner as to be prejudicial " to health or a nuisance " is a statutory nuisance. On appeal by the local authority:—

Held, that section 92 of the Public Health Act, 1936, on its true construction dealt with nuisances arising from premises in which animals were kept, i.e., insanitary or defective premises, and not with noisy animals; that the by-law was not ultra vires as it did not deal with the same subject-matter; and that quarter sessions were wrong and must hear and determine the appeal.

CASE STATED by West Kent Quarter Sessions.

An information was preferred by the appellant, James John Galer, against the respondent, Walter Benedict Morrissey, alleging that he, between November 15 and December 17, 1953, at Harrietsham, Kent, unlawfully kept noisy animals, namely greyhounds, which had caused a serious nuisance to residents in the neighbourhood contrary to a by-law made by the Kent County Council. The by-law provided: " No person shall keep within " any house, building, or premises any noisy animal which shall " be or cause a serious nuisance to residents in the neighbour- " hood." It also provided that proceedings for an offence should not be taken unless the nuisance had continued after the expiration of a fortnight from the date of a service of a notice alleging serious nuisance, signed by not less than three householders residing within hearing of the animal, and it was expressed to apply to all parts of the administrative county of Kent except such parts as are within any municipal borough.

On January 27, 1954, the respondent was convicted by the Bearsted justices, whereupon he appealed to quarter sessions. At the hearing of his appeal quarter sessions found that the by-law was made by the Kent County Council in pursuance of section 249 of the Local Government Act, 1933,[1] and was confirmed by the Secretary of State to come into operation on June 1, 1951.

It was contended by the respondent that the by-law was ultra vires the county council since (a) there was no real difference between it and the provisions of section 92 of the Public Health Act, 1936; (b) that if the animals were a nuisance the matter could be dealt with under that section; and (c) that since the by-law merely reiterated the provisions of an Act of Parliament it was nugatory.

It was contended by the county council (a) that the by-law was supplementary to the provisions of section 92 of the Public

[1] Local Government Act, 1933, s. 249, provides: " (1) A county " council . . . may make bye-laws for " the good rule and government of " the whole or any part of the county " . . . and for the prevention and " suppression of nuisances therein: " . . .

" (4) Where by or under any enact- " ment in force in any area provision " is made for the prevention and sup- " pression in a summary manner of " any nuisance, power to make bye- " laws under this section for that " purpose shall not be exercisable as " respects that area."

1955

MORRISSEY v. GALER.

Health Act, 1936 [2]; (b) that it was enforceable in a different manner and by a wider class of persons than the provisions of the statute, and (c) that as the by-law had been made by a public representative body and confirmed by the Secretary of State it ought to be benevolently interpreted and supported.

Quarter sessions were of opinion that the by-law was ultra vires because the provisions of section 92 of the Public Health Act, 1936, were wider than those of the by-law and they accordingly allowed the appeal. The county council appealed to the Divisional Court.

A. Melford Stevenson Q.C., B. R. Clapham and P. W. Gibbings for the county council.

A. Conolly Gage for the respondent.

Case cited in argument: Thomas v. Sutters.[3]

LORD GODDARD C.J. The by-law in question provides: "No "person shall keep within any house, building, or premises, any "noisy animal which shall be or cause a serious nuisance to "residents in the neighbourhood." I think it is a pity that the word "serious" was put in, because that may give rise to a great deal of dispute. If a nuisance is proved, it is a nuisance whether it is a serious nuisance or not, and it is entirely a matter for the justices to say whether they think it is serious or not. If the justices thought it was not a very bad nuisance they might refuse to convict, but, generally speaking, in law a thing is either a nuisance or it is not. However, we are not concerned with that point.

There are provisions in the by-law that before proceedings can be taken there has to be a notice given by not less than three householders to the person concerned. The point taken before quarter sessions was that the by-law is bad because the subject-matter is already dealt with by the Public Health Act, 1936, s. 92, and it is conceded, and no one doubts, that if the statute deals with precisely the same matter, the by-law would be ultra vires because if it deals with the same matter as the statute there is no necessity for it, and if it tries to go beyond the statute it is bad.

In my opinion it is perfectly clear that the by-law does not deal with the same matter with which the section deals. Section 92 of the Public Health Act, 1936, creates a statutory nuisance where "any animal is kept in such a place or manner "as to be prejudicial to health or a nuisance." It is the keeping,

[2] Public Health Act, 1936, s. 92, provides: "(1) Without prejudice to "the exercise by a local authority of "any other powers vested in them by "or under this Act, the following "matters may . . . be dealt with "summarily, and are in this part of "this Act referred to as 'statutory "'nuisances,' that is to say:— . . . "(b) any animal kept in such a place "or manner as to be prejudicial to "health or a nuisance; . . ."

[3] [1900] 1 Ch. 10; 16 T.L.R. 7.

1955

MORRISSEY v. GALER.

Lord Goddard C.J.

that is to say, the conditions under which the animal is kept, which may create a nuisance and in respect of which an abatement notice can be served. That does not deal with a noisy animal. A noisy animal may be kept in the most sanitary conditions and yet still be a nuisance. What puts this matter beyond doubt is that one finds this provision in Part III of the Act, which is headed "Nuisances and Offensive Trades," containing a fasciculae of sections, all dealing with premises. Section 92 deals, for example, with factories, houses unfit for human habitation and smoke nuisance, all matters which come from insanitary or defective premises. It is clear, to my mind, that section 92 is dealing with such matters and applies to the common case of pigs being kept so near to other houses as to cause a nuisance from effluvia or where animals are kept in such a manner or place that a nuisance arises. It does not deal with noisy animals at all.

Mr. Stevenson has called the attention of the court to certain local Acts in which local authorities have taken power to deal expressly with noisy animals and have taken that power under section 92. That is a recognition by Parliament that noisy animals do not come within section 92, but I am not relying simply on those private Acts but on the construction of the section. I am quite clear that it does not deal with noisy animals at all; therefore, the by-law is perfectly good and the case must go back to quarter sessions with a direction that their decision that it is ultra vires is wrong and they must hear the appeal on the merits.

CASSELS J. I agree.

STREATFEILD J. I agree.

Case remitted.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. for R. P. Tunstall, Maidstone; Monkton, Son & Collis, Maidstone.

E. M. W.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* TREVETT AND ANOTHER v. LEE AND ANOTHER.

C. A.

1955 Jan. 12.

Evershed M.R., Birkett and Parker L.JJ.

[Plaint No. K73A.]

Nuisance—Highway—Obstruction—Hosepipe laid across highway by frontager—Whether unreasonable use of highway. Contributory negligence—Standard applicable—Analogy with negligence—Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945 (8 & 9 Geo. 6, c. 28), ss. 1, 4.

The defendants' house fronted on a country road carrying little but local traffic. The house, although equipped with water sanitation, was not connected with a water main and in time of drought,

C. A.

1955

TREVETT v. LEE.

when the supply of rain water ran out, the defendants were accustomed to lay a small garden hosepipe across the road to enable water to be brought by gravity from a water supply on the other side of the road to their premises. On March 21, a woman on the road delivering milk fell over the hosepipe and was injured. She and her husband claimed damages against the defendants on the ground of negligence and nuisance. The county court judge held that, if there were any negligence on the part of the defendants, the first plaintiff had been guilty of such contributory negligence, in failing to step over the pipe, as to extinguish her claim in negligence. The plaintiffs appealed against the further holding of the judge that the hosepipe did not constitute a nuisance:—

Held, that there were two kinds of rights in a highway—that of the ordinary member of the public to use a highway, and that of the owner of a house abutting on a highway to use it for access to his house and for purposes properly connected with its use—and that the question whether a householder was or was not obstructing a highway, so as to give rise to a cause of action, was to be judged by balancing, on standards of reasonableness, the claims and conduct of the householder on the one side and those of members of the public on the other; that the question was one of fact; and that the judge, having found that the defendants' conduct in laying the pipe across the highway, in the circumstances of the case, did not constitute a nuisance, the appeal should be dismissed.

Observations of Romer L.J. in Harper v. G. N. Haden & Sons Ld. [1933] Ch. 298, 319, 320, and Devlin J. in Farrell v. John Mowlem & Co. Ld. [1954] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 437, 439 applied.

Quaere (1) whether a hosepipe laid across a highway by a member of the public who was not a frontager would constitute an obstruction; (2) whether, having regard to the provisions of sections 1 and 4 of the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945, the same standard of contributory negligence as is applicable in claims for negligence is also applicable to claims based on nuisance.

APPEAL from Judge Armstrong sitting at Dorchester County Court.

In this action Mrs. Mary Blanche Trevett, the first plaintiff, and her husband, Victor Thomas Trevett, the second plaintiff, claimed damages for personal injury suffered by the first plaintiff, against the defendants Mrs. Betty Lee and her husband Ray Lee. The defendants were the owners of a dwelling-house which abutted on Clay Lane, Puncknoll, Dorset. The house had water sanitation, but was not connected with any public water supply. In times of drought, when the rain water in their tank failed, the defendants were accustomed to lay a hosepipe of a half-inch interior diameter across the road, which brought water by gravity from a tank on the opposite side of the road to the defendants' tank. On March 21, 1953, Mrs. Trevett was delivering milk for her husband and, although she saw the pipe, she failed to step over it and her heel caught in it and she fell and injured her back. The plaintiffs claimed damages on the ground of negligence and nuisance.

The county court judge dismissed the action, holding that, if there had been negligence, Mrs. Trevett had been guilty of such contributory negligence as to extinguish her right to damages, and, secondly, that the defendants, by laying the hosepipe across the highway, had not created a nuisance. He assessed the damage, if the plaintiffs were entitled to damages, at £350.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Raymond Stock for the plaintiffs.
Robert Hughes for the defendants.

The following cases were cited in argument in addition to those referred to in the judgment: Vanderpant v. Mayfair Hotel Co. Ld.[1]; Lingké v. Mayor, etc., of Christchurch[2]; Attorney-General v. Brighton and Hove Co-operative Supply Association[3]; Almeroth v. W. E. Chivers & Sons Ld.[4]

EVERSHED M.R. This case arose out of an unfortunate accident which occasioned to the first plaintiff, Mrs. Mary Blanche Trevett, personal injuries in a country lane on March 21, 1953. Mrs. Trevett was, on the morning of that day, as agent for or servant of her husband, the second plaintiff, engaged upon delivering milk on a milk round, and she was proceeding up a highway known as Clay Lane, Puncknoll, in the County of Dorset. She came to a point on that lane where the highway passed and butted upon the premises of the defendants. It appears that the defendants' house, being erected immediately adjacent to the road, was so equipped and furnished that it had water sanitary arrangements, but it was not upon any general or public supply of water. For domestic and other uses the water for the defendants' house was accumulated in ordinary circumstances from rainfall in a tank on the premises, but, in time of dry weather, that tank was not sufficient for the ordinary requirements of the house judged by the ordinary standards of living of today. On the other side of this lane from the defendants' house, however, there was a tank or water supply fed from an artesian well or a spring, and that supply, even in periods of drought, was always adequate and enabled water to be taken from it to supply the ordinary needs of the defendants.

The method which, according to the evidence, the defendants adopted, when these dry conditions made it necessary or desirable for them to do so, was that they made use of a small garden hosepipe of an internal diameter of half an inch. This pipe was attached to the tank or supply on the far side of the road and laid across the surface of the road, not at right angles to the direction of the road, but somewhat at an angle, into the premises of the defendants. In the course of time—it took normally, I gather, a matter of a few hours—by process of gravity water from the supply on the far side of the road filled the tank which

[1] [1930] 1 Ch. 138.
[2] [1912] 3 K.B. 595; 28 T.L.R. 536.
[3] [1900] 1 Ch. 276; 16 T.L.R. 144.
[4] [1948] 1 All E.R. 53.

C. A.
1955
TREVETT
v.
LEE.
Evershed M.R.

was on the defendants' premises and thereby gave to the defendants the required supply of water for their domestic purposes.

On the morning of March 21, 1953, this process of taking water by means of a hosepipe was being employed by the defendants. Mrs. Trevett, proceeding up the hill with crates of milk bottles in each hand, saw the pipe. When she came to it, however, she misjudged her stride. Instead of stepping clean over it, her heel trod upon the pipe, the pipe rolled or moved under the weight of her heel, Mrs. Trevett was anxious that she should not break the milk bottles if it could be avoided and, as a consequence of her attempts to save the bottles, she lost her balance and fell heavily and suffered injuries to her person, which caused her pain, and in respect of which (if damages were proper to be awarded) the judge arrived at a figure by way of compensation of £350. It will be seen, therefore, that from Mrs. Trevett's point of view her accident was not unsubstantial, and that it was on any view of it most unfortunate for her that she suffered as she did.

It does not follow that because a man or a woman falls in the street and is hurt, or even grievously hurt, somebody else ought to pay damages, either for nuisance or negligence, or on any other ground, though I sometimes confess to a feeling that that view is apt to be somewhat generally entertained.

Mrs. Trevett and her husband sought to recover damages from the defendants, both on the ground of nuisance and negligence. The alleged negligence was, according to the claim, that the defendants had insufficiently warned passers-by of the presence of the pipe. Upon that question the judge's conclusion was that any negligence of that character (if such there was) was extinguished altogether by the contributory negligence of Mrs. Trevett, in failing to step over the pipe.

Since this matter of contributory negligence will arise again hereafter, I desire to state somewhat carefully that upon this matter the fault is, in my view, to be judged in the light of the alleged negligence of the defendants, which was failure to draw attention to the presence of the pipe, and—I am reading from the judgment—"if necessary, to assist persons over it." It was established that the plaintiff saw the pipe, and she was not infirm. And the claim in this court has been, not upon the ground of negligence, but upon the other head of nuisance. I therefore need say no more upon the negligence part of the case than that, so far as I can see, there is no ground upon which the judge's findings in respect of it could be successfully challenged.

The case based on nuisance has been of a much more formidable character and has led to arguments to which I for one am much indebted for their skill and interest. Clay Lane was a highway, and it is axiomatic, as a general proposition, that a man who obstructs a highway commits, and is liable to be charged in respect of the commission of, a public nuisance. But that short statement is in truth somewhat of an over-simplification, for there is no doubt that not every obstruction of a highway constitutes a public nuisance. It is also well established that a private individual can only sue in respect of a public nuisance if he or she suffers some special damage as a result of it. So far as this case is concerned, that last point may be laid aside, for if there was here a public nuisance and if Mrs. Trevett's injuries were properly attributable to the existence of that nuisance, then beyond a peradventure she did suffer special damage as a result of it.

The law as regards obstructions to highways is conveniently stated in a passage in Salmond on Torts, 11th ed., p. 303: "A "nuisance to a highway consists either in obstructing it or in "rendering it dangerous," and then a number of examples are given, which seem to me to show that, prima facie, at any rate, when you speak of an obstruction to a highway, you mean something which permanently or temporarily removes the whole or part of the highway from public use altogether. To take the simplest and most obvious case, if I erect a fence or a wall half way across the road, I obstruct it, because to that extent the road ceases to be usable at that point as such. The alternative in the text which I read ("or in rendering it dangerous") adds a different conception of wrongful interference, namely, the putting upon a highway of something which, though it does not obstruct, that is, bar the highway in the sense that I have already mentioned, yet is liable to make it dangerous. Again, one example will suffice: if I make a small hole in the highway difficult to see, or put some greasy substance upon it, so that treading in the hole or on the substance is liable to cause a man to fall as a natural consequence of doing so, then it may be that I have caused a nuisance to the highway, not by obstructing it, but by rendering it dangerous.

In the present case the judge in the course of his very careful judgment used this language: "With regard to the claim on the "ground of nuisance, I am satisfied that if the pipe had been "placed where it was by an ordinary member of the public it "would amount to a nuisance, in that it obstructed the highway "substantially in the case of cyclists and to a certain extent in "the case of ordinary pedestrians." Mr. Stock contended that that was a finding of fact, and there being some evidence upon which the finding can be based it was accordingly conclusive in this court. I do not myself regard, and I do not think it is possible to regard, as a finding of fact a conclusion based upon an hypothesis: "I am satisfied that if the pipe had been placed "where it was by an ordinary member of the public it would "amount to a nuisance," etc. For my part, I am not entirely satisfied as at present advised (if it were necessary to come to a conclusion upon this matter) that I should agree with the judge's statement. By the phrase "an ordinary member of the "public," I take the judge to be referring to a person, other than an adjoining houseowner, who put the pipe there for some

C. A.
1955
TREVETT
v.
LEE.
Evershed M.R.

purposes of his own. He is saying, in other words, that, if a member of the public—though perhaps he would hardly be regarded as " ordinary "—for no purpose except for his own whim or entertainment laid a hosepipe across a road, that person would be creating a nuisance. I prefer upon that matter to express no final view. I am not satisfied, as at present advised, whether a pipe of this dimension would be an obstruction within the sense in which I think that word is used. On the other hand, particularly having regard to the evidence, it may well be that such an object is potentially dangerous if, as happened in this case, somebody just treading on it is liable by movement of the pipe to be cast off his or her balance and thereby to sustain a fall.

Let me, however, assume in Mr. Stock's favour and as the judge indicated, that the presence of this pipe on this morning in March, 1953, would prima facie have constituted the commission of a public nuisance on the part of the defendants who put it there. Then there remains what the judge called the more difficult question: Could the presence nevertheless be justified so as to discharge, so to say, the prima facie conclusion to which its presence would give rise?

Upon this part of the case Mr. Stock's argument briefly was this. He concedes that the owner or occupier of a house adjoining a highway may obstruct the highway in connexion with the use and enjoyment of his premises, but only to a very limited extent and in a closely restricted number of instances. It is generally conceded that a man may temporarily obstruct the highway by causing his motor-car or carriage to stop outside the house for the purpose of discharging passengers or goods going into the house. It is also clear on authority that, in certain circumstances at least, a man may temporarily block up more effectively part of the highway by erecting scaffolding on it. Mr. Stock's case is that the scaffolding cases are exceptional and are strictly related only to, and are justified only by, work of reparation or otherwise in connexion with the ordinary maintenance, repair, etc., of the house. For my part, I think the exception—and there is no doubt of its existence—which these illustrations indicate does not consist of a number of rather distinct and special examples, but resides in a broad principle, though the application of the principle in individual cases may be and often is a question of difficulty.

In order to state what I conceive the principle to be, I shall refer at once to two cases. The first is that of Harper v. G. N. Haden & Sons Ld.[1] That was a scaffolding case, but it is to be noted that the erection of the scaffolding by the householder was for the purpose, not of repair, but of adding another storey to the premises, which may be said perhaps to have been other than the ordinary use of premises. However that may be, this court held that, in the circumstances and on the facts of the case, the scaffolding did not amount to such a user or obstruction of the highway by the householder as rendered him liable as upon a public nuisance, because, as I follow it, the user was held in all the circumstances to be reasonable, judged both from the point of view of the householder and from the point of view of the other members of the public entitled as such to use the highway as such.

[1] [1933] Ch. 298.

I take as a sufficient citation from the case the language of Romer L.J. After referring to the observations of Vaughan Williams L.J. in Lingké v. Mayor, etc., of Christchurch,[2] Romer L.J. proceeds as follows[3]: "It seems to me to be eminently "reasonable that the owner of a house adjoining the highway "should be entitled to use it for the purpose of carrying into his "house the materials necessary for repairing and rebuilding it "when occasion so requires, and if in so doing he causes an "obstruction of the highway not greater in degree or longer in "duration than the necessity demands, the other members of the "public using the highway have no ground of complaint. In "Fritz v. Hobson[4] the obstruction caused by such an owner was "greater than the occasion required, and he was held liable to "the plaintiff who had been obstructed. But the right of the "defendant to create a reasonable obstruction was painly recog-"nized by Stirling J. So, too, in my judgment, is it permissible "for such an owner, subject of course to obtaining any neces-"sary licence from the local authorities, to erect and maintain "for a reasonable time scaffolding and hoardings on the highway "where he could not otherwise conveniently repair or rebuild his "house. The law relating to the user of highways is in truth the "law of give and take. Those who use them must in doing so "have reasonable regard to the convenience and comfort of "others, and must not themselves expect a degree of convenience "and comfort only obtainable by disregarding that of other "people. They must expect to be obstructed occasionally. It "is the price they pay for the privilege of obstructing others."

The judgment was, of course, related to the facts of that case, namely, scaffolding. But the two paragraphs I have read satisfy me that in expressing his views of the conduct of the defendants in that case, and in stating that in his opinion the defendants justifiably obstructed the highway by the use of the scaffolding in the way they used it, Romer L.J. was applying, not some special rule about scaffolding, but a general principle inherent in the nature of highways and the rights of people (both members of the public walking up and down them and adjacent house-holders) in regard to highways. In other words, he is saying, as I conceive it, that there are two kinds of rights: there is the right of the ordinary person, the ordinary member of the public, to use the highway for passage from one point to another; and

[2] [1912] 3 K.B. 595, 602.
[3] [1933] Ch. 298, 319, 320.
[4] (1880) 14 Ch.D. 542.

C. A.
1955
TREVETT
v.
LEE.
Evershed M.R.

there is the right of the householder to use the highway for access to his house and for other purposes properly connected with that use. And the question whether a householder is or is not obstructing the highway so as to give rise to a cause of action is to be judged by balancing, on standards of reasonableness, the claims and conduct of the householder on the one side and the members of the public on the other.

That, I think, is well illustrated by the language of Devlin J. in the most recent case, which Mr. Stock not unnaturally referred to because it related to a pipe across the pathway. Farrell v. John Mowlem & Co. Ld.[5] where Devlin J. used this language: "A person whose property adjoins the highway, for example, has "a right of access to and from his property and if, in the exer- "cise of that right of access, he causes as he may do sometimes "an obstruction to the public using the highway, the question is "whether the obstruction is reasonable or not. There are two "sets of rights which have to be met and resolved on the "ordinary principle that a reasonable exercise of both must be "allowed." I need read no more, because what I have read sufficiently indicates the point which I am trying to make.

In the present case the defendants own or occupy this house adjoining the highway. The house was not supplied by main supplies of water, but obviously a supply of water is required, not only reasonably, but necessarily for the ordinary living conditions of the defendants in their house, for cooking, washing and all the rest of it, apart from sanitary use. If, as adjoining owners, the defendants would be entitled to obstruct temporarily the highway by causing a vehicle to pause outside it and deliver goods, then prima facie they would be able to justify some similar obstruction for the purpose of delivering, not dry goods, but water.

The method adopted, as the evidence has shown, was that, in periods of drought, they took the water from the known source on the other side of the road, not by carrying it across in buckets, as I suppose they might have done (though it would have been a very laborious and unsatisfactory method), but by laying across the road a small garden pipe. Nobody who has enjoyed the advantages of possessing a garden has at some time or other failed to see a garden hosepipe lying on the lawn, and nobody, I should have thought, would be alarmed at the spectacle as being one potentially dangerous to anybody walking about the lawn. However, that is what the defendants did. They had been warned that they should not allow this pipe to remain in the dark, for then, seeing that the roads in modern times are so even and smooth, a person might well trip against it or catch his foot under it, and a cyclist might come to grief upon it. But not only that, the defendants according to the evidence recognized their duty to keep a lookout, so that, if they saw any person incapacitated or overburdened, they, or one of them, would give warning, and, if necessary, give assistance. All that appears to have been done.

[5] [1954] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 437, 439.

On all those special facts the question then remains, according to the principle which I have tried to state: was the user by the defendants of the highway in this manner reasonable, judged both from their own point of view and from the point of view of the other members of the public? For if so, the obstruction (if obstruction it were) would not constitute a public nuisance.

The judge held that the test was satisfied, that is, that in all the circumstances the user was reasonable. "The more difficult "question," he said, "is whether it can be justified as a "legitimate obstruction ancillary to the enjoyment of the "premises by the second defendant." Then, after dealing with a pleading point, he went on: "It is, I think, clear on the "authorities that the question is one of fact to be determined "in view of all the circumstances of the case including, of course, "the nature of the locality, the density of the traffic and the "extent and duration of the obstruction. This is a quiet village "street in no way comparable to a town street with pavements. "The interruption was only very occasional and temporary. In "so far as able-bodied pedestrians are concerned the obstruction "was of the slightest. On balance it seems to me, that carried "out with proper precautions, it is impossible to hold that this "operation was improper and beyond the rights of an occupier of "premises abutting on the highway."

In my judgment the judge correctly introduced that passage by his language, "the question is one of fact to be determined "in view of all the circumstances of the case"—assuming, of course, that the principle to which the facts are to be applied, or in relation to which they are to be judged, has been correctly apprehended. I see no reason to doubt in this case that it had been correctly apprehended. I think, accordingly, that the judge found as a fact, and that he was entitled on the evidence so to find, that here in all the circumstances what the defendants had done was reasonable. The judge having so found as a question of fact, I do not think that this court can, upon well established principles, possibly intervene; though in saying that I do not wish to be thought to hint that I feel doubt in my own mind of the correctness of the finding. So far as I have apprehended the case, the conclusion of fact is one at which, if it had been open to me, I think I should myself have arrived. However that may be, it was a finding of fact, I think the principles were properly stated. I think the evidence justified the conclusion, and I think as a result that the appeal must fail.

In the circumstances I prefer to say nothing about the one outstanding matter, namely, whether assuming (contrary to the conclusion I have stated) that this was a public nuisance giving to Mrs. Trevett a right of action, her claim was extinguished or alternatively diminished by her own conduct—what the judge

C. A.
1955
Trevett v. Lee.
Evershed M.R.

described later as the error of judgment in failing to step clean over the pipe.

Having regard to the language of sections 1 and 4 of the Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act, 1945, it is not open to doubt that in a claim for damages based on nuisance the defendant may set up and rely upon a fault consisting of what is commonly called contributory negligence, so as to reduce or extinguish his own liability. But because the judge held on the negligence claim that any liability of the defendants in negligence was wholly extinguished by the conduct or fault of the plaintiff, it does not, I think, necessarily follow that, in so far as the claim is based on nuisance, there would be a similar extinguishment of the plaintiff's claim. But in the circumstances I do not find it necessary to say anything more about it, and I therefore do not express any conclusion on the question whether the standard of fault in the two kinds of claim is the same or similar, nor do I express any view what would have been the result, had I held that there was a cause of action available to Mrs. Trevett based on nuisance.

For the reasons I have stated, the judge, in my view, was entitled to hold, as he did hold, that the conduct of the defendants in laying this pipe at the time and in the special circumstances in which it was laid across the road, did not constitute a public nuisance, and therefore I think that the action was rightly dismissed and that this appeal ought to fail.

Birkett L.J. I am entirely of the same opinion. I therefore would only say a very few words. The county court judge has decided this case upon the principle which was enunciated in the passage in Salmond on Torts, 11th ed., p. 259. After dealing with the question of what constitutes a nuisance and the circumstances in which there may be liability for that nuisance, the passage quoted continued: "But 'a balance has to be main-" 'tained between the right of the occupier to do what he likes " 'with his own, and the right of his neighbour not to be " 'interfered with.' Therefore there is an exception to the " general rule in the case of acts reasonably done which are neces-" sary for the common and ordinary use of land and houses. " In Bamford v. Turnley[6] Bramwell B. said: 'Those acts " 'necessary for the common and ordinary use and occupation of " 'land and houses may be done, if conveniently done' "—the meaning of the word "conveniently" was, of course, to use all reasonable care and skill—" 'without subjecting those who do " 'them to an action. . . .' "

The judge, in the passage which my Lord read in full, said: "On balance it seems to me that carried out with proper " precautions it is impossible to hold that this operation was " improper and beyond the rights of an occupier of premises

[6] (1862) 3 B. & S. 62, 83–4.

C. A.
1955
TREVETT v. LEE.

"abutting on the highway." I think that that conclusion was not merely right but was inevitable and, in my judgment, this judgment of the county court judge ought to be supported and this appeal ought to be dismissed.

PARKER L.J. I so entirely agree with both judgments that have just been delivered that I do not think I can usefully add anything, unless it be to sound a note of warning. In my opinion, the principle of which Harper's case [7] is really an example, is one which can only be applied when the facts are very special, as they are in this case. It is a principle which should be applied with extreme caution, but, on the facts found here by the county court judge, it is abundantly clear that he was entitled to apply the principle and to hold that the pipe in question did not amount to a nuisance. I would dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Barnes & Butler for J. W. Miller & Son, Poole; Gibson & Weldon for Andrew Wetherall & Co., Poole.

B. A. B.

[7] [1933] Ch. 298.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* HERN v. PALMER.

C. A.
1955
Jan. 12, 13.
Evershed M.R., Birkett and Parker L.JJ.

[Plaint H. No. 513.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Furnished letting—Evidence—Onus of proof—Evidence of landlord that premises almost fully furnished—No evidence of cost of furniture or of value to tenant—Landlord's application for possession dismissed—Prima facie case of a furnished letting—Retrial—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 12 (2) (i)—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 32), s. 10 (1).

The landlord was the owner of premises within the Rent Acts which she advertised to let as furnished premises. The tenant having inspected the premises, himself drafted a tenancy agreement between the landlord and himself, in which he agreed to take a tenancy of part of the premises, which were described as partly furnished, for one year at a weekly rental of £2 10s. The landlord having given to the tenant notice to quit sought to recover possession. The tenant claimed the protection of the Rent Acts, alleging that the premises were not furnished premises. The landlord gave evidence of the circumstances of the letting and of the furniture in each of the three rooms and kitchenette let. According to this evidence, the rooms were all fully furnished with a reasonable amount of furniture, except that the dining room had no table,

C. A.

1955

Hern
v.
Palmer.

the bedroom had no bed and the kitchenette was without a gas stove. She alleged that the tenant stated that he wished to supply these articles himself. She gave no evidence as to the cost of the furniture, or of its value to the tenant. She was cross-examined and it was not suggested to her that the furniture was valueless. At the close of the plaintiff's evidence, the tenant called no evidence, but counsel on his behalf submitted that no evidence had been given in accordance with the requirements of section 10 (1) of the Act of 1923, that the amount of the rent fairly attributable to the use of the furniture, regard being had to the value of the same to the tenant, formed a substantial portion of the whole rent. The county court judge accepted that submission and gave judgment for the tenant:—

Held (1) that notwithstanding the absence of any evidence of the capital value of the furniture included in a letting, or of any evidence of its value to the tenant, or to the landlord, the court, while having regard to the provisions of section 10 (1) of the Act of 1923, could infer that the premises were let as furnished or partly furnished premises and that the amount of rent fairly attributable to the use of the furniture formed a substantial part of the whole rent. (2) That in the special circumstances of the case, there was evidence on which the judge could and should have concluded that the onus on the question of substantiality under section 10 (1) had been discharged by the landlord, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, and that the case should be remitted for a rehearing and further that, this being a Rent Act case, notwithstanding the fact that the tenant had elected to call no evidence, at the rehearing he would not be bound by such election.

Roppel v. Bennett [1949] 1 K.B. 115; 64 T.L.R. 452; [1948] 2 All E.R. 627 distinguished.

Per curiam. In cases of this character, evidence ought to be given of the capital value of the furniture and of the value of that furniture to the tenant, so that material is before the county court judge on which he can decide according to the tenor and meaning of section 10 (1) of the Act of 1923.

Appeal from His Honour Judge Gerwyn Thomas sitting at Cardiff County Court.

In these proceedings the plaintiff, Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Hern, sought to recover possession of those parts of No. 13 Stockland Street, Grangetown, Cardiff, which she had let to the defendant Kenneth John Palmer.

Early in 1953, the landlord advertised the premises to let as furnished premises. The tenant had viewed the premises and seen the furniture which was in them and he had himself assessed the rent payable in respect of them at £2 10s. per week. The tenant had himself drawn up the tenancy agreement dated April 13, 1953. It provided as follows: "No. 13 Stockland Street, "Grangetown, Cardiff. Monday, April 13, 1953. We the under-"signed do hereby agree to the following terms for the tenancy "of part of the above premises: (1) Partly furnished (a) Front "Room, (b) Front Bedroom, (c) Dining Room and (d) Kitchen-"ette. (2) Rental at £2 10s. 0d. per week payable one month in "advance. (3) Minimum period of tenancy, 6 months, 1 year. "(4) The tenant shall keep the premises clean and decorate to "respectability."

The landlord served notice on the tenant to quit on April 13, 1954. The tenant having failed to quit, the landlord brought these proceedings to recover possession. The tenant's defence was that he was entitled to the protection of the Rent Acts.

At the hearing the landlord gave evidence as to the furniture in the three rooms and kitchenette the subject of the tenancy. It appeared from her evidence that the amount of furniture in each room was considerable and that they were, in effect, fully furnished, with the exception that there was no table in the dining room, no bed in the bedroom, and no gas stove in the kitchenette. With regard to these items, the landlord said that the tenant had told her he wished to provide them himself. The landlord gave no evidence as to the condition or value of the furniture beyond stating that the bedroom suite was new. In cross-examination it was not put to her that the furniture was of no value. At the close of her evidence, the tenant elected to call no evidence. Counsel submitted on his behalf that the plaintiff had not established that the amount of rent fairly attributable to the use of the furniture formed a substantial portion of the whole rent, so as to bring the case within the proviso to section 12 (2) (i) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920,[1] as amended by section 10 (1) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923.[2] The county court judge accepted that submission and gave judgment for the tenant. He ordered that the standard rent of the premises should be fixed by the registrar, who held that the standard rent was 16s. 1d. a week.

The landlord appealed.

John Wilmers for the landlord.
Aubrey Myerson and Miss D. M. Rowland for the tenant.

EVERSHED M.R. I will ask Birkett L.J. to deliver the first judgment.

BIRKETT L.J. This is in many respects a most unusual appeal. It is an appeal by the plaintiff, Sarah Elizabeth Hern, against a judgment by Judge Gerwyn Thomas at the Cardiff County Court on October 13, 1954. The landlord brought an action against the tenant for possession of premises at No. 13 Stockland Street,

[1] Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 12 (2): "... Provided that—(i) this "Act shall not, ... apply to a dwelling-house bona fide let at a rent "which includes payments in respect "of ... use of furniture ..."

[2] Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923, s. 10 (1): "For "the purposes of s. 12 (2), proviso (i), "of the principal Act (which relates "to the exclusion of dwelling-houses "from the principal Act in certain "circumstances), a dwelling-house "shall not be deemed to be bona fide "let at a rent which includes payments in respect of attendance or the "use of furniture unless the amount "of rent which is fairly attributable "to the attendance or the use of the "furniture, regard being had to the "value of the same to the tenant, "forms a substantial portion of the "whole rent."

C. A.
1955
HERN
v.
PALMER.
Birkett L.J.

Grangetown, Cardiff, and in the particulars of claim she alleged that these premises were let furnished to the tenant under a tenancy agreement of April 13, 1953, which, she said, had been determined by a notice to quit on April 13, 1954.

When these particulars of claim were delivered in that form, namely, "Here is a claim claiming possession of furnished "premises," a request was made on behalf of the tenant to deliver further and better particulars of that claim and also asking for some particulars about the annual value of the property. Those particulars were given, and it was said: "The ground on "which possession is claimed is, the premises were let to the "tenant as furnished premises, and are not subject to the Rent "Acts." So far as the landlord was concerned, therefore, her case was simple: she was saying, "I am claiming possession of "premises which are not governed by the provisions of the Rent "Acts inasmuch as the premises in question are furnished."

Thereupon a defence was put in which by paragraph 2 made it plain that the defence was that the premises were protected by the provisions of the Rent Acts.

The case is unusual in that the agreement made between the landlord and the tenant whereby the tenant went into possession of these premises was, as I understand it, drawn up by the tenant himself. In that agreement, which was dated April 13, 1953, it was said: "No. 13 Stockland Street, Grangetown, Cardiff. "Monday, April 13th, 1953. We the undersigned do hereby "agree to the following terms for the tenancy of part of the "above premises: (1) Partly furnished (a) Front Room, (b) Front "Bedroom, (c) Dining Room and (d) Kitchenette. (2) Rental at "£2 10s. per week payable one month in advance. (3) Minimum "period of tenancy 6 months, 1 year. (4) The tenant shall keep "the premises clean and decorate to respectability."

After the case had been opened, the landlord went into the witness box and gave the particulars about the agreement, about the letting, about the notice to quit, and said that the tenant had drafted the agreement and he had fixed the rent himself after viewing the house and the furniture. Then she gave evidence about what the furniture was, and she dealt with each room in turn—the lounge, the dining room, the kitchenette, and the upstairs portion of the letting—and she dealt with the carpet on the stairs, and the lino, and so on. It was not suggested in cross-examination that the whole of that furniture was completely valueless, or anything of that kind.

All that was then before the county court judge was the evidence of the landlord of the furniture in the particular rooms, without anything at all having been said of its capital value. Nothing had been said of its value to the tenant. Something perhaps was said, but not very much, about whether the furniture was new or old, or what its state was. It was just left in that way. It did appear from the cross-examination—at least, that is where it appears in the notes—that these premises had been advertised as a furnished house to be let furnished. The tenant came and viewed the premises, saw the furniture, assessed the rent, drew up the agreement and entered into possession. When the notice to quit was served he raised the defence that the letting was governed by the provisions of the Rent Acts; in other words, that it was not a furnished letting.

[His Lordship read section 12 (2) (i) of the Act of 1920 and section 10 (1) of the Act of 1923, and continued:] The issue to be determined before the county court judge was clear: the landlord was saying, in effect, "This is a furnished dwelling"; the tenant was saying, "It is a dwelling which must be regarded "for the purposes of this trial as an unfurnished dwelling subject "to the provisions of the Rent Acts."

When the landlord had given evidence, and had been cross-examined, Mr. Myerson on behalf of the tenant thereupon said: "I shall call no evidence," and he made a submission to the county court judge that there was no case of substantiality proved. He referred to section 10 of the Act of 1923, and said that it had not been shown that the amount of the rent which was stated in the agreement fairly attributable to the use of the furniture formed a substantial portion of the whole rent. The judge accepted that submission, and said: "There is no evidence about "it, and therefore I must give judgment here for the defendant." The question is whether the judge ought to have done that.

The case is unusual because here was a house which contained this furniture specified by the landlord in each of the rooms. It is true that it was also given in evidence that the tenant brought a lot of furniture to the house himself. But here was a house which had been advertised as a furnished house; evidence had been given that in every room of the letting there had been the articles of furniture which were mentioned. The rent of the house, according to the evidence, had been fixed by the tenant himself after viewing the house and the furniture it contained.

The first question is: Was there here no case to answer, as the county court judge indicated, or had there been raised by the evidence a prima facie case which called for an answer by the tenant? It ought to be observed for the future that in cases of this kind a county court judge ought not to be left in the position in which the judge in this case was left. Evidence ought to be given of the capital value of the furniture, of the value of that furniture to the tenant, so that the material is before the judge on which he can decide according to the tenor and meaning of section 10 (1) of the Act of 1923. But in this case there was no evidence given of capital value; of any purchase price of any single article; of its condition at the time, or of its value to the tenant; there was no explanation given (in any detail, at any rate) of the necessity for the tenant to bring some of his own furniture, though the landlord when giving evidence did deal with that in some degree by saying, for example, with regard

C. A.
1955
HERN
v.
PALMER.
Birkett L.J.

to the dining room that the tenant wanted his own table; with regard to the kitchenette "he said he would require his own "cooker"; with regard to the bedroom suite upstairs he said he would prefer to provide his own bed. But nothing was really given in evidence to show that any of those were necessitated by the fact that there was not adequate furniture already in the house. So there was a most regrettable state of affairs, inasmuch as evidence which could have been given about capital value, cost, condition, and so on, was not given.

However, it does not by any means follow, I think, in the special circumstances of the case, that, because there was that lack, therefore there was no case to answer. On the other hand, the prima facie case which may be said to be raised upon the evidence lies here: First, it is a factor which is not to be ignored that the premises in question had in fact been advertised as a furnished letting, and I gather that it was because of that advertisement that the parties in the case came together; at any rate, the original ground upon which they met (so to speak) was the fact that the landlord had advertised the premises as a furnished letting. I think that that raises some presumption that the furniture that was in the premises was certainly of some considerable value and was regarded by the landlord as being adequate for the furnishing of the premises so that it could properly be described as a furnished dwelling.

Secondly, the tenant himself came and viewed the premises and saw the furniture and, as I understand it, after seeing it, himself fixed the rent of £2 10s. Upon that it is a matter of comment that when this case had been concluded before the county court judge, there was an order made that the standard rent of the premises should be ascertained by the registrar, and counsel went before the registrar, called the necessary evidence, and the registrar fixed the standard rent of the premises as 16s. 1d., which is a very great difference from the rent of £2 10s. which had been fixed by the tenant. It is quite true that, in the defence which the tenant put in in the court below, he said that the standard rent of the dwelling-house was 23s. inclusive of rates for the whole of the house, and 15s. for the portion which he himself occupied, but he himself had fixed the rent in the agreement under which he took possession of the premises at £2 10s. It seems to me that when a submission is made that there is no case to answer, there was on those two matters mentioned a prima facie case which required some answer by the tenant.

That being the situation, the question is: What is the right and proper thing to do? One had an uneasy feeling throughout the hearing of this appeal that the proceedings in the county court were very unsatisfactory; the real issue to be determined under section 10 (1) of the Act of 1923 was really not dealt with in evidence at all. No attempt was made specifically to show that the use of this furniture to the tenant was a substantial portion of the particular rent which had been reserved of £2 10s. But there again there was the undoubted fact that there had been the advertisement of a furnished letting, and that in every room there was the furniture which had been specified and detailed by the landlord, and the case in the county court turned merely upon this particular matter, that the judge said that the onus of proof of showing what he called substantiality within the meaning of the section had not been discharged by the landlord, and therefore there must be here judgment for the tenant.

The unfortunate character of that decision I think is apparent. One is left with an uneasy feeling that true justice has not been done. I quite appreciate that Mr. Myerson takes the view: "It was the duty of the landlord to discharge the onus of proof "and to call evidence with regard to capital value of the "furniture and to show that the conditions laid down in the "section had been fulfilled, and she did not do it. I was quite "entitled, therefore, to take advantage of that matter and to "say that that has not been proved." But all these various other matters to which I have referred did raise, in my view, a prima facie case, though not the adequate case that might have been presented if the evidence had been given in the way I have indicated and the capital value had been dealt with, and probably the cost of the furniture, the state of the furniture, the value of the furniture to the tenant, and the reason in more particulars why the tenant brought his furniture. If all that had been done, of course, the case would have been plain, but I do not for my own part think it very satisfactory that this case should be determined merely upon the submission made by Mr. Myerson that there was no evidence on this particular matter, when I think that there was some at any rate which required an answer. I think the more satisfactory thing would be that this case should go back for a rehearing, in order that the real matters in dispute shall be heard and shall be determined. I think further, with great respect to the county court judge, that the ordinary rule might here be followed that it should go back to another county court judge, who has not had the hearing which the present county court judge had, and who would have a mind that would be completely free from any of the former controversies.

In my view, therefore, this case should go back to a county court judge for determination of the real point at issue.

EVERSHED M.R. I am also of that opinion. I have in mind, like my brother, Roppel v. Bennett,[1] to which our attention was drawn. I am not, of course, seeking for a moment to qualify what this court laid down in Roppel v. Bennett,[1] nor, indeed, could I do so if I wished. I think, as Birkett L.J. has said, that the conduct of the landlord in failing to call any evidence whatever of the value of the furniture, either its capital

[1] [1949] 1 K.B. 115; 64 T.L.R. 452; [1948] 2 All E.R. 627.

C. A.
1955
HERN
v.
PALMER.
Evershed M.R.

value or the value to the landlord or the tenant, or to anybody else, was temerarious in the extreme; but I cannot myself accept the view that, in the absence of evidence of that nature, the court can never in any case or in any circumstances hold or infer that premises let as furnished or partly furnished premises are not to be treated as bona fide let at a rent which includes payment for the use of furniture—having regard, of course, to the terms of section 10 of the Act of 1923: that is to say, that it cannot be treated as so let, unless the amount of rent which is fairly attributable to the use of furniture forms a substantial portion of the whole rent.

As my brother has observed, there are in this case special (I would say very special) facts or circumstances relevant to the question at issue. I do not seek to repeat them all, but refer to the fact of the advertisement of the dwelling-house as furnished; to the fact that the tenancy agreement, or the note of it which was prepared by the tenant himself, described the premises as "Partly furnished front room, front bedroom, dining-room and "kitchenette"; and to the fact that the landlord, in the course of her evidence, alleged that that record was accurate, that this was the letting of a partly furnished dwelling-house—a proposition which was challenged, I understand, in cross-examination, but in respect of which the judge accepted the evidence of the landlord. I add, finally, that the tenant in his defence, though he had himself fixed the rent of £2 10s. per week, asserted that the standard rent of the premises, that is the rent of the premises unfurnished, was 15s. a week.

In the light of those and the other facts to which reference has already been made, it seems to me that there was here clearly evidence upon which the judge could conclude, and I venture to think without more should have concluded, that the onus in connexion with the so-called question of substantiality had been discharged by the landlord in the absence of any evidence to the contrary.

I again venture to refer to the words of the Act: "This Act "shall not, save as otherwise expressly provided, apply to a "dwelling-house bona fide let at a rent which includes payments "in respect of board, attendance, or use of furniture." If that had stood alone, it would have been incontrovertible that this was a letting at a rent which included payments in respect of the use of furniture, because the document which the tenant himself prepared so described it.

In the light of that fact, the remaining question is whether the amount of the rent was substantial. I do not repeat what I have said, but if this be treated as a jury question: aye or no, on the evidence as it was produced was there here a substantial amount of rent attributable to the furniture? I for my part think that the jury clearly could have answered, and I am of the opinion should have answered, that question affirmatively. But in any case, as my brother has observed, I think that if this appeal were dismissed and the matter allowed to rest where it is, there is, or would be, a grave likelihood of serious injustice being done. On that footing, as Mr. Myerson has conceded, the furniture which has been enumerated would be treated as in no way included in the letting. He says quite frankly that the landlord can take it away. But, if that is the result, then the conclusion is in flat contradiction to the bargain which the tenant himself recorded in writing, namely, that this was a partly furnished letting. It may, of course, be that, on a further investigation of the facts, it will be found that the amount attributable to the furniture in this case ought to be regarded as unsubstantial. That, however, is a question for future debate. I think that it would not be right to let the matter rest where it is, and I agree with the course which my brother has proposed. It reflects no criticism or disrespect whatever of the judge who tried this case that we should follow the almost invariable practice in this court of remitting the case for trial to another judge in the same district at some place and time convenient to the parties.

I only add this: it is a well-established principle in the practice of our law that, if a defendant elects to call no evidence, then, prima facie, his election is final, and if his submission, that is, the submission that he has no case to answer, ultimately fails, then in the ordinary case he cannot afterwards have another attempt by calling evidence to defeat the plaintiff's case. But this is a Rent Acts case, and Parliament has laid it down that the court shall not make an order for possession, unless it is satisfied on the various matters which Parliament has enumerated. In those circumstances, I think it would not be right, having regard to the special facts of this case, to treat the tenant as finally excluded from giving any evidence. For that reason I concur in the view which my brother has expressed, that this case should be remitted for rehearing, and the conduct of the parties at the rehearing will be unaffected by the election made by Mr. Myerson (not, if I may so, without some shrewdness) on the first occasion.

I think the appeal should be allowed.

PARKER L.J. I entirely agree with both judgments which have just been delivered and with the course proposed. There is nothing I can usefully add.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Jaques & Co. for D. Edmunds Rees, Caerphilly; Rhys Roberts & Co. for Leo Abse & Cohen, Cardiff.

B. A. B.

[LEEDS ASSIZES.]

1954
Nov. 23, 24, 25, 29.

Hallett J.

*JACKSON v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD.

[1953 J. No. 30.]

Mines and Minerals—Coal—Breach of statutory duty—Roof—"Reasonably practical" precautions—Security of travelling road and working place—Fall of roof occasioned by an explosion of abnormal character—Whether roof made secure—Coal Mines Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 50), ss. 49, 102 (8).

A shot-firer employed by the defendants in their coal mine was killed by a fall of roof occasioned by an explosion of a most abnormal character. He was carrying in a hessian bag, which was normally used for holding stemming materials, cartridges and detonators which, by the Coal Mines (Explosives) Order, 1951, he ought to have carried in his powder canister and detonator case respectively. He put the bag at the foot of the coal face within easy reach of a hole which he was stemming and, when he fired a shot in the hole, either some material projected as a result of the shot, struck the bag and caused an explosion, or the contents of the bag were set off by sympathetic action. The explosion displaced props supporting the roof, which collapsed and buried the shot-firer. In an action by the widow against the defendants for breach of section 49 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911:—

Held, (1) that, in the circumstances, the fall of roof did not establish a failure to make the roof secure as required by section 49.

Dictum of Lord Tucker in Marshall v. Gotham Co. Ld. [1954] A.C. 360, 374; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 812, 820; [1954] 1 All E.R. 937, 943 considered.

(2) That it was not reasonably practicable to make the roof secure from the effects of such an explosion and, even if the defendants had been in breach of their duty under section 49, they were protected from liability by section 102 (8) of the Act.

ACTION.

The following statement of the facts is taken from the judgment: The plaintiff, the widow and administratrix of Lawrence Jackson, deceased, claimed damages under the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908, and the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, against the defendants who were the owners of Crigglestone Colliery near Wakefield, and by whom the deceased was employed as a shot-firer, in respect of his death on December 16, 1952, when he was killed by being buried under a fall of roof. The plaintiff alleged breach of statutory duty by the defendants under section 49 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911,[1] by failing to make secure the roof of a travelling road and working place, and also negligence at common law. The defendants, in addition to denying these allegations, relied in the alternative on section 102 (8) [2] of the Act, in that it was not reasonably practicable to avoid or prevent such breach, and also alleged that the accident was caused solely or was contributed to by the breach of statutory duty and negligence of the deceased.

[Reported by G. M. SMAILES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

[1] Coal Mines Act, 1911, s. 49: "The roof and sides of every travelling road and working place shall be made secure, and a person shall not, . . . travel on or work in any travelling road or working place which is not so made secure."

The coal in the colliery was being worked by the "long wall" advancing" method. The first step in winning the coal was to undercut it by means of a cutter machine to a depth of 5 feet 6 inches from the face and a thickness of 5 inches, thus leaving the coal above the undercut unsupported. At an appropriate time shot holes were drilled in the face reaching to the same depth as the undercut. After the cutter and its crew had gone by the shot-firer came along and charged a shot hole, the charge consisting of two cartridges. The outer cartridge was primed by him with a detonator and he then stemmed the hole with stemming material carried in a hessian bag. He had a battery which was joined by a cable to the detonator leads and supplied the current to explode the detonator which in turn exploded the cartridges. The effect of a shot was to cause the coal to fall down into the undercut and a shot fired in the above manner should never normally cause a fall of roof and would be incapable of so doing.

The roof of the road running along the face was supported by bars and props, the bars being set against the roof at right angles to the face and each being supported by three props called the face prop, the middle prop and the gob prop respectively. The bars were adequate to support the roof and two props were adequate to support the bars. When the cutter was to begin its progress along the face it was necessary to remove the face props immediately ahead which would have got in the way of the cutter and for that reason the middle prop had to be set in the preceding shift. As soon as the cutter had gone by the face props were reset by one of the men following the machine and with the gob props were sufficient to support the roof without the middle props. In the next shift the conveyor belt had to be installed alongside the loose coal and that could not be done while the middle props were there.

The plaintiff contended that the fall which killed the deceased was caused, first, by the removal of middle props shortly after the coal cutter had done the undercutting and therefore before the roof had had time to settle, which practice was said to be likely to produce a fall of roof, and, secondly, by the firing of shots improperly close to the coal cutter and its crew. This explanation of the fall was rejected.

It was admitted on behalf of the plaintiff that the deceased

[2] S. 102 (8): "The owner of a "mine shall not be liable to an action "for damages as for breach of statu- "tory duty in respect of any contra- "vention of or non-compliance with "any of the provisions of this Act if "it is shown that it was not reason- "ably practicable to avoid or prevent "the breach."

1954

JACKSON v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD.

shot-firer had been guilty of breaches of regulations which had contributed to the fall, and it was found that the deceased was guilty of breaches of the following parts of the Coal Mines (Explosives) Order, 1951 (S.I. 1951, No. 1675): regulation 20 (2) which forbids shot-firers to charge any shot hole until the shot is about to be fired; regulation 7 (3) which provides that no cartridge shall be taken from the canister until it is required immediately for charging a shot hole; regulation 17 (2) which provides that no detonator shall be removed from the detonator case when not required for immediate use; regulation 25 (8) which prescribes that a cable not less than 20 yards in length shall be used when firing a single shot; regulation 28 (1) which requires the shot-firer to determine the danger zone likely to be created; and regulation 28 (2) which requires the shot-firer to ensure that all persons have withdrawn from the danger zone or have taken proper shelter, and to take proper shelter himself.

The theory of the defendants was that the deceased was carrying in his hessian stemming bag cartridges and detonators which he ought to have carried in his powder canister and detonator case respectively; that he put his stemming bag down in the normal place at the foot of the face within easy reach of the hole which he was stemming; that he fired the adjacent hole much too near to himself and the cutter crew, and that either some material projected as a result of the shot struck the hessian bag and so caused the explosion which produced all the otherwise inexplicable phenomena including the fall of roof, or possibly that the contents of the hessian bag being so close to the detonation in the shot hole were unintentionally set off by sympathetic action. A sufficiently strong explosion might displace a prop and, if one prop was displaced, it was likely to displace another and set up a series of displacements with a resulting fall of roof. The evidence was found to be sufficient to remove the defendants' theory from the category of speculation into that of reasonable inference.

G. Raymond Hinchcliffe Q.C. and R. Withers Payne for the plaintiff.

Geoffrey Veale Q.C. and A. B. Boyle for the defendants.

Cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 29. HALLETT J., after considering the evidence and stating the findings of fact summarized above, continued: I find that the fall of roof was occasioned solely by an explosion of a most abnormal character; that the explosion was caused in a most abnormal manner and by reason of numerous breaches on the part of the deceased, not only of regulations, but of obvious precautions for the safety of himself and others.

I must now turn to consider the law. The plaintiff primarily relies upon the provisions of section 49 of the Coal Mines Act, 1949. That section, however, has to be read in conjunction with section 102 (8) of the same Act.

As I shall have occasion to refer to Marshall v. Gotham Co. Ld.,[1] it might be as well to mention that the statutory provisions there under consideration were different. Regulation 7 (3) of the Metalliferous Mines General Regulations, 1938 (S.R. & O. 1938, No. 630) requires that the roof and sides of every travelling road, outlet and working place shall be made secure; but it was held by their Lordships in Marshall v. Gotham Co. Ld.[1] that the regulation must be read in conjunction with and qualified by the prefatory provisions contained in section 23 of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, that "the following general rules "shall, so far as may be reasonably practicable, be observed." It may be, therefore, that the duty in the case of a metalliferous mine is a qualified duty, although I am not sure that all their Lordships in the House of Lords took that view. However that may be, under section 49 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911, there is no question that the duty is an absolute one. Two questions then arise. First, was the roof here made secure? Secondly, if it was not and, accordingly, there was a breach of section 49, are the defendants protected from liability in damages in this action by reason of the provisions of section 102 (8) ?

It is obvious and not disputed that, if the roof or side of a travelling road or working place in a coal mine falls, there is very strong, and indeed save in most exceptional circumstances conclusive, evidence that the roof or side has not been made secure as required by section 49. Mr. Veale, however, has contended that in the exceptional circumstances of this case the plaintiff has failed to prove that the roof was not made secure. He says that a roof is secure if it falls solely by reason of such an abnormal and extraneous cause as the evidence discloses in this case. If, contrary to his contention, it be held by me that in this case there was a breach of the duty imposed by section 49, Mr. Veale further contends that the defendants are entitled to escape liability by reason of the provisions of section 102 (8). He argues that no system of support which it would be reasonably practicable to adopt would make a roof secure against such an event as the evidence discloses to have caused the fall of the roof in the present case. If he be right in this second contention, which depends upon the same view as to the cause of the fall, his first contention is superfluous; but he has pressed me to consider and deal with both contentions and I think it right to do so. Either contention is, of course, only possible upon my view of what caused the roof to fall, and it is partly for that reason that I have reviewed the facts and stated my findings about them before I dealt with the law. Unless the cause of the fall was that alleged by the defendants, it is to my mind quite clear and I think undisputed that both Mr. Veale's contentions

[1] [1954] A.C. 360; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 812; [1954] 1 All E.R. 937.

1954

Jackson v. National Coal Board.

Hallett J.

must fail and that, subject to the question of contributory negligence, the plaintiff must succeed. A fall due to removing props too soon is clearly foreseeable and it is clearly practicable to defer removing props until the proper time.

By way of authority upon the questions of law I have been referred to four cases only, which are as follows: Edwards v. National Coal Board [2]; Burns v. Joseph Terry & Sons Ld. [3]; Hayes v. National Coal Board,[4] and Marshall v. Gotham Co. Ld.[5]

As regards Mr. Veale's first contention, I can derive no assistance from Edwards v. National Coal Board.[2] The fall there was admittedly due to what is called a "glassy slant," which is a well-known kind of latent geological defect which had actually been observed in another place or places in the same roadway. Accordingly, it was not contended that the side had been made secure and, indeed, it was not alleged that anything whatever had been done to make it secure. Observations will be found in the judgments, for instance in that of Singleton L.J.,[6] which make that quite plain. Accordingly, the defendants relied solely on what for shortness we have called in the present case the "escape" section, which is section 102 (8). There is one passage perhaps in the report which is of some slight interest [7]: "On the "other hand, counsel for the plaintiff argues that nothing short of "some external interference by some unauthorized third person, "or some occurrence which could not reasonably be anticipated, "can excuse the breach of the absolute duty." Tucker L.J., however, who delivered the leading judgment, expressed the view that the argument for the plaintiff limited unduly the operation of the escape section. He and the other members of the court had no occasion to consider the point which arises here with regard to whether the roof had been made secure.

Hayes v. National Coal Board [4] is a decision of my own, and of the four cases I have mentioned certainly the one most in point. Until my attention was drawn to it last week and I was supplied with a transcript of my judgment, I had completely forgotten all about it, and, because I came to it with a completely fresh mind after two and a half years, I found it quite easy to reconsider it with an unbiased mind, and I certainly should have had no hesitation in expressing the view that I was wrong two and a half years ago if that was the conclusion to which I had now come; but, reviewing my judgment in that case in cold blood, I still think it is right, although I am not sure that some of my reasoning may not have been too widely expressed. In that case a stretcher party was taking out of the pit a very badly injured man when they found their passage obstructed by a tub standing upon the rails. Obviously it was undesirable for them to jolt

[2] [1949] 1 K.B. 704; [1949] 1 All E.R. 743; 65 T.L.R. 430.

[3] [1951] 1 K.B. 454; [1951] 1 T.L.R. 349; [1950] 2 All E.R. 987.

[4] Unreported (Leeds Spring Assize, April 29, 1952).

[5] [1954] A.C. 360.

[6] [1949] 1 K.B. 704, 711, 713, 714.

[7] Ibid. 709.

the stretcher and desirable for them to handle it in as smooth a manner as possible. Accordingly, three out of four men who were following the stretcher to act as relief stretcher bearers set to work to move the tub out of the way, one of those men being the plaintiff Hayes. They turned the tub on its side, and then, because it was not lying parallel to the rails, they wanted to shift it a little more, which was rather difficult because it was heavy. One of them pulled and the other two pushed, and in doing that, accidentally knocked the tub twice against one of the props that held up the bars which held up the roof. As a result the prop was pushed out of the vertical and a small fall of matter took place, which injured the plaintiff.

It was upon those facts that I had to decide the two contentions which are equally raised in the present case. I held, rightly or wrongly, that although there had been a fall in the circumstances which I have described, it did not show a failure on the part of the defendants to make the roof of that particular road secure. I was influenced in so finding by, amongst other things, Burns v. Joseph Terry & Sons Ld.[8] In that case the question was whether transmission machinery was securely fenced within section 13 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937. Hilbery J. had applied to the decision of that question what can be called for short the test of "foreseeability." It was not disputed in that case[9] that in deciding whether machinery is dangerous for the purposes of section 14 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, the foreseeability test is a proper test, and it was pointed out that in Walker v. Bletchley Flettons Ld.[10] du Parcq J. had applied that test both to the question of whether the machinery was dangerous and to the question of whether it was securely fenced. Hilbery J. had referred to a note in Redgrave's Factories, Truck and Shop Acts, which still appears in the 18th edition at p. 34, as being correct. On appeal, Somervell L.J. adopted the view that the foreseeability test applied both to the question whether the machine was dangerous and also to the question whether it was securely fenced, and Cohen L.J. agreed with him, delivering no separate judgment. Denning L.J., on the other hand, disagreed as regards applying the foreseeability test to the words "securely "fenced," but he did not disagree as regards applying that test to the word "dangerous." He said[11]: "It is apparent, there- "fore that in cases under section 14, unless section 15 applies, "the only inquiries are: first, is the machine dangerous; and, "second, if so, is it securely fenced? The answer to the first "question depends on foreseeability, and the courts apply the "test laid down by du Parcq J. in Walker v. Bletchley Flettons "Ld.,[10] recently approved by this court in Smithwick v. National "Coal Board,[12]" which was also a machinery case.

In the present case the word "dangerous" does not appear,

[8] [1951] 1 K.B. 454.
[9] Ibid. 461.
[10] [1937] 1 All E.R. 170.
[11] [1951] 1 K.B. 454, 467.
[12] [1950] 2 K.B. 335; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 173.

1954

JACKSON v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD.

Hallett J.

but it seems to me that as regards the roof and sides of a travelling road or working place in a pit the word "secure" must mean substantially the same as "not dangerous by reason of liability "to fall." A ceiling, for instance, is I think secure in ordinary parlance, though an earthquake or a bomb, or even a bath overflowing in a bathroom overhead, may bring it down.

Turning now to Marshall v. Gotham Co. Ld.,[13] there again the cause of the fall was not in doubt. It was a latent geological defect known as "slickenside," which is a well-known kind of geological defect and a known danger; see, for instance, what is said by Lord Reid.[14] Accordingly, it was not contended there for the defendants that the roof had been made secure: see per Lord Reid [15] and per Lord Keith of Avonholm.[16] "It is obvious," said Lord Keith, "that the roof of the working place in which "the deceased man was working was not secure." Accordingly, the only question for decision was whether in the circumstances disclosed by the evidence the defendants were protected by the proviso, which, as I have said, corresponds in substance, though not in form, to what is contained here in the escape section, which is section 102 (8). Lord Tucker, however, made an observation which is very greatly relied on by Mr. Veale. That observation, I think, was not necessary for the decision of the case; and, since the fall in the present case was not caused on the one hand by an earthquake or an atom bomb or on the other hand by a geological hazard such as a glassy slant or slickenside, Lord Tucker's observation does not directly help me to decide upon Mr. Veale's first contention that this roof was secure. Lord Tucker said [17]: "I agree that the word 'secure' does not involve "security from the effects of earthquake or an atom bomb, but "I think that it must include security from all the known "geological hazards inherent in mining operations." Lord Tucker clearly thought that the cause there fell within the category of "known geological hazards inherent in mining "operations."

What I have to decide is whether the cause in the present case falls within the first category of earthquake or atom bombs or within the second category of known geological hazards. I can find no further assistance upon this point and I must therefore make up my own mind without the help of higher authority. Having held upon the evidence that the cause of the fall was that alleged by the defendants, I have come to the conclusion that the fall does not in the circumstances of this case establish a failure to make the roof secure as required by section 49.

I think I have probably already disclosed, with perhaps unwise candour, that I felt a certain temptation to burke deciding that question at all, having regard to what I am now going to decide with regard to the second contention, because, if I be wrong in

[13] [1954] A.C. 360.
[14] Ibid. 373.
[15] Ibid. 370.
[16] Ibid. 377.
[17] Ibid. 374.

1954

JACKSON v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD.

Hallett J.

what I have held as regards the first contention, it is necessary for me to decide whether the defendants have shown that it was not reasonably practicable to avoid or prevent the breach. Having regard to the grounds upon which my own decision in Edwards v. National Coal Board [18] was reversed, I have been particularly careful to consider whether there is sufficient evidence, if accepted, to justify me in holding that it was not reasonably practicable to make the roof secure against that which on the defendants' case caused it to fall, namely, the displacement of a prop or props by an explosion such as could never have been contemplated, in my judgment, as even a possibility. It might perhaps have been better if some witness had been questioned upon that aspect of the matter, but it seems to me to be obvious without evidence that it was not reasonably practicable to set props supporting bars under a roof so that they would remain undisplaced by such an explosion.

The result is that in my judgment and my view of the law the decision of this case turns upon whether I accept the defendants' case as to what caused the fall. I have already stated that I do accept that case and I have indicated to some extent the reasons why I do so. Therefore, I rule that there was no breach of the defendants' duty to make the roof secure, but even if there was such a breach it was not reasonably practicable to avoid or prevent it.

Judgment for defendants.

Solicitors: Raley & Pratt, Barnsley; C. M. H. Glover, Doncaster.

[18] [1949] 1 K.B. 704.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.]

* PRACTICE NOTE (PREVIOUS CONVICTIONS).

C. C. A.

1955 Jan. 31.

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Gorman JJ.

Criminal Law—Practice—Previous history of accused and convicted persons—Information to be given by police.

LORD GODDARD C.J. The judges of the Queen's Bench Division have considered the question as to the information and history of accused and convicted persons that should be given to the court, counsel and solicitors by police officers before and after conviction. They have resolved as follows:—

(1) Details of previous convictions must always be supplied by the police to the defending solicitor, or if no solicitor is instructed to defending counsel, on request. The judges are of opinion that there is no obligation on a police officer to satisfy himself that the prisoner has authorized a statement of previous convictions to be given as it is clearly within the ordinary authority of solicitor and counsel to obtain this information. In order that the defence may be properly conducted the prisoner's advisers must know whether they can safely put the prisoner's character in issue.

C. C. A.
1955
PRACTICE NOTE (PREVIOUS CONVICTIONS).

(2) There is no need for police officers to supply a list of previous convictions to the court before conviction because the prisoner's previous convictions are always set out in the confidential calendar with which the judge is supplied by the governor of the gaol whose duty it is to supply it. The police will, of course, give any information to the governor that he may require to enable him to perform his duty.

(3) A proof of evidence should be prepared by a police officer containing a factual statement of the previous convictions, date of birth, if known, education and employment, the date of arrest, whether the prisoner has been on bail and, if previously convicted, the date of his last discharge from prison if known. It may also contain a short and concise statement as to the prisoner's domestic and family circumstances, his general reputation and associates, and if it is to be said that he associates with bad characters the officer giving evidence must be able to speak of this from his own knowledge. This proof may be given either with his brief or at the outset of the case to counsel for the prosecution and to no one else, as unless the accused is convicted it has no relevance. It need not be prepared in two parts. If the accused is convicted it is to be given to the court and to counsel for the defence, but it will be for counsel for the prosecution in the first place to decide how much of this he asks the officer to prove, while it will, of course, be open to the presiding judge to put any questions he may think fit. The statement should not be handed to the court or to defending counsel until the officer is sworn. It may by leave of the court be given to the shorthand writer, who may use it to check his note, but he must only transcribe so much as is given in evidence.

J. D. P.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1955
Jan. 25.
Evershed M.R., Jenkins and Hodson L.JJ.

* In re CAMERON, DECD. CURRIE v. MILLIGAN.

[1954 C. 2271.]

Will—Construction—Annuity—One third of income of residuary trust fund payable to widow for life—If insufficient to provide £6,500 in any year "free of English income and super-tax" trustees to pay balance "out of the income of the trust fund"—Whether annuity a continuing charge on income.

A testator, who died in 1929, by clause 12 of his will directed his trustees to pay to his widow one third of the income of his residuary trust fund and "if one third of the income of the trust "fund shall in any year during the life of my said wife amount "to less than £6,500 per annum free of English income and super-"tax my trustees shall in respect of that year pay or cause to be "paid to my said wife out of the income of the trust fund in "addition to one third of the income thereof such further sum as "will give to her a net income for that year of £6,500 free of "English income and super-tax." By clause 13 the testator directed that "subject to the interest of my said wife in part of the income "of the trust fund under the last preceding clause hereof" his trustees should hold the income of the trust fund on protective trusts for his son on his attaining the age of 25 years. Clauses 15 and 16 of the will contained directions to accumulate surplus income while the son was under 25. The testator's estate was large, and until 1938 there was surplus income which was accumulated, but from 1938 onward, owing to high rates of taxation, the widow's annuity had not been paid in full. The son died in 1940 and the question was raised whether accumulations of income made during the life of the son were liable to make good the past deficiency in the widow's annuity:—

Held, that clause 12, on its true construction, only conferred a right on the widow to resort in any year to the surplus income of that year to make up her annuity of £6,500. The interest which the testator gave to his son in income was inconsistent with the widow having a continuing charge on all income during her life.

In re Coller's Deed Trusts [1939] Ch. 277; 53 T.L.R. 859; [1937] 3 All E.R. 292 considered.

Decision of Roxburgh J. ([1954] 1 W.L.R. 1375; [1954] 3 All E.R. 329) affirmed.

APPEAL from a decision of Roxburgh J.[1]

By his will dated June 2, 1927, the testator Alastair Cameron, after giving certain specific and pecuniary bequests and directing his trustees to sell and convert into money his real and personal estate, and directing the payment of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses and legacies, directed by clause 12: "My "trustees shall pay or cause to be paid one-third of the income "of the residue of the said moneys (which moneys and the "property for the time being representing the same are herein-"after called 'the trust fund') to my said wife for her life . . . "I declare that if . . . one-third of the income of the trust fund "shall in any year during the life of my said wife amount to less "than £6,500 per annum free of English income and super-tax "my trustees shall in respect of that year pay or cause to be "paid to my said wife out of the income of the trust fund in "addition to one-third of the income thereof such further sum "as will give to her a net income for that year of £6,500 free of "English income and super-tax."

Clause 13 (1): "Subject to the interest of my said wife in "part of the income of the trust fund under the last preceding "clause thereof my trustees shall upon my [son] attaining the "age of 25 years hold the income of the trust fund upon . . . "protective trusts for my said son during the remainder of his "life."

Clause 14: "After the death of my said son my trustees

[1] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1375; [1954] 3 All E.R. 329.

C. A.
1955
CAMERON, DECD., In re. CURRIE v. MILLIGAN.

" shall (subject to the interest aforesaid of my said wife in part " of the income of the trust fund during her life) stand possessed " of the capital and future income of the trust fund in trust for " the issue of my said son in such shares and in such manner " as his son should appoint. The son died without issue.

Clause 15: " If at my death my said son shall be under the " age of 25 years my trustees may until he attains the age of " 25 years apply or cause to be applied the whole or such part " as they in their discretion shall think fit of the income which " my said son would if he had attained the age of 25 years be " entitled to receive under the trusts hereinbefore contained " for or towards his maintenance education or benefit and may " either themselves so apply the same or may pay the same to " the guardians or guardian of my said son for the purpose " aforesaid without seeing to the application thereof and shall " accumulate the residue of such income and hold such accumu- " lations and the resulting income thereof for the person or " persons who shall eventually become entitled to the principal " fund from which the same shall have proceeded with power at " their discretion to apply the said accumulations or any part " thereof during the infancy of my said son as if the same were " income arising in the then current year."

Clause 16: " Upon my said son attaining the age of 21 years " and until he shall attain the age of 25 years my trustees shall " pay to him out of the income referred to in the last preceding " clause hereof such sums as with any income provided for him " by any settlement will make up his income to the sum of " £1,000 per annum at least and shall accumulate the remainder " (if any) of such income and hold such accumulations and the " resulting income thereof in the same manner and for the same " purposes as if they were made in pursuance of the last " preceding clause hereof."

Clause 18: " If the trusts hereinbefore declared shall fail or " determine then subject to the trusts powers and provisions " hereinbefore declared and contained and to the powers by law " vested in my trustees and to every or any exercise of such " powers my trustees shall hold the trust fund and the income " thereof in trust for such of my said sisters . . . as shall be " living at the failure or determination of the prior trusts " hereinbefore contained."

The testator died on February 23, 1929, leaving a widow and his only son. The son was born on October 5, 1916, and died on August 19, 1940, so that he attained 21 but did not attain 25. The income of the estate exceeded the sum necessary to pay the widow's annuity until 1938, and surplus income had been accumulated. After 1938, the income had been insufficient to pay the annuity in full.

A summons was taken out by the executor of the will to determine (inter alia): (3) whether on the true construction of the will and in the events which had happened, and having regard to the insufficiency since the year 1938 of the income of the trust fund to provide the testator's widow with such a further sum as would give her a net income of £6,500 (as reduced in amount by the joint effect of section 25 of the Finance Act, 1941, and section 20 of the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1945), free of income tax and surtax (a) accumulations of surplus income made pursuant to clause 16 of the said will during the lifetime of the son and [subject to any answer which might be given to question 4]; (b) the income arising from accumulations so made were or was applicable for the purpose of providing the testator's widow with the said net income of £6,500 (so reduced as aforesaid); (4) whether there was an intestacy as to the income arising from the said accumulations subsequently to the expiration on February 23, 1950, of the period of 21 years from the testator's death and, if so, whether such income ought to be applied in the first place in or towards discharge after statutory charge for £1,000 and interest to which the widow of the testator would be entitled under such partial intestacy.

Roxburgh J. held that the widow had no power in right of her annuity to resort to accumulations of income in past years or to the income of such accumulations.

The widow appealed.

Charles Russell Q.C. and Owen Swingland for the widow.

W. A. Bagnall for beneficiaries contingently interested in capital.

P. S. H. Rossdale (H. A. Rose with him) for the plaintiff trustees.

The cases referred to in argument are cited in the judgment of Evershed M.R.

EVERSHED M.R. In my judgment, Roxburgh J. came to a correct conclusion upon the problem presented to us in this appeal. The problem is the not unfamiliar one, whether a limited gift to a widow—let us call it for the moment an annuity—is or is not so given as to confer upon the widow a continuing charge during her lifetime—for Mr. Russell does not contend for a further charge—upon the whole income of the residue of the estate.

[His Lordship stated the facts and continued:] The trustee has in hand accumulations of approximately £8,500, which represent the surplus of those years during which there was a surplus; and the claim of the widow is to resort to that accumulated surplus to make up during current, and perhaps future, years deficiencies in the one-third of her husband's income.

Romer L.J., in In re Coller's Deed Trusts,[1] said at the beginning of his judgment that the reported cases upon the

[1] [1939] Ch. 277, 280; 53 T.L.R. 859; [1937] 3 All E.R. 292.

C. A.
1955
CAMERON, DECD., In re. CURRIE v. MILLIGAN.
Evershed M.R.

subject were numerous, and he proceeded: "The question is "always one of the proper construction of the instrument creating "the annuity, and must accordingly depend in every case upon "the precise language employed. No one case, therefore, can "be said to govern another." The Lord Justice then stated a number of principles, which included this: In the case of the gift of an annuity generally out of income and then a gift over opening with such words as "subject to payment of the annuity," the annuitant is prima facie entitled to a continuing charge upon the income of the fund out of which the annuity is expressed to be payable; and the strength of the argument for the widow in this case has been that there is nothing in the language of this will to rebut what should be regarded as the prima facie right of the widow to receive an annuity of not less than £6,500 a year out of all income of residue arising during her life.

For my part, I share the inclination, which Roxburgh J. expressed, to read clause 12 as intended, upon its proper construction and according to its special and peculiar—I use the word strictly and not meaning "odd" or "strange"—language, to confer only a right upon the widow to resort in any year to surplus income of that year beyond the one-third to make up the £6,500. It is quite true, as Mr. Russell observed, that the gift is "one-third of the income of residue" and not "one-third each "year of the income of residue for that year"; in other words, it is a gift in strict terms of one-third of the total income of residue during the period of the widow's life. But, when I read on and find the declaration that, if one-third of income shall in any year amount to less than £6,500, the trustees "shall in respect "of that year cause to be paid to the wife out of the income of "the trust fund in addition to one-third such further sum as will "give her a net income for that year," I get, I confess, a strong impression conveyed to my mind by the language, that the testator is intending only to look at the state of affairs, financially, year by year and is intending only to authorize resort to the two-thirds of income for the year in which the one-third has fallen short of the figure indicated. I appreciate the force of the argument that the words used are "shall . . . out of the income "of the trust fund" and not "out of the income of the trust "fund in that year." The omission there of a reference to a single year should not be regarded as insignificant, particularly having regard to the express reference in three other places to the year in question; but none the less I confess that the language does create in my mind the same impression of the testator's intention, having regard to the nature of the gift and particularly to the fact that it is not a case of an ordinary annuity of so much per annum out of residue, as was formed in my brother Roxburgh's mind.

I come, however, to the later clauses which the judge found, and which I find, determining in this matter. It is to be noted that clauses 13 and following deal, or deal so far as is relevant, with provisions for the testator's son; and it is impossible to read them and not form the clear impression that the testator thought that he was conferring upon the son an interest in something which would be in reality available. I am putting it somewhat loosely, because I have in mind the point which Mr. Russell made that, even though the widow had a continuing charge on income and though strictly, therefore, during her lifetime no part of the income was free from her charge upon it so as to be available for the son, still there is authority for the view that, as a matter at least of administrative relaxation, an achieved surplus will be allowed to be distributed, and will be properly distributed, by trustees to the person entitled subject to the interest of the annuitant. The exact limits and extent of that permission or administrative relaxation were cited by Romer L.J. in Coller's case [2] from In re Platt,[3] and they are not entirely clear and precise. I should imagine that, in the ordinary case, unless the surplus were very secure, trustees would always require the protection of the court.

But whether those matters were in the testator's mind or no, it seems to me that the kind of interest he was conferring, or purporting to confer, upon his son plainly proceeded upon the view that the wife's interest in income was of a more limited character than that of having a continuing charge on the whole income. He opened clause 13 with the words "subject to the "interest of my said wife in part of the income of the trust "fund"—a phrase which he repeated in clause 14. Mr. Russell observed that, since she has, quoad any year, an interest in the whole income, therefore the phrase "the interest in part of the "income" is, on any view, inaccurate; but I am unable to go further with Mr. Russell and say that the reference, being inapt, is therefore colourless. Plainly the testator is referring to what may be called a "partial interest" in income conferred upon his wife. Though you may debate upon, and even quarrel upon, the meaning and extent of "a partial interest in income," having regard, however, to the nature of the problem here posed, I, like the judge, feel no doubt that the reference indicates, and indicates tolerably clearly, that of the two possible interests which such an annuitant might enjoy—an interest in any year to have the income of that year utilized in making up £6,500 for her, on the one hand, and a continuing charge on all income during her lifetime on the other—these references are directed to the former and not to the latter alternative.

The nature of the interest given to the son also reinforces that view. The testator speaks in clause 15 of the son "being entitled "to receive" something under the trusts thereinbefore declared; and there are the provisions as to accumulations, which may be treated and made available as though they were income, in a

[2] [1939] Ch. 277.
[3] [1916] 2 Ch. 563.

C. A.
1955
CAMERON, DECD., In re. CURRIE v. MILLIGAN.
Evershed M.R.

context indicating that they were intended to be available for the son's maintenance.

Those matters point, and point somewhat forcibly, to the view to which, under clause 12, I am inclined to take. I will not use the word "devastating" which the judge used; but, granted that some colour is required to make the picture of clause 12 complete, the colour which clauses 13 and 14 provide, in my judgment, produces the picture which commended itself to the judge. For those reasons, I come to the conclusion that Roxburgh J. rightly interpreted the language used by the testator in this particular will, and I would accordingly dismiss the appeal.

JENKINS L.J. I agree that the judge came to a right conclusion in this case and that the appeal fails and should be dismissed.

HODSON L.J. I also agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Johnson, Jecks & Landons; Lee, Bolton & Lee.

B. A. B.

[MANCHESTER AUTUMN ASSIZES.]

1954
Dec. 16, 17, 20.
Pearce J.

*RUSHOLME & BOLTON & ROBERTS HADFIELD LD. v. S. G. READ & CO. (LONDON) LD.

Agency—Contract—Parties—Confirming house—Principal an Australian company, agent an English confirming house—Original indent by Australian company upon manufacturer containing term "confirmation and payment by" agent — Agent's contract with manufacturer for purchase of goods—Original indent cancelled by Australian company—Whether agent liable as principal.

Through their Australian representatives English manufacturers received an indent for goods from an Australian company, terms being confirmation and payment by a London confirming house. Under the heading Order No. 1144/Letter/2171 the exact indent was repeated in terms by the confirming house to the manufacturers, with the words "Purchased by (the confirming house), holders of "Purchase Tax No. Central 2/3793 of goods as stock intended for "exportation." Towards the bottom of the document were words confirming the indent received by the Australian representatives of the manufacturers, and a footnote indicated that any variation of the terms required written approval from the confirming house.

Before the delivery date the Australian company cancelled both orders and the manufacturers were unable to obtain payment therefrom. The confirming house refused to accept the goods and in an action by the manufacturers against them for damages for breach of contract:—

---

[Reported by JOHN WARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Held, that the document headed Order No. 1144/Letter/2171 contained the true contract between the parties; that in that document the defendants assumed towards the plaintiffs the financial liability of a principal buyer and accordingly they were liable in damages for breach of contract.

ACTION.

The plaintiffs, manufacturers, claimed damages for breach of contract from the defendants in respect of their refusal to accept 10,000 yards of shirting material which the plaintiffs sold to the defendants under two written contracts. The defendants admitted the refusal to accept; and damages were agreed at £1,100. The defendants, however, denied liability as they contended that the true transaction was a sale by the plaintiffs to an Australian company and that in so far as the defendants were a party to the transaction they were merely the English agents and had no personal liability in respect of any breach of contract.

The facts are fully stated in the judgment.

J. D. Cantley Q.C. and W. D. T. Hodgson for the plaintiffs.
R. H. Mais for the defendants.

The following case was cited in argument in addition to those referred to in the judgment: Universal Steam Navigation Co. Ld. v. McKelvie & Co.[1]

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20. PEARCE J. The plaintiffs are claiming damages in respect of two contracts. The defendants are a confirming house carrying on business in London. What the precise duties and liabilities of a confirming house are has been a matter in dispute. The first contract, dated June 6, 1951, is headed Order No. 1144/Letter/2171, and purports to be an order for 5,000 yards of shirting material given by the defendants to the plaintiffs with the words "Purchased by S. G. Read and Co. (London) Ld., "holders of Purchase Tax No. Central 2/3793 of goods as stock "intended for exportation." It sets out the names and addresses of the plaintiffs and the defendants and gives details of quality, quantity and price, delivery to be December loco/Manchester. The order requires five certified copies of invoice for Australia, and a shipping mark for Sydney is given. A footnote states, inter alia, "This order must be delivered within the specified "time. Any extension or alteration in delivery or price must "be notified for our written confirmation." There is nothing on the order to show that it has reference to any other transaction, except the following words, which appear towards the bottom of the document: "In confirmation of your agents' Indent No.

[1] [1923] A.C. 492; 39 T.L.R. 480.

1954

Rusholme & Bolton & Roberts Hadfield Ld. v. S. G. Read & Co. (London) Ld.

Pearce J.

"14." The order was accepted by the plaintiffs by letter of June 7 in these words: "We thank you for the above order for "Wembley Wear Ld. of Sydney, and have pleasure in con- "firming same herewith." The terms are then set out.

The document referred to as Indent No. 14 is a document dated May 29, 1951, purporting to be an order given by Wembley Wear Ld. of Sydney to the plaintiffs through their Australian agents, Lambert Muir, of Melbourne. It sets out the same details as the order by the defendants as to price, quality, quantity and delivery. It contains the following words: "Terms—confirmation and payment by S. G. Read & Co., 3–4, "Highgate Street, London E.C.1." It was sent by the plaintiffs' Australian agents to the plaintiffs in a letter dated May 29, 1951, which refers to it as "our order No. 14 account Wembley "Wear Ld." and was acknowledged by the plaintiffs by a letter of June 4 as "Indent No. 14 for 5,000 yards W.M. 24 from "Wembley Wear Ld." and the plaintiffs stated that they were applying to the defendants for confirmation. The copy of this Indent No. 14, or Order No. 14, given to Wembley Wear Ld. was produced by the defendants, and it bore the signature of the plaintiffs' Australian agents "On behalf of Roberts Hadfield."

The second contract, which was also for 5,000 yards, and the indent to which it refers are not different in any material particular from the first.

It is plain, therefore, that the transaction was this. The Australian company arranged with the plaintiffs' Australian agents that they should buy certain goods on certain terms "subject to confirmation and payment by" the defendants; and the defendants confirmed in a letter in which they purported to order the goods as principals and to become liable as such on the contract. This order was accepted by the plaintiffs, who proceeded with the manufacture of the goods.

Owing to a trade recession before the delivery date the Australian company cancelled both orders and the defendants refused to accept delivery. The parties and their solicitors have co-operated very sensibly in efforts to minimize the damage and to obtain payment from the Australian company. Unfortunately, they have been unsuccessful, and this action has been brought to decide which of two innocent parties shall bear the loss occasioned by the defaulting Australian company.

I am satisfied by the evidence of the plaintiffs' director (who seemed to be honest and reliable) that he would not have accepted this order without the interposition of an English confirming house, that he took no interest in the financial stability of the Australian company, that he made inquiries as to that of the defendants and found it satisfactory and that he relied on that fact in this transaction. Had he not had the order from the defendants he would not have agreed to supply the goods. He regarded the indent from the Australian company, not as a contract, but as an expression of a desire to purchase the goods.

He understood the indent to have been accepted as an indent and not as an order by his Australian agents, and, in his view, the fact that the indents were signed by the respective parties is merely an indication of a genuine desire to buy, and not an indication that a firm order was being made subject to conditions precedent. Where a confirming house confirms a contract, his view is that he is entitled to look to the confirming house personally to see that the contract is carried out.

The evidence of the defendants' director, Mr. Read, was, in my view, unreliable and I do not accept it. In spite of his denial in the witness-box I consider that his true view of the transaction is contained in two letters which he wrote to the Australian company after the cancellation. In a letter of September 28, 1951, he wrote: "These orders are sent to us for confirmation and they "have been confirmed on our official order sheet which of course "creates a liability as far as we are concerned, and the manufac- "turers can, of course, hold us responsible. Although we do not "raise any particular objection to you corresponding direct we "feel that it would be better if you had instructed us, and in "any case we think that in your letters you should have referred "to the confirmation which we sent to these various people on "your behalf." In a letter of November 28, 1951, he wrote: "On receiving an indent from overseas we confirm the same "to the manufacturer on an official order sheet, which order "sheet is sent out to comply with the various regulations "applying to the export of goods from the United Kingdom, "including purchase tax certificate number, which permits us "to handle the goods without having to pay British purchase "tax and obtain a refund on shipment. The terms with overseas "clients are arranged previously and we would point out that in "reference to your good selves the terms are . . . payment "against irrevocable letter of credit opened in our favour. "Normally such credits should be opened when the indent is "sent, but it is our usual procedure with established accounts "to cable for the credit when the goods are ready for shipment, "and by so doing avoid clients establishing several credits and "the necessary expense involved."

The view of the parties themselves as to what liability they were incurring is not a deciding factor where, as here, the transaction was in documents; but in cases of ambiguity some weight may properly be given to it as part of the surrounding circumstances. In Chapman v. Smith [1] Parker J. said: "My attention "was called to a great many authorities bearing on the question "whether a person expressed to contract as agent either for a "named or an unnamed principal, can himself be personally liable "on the contract. Having come to the conclusion that this "question is in each case a question of construction having regard "to the surrounding circumstances, I need not consider these "authorities in detail."

[1] [1907] 2 Ch. 97, 103.

1954

Rusholme & Bolton & Roberts Hadfield Ld. v. S. G. Read & Co. (London) Ld.

Pearce J.

There is no authority that decides the position and liability of a confirming house. Both from the documents and the surrounding circumstances it appears to me that its functions are wider than those of a bank which has an irrevocable credit and pays against a delivery (after it has been properly checked for quantity) but has no liability on the contract.

The fact that a person is agent and is known so to be does not of itself prevent his incurring personal liability. Whether he does so is to be determined by the nature and terms of the contract and the surrounding circumstances. Where he contracts on behalf of a foreign principal there is a presumption that he is incurring a personal liability unless a contrary intention appears; and similarly where he signs in his own name without qualification. In Brandt (H. O.) & Co. Ld. v. Morris (H. N.) & Co. Ld.[2] Scrutton L.J. said: "Later, in Gadd v. Houghton,[3] which may "perhaps be called the leading case, Mellish L.J. states the "same principle[4] 'As is said in the note to Thomson v. Davenport,[5] when a man signs a contract in his own name he is "'prima facie a contracting party and liable, and there must "'be something very strong on the face of the instrument "'to show that the liability does not attach to him.' When "I find in this contract the words 'We have this day bought "'from you,' and the signature 'H. O. Brandt & Co.,' in "my view something very strong is needed to show that Brandt "& Co. have not contracted personally." He added later[6]: "The other fact which I take into account is that Messrs. Sayles "Bleacheries are foreigners, and while I think that one cannot "at the present day attach the importance which used to be "attached forty or fifty years ago to the fact that the supposed "principal is a foreigner, it is still a matter to be taken into "account in deciding whether the person said to be an English "agent has or has not made himself personally liable."

Counsel for the defendants stresses the dissenting judgment of Neville J. in that case, and the case of Miller, Gibb & Co. v. Smith & Tyrer Ld.[7] But that case was cited to the court in Brandt v. Morris.[8] It appears to me that the judgment of Scrutton L.J., which I have quoted, correctly sets out the law. In Basma v. Weekes,[9] Lord Reid, delivering the opinion of the Board, clearly affirmed Higgins v. Senior[10] and said[11]: "an "agent who contracts in his own name does not cease to be "contractually bound because it is proved that the other party "knew when the contract was made that he was acting as agent."

In his careful and ingenious argument counsel for the defendants contends as follows. The contract sued on is not the real

[2] [1917] 2 K.B. 784, 796.
[3] (1876) 1 Ex.D. 357.
[4] 1 Ex.D. 357, 360.
[5] (1829) 9 B. & C. 78.
[6] [1917] 2 K.B. 784, 797.
[7] [1917] 2 K.B. 141; 33 T.L.R. 295.
[8] [1917] 2 K.B. 784.
[9] [1950] A.C. 441; 66 T.L.R. 492; [1950] 2 All E.R. 146.
[10] (1841) 8 M. & W. 834.
[11] [1950] A.C. 441, 454.

contract. The real contract was the contract (sometimes called the indent) direct between the plaintiffs (through their Australian agents) and the Australian company. The contract sued on incorporates the indent by reference and, therefore, one must consider both documents. When one regards both those documents one sees that there was a firm contract of sale in the indent (which was headed as an order and of which copies were signed by both parties to it) made between the Australian company and the plaintiffs through their Australian agents subject to two conditions precedent, namely, confirmation and payment by the defendants. Those conditions precedent were fulfilled by the confirmation and the defendants' agreement to pay. But this was only an agreement to pay on delivery. It imports no other liability and if goods are refused even at the last moment, so that there is no delivery, the defendants have no obligation to pay. At most the defendants, like a del credere agent, guarantee the solvency of the buyer. A del credere agent is only liable in respect of an ascertained sum or certain sum due as a debt from the buyer to the seller; he is not the person with whom the seller is entitled to litigate disputes arising out of the contract and ascertain what is due on it. At best therefore the defendants have no liability at all; at worst they are not liable until judgment has been obtained against the Australian company.

I do not think the analogy of a del credere agent helps. Lord Mansfield took the view that he was liable to the seller in the first instance, but this view was corrected later, and as the law now stands the del credere agent is merely a guarantor of the buyer's solvency. It would seem that he is a guarantor to the seller of any mischief arising from the buyer's insolvency once that mischief has been quantified (see Hornby v. Lacy [12] and Gabriel (Thomas) & Sons v. Churchill and Sim [13]). If the defendants' liability were similar to that of a del credere agent, they would not be liable until the plaintiffs had sued the Australian company and quantified their damages in such litigation, and this action therefore, would not now lie.

I do not think that the defendants' liability is limited to that of a del credere agent. I do not accept the view that the real contract is the indent between the Australian company and the plaintiffs through their agent. If that were so the Australian company would have had a contractual duty to do all in their power to procure the performance of the condition precedent, namely, that a confirming house should confirm and make arrangements to pay. On the view that I take of the documents and surrounding circumstances there was no such contractual duty. If either party had taken no steps to implement the indent, the other might well have considered himself to have been badly treated; but I think that either party to the indent would have been surprised to be told that it constituted a breach [12] (1817) 6 M. & S. 166.

[13] [1914] 3 K.B. 1272; 30 T.L.R. 658.

1954

RUSHOLME & BOLTON & ROBERTS HADFIELD LD. v. S. G. READ & CO. (LONDON) LD.

Pearce J.

of contract. The words "confirmation and payment by" the defendants meant that a confirmation such as the order now sued on was to be issued by the defendants and that financial liability was to be assumed by the defendants.

I see no reason why "payment" should be restricted to payment on delivery and should exclude other payments such as payments due for breach of contract. Such a restriction would make the defendants' functions less onerous, but also far less valuable. It would leave the English merchant completely unprotected against cancellation at the last moment. It would be less than the protection given by a del credere agent. I do not believe that that was the commercial intention of the parties.

The document means what it says, namely, that the defendants are assuming liability as between themselves and the plaintiffs. It would have been easy for the defendants to put a different wording in the document had the intention been otherwise. The defendants at first claimed that their wording "Pur- "chased by S. G. Read & Co. (London) Ld." was inserted on the compulsion of the Board of Trade as a condition of the defendants holding a purchase tax certificate; but in cross-examination Mr. Read had to admit that this was not so. He could have set out in terms that they were purchasing only as agents, but he said that that was omitted because it was obvious. I do not accept that explanation.

In my opinion the document on which the plaintiffs sue was the true contract between the parties. It was intended by the parties to impose, and by its terms does impose, a liability on the defendants in respect of the performance of the contract. I find nothing to counteract the presumption that the defendants incurred personal liability. The documents and the surrounding circumstances support the presumption. The plaintiffs are entitled to judgment for £1,100 and costs.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

Solicitors: Knott & Castle, Manchester; H. A. Crowe & Co.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1955
Jan. 18, 19, 20.

Denning, Birkett and Parker L.JJ.

*JESS B. WOODCOCK & SONS LD. v. HOBBS.

[Plaint K. 15257.]

Husband and Wife—Property—Matrimonial home—Desertion by husband—Sale of home—Wife remaining in occupation—Claim to possession by purchasers for value with notice of wife's occupation—Exercise of court's discretion—Circumstances in which it may be exercised.

The defendant, having been deserted by her husband, remained in occupation of the matrimonial home, the husband paying the rent. The house was situated at the entrance to a yard in which the husband carried on a road haulage business. Later the husband bought the premises and still permitted the wife to remain in occupation. When the road haulage industry was nationalized and the British Transport Commission compulsorily acquired the husband's business he, through his solicitors, informed the Commission that the wife was acting as caretaker of the business and as such was living in the house rent free. His purpose was to avoid paying the rent. When, some four years later, on the denationalization of the industry, the Transport Commission sold what had been the husband's business to the plaintiffs, the Commission passed on the same information to the purchasers as to the position of the wife. The wife was in fact not acting as caretaker, having no duties to perform. Shortly after the conveyance had been completed the plaintiffs gave notice to the wife to quit and when she claimed to remain as a deserted wife they brought the present proceedings in the county court for possession. The judge having dismissed the action, holding that in the circumstances the plaintiffs must in law be held to have had notice of the wife's true position, the plaintiffs appealed:—

C. A.

1955

JESS B. WOODCOCK & SONS LD. v. HOBBS.

Held, that a deserted wife has no right to stay indefinitely in the marital home, but only a right to stay until such time as the court in its discretion orders her to go out; and that the court's discretion could be exercised in an action for possession and not only in a separate application made expressly for the purpose. Accordingly, having regard to the circumstances of the present case, the court in the exercise of its discretion, ordered the wife to vacate the house in three months.

APPEAL from Judge Andrews, sitting at Bow County Court.

The following facts are taken substantially from the judgment of Denning L.J.

Jess B. Woodcock & Sons Ld. claimed possession of a house, 132 Princes Road, Buckhurst Hill, which was occupied by Mrs. Hobbs, the defendant, a married woman who had been deserted by her husband. The husband had carried on a haulage transport business in a yard and had lived with his wife in this house at the entrance to the yard. For many years he was the tenant of the house at a standard rent of £1 a week. In 1940 he left his wife and went to live with another woman. The defendant remained in the house and her husband paid the rent as part of her maintenance. In 1948 the husband bought the house, but let the defendant remain in occupation and paid her £1 a week maintenance.

After the nationalization of the road haulage industry the British Transport Commission in March, 1950, compulsorily acquired the whole undertaking of Mr. Hobbs, including the house, for the sum of £7,180. On June 8, 1950, the Commission wrote to the defendant offering her a tenancy at 21s. 2d. a week, being the standard rent plus a permitted increase. The defendant did not answer the letter, but sent it to her husband, with whom she was not on speaking terms. The husband, through his solicitors, on June 12, 1950, sent the following reply to the Commission: " Mr. Hobbs was the original tenant of the premises " at the time he purchased, and has separated from his wife,

C. A.

1955

Jess B. Woodcock & Sons Ld. v. Hobbs.

" leaving her in occupation, and that whereas prior to his pur" chase he paid the rent, he has since that date treated the rent
" as part of the allowance which he makes to his wife and also
" as consideration for her acting as caretaker in respect of our " client's business at the adjoining premises, answering inquiries,
" etc., in the absence of our client or any member of his staff."
In subsequent letters Mr. Hobbs, through his solicitors, told the Commission that his wife was there rent free as caretaker of the business. In fact, she was there simply as a deserted wife. The Commission did not press the matter. The defendant knew that her husband was putting her forward as a caretaker but passed all letters sent to her by the Commission on to her husband.

On April 12, 1954, on the denationalization of the road haulage industry the Transport Commission sold the whole of the undertaking, including the house, to the present plaintiffs for the sum of £9,500. On the form of tender the Commission said: " Mrs. " Hobbs, the occupier of No. 132 Princes Road, resides therein " rent free under an arrangement alleged to have been made in " January, 1943, between Alfred Thomas Hobbs and herself, on " condition that she acted as caretaker . . . The purchaser shall " purchase the property subject to Mrs. Hobbs' occupation thereof " and shall raise no objection or requisition as regards such " occupancy or the terms thereof." Shortly after the conveyance was completed the plaintiffs gave notice to quit to the defendant, and brought the present proceedings in the county court.

Judge Andrews dismissed the action. He held that the plaintiffs were purchasers for value, but that in the circumstances they must be taken to have had notice of the true position of the defendant. He intimated, however, that in different proceedings there might well be a question whether the court in its discretion should order the tenant to go out.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Horatio Vester for the plaintiffs.
M. P. Picard for the defendant.

The following cases were referred to in argument in addition to those appearing in the judgment: Skinner v. Geary [1]; Errington v. Errington [2]; Vaughan v. Vaughan.[3]

Denning L.J., having stated the facts as set out above, continued: Many cases have come before the courts lately where a husband owns the matrimonial home and then deserts his wife, leaving her there with the children. In such a case the husband cannot turn his wife and children out into the street simply because he is the legal owner of the house. He can only recover possession if the court thinks fit to order her to go. If he goes bankrupt and the house becomes vested in his trustee in bankruptcy, the trustee cannot get possession unless the court in its discretion orders her out: Bendall v. McWhirter.[1] So much is well settled. But the question is: What is to happen if the husband sells the house over her head or conveys it to someone else: can the purchaser or the assignee turn her out? The judges of the Queen's Bench Division have had to consider the question and they have held that, if the purchaser or assignee bought with full knowledge of all the facts, he stands in no better position than the husband.

[1] [1931] 2 K.B. 546; 47 T.L.R. 597.
[2] [1952] 1 Q.B. 211; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 231; [1952] 1 All E.R. 149.
[3] [1953] 1 Q.B. 762; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 236; [1953] 1 All E.R. 209.

A striking case was where the husband went to live with another woman and conveyed the house to her; and then this woman sought to turn out the wife. The husband no doubt said to his mistress: "I know that I cannot turn my wife out, so I "will convey the house to you. It will then be yours and you "can turn her out." The court refused to tolerate such a cynical disregard of the married state. The mistress was not allowed to turn out the wife: see Street v. Denham,[2] a decision of Lynskey J. Other cases have occurred where the husband has sold the house to a relative or friend at a very low price and the purchaser has sought to turn out the wife. The husband in these cases no doubt said to the purchaser: "I cannot turn her out, but if I sell "to you, you can. Once you have got her out, you can sell the "house with vacant possession. I will rely on you to give me "some of the proceeds." In those cases, too, the courts refused to allow the purchaser to turn out the wife: see Ferris v. Weaven,[3] a decision of Jones J., and Savage v. Hubbold,[4] a decision of Hallett J.

Mr. Vester said that those three cases were to be explained as cases of collusion; but they were not put on that ground, and I do not think it is the correct explanation. The conveyances were real enough. They were not shams. They were intended, it is true, as a means of getting round the law; but that is not itself a ground for denying their validity. I may instance the transaction by which hire-purchase finance companies do business. All those transactions are a means of getting round the law about bills of sale; but so long as there is a real purchase by the finance company and a real hiring back, the transactions are good.

The true explanation of the three cases is, I think, the ground taken by the judges, namely, that the mistress and the purchasers respectively took with full knowledge of the facts. They were therefore in no better position than the husband and took subject to the wife's right to stay in the house. The husband, it is true, had an ulterior motive. He wanted the wife turned out of the house, but that does not affect the legal position. It would

[1] [1952] 2 Q.B. 466; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1332; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1307.
[2] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 624; [1954] 1 All E.R. 532.
[3] [1952] W.N. 318; [1952] 2 All E.R. 233.
[4] (Unreported), The Times, June 11, 1953.

C. A.

1955

JESS B. WOODCOCK & SONS LD. v. HOBBS.

Denning L.J.

be the same if the husband had given the house to his mistress or to his brother-in-law by a deed of gift. If they took with full knowledge of the facts, they ought not to be able to turn out the wife any more than the husband could. This means, no doubt, that the wife's right is an equity. It does not arise on marriage, but only on the actual desertion. It does not therefore prevail against a prior mortgagee, whether legal or equitable: see Lloyds Bank Ld. v. O—— (Trustee of the Property of), a Bankrupt,[5] and Barclays Bank Ld. v. Bird[6]; but it does prevail against a subsequent purchaser with knowledge or, I would add, with notice of the facts.

Mr. Vester referred us to what Jenkins L.J. said in Bradley-Hole v. Cusen,[7] but those observations were by the way and the three cases were not cited to the court. I am quite sure that the learned Lord Justice could not mean on this occasion to override them. I think, therefore, that we should approach this case on the footing that those cases were rightly decided. I would not myself wish to cast any doubt on them, especially as they are so much in accord with justice and good sense.

The distinction between those cases and the present one is that here the purchasers did not have knowledge of the facts. The Transport Commission did not know that the defendant was a deserted wife: nor did the plaintiffs. They were told that she was a caretaker for her husband. Nevertheless, I think they had notice of her true position. The Transport Commission were, as the judge said, "extremely supine." The story of her being a caretaker was hardly credible when there was no caretaking to do. They made no inquiries of the wife herself. The plaintiffs are in no better position. They took subject to the occupancy of the defendant and, nevertheless, they made no inquiries of her as to her position. They took their chance. In addition there are the cases to which Mr. Picard referred us, which show that occupation is notice of the occupier's rights: see Hunt v. Luck,[8] Universal Permanent Building Society v. Cooke.[9] In these circumstances I think we should approach the case on the footing that the purchasers took with notice.

Thus far I find myself in full agreement with the county court judge, but there remains the question of discretion. The deserted wife has no right to stay indefinitely in the house. Her right is only to stay until such time as the court in its discretion orders her to go out. That is the only right she has against her husband, and it is the only right she has against his successors. The court always has a discretion in the matter. This brings me to the only point where I differ from the county court judge. He thought

[5] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1460; sub nom. Lloyds Bank v. Oliver's Trustees [1953] 2 All E.R. 1443.

[6] [1954] Ch. 274; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 319.

[7] [1953] 1 Q.B. 300, 301; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 193.

[8] [1902] 1 Ch. 428.

[9] [1952] Ch. 95; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 962; [1951] 2 All E.R. 893.

that the discretion could not be exercised in an action for possession, but only in a separate application made expressly for the purpose. I think that it can be exercised in these proceedings. When the purchaser, as here, brings an action for possession and the wife sets up a claim to stay as a deserted wife, the court can, if it thinks fit, make an order for her to go.

The exercise of this discretion is no doubt an anxious task, but a similar discretion is exercised in the case of statutory tenants under the Rent Acts, and in applications under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (Bendall v. McWhirter [10]), and under the Law of Property Act, 1925 (Bull v. Bull [11]). In the case where a husband conveys the house to his mistress, or to a friend, at a low price simply to defeat the wife's right, the court would no doubt refuse to order the wife to go. It would not lend its aid to such a proceeding. But in the case where the husband sells the house to a purchaser who buys in good faith at a fair value, not knowing the wife's right (but subject to it only because he is taken by law to have notice of it) the court would, I think, be disposed to order her to go, but it would do what it could to lessen the hardship on her.

In the present case I think we should order the defendant to go. The purchasers bought in good faith at a fair value and they did not know she was a deserted wife. They were told she was a caretaker. She had been many years in the house paying no rent. When she was offered a tenancy at 21s. 2d. a week she did not accept it. If she had only accepted it, she could have been a statutory tenant with a status of irremovability, . . . but she has not at any time offered to pay any rent. She sought in these proceedings to set up the Statute of Limitations and claim a squatter's title. True it is that she left everything to her husband. She thought it was his duty to provide a roof over her head. It was he who set up the story of a caretaker so as to save himself paying rent. But, innocent as she is, she cannot be left there much longer without paying rent. I think we should make an order for her to give up possession in three months. That will give her time to apply to the courts for further maintenance from her husband to make up for the loss of her home.

Mr. Vester argued that the plaintiffs were entitled at law to possession on the ground that the wife had no equity or, alternatively, the plaintiffs had no notice of it. If we had held in his favour on either of those points, the order would have been for possession in four weeks. But when we told him that we were in his favour on the question of discretion, he did not seek further to argue those points, and we told him that he could argue them again on another occasion if he so wished.

In the result, therefore, differing from the county court judge only on this question of discretion, I think that this appeal should be allowed and an order made for possession in three months.

[10] [1952] 2 Q.B. 466.

[11] [1955] 2 W.L.R. 78; [1955] 1 All E.R. 253.

C. A.
1955
JESS B. WOODCOCK & SONS LD. v. HOBBS.

BIRKETT L.J. I am of the same opinion. The difference between the judgment of this court and that of the court below is really on a point of procedure rather than on a substantive point. When the case was framed in the court below the line upon which the contest was to be fought was plain from the pleadings. Mr. Vester, when he presented the case in the particulars of claim, asserted in the first paragraph that the consideration for the wife remaining in the premises was "in "consideration of the defendant acting as caretaker of a transport "undertaking owned by the said Hobbs." In the defence it was made clear from paragraph 1 that what was being asserted was that the doctrine of Bendall v. McWhirter [12] in the Court of Appeal was the all-sufficient answer. That was, quite apart from other minor matters, the leading matter of contest. The county court judge, after listening carefully to the evidence upon this matter, came to the conclusion, which I think is right, that the position of the wife in the present case was that of a deserted wife. That was the position asserted in paragraph 1 of the defence to the particulars of claim.

When the judge came to deal with this matter, having resolved the question of fact (he merely said: "In my judgment, there-"fore, the defendant is residing at No. 132 Princes Road as a "deserted wife and not as a caretaker," that was the first major contest of fact upon which he had to find), he said: "In "the circumstances I am of opinion that the principles laid down "in Bendall v. McWhirter [12] apply, and that I cannot in this "action give possession against the defendant." He was saying: My conclusion is, upon these rather complicated facts and applying the law as I understand it, that the defendant's case does not differ from the decision in Bendall v. McWhirter.[12] He adds: "Therefore in this action she is secure and I can do "nothing about it." Then, to show that that was no mere passing reflection, but was a considered view, he said: "It seems "to me that the defendant or her husband would be well advised "to take immediate steps about paying the plaintiffs for the use "of their home; otherwise the defendant may find herself ejected "on grounds which are not relied on in the present action. "Denning L.J. [in Bendall v. McWhirter] speaks about the "discretion of the court whether to order possession or not, and "in my opinion in properly framed proceedings such discretion "may be of the greatest importance." The judge is saying that he cannot consider the matter of discretion in these proceedings. That is the point of procedure upon which we are differing from the judge. I think that upon that he was wrong.

The passages that he had in mind in Bendall v. McWhirter [12] were obviously where Denning L.J. said [13]: "What is the nature "of this right of the deserted wife which the courts have thus "evolved?" and then he goes on to discuss, in language which has now become quite familiar, what was the nature of that right, and says that the wife has an irrevocable authority to stay in the matrimonial home. He then said [14]: "This authority, like "the old one,"—that is, the right to pledge a husband's credit under the common law—" is based on an irrebuttable presump- "tion of law. The husband cannot revoke it except by order of "the court under section 17 of the [Married Women's Property] "Act, 1882." A little later my brother said [15]: "The authority "which is thus conferred on her is an authority to stay in the "house until the court orders her to go out." What the county court judge was really saying was: I approve the application of that doctrine to the facts of this case, but I cannot consider the further question here of whether I ought in these proceedings to order the defendant to go out. I agree with what my Lord has said, that it is open to this court to deal with this matter of discretion and it does deal with it today.

[12] [1952] 2 Q.B. 466. [13] Ibid. 476.

I do not suppose that all the facts of this case will ever be fully ascertained. One is tempted to think—I think that there is very much to support it—that for a great deal of the time the defendant was merely made a tool of the husband's desire to have these premises free of rent. We are told that Mr. Hobbs only earned £500 a year, and £1 a week to a man with an income of that kind is quite a material matter. But he was plainly seeking to assert, as I understand from the evidence given by both husband and wife on an utterly false basis, namely, that she was in fact a caretaker, that the defendant should continue to live rent free, which, of course, would be a saving to the pocket of the husband. Again, I think it is clear, that at one stage in 1951 the defendant knew that it was being asserted that she was a caretaker and that her rights sprang from that matter. It is true that she took no steps in the matter although she consulted solicitors and the solicitors said: "We have not really had time "to investigate the matter." Although the true facts, in all their significance, may never be known, I think that enough is known for this court to exercise its discretion. It is plain that the deserted wife cannot claim to have a perennial tenancy whereby she can stay there and never be removed in any circumstances.

For the reasons given by my Lord, I think there is proper ground here to exercise discretion and that discretion ought to be exercised. Further, I think that a period of three months should be allowed, for the reasons my Lord has indicated. For those reasons I agree fully with the judgment given by my Lord.

PARKER L.J. I agree with the proposed order. I would only add this. At one time it looked as if we should have to decide, there being no decision of this court as yet on the matter, whether the protection afforded to a deserted wife in Bendall v. McWhirter [16] could be extended to a case where the property

[14] Ibid.
[15] Ibid. 477.
[16] [1952] 2 Q.B. 466.

C. A.
1955
JESS B. WOODCOCK & SONS LD. v. HOBBS.
Parker L.J.

in which the wife continued to reside had been purchased by a purchaser for value with constructive notice of the wife's possession. Speaking for myself, I should on that matter have required considerable further argument, since, as at present advised, I see great difficulty in extending the wife's protection so as to give her any rights against a bona fide purchaser, whether with or without notice. I do not, however, in any way suggest that Street v. Denham [17] and Ferris v. Weaven,[18] to which my Lord has referred, were wrongly decided, since they could in any event be justified on their special facts. In both those cases the purchases were not by purchasers treating at arms' length, but they were purchases made at the instigation of the husband and so as to enable him to get a benefit therefrom; in other words, the transaction in each case was a device to get the wife out for the husband's benefit.

However, Mr. Vester, for the plaintiffs, has very fairly taken up the attitude that, provided the court can, as a matter of discretion, give his clients possession, albeit not immediate possession, he is content. As to that, it seems to me that, even assuming the true view to be that the protection afforded to the wife extends to a case where the purchaser has constructive notice of the wife's position, nevertheless a wide discretion must reside in the court to order her to go. The present case, as it seems to me, is a proper one in which such discretion should be exercised. Accordingly, I agree with the proposed order.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Ernest W. Long & Co.; Trotter, Chapman & Whisker, Epping.

A. W. G.

[17] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 624. [18] [1952] 2 All E.R. 233.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1955
Jan. 20.
Denning, Birkett and Parker L.JJ.

* DAVIES v. GILBERT.

[Plaint No. K. 109.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Premises within the Acts—Land—Cottage let together with woodland—Woodland not rated—Woodland subsequently rated in excess of rateable value of cottage—Possession—Whether property under old or new control—Proper time to test rateable value—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 12 (2) (iii) and (6)—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 71), s. 3 (3).

In 1937 the then owner of a cottage and 4½ acres of woodland let the whole to the defendant at a rent of 7s. 6d. per week. The cottage was rated at £4 and the woodland was not rated at all. In 1938 the defendant cleared the undergrowth on the woodland and started business as a caravan site proprietor. In 1953 the 4½ acres were rated at £9, the cottage being still rated at £4. In 1954 the then owner sold the property to the plaintiff who gave the defendant notice to quit. The defendant claimed the protection of the Rent Acts:—

C. A.

1955

DAVIES v. GILBERT.

Held, that on September 1, 1939, when the new control under the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939,[1] came into operation, the cottage and land were under the old control of the principal Acts since the rateable value of the land was less than one-quarter of the rateable value of the cottage; that the new control had no application; and that, since the proper time to apply the test of rateable value under the old control was when the landlord sought to enforce his rights, the property ceased to be protected and the landlord was entitled to possession.

APPEAL from Judge Rowe Harding, sitting at Bridgnorth County Court.

In 1937 the owner of a cottage, The Cuckoo's Nest, at Alveley, Salop, let it, together with 4½ acres of woodland, to the defendant, William Edward Gilbert, at a weekly rent of 7s. 6d. The cottage at that time was rated at £4; the woodland was not rated at all. In 1938 the defendant cleared away the undergrowth and started to carry on business as a caravan site proprietor. In 1953 the 4½ acres, having become a caravan site, were rated at £9 a year, the cottage remaining rated at £4. In 1954 the then owner sold the land to the plaintiff, Thomas Moses Davies, who farmed all the adjoining land and wished to put this land to agricultural use. The plaintiff therefore gave the defendant notice to quit, but the defendant claimed the protection of the Rent Restriction Acts.

The county court judge held that the cottage and land came within the old control imposed by section 12 (2) (iii)[1] of the Act of 1920 and that by reason of the increase in rateable value of the land the property ceased to be protected and the landlord was entitled to possession.

The defendant appealed.

J. P. Widgery for the defendant tenant.

R. J. Toyn for the plaintiff landlord.

[1] Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 12 (2) (iii): "for the purposes of "this Act, any land or premises let "together with a house shall, if the "rateable value of the land or pre-"mises let separately would be less "than one quarter of the rateable "value of the house, be treated as "part of the house, but, subject to "this provision, this Act shall not "apply to a house let together with "land other than the site of the "house."

Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, s. 3 (3): ". . . "for the purposes of the Rent and "Mortgage Interest Restrictions "Acts, 1920–1938, as amended by "virtue of this section, any land or "premises let together with a dwell-"ing-house shall, unless the land or "premises so let consists or consist "of agricultural land exceeding two "acres in extent, be treated as part "of the dwelling-house; but, save as "aforesaid, the principal Acts shall "not, by virtue of this section, apply "to any dwelling-house let together "with land other than the site of "the dwelling-house."

C. A.
1955

DAVIES
v.
GILBERT.

No case other than that in the judgment was referred to in argument.

DENNING L.J. stated the facts and continued: The first question is whether on September 1, 1939, this property came within the old control. If it came within the old control, it remains governed by the Acts relating to old control and not by the Act of 1939. The question whether it came within old control in 1939 depends on whether the rateable value at that time of the 4½ acres was less than one quarter of the rateable value of the cottage. If it was, then the whole was controlled by the Rent Acts, 1920 to 1938, under the old control.

There is no evidence as to what the rateable value of the 4½ acres was at that time, but the judge heard all the evidence about the state of the premises in 1937, 1938 and 1939. I think he must have held that the value of the 4½ acres was so low that the rateable value would be less than one quarter of the rateable value of the cottage: it was producing virtually nothing. If that was so, then on September 1, 1939, these premises were controlled and new control does not come into the case at all.

But what is the effect of the new rating in 1953? This caravan site has now been rated at £9 a year, which is more than a quarter of the rateable value of the cottage, which remains at £4. Does this new rating take the premises out of old control? This raises the question: what is the proper time for the test of rateable value? Is it the initial date of the letting or is it the date when possession is sought by the landlord? Mr. Widgery referred us to section 12 (6) of the Act of 1920, which states that where the Act has become applicable to any dwelling-house it shall continue to apply thereto whether or not the dwelling-house continues to be one to which this Act applies. That section has often been invoked but never, so far as anyone can trace, has the court applied it. I do not think that we should apply it today for the first time. I do not think that it applies in the present case any more than in any other of the cases in which it has been cited: see the observations of Scrutton L.J. in Prout v. Hunter.[1]

In my judgment the test of rateable value under the old control is to be determined when the landlord seeks to enforce his rights. At the time of these proceedings the rateable value of this woodland or caravan site was £9 and the rateable value of the cottage was £4; therefore the whole ceases to be within the Act and the landlord is entitled to possession. That is the ground upon which the county court judge decided this case, and I find myself in full agreement with him. It becomes, therefore, unnecessary to consider what the position would have been if this case had been one of new control. In my opinion this appeal should be dismissed.

[1] [1924] 2 K.B. 736, 743; 40 T.L.R. 868.

C. A.
1955
DAVIES v. GILBERT.

BIRKETT L.J. I agree.

PARKER L.J. I also agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Stafford Clark & Co., for Weston, Fisher & Weston, Kidderminster; Woolley & Co.

A. W. G.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* In re CASTON CUSHIONING LD.

1955
Feb. 7.
ROXBURGH J.

[No. 0064 of 1955.]

Company—Winding up—Liquidator—Voluntary liquidation—Nomination by resolution of creditors—Majority in value and number necessary — Voluntary winding up superseded by compulsory winding up—Costs of liquidator in voluntary winding up—Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), s. 294—Companies (Winding Up) Rules, 1949 (S.I. 1949, No. 330 (L. 4)), r. 134.

Section 294 of the Companies Act, 1948, provides that if no person is nominated liquidator by the creditors in the voluntary winding up of a company, "the person, if any, nominated by the "company shall be liquidator. . . ." Rule 134 of the Companies (Winding Up) Rules, 1949, provides: "At a meeting of creditors "a resolution shall be deemed to be passed when a majority in "number and value of the creditors present . . . have voted in "favour of the resolution. . . ."

A resolution passed at a meeting of creditors of a company nominating a liquidator to act in the voluntary winding up of the company, instead of the liquidator nominated by the company at an extraordinary general meeting, was passed by a majority of creditors in value but not in number. There was no other nomination by the creditors:—

Held, that as the resolution was not passed by a majority in value as well in number as required by rule 134, the creditors had not nominated a liquidator, and by section 294 of the Companies Act, 1948, the liquidator nominated by the company was the liquidator.

A creditor petitioned for the compulsory winding up of the company, which was already in the course of being wound up voluntarily. The liquidator nominated by the company was present at the hearing of the petition, not to oppose it, but to protect himself because of certain adverse criticisms made against him in the petition:—

Held, that the liquidator was entitled to the costs incurred by him in the voluntary winding up out of the assets of the company in due course of liquidation.

1955

CASTON CUSHIONING LD., In re.

PETITION.

A creditor of Caston Cushioning Ld. for the sum of £5,197 9s. 8d. petitioned for the compulsory winding up of the company.

It was stated in the petition, so far as relevant: On August 16, 1954, at an extraordinary general meeting of the company an extraordinary resolution was passed for the voluntary winding up of the company, and one Stanley John Baker, a chartered accountant, was nominated as liquidator for the purpose of the winding up. On the same date and following that meeting, a meeting of the creditors of the company was held, at which a director of the company took the chair. There was produced to the meeting a statement of the company's affairs disclosing an estimated deficiency of approximately £6,868. The company was insolvent and unable to pay its debts.

At the meeting of the creditors the petitioner proposed that one R. W. Lambeth, a chartered accountant, be appointed liquidator of the company in the place of the company's nominee and that proposal was duly seconded and put to the meeting. The petitioner and another creditor, Latafoam (Holdings) Ld., together representing £4,795 14s. 9d. of the debts, voted for the appointment of Mr. Lambeth, and three creditors who represented only £2,336 19s. 6d. of the debts voted against it. Notwithstanding the majority in value of the vote in favour of the resolution, the chairman declared it lost, and, there being no other nominations, confirmed the appointment of the company's nominee, Mr. Baker, as liquidator.

It was further stated in the petition that the petitioner was not satisfied with the course which the voluntary winding up had taken and on further consideration he desired and submitted that it was just and equitable that the company should be wound up by the court.

The petition was not opposed, and the question relevant to this report was as to the validity of the resolution nominating a liquidator passed at the meeting of the creditors.

Ian Edwards-Jones for the petitioning creditor.
Ralph Instone for the liquidator.

The only case cited in argument relevant to the report is set out in the judgment.

ROXBURGH J., having stated the facts, continued: Until I examined the company legislation I should have assumed, as I now think quite wrongly, that Mr. Lambeth had in the circumstances been nominated by the creditors. I may say this problem has been left open since 1894 and never appears to have been deemed of sufficient importance to be solved in the various Companies' Acts passed since then. [His Lordship read section 294 of the Companies Act, 1948,[1] and continued:] It is plain from section 294 of the Companies Act, 1948, that Mr. Baker was appointed liquidator unless the creditors had nominated Mr. Lambeth. There is no doubt so far. But did the creditors nominate Mr. Lambeth? Without considering the legislation, I should have said without question that they did. But on looking into the matter I find a provision in rule 134 of the Companies (Winding Up) Rules, 1949,[2] from which it is plain that if this be a meeting to which rule 134 applies, the resolution was not passed, because it was not passed by a majority in number and value; it was only passed by a majority in value which was a minority in number.

It seems to me that there is no real ambiguity about that rule, and if that rule applied the resolution was not duly passed. That seems to me to be consistent with In re Bloxwich Iron and Steel Company,[3] where the court on an application gave effect to the wishes of the majority in value. It was nowhere stated in the judgment, though it was suggested in argument, that a resolution supported by a majority in value but a minority in number had been duly passed.

I am not absolutely certain in this case that rule 134 does apply. I am inclined to think that it does, but whether I am right or wrong about that, I should certainly not be prepared to lay down for the first time a proposition of law which would have the result that the question whether or not a resolution was passed at a meeting of creditors depended upon whether it did or did not fall within rule 134. That would introduce a wholly illegitimate trap for persons who have to try and make sense of this legislation, including in this particular connexion secretaries of companies and other people who are not expected to read deeply in the Law Reports.

Although I should have thought, therefore, that there was a crying need for some amendment of this legislation which would make it clear that in the event of the majority in value being a minority in number, their will should none the less prevail, unless and until some amendment of the law is made, I should not be prepared to hold that a different principle applied according to whether the meeting was one which fell within rule 134 or not.

[1] Companies Act, 1948: "Provisions applicable to a creditors' voluntary winding up. . . ."

S. 294: "The creditors and the company at their respective meetings mentioned in the last foregoing section may nominate a person to be liquidator for the purpose of winding up the affairs and distributing the assets of the company, and if the creditors and the company nominate different persons, the person nominated by the creditors shall be liquidator, and if no person is nominated by the creditors the person, if any, nominated by the company shall be liquidator. . . ."

[2] The Companies (Winding Up) Rules, 1949, r. 134: "At a meeting of creditors a resolution shall be deemed to be passed when a majority in number and value of the creditors present personally or by proxy and voting on the resolution have voted in favour of the resolution. . . ."

[3] [1894] W.N. 111.

1955

CASTON CUSHIONING LD., In re.

ROXBURGH J.

Surprising as it is to come to this conclusion, Mr. Baker was, in my judgment, duly appointed liquidator. There is no question about his removal because he does not resist and nobody resists a compulsory order today, and he will therefore be automatically removed by the making of a compulsory order. But what is important is the question not only of his costs today, with which I am immediately concerned, but another matter which depends on the same principles, namely, the costs and expenses which he has incurred hitherto in acting as liquidator, because admittedly he has so acted up to this time.

This is an important question and it is extraordinary that there should be no clearer statutory definition as to the manner in which creditors pass a resolution at a meeting. It is not limited to this class of case at all. It applies, as far as I can see, to every meeting of creditors in which that sequence of events (which cannot be altogether uncommon) occurs, namely, that the majority in value is a minority in number.

The petitioning creditor is plainly entitled to his order in default of any opposition because the liquidator has not appeared to oppose on behalf of the company, but to protect his own interest as he was, in the circumstances, well entitled to do. The petitioner's costs in the ordinary course will be ordered to be paid out of the assets. So far as the liquidator is concerned, as it seems to me the position is this: he was appointed liquidator. In the petition there is a vague allegation, which I am told was not intended to be a reflection upon him but which anybody reading the petition would assume was intended to be a reflection upon him, and I think that ought to be struck out of the petition. As it is said that it was not intended to make any reflection, I do not think it ought to remain in the petition at all. It is quite unnecessary, in order to found a cause of action, to have it there, and it should be struck out of the petition.

That being so, as he was liquidator, and has taken a very reasonable course, and has come here to defend a charge against himself, it is plain that he is entitled to his costs out of the assets in due course of liquidation.

Winding-up order made.

Solicitors: Kingsley Napley & Co.; Middleton, Lewis & Co.

I. G. R. M.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* In re DONCASTER AMALGAMATED COLLIERIES LD.

1955
Feb. 2.

Vaisey J.

[No. 00974 of 1954.]

Mines and Minerals—Coal—Nationalization—Company adjustment—Shareholders' rights—Preference and ordinary shares—Compensation—Adjustment proposals—Date when "finally determined"—Coal Industry Nationalisation (Company Adjustment) Regulations (S.I. 1948, No. 2360) regs. 2 (5), 23—Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 59), s. 25.

Regulation 2 (5) of the Coal Industry Nationalisation (Company Adjustment) Regulations, 1948, made under section 25 of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946, relating to adjustments as between classes of debenture and share holders of companies having assets transferred, provides: "No adjustment proposal shall "have effect for the purpose of these Regulations unless notice "thereof under paragraph (2) is served before the expiry of nine "months from the date when the amount of the compensation to be "made under the Act in respect of the transfer of the company's "transferred interests, and in respect of any claim under section 17 "of the Act, is finally determined":—

Held, that the words "finally determined" meant that the period of nine months was to be calculated (subject to any extension by the Minister under Regulation 23) from the day whereon the review of all determinations of the value of compensation units by the valuation board, which should have been submitted for review to the referees, should be finally completed.

ORIGINATING SUMMONS.

Section 25 of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946, directs that provision shall be made by regulations with regard to adjustments as between classes of debenture and share holders of companies, having assets transferred to the National Coal Board.

Regulation 2 (5) of the regulations made under section 25 of the Act (S.I. 1948, No. 2360) provides: "No adjustment proposal "shall have effect for the purpose of these Regulations unless "notice thereof under paragraph (2) is served before the expiry "of nine months from the date when the amount of the com-"pensation to be made under the Act in respect of the transfer "of the company's transferred interests, and in respect of any "claim under section 17 of the Act, is finally determined."

Regulation 23 provides: "Any period or date specified in "these Regulations as the period within which, or the date by "which, anything is to be done may, notwithstanding that the "period has expired or the date has passed, being a period, be "extended, or, being a date, be postponed:—(a) in the cases "mentioned in paragraph (5) of regulation 2 . . . by the Minister; ". . . on such terms . . . as may seem just. . . ."

Doncaster Amalgamated Collieries Ld.'s colliery assets were on January 1, 1947, transferred to the National Coal Board. A special resolution was passed on May 29, 1953, for its voluntary winding up. The liquidators, being uncertain as to the date from which the period of nine months prescribed by regulation 2 (5) began to run, took out an originating summons to determine the question whether on the true construction of the Coal Industry Nationalisation (Company Adjustment) Regulations, 1948, the applicants as joint liquidators of the company ought to distribute the assets thereof available for its contributories on the footing that the period of nine months referred to in regulation 2 (5) (being the period before the expiration of which any adjustment proposal under that regulation must be served on the company) was to be calculated from:—(a) The day whereon the value of those of the company's assets which by virtue of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946, became vested in the National Coal Board, and which constituted five "compensation units" was determined for the purposes of the said Act; or (b) the day whereon the review of all determinations of the value of "compensation units" by the Yorkshire District Valuation Board which should be or had been submitted for review to the referees appointed for that purpose pursuant to section 12 (5) of the said Act and the regulations made thereunder should be finally completed; or (c) any and what other day.

1955

DONCASTER AMALGAMATED COLLIERIES LD., In re.

The material facts are sufficiently stated in the judgment.

Ralph Instone for the liquidators.
T. D. D. Divine for a preference stockholder.
P. J. Sykes for an ordinary stockholder.

VAISEY J. In this summons, the joint liquidators in the voluntary winding-up of the Doncaster Amalgamated Collieries Ld. are the applicants, and the respondents are a holder of preference stock in the capital of that company and a holder of ordinary stock in the company. The summons raises a question on the true construction of the Coal Industry Nationalisation (Company Adjustment) Regulations, 1948, and particularly of regulation 2 (5). Indeed, the question really depends on the true construction, not of that small sub-paragraph of the regulation as a whole, but merely on two words in it, those two words being "finally determined."

This company is one of the coal companies which come under the provisions of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946. It was incorporated in 1937 and the coalfield which it operated is situated in the Yorkshire district. It had a very large issued share capital of preference stock and a still larger amount of ordinary stock. There have been two successive reductions of capital, one in 1948, when 6s. 8d. was paid off both classes of stock, and another in 1951 when 8s. 4d. was similarly paid off.

The question which arises here is as to the period of nine months which is mentioned in regulation 2 (5) in these words: "No adjustment proposal"—and I will return to that expression in a moment—" shall have effect for the purpose of these Regulations unless notice thereof under paragraph (2) is served before the expiry of nine months from the date when the amount of the compensation to be made under the Act in respect of the transfer of the company's transferred interests, and in respect of any claim under section 17 of the Act, is finally determined."

The earlier part of regulation 2 provides for the making of proposals for adjustment, which really means that in certain circumstances the preference stockholders are entitled to a further allowance in respect of their capital over and above what they would normally receive under the winding-up provisions. In point of fact, there has been no application for any adjustment; no preference stockholder has said that he wants to formulate an adjustment scheme under section 25 of the Act, and the liquidators say that they have no reason to suppose that any such scheme is in the least likely ever to be propounded.

Section 25 of the Act, the marginal note to which is: "Adjustments as between classes of debenture and shareholders of companies having assets transferred," provides for regulations being made for regard to be had to the relative expectations of any capital yield from their respective interests, and it is under that section that, if a scheme were formulated, it would take effect.

That being the position the liquidators, who have in hand a sum of over £200,000 which, in the absence of any adjustment scheme, would belong to the ordinary stockholders, are anxious to distribute that sum as soon as possible. The question is when the liquidators are entitled to assume that the risk of an adjustment proposal being made will no longer concern them, even as a possibility.

The two suggestions which are made, one on behalf of the preference stockholders and the other on behalf of the ordinary stockholders, are to this effect. The preference stockholders say that the moment at which for the first time it can be said that the amount of the compensation to be made under the Act in respect of the transfer of the company's transferred interests is finally determined, is the date whereon the review of all determinations of the value of compensation units by the Yorkshire District Valuation Board, which shall have been submitted for review to the referees appointed for that purpose under section 12 of the Act and the regulations, has been finally completed. On the other hand, it is suggested that the appropriate date from which the nine months will run is the date whereon the value of those of the company's assets which became vested in the National Coal Board and which constituted five compensation units was determined for the purposes of the Act.

I think it is extremely unfortunate that the liquidators should be obliged to withhold from the ordinary stockholders a sum of money which almost certainly will go into their pockets, and that they should be obliged to hold it up for an indefinite time. It seems to me most desirable, if it can be achieved, that that money should be distributed at the earliest possible moment; but, as is pointed out by the liquidators, before the company's share of the compensation allocated to the Yorkshire district can be finally known, and as against which the company's claim for compensation has to be set, it is necessary to await the outcome of those cases within the district which are being taken before the referees for review (that is, under section 25 of the Act), for the reason that only after the value of all compensation units within the district has been conclusively ascertained will the amount be known of any necessary scaling down of such variations in order to adjust them to the total compensation allocated to the district. It is said that such cases for review are not expected to be disposed of before March, 1955.

1955

DONCASTER AMALGAMATED COLLIERIES LD., In re.

Vaisey J.

The liquidators go on to say that if the nine months' period for the purposes of the regulation does not begin to run until all these cases have been disposed of by the referees, it will not expire until the end of 1955—that is, assuming that the estimate of March, 1955, proves to be accurate.

The liquidators further say that, in order to avoid prejudicing any preference stockholder who may be minded to formulate an adjustment scheme, and possibly to avoid exposing themselves to a risk of personal liability, they have been advised that they should retain for the duration of the nine months' period a sum sufficient to meet the maximum amount which could possibly be allocated to the preference stockholders under an adjustment scheme plus a sum for costs; and they have been further advised that the maximum amount in question would be 2s. 4½d. per £ of the preference stock as it was on the primary vesting date as defined in the Act, on the ground that the highest price at which the stock had changed hands during the three years before that date was 22s. 4½d. per £ of stock. They point out that that would involve withholding from distribution a total sum of the order of over £200,000, and if that had to be retained by them throughout the year 1955 it would be a considerable hardship to the ordinary stockholders as no adjustment scheme has yet been, or seems likely to be, propounded. They therefore seek the directions of the court.

I am bound to say that it seems to me that " the amount of " the compensation to be made under the Act in respect of the " transfer of the company's transferred interests " under the regulation which I have read, must have the same meaning as when those terms are used in section 10 of the Act. I do not see how there can be any final determination while these deductions or additions are still possible owing to the action of other companies in the Yorkshire district in referring their schemes to the necessary tribunal. It seems to me that " finally determined " is not really an expression which can be construed as referring to anything short of the ultimate date on which the exact amount which is going to be paid for the company's assets under the Act has been made out to the last penny. After all, the word "finally" is a very strong word and so is the word "determined."

Mr. Sykes, with great ingenuity and commendable briefness, has referred me to regulation 9 in which the words "finally" "determined" also appear. Fortunately, I have not to construe that regulation, but it contains two very extraordinary expressions, one a reference to compensation being "finally or more "fully determined" and the other a reference to it being "finally "or sufficiently determined." What the meaning of that is in that regulation I do not pause to inquire, but I do not think it can throw any light on the plain and unqualified words "finally determined" as they appear in regulation 2 (5).

I thought at one time that some difficulty would arise in determining this point, because of regulation 23, which provides: "Any period or date specified in these Regulations as the period "within which, or the date by which, anything is to be done "may, notwithstanding that the period has expired or the date "has passed, being a period, be extended, or, being a date, be "postponed" by the Minister of Fuel and Power or by any tribunal set up under the Act. Most unfortunately, I think that that regulation, as far as I can understand it, only allows the Minister to extend the period or postpone a date, and it does not allow him to limit a period or anticipate a date.

Therefore, however meritorious the case may be for an earlier distribution, it seems to me that, once I have arrived at the conclusion that sub-paragraph (5) of regulation 2 means exactly what it says and nothing else, there is nothing in regulation 23 which would enable the Minister to anticipate what seems to me to be a date plainly indicated in regulation 2 (5). I think that it is a pity that, if the Minister took power to extend the period or postpone a date, he did not also take power to limit a period or anticipate a date; but there is nothing in the regulation which apparently allows that to be done; and the result is that, in my view, the words "finally determined" in regulation 2 (5) mean exactly what they say, and that the final determination of the amount must be and can only be the day whereon the review of all determinations of the value of compensation units by the valuation board which shall have been submitted for review to the referees shall be finally completed. The unfortunate result of that is, I am afraid, that the liquidators cannot anticipate the date which is apparently laid down in the regulations, with the consequence that the ordinary stockholders will have to be kept out of this very large sum of money until the nine months' period from the day formulated in alternative (b) of the summons has expired.

I do not think it would be helpful for me to suggest that the liquidators might in certain circumstances obtain the leave of the court to make a further distribution on evidence that the risk of any adjustment scheme being propounded in relation to

1955

DONCASTER AMALGAMATED COLLIERIES LD., In re.

Vaisey J.

this company is non-existent, but I merely mention that as a possibility. Short of that I do not think I can do anything except declare, as I am asked to do, what I believe to be the meaning of the words " finally determined " in the regulation in question, and I will declare as asked by alternative (b) of the summons, subject to the insertion of the provision: " unless the period is " extended by the Minister under regulation 23 "; and having so declared I must express my regret that it is an unfortunate conclusion to arrive at in this particular case but I see no way out of it at the moment.

Solicitors: Linklaters & Paines.

J. L. D.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1955
Jan. 24.

Pearson J.

*WALLACE v. FREEMAN HEATING CO. LD. AND ANOTHER.

[1952 W. 169.]

Legal Aid—Costs—Taxation—Special expense—Appeal—Transcript of shorthand notes—Civil aid certificate—Expense not authorized at date of issue of certificate—Disallowed on taxation—Invalidity of retrospective authorization—Error or mistake—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 51), s. 2 (2) (a)—Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1359), reg. 14 (3).

The successful plaintiff in a running down action was granted a civil aid certificate for the purpose of appealing to the Court of Appeal on the question of damages. The certificate was in the usual form and contained no special authority for the incurring of any particular expenditure. The defendants entered a cross-appeal on the issue of liability. For the purposes of the appeal the plaintiff's solicitors bespoke a copy of the transcript of the judgment and of the evidence in the court of trial. On the hearing of the appeals the plaintiff succeeded in obtaining an increased award of damages which was reduced to a figure slightly above that awarded at the trial in view of the defendants' succeeding in establishing contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff.

On the taxation of the plaintiff's solicitors' bill of costs the amount of the shorthand writer's account was disallowed by the taxing master on the grounds that the civil aid certificate granted to the plaintiff only authorized an appeal on the question of damages which did not necessitate the bespeaking of a transcript of the evidence.

On the disallowance of the shorthand writer's account being reported to the local legal aid secretary, he confirmed that he intended his first certificate to cover the shorthand writer's account, and an amended certificate was granted pursuant to regulation 8 of the Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950, authorizing the shorthand writer's account to be incurred, and this fact was referred to by the plaintiff's solicitors in their objections to the taxation. The taxing master overruled the objections. On appeal:—

Held, that by virtue of regulation 14 (3) of the Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950,[1] (1) the incurring of a special expense, such as the bespeaking of a transcript, must be referred to and specifically considered and authorized by the appropriate area committee, and that in the absence of express authority there was no necessary implication in the civil aid certificate that this particular expense could be incurred; (2) that an expense having been incurred which was not authorized by the legal aid committee at the time of the issue of the certificate, they could not validly give authorization for it retrospectively.

Semble, if prior approval for the incurring of an expense has been given, but this fact is omitted by mistake from the certificate, the matter can be rectified under regulation 8 of the General Regulations.

SUMMONS adjourned into open court.

The plaintiff, Mrs. Wallace, brought an action against the defendants for damages in respect of injuries sustained by her in a road accident. The action was heard on July 16, 1952, by Croom-Johnson J. at the Glamorgan Summer Assize. Judgment was given for the plaintiff, who was awarded £125, together with special damages.

On August 20, 1952, the plaintiff obtained a civil aid certificate for the purpose of appealing to the Court of Appeal. The certificate was in the usual form and it granted legal aid to the plaintiff in connexion with the following proceedings: "An appeal to the "Court of Appeal against the judgment of Croom-Johnson J. "in the action in so far as the appellant will ask the Court of "Appeal to vary the amount of damages awarded under the said "judgment. . . ." Paragraph 4 of the certificate to which the marginal note was "Insert any special conditions" was left blank. On August 21, 1952, the plaintiff gave her notice of appeal to the Court of Appeal raising the issue mentioned in the civil aid certificate. The defendants entered a cross-appeal on the issue of contributory negligence.

[1] Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, s. 2 (2): "Where a person "receives legal aid in connection with "any proceedings—(a) the expenses "incurred in connection with the pro- "ceedings, so far as they would "ordinarily be paid in the first "instance by or on behalf of the "solicitor acting for him, shall be so "paid except in the case of those "paid direct from the legal aid fund "as provided by this Part of this "Act."

Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950, reg. 2 (2): "Any document "purporting to be a certificate issued "in accordance with these regula- "tions shall, until the contrary is "proved, be deemed to be a valid "certificate issued to the person "named therein."

Reg. 8 (1): "The appropriate Area "Committee may amend a certifi- "cate—(a) where it appears to the "Area Committee that there has been "some error or mistake in a certifi- "cate;"

Reg. 14 (3): "Where it appears "to the assisted person's solicitor "necessary for the proper conduct of "the proceedings to take or to apply "to the court for leave to take any "one or more of the following steps, "namely:—. . . (b) to bespeak any "transcript of shorthand notes of "any proceedings . . . he shall "(unless the certificate provides for "the act in question to be done) "apply to the appropriate Area Com- "mittee for authority so to do, and "no payment shall be allowed on "taxation for any such step taken "without their approval."

1955

WALLACE v. FREEMAN HEATING CO. LD.

In February, 1953, the plaintiff's appeal and the defendants' cross-appeal were heard and both the appeal and the cross-appeal were allowed, the Court of Appeal increasing the damages to £275, but holding that, since the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence to the extent of 50 per cent., the net amount that the plaintiff was entitled to recover was £137 10s.

After the granting of the civil aid certificate the plaintiff's solicitors bespoke a transcript of the judgment and the whole of the evidence in the court of trial for the purposes of the appeal. The cost of the shorthand writer's account, £27 0s. 10d., was disallowed on the taxation of the plaintiff's solicitors' bill of costs. The plaintiff's solicitors thereupon made objections to the taxation in respect of that amount in the terms set out in Pearson J.'s judgment.

The taxing master, in his answers to the objectors, rejected these contentions.

The plaintiff appealed.

R. J. Harvey for the plaintiff.

The defendants were not represented.

PEARSON J. This is a chambers summons adjourned into court by request because it raises a problem of some general application, arising in the taxation of the legally aided plaintiff's costs in a running down case.

The action was brought by the plaintiff against two defendants, a limited company and an individual. The writ was issued on February 12, 1952, and pleadings closed by the end of June, 1952. On July 16, 1952, the action was heard by Croom-Johnson J. at the Glamorgan Summer Assize, some eight witnesses were called and the judge decided in favour of the plaintiff and awarded a sum of £125 plus special damages.

On August 20, 1952, the plaintiff obtained a civil aid certificate to appeal to the Court of Appeal. That civil aid certificate was in the usual form and it granted legal aid to the plaintiff as appellant in connexion with the following proceedings: "An "appeal to the Court of Appeal against the judgment of Croom-"Johnson J. in the action" described "in so far as the appel-"lant will ask the Court of Appeal to vary the amount of "damages awarded under the said judgment and to enforce." Then paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 are filled in in the usual way and paragraph 4 (to which the marginal note is "Insert any special "conditions") is left blank; so there is not any special authority for the incurring of any particular expenditure. On August 21, the plaintiff gave her notice of appeal to the Court of Appeal raising the issue mentioned in the civil aid certificate, that is to say, complaining of the alleged inadequacy of the sum awarded, and the defendants put in an appeal on the issue of contributory negligence.

In February, 1953, the plaintiff's appeal and the defendants' cross-appeal were heard and they both succeeded, it being held that the amount awarded should be increased to £275, but that there was 50 per cent. of contributory negligence and in the result the amount net that was recovered was £137 10s. There followed taxation. The plaintiff's solicitors' bill was taxed on October 18, 1954. The only item which matters for the present purpose is that there is an entry: "Attending shorthand writer, "bespeaking transcript, and subsequently attending obtaining "same," followed by the item "Paid his account, £27 0s. 10d." and that amount was disallowed by the taxing master.

The solicitor whose bill it was made objections to the taxation in respect of the disallowance of the shorthand writer's account for £27 0s. 10d. The reasons for objection raised, in substance, two points: First it was stated: "The plaintiff's appeal was on "the quantum of damages, and the defendants' appeal on the "issue of liability made it necessary for a transcript of the pro-"ceedings in the court of trial to be available in the Court of "Appeal: (a) for the full and accurate presentation of the case to "the court by counsel; (b) for the consideration by the court of "all the issues involved, and (c) to enable the Court of Appeal to "hear counsel for the plaintiff on the findings of the trial judge. "Inasmuch as a transcript of the proceedings below was neces-"sary for the reasons already specified, the plaintiff's (appellant) "solicitors were justified in assuming that under section 2 (2) (a) "of the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, the legal aid certificate "granted to prosecute the appeal, also gave, or intended to give, "authority to instruct and incur the shorthand writer's account "of £27 0s. 10d.—the subject-matter of these objections."

Pausing there, I would call attention to the words "also "gave, or intended to give."

The objections continue: "On the disallowance of the short-"hand writer's account being reported to the local legal aid "secretary, he confirmed he intended his first certificate to cover "the shorthand writer's account, and an amended certificate was "granted pursuant to regulation 8 of the Legal Aid (General) "Regulations, 1950, authorizing the shorthand writer's account "to be incurred. With respect, it is submitted that the legal aid "certificates granted are sufficient authority for the shorthand "writer's account of £27 0s. 10d. to be included and allowed in "the plaintiff's bill, under the order of February 5, 1954," which, I think, should be February 5, 1953.

That is the only evidence concerning the amended legal aid certificate. On reading those objections one would think—and this is agreed and admitted—that the solicitor made no application to the legal aid committee for authority to incur the expense of obtaining from the shorthand writer a transcript of his shorthand note before the expense was incurred, that is to say before the shorthand note was obtained. It is admitted that no specific application was made and one must read these objections as meaning that no such authority or approval was applied for and none was issued at the original time in August, 1952. But after this item had been disallowed on taxation, the solicitor went back to the legal aid committee and the legal aid committee's secretary was willing to say that the first certificate issued was intended to cover the shorthand writer's account, and, therefore, an amended certificate was issued.

1955

WALLACE v. FREEMAN HEATING CO. LD.

Pearson J.

When the matter came before the taxing master he reconsidered it and he put his answers to the solicitors' objections to the taxation of the bill as follows: "This is a taxation of the "costs of an assisted appellant under the Legal Aid and Advice "Act, 1949, which raises two important questions: (1) Is specific "authority from the area committee necessary to bespeak a "transcript of the judgment and evidence in the court below for "use on the appeal, or is the legal aid certificate authorizing the "appeal of itself sufficient authority? In this case there was an "appeal by the plaintiff on damages, and a cross-appeal by "the defendants on liability. Although the plaintiff was an "assisted person as far as her appeal was concerned, she obtained "no legal aid certificate to defend the cross-appeal, which must "be treated as a separate proceeding (see the note to R.S.C., "Ord. 58, r. 6, Annual Practice (1955), p. 1260, referring to "Jones v. Stott [1]) and one for which a separate legal aid certi- "ficate would be necessary. The plaintiff was not, therefore, an "assisted person in connexion with the cross-appeal on the issue "of liability. Having on August 20, 1952, obtained her legal aid "certificate authorizing her appeal as to damages only, she "bespoke a transcript of the judgment and the whole of the "evidence in the court below. No specific authority to obtain "this transcript was given, nor it seems was such authority "requested. The matter is regulated by regulation 14 (3) (b) of "the Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950, which is as follows: "'Where it appears . . . necessary for the proper conduct of "'the proceedings to take . . . any . . . of the following steps, "'namely:—(b) to bespeak any transcript of shorthand notes of "'any proceedings; . . . he shall (unless the certificate provides "'for the act in question to be done) apply to the appropriate "'Area Committee for authority so to do, and no payment shall "'be allowed on taxation for any such step taken without their "'approval.' The note to R.S.C., Ord. 66a, r. 4 of the Annual "Practice (1955), p. 1524, which is dealing with payment for "transcripts for the Court of Appeal, is in the following terms: "'Legal Aid.'—'Under Regulation 14 (3) of the Legal Aid "'(General) Regulations, 1950, the solicitor for an assisted person "'who considers it necessary to bespeak any transcript of short- "'hand notes of any proceedings must first obtain the authority "'of the appropriate Area Committee. . . .'" The important words there are " must first obtain," and the taxing master had, no doubt, these words in mind.

[1] [1910] 1 K.B. 893 (C.A.).

The answers continue: " The certificate in this case did not " provide for the obtaining of a transcript, and the cost of the " transcript was therefore disallowed on taxation, which took " place on October 16, 1954. The solicitors' contention that " section 2 (2) (a) of the Act is sufficient authority for obtaining " a transcript is fallacious. It might equally well be claimed that " this section authorizes obtaining reports from medical experts " and tendering their evidence in accident cases, or obtaining " reports and tendering surveyor's evidence in building disputes " or claims for damages for breach of repairing covenants. For " all these matters specific authority is necessary under regula- " tion 14. No doubt the legislature decided that special control " should be kept on such items as being the most expensive likely " to be incurred, and among which the expense of transcripts is " apt to be the highest. Moreover, in this case, the expense of " the whole transcript could not be considered as being ordinarily " incurred as the assisted appeal was as to damages only, and " the transcript contains evidence (pp. 16 to 28) relating solely " to liability. The authority for this, if such is required, is " contained in the Practice Note of the then Master of the Rolls " dated April 8, 1941 ([1941] W.N. 84, and referred to in the " notes on R.S.C., Ord. 58, r. 11 at p. 1270 of the Annual " Practice) which states: ' if the only issue of fact is that of " ' liability, evidence relating to damages must not be copied and " ' vice versa.' That an appeal is possible without any transcript " of evidence being necessary there can be no doubt, so that in " view of regulation 14, it would not be right to accept a legal aid " certificate to appeal as constituting automatically an authority " to obtain a transcript.

" Turning to the second question, after the taxation the appel- " lant's solicitors approached the area committee informing them " of the disallowance of the cost of the transcript, and the com- " mittee eventually saw fit on November 19, 1954 to amend the " legal aid certificate to include authority to obtain ' a transcript " ' of the evidence and judgment.' The regulation providing as " it does that no payment shall be allowed, the effect of this " procedure, if accepted, would be to give the area committee " power to overrule the taxation by their subsequent amendment " of their certificate and thereby override the regulation. The " acceptance of retrospective authority opens the door wide to " many abuses. For example, in the present case, the area " committee after the event have purported to give authority to " obtain ' a transcript of the evidence and judgment of the " ' High Court,' whereas the proceedings for which the legal aid " certificate was originally given was to appeal as to damages only " and for this purpose a transcript of the evidence as to liability " would not have been necessary and would no doubt not have

1955

WALLACE v. FREEMAN HEATING CO. LD.

Pearson J.

" been authorized at the time the legal aid certificate was origin" ally granted, there being at that date no cross-appeal as to
" liability. For all the above reasons I overrule this objection."

There is a possible query as to the accuracy of the statement that the transcript contains evidence on pp. 16 to 28 relating solely to the issue of liability and not relating at all to the other issue which was concerned in the plaintiff's appeal as to the amount of the plaintiff's damages. I looked at the shorthand note and certain pages between 16 and 28 do have some bearing on the issue of the plaintiff's damages, but not very much. It is not an unreasonable view for the master to take of that pure question of fact, but it is not necessarily correct. Subject to that query I agree with the taxing master's answers to the objections and adopt them as part of my judgment.

There are some observations which I wish to add on the main points as well as on a specific and very interesting point which was argued before this court by Mr. Harvey on behalf of the plaintiff. First, there is the question of the true construction of the legal aid certificate: Does it by itself expressly or by necessary implication authorize the expense of bespeaking a shorthand transcript to be incurred? The answer must be, on the face of the certificate, quite plainly in the negative, because the certificate only authorizes the appellant to appeal on the question of damages, and there is no entry in paragraph 4 where the marginal note " Insert any special conditions " occurs. It is true that if there were no special provision in the regulations it may well be that section 1 (5) of the Act would have been sufficient to authorize this expense.

Section 1 (5) provides: " Legal aid shall consist of representa" tion, on the terms provided for by this Part of this Act, by a " solicitor and so far as necessary by counsel (including all such " assistance as is usually given by solicitor or counsel in the steps
" preliminary or incidental to any proceedings or in arriving at or " giving effect to a compromise to avoid or bring to an end any " proceedings)." But there is a provision in the Act for regulations to be made. Section 12 (1) provides: " The Lord Chancellor
" may make such regulations as appear to him necessary or " desirable for giving effect to this Part of this Act or for " preventing abuses thereof," and obviously a possible form of abuse which might need to be prevented is the incurring of unnecessary expense. It may well be for that reason, and with that object in view, that regulation 14 was included in the Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950. [His Lordship read regulation 14 (3) so far as relevant, and continued:] That obviously means that the question whether the bespeaking of a transcript should be authorized is a question which must be specifically submitted to and considered and decided by the local area committee, and it is clearly not covered by a civil aid certificate which merely authorizes an appeal. There must be a specific authorization of the incurring of these expenses. It does not necessarily have to be in the legal aid certificate itself, but it must be in fact given. Accordingly, I hold as a matter of construction that there is no necessary implication in the civil aid certificate that the costs of bespeaking a shorthand transcript can be incurred.

The other main point is whether the legal aid committee's authority or approval can be given retrospectively; whether a retrospective approval or authority is an effective approval or authority. That is a question of construction again and, in my opinion, the answer is that it must be obtained first before the expense is incurred.

There are three reasons for that: First, the opening words of regulation 14 (3): "Where it appears to the assisted person's "solicitor necessary . . . to take" certain steps. That is, in my opinion, referring to the time before the step has been taken. It is the time at which it appears to the assisted person's solicitor necessary to take a step. It does not state: "Where it appears "or has appeared," nor does it state: "Where it appears to the "assisted person's solicitor to be or to have been necessary."

Secondly, there is the wording towards the end of paragraph (3): "He shall apply to the appropriate area committee "for authority so to do." That again, to my mind, implies an authority to do something in the future. The authority comes first and the taking of the step comes next.

Thirdly, there are these words which seem to me clear and emphatic: "No payment shall be allowed on taxation for any "such step taken without their approval." In my judgment a step is taken without their approval if there is no subsisting authority at the time when the step is taken. If the step is taken first and authority or approval purports to be given afterwards, it is still true to say that the step was taken without their approval. The step was taken when there was no subsisting authority.

Accordingly, on those two points, I agree with the answers of the taxing master.

But what was mainly argued here in this particular case was an ingenious point of Mr. Harvey's which was on these lines: He said that what the legal aid committee did or purported to do was not to issue a new retrospective authority, but merely to amend their certificate, and Mr. Harvey called attention to regulation 2 (2). [His Lordship read the paragraph and continued:] Accordingly, Mr. Harvey submitted there is a presumption that any certificate is a valid certificate, and it was part of his argument to contend that an amended certificate is a certificate within the meaning of that regulation. Next, he drew attention to regulation 8 dealing with the amendment of certificates, and which provides: "The appropriate area committee may amend "a certificate (a) where it appears to the area committee that "there has been some error or mistake in the certificate," and he submitted that there is no other relevant power in regulation 8 to amend a certificate and that therefore it must be inferred that this certificate was amended by reason of some error or mistake in the certificate and in order to rectify that error or mistake. He argues, therefore, that the proper inference is that the error or mistake was that in fact an authority had been given but it was not mentioned in the certificate; the error or mistake in the certificate was the omission to mention the true specific prior authority which had in fact been given.

1955

WALLACE v. FREEMAN HEATING CO. LD.

Pearson J.

I think that if the prior approval or authority had in fact been given and was omitted by mistake from the civil aid certificate, it may well be that that could be put right under regulation 8; but I think it is more a question of what inference is to be drawn from the facts of this particular case, having regard to the evidence which is before me. The principal evidence is what the appellant has said in the reasons for objection here. I have already read it but I will read the material passage again to illustrate this point: "On the disallowance of the shorthand writer's account being re- "ported to the local legal aid secretary, he confirmed he intended "his first certificate to cover the shorthand writer's account, and "an amended certificate was granted pursuant to regulation 8 of "the Legal Aid (General) Regulations, 1950, authorizing the "shorthand writer's account to be incurred." I find myself unable to infer from that that in fact a prior approval existed. The proper inference is that no prior approval was applied for or given. The legal aid secretary no doubt said that he intended the original certificate to cover everything, and that he would issue an amended certificate to put the matter right. That would be a mistake on the part of the legal aid committee or their secretary, as to what was authorized; as to what was in fact the expenditure covered by a civil aid certificate in this form; but it does not, to my mind, lead to the inference that in fact there was a prior approval orally or in writing or at all. I think that the right inference is that there was no prior approval given at all, and that it is not right to infer from the amendment of the legal aid certificate and from the facts of this case that there was any such prior approval in fact.

So for that reason I hold that this ingenious special point which was introduced into the argument by Mr. Harvey does not succeed. Accordingly, the appeal is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Wrentmore & Son for Thos. John & Co., Cardiff.

J. A. G.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.]

* REGINA v. CARVER.

1955
Jan. 31

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Gorman JJ.

Criminal Law—Sentence—Imprisonment and fine—Maximum sentence of imprisonment—Power of court to impose further imprisonment in default of payment of fine—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s. 3—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1922 (11 & 12 Geo. 5, c. 56), s. 3—Criminal Justice Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 58), s. 14 (1) (c).

The appellant was convicted under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, of permitting premises to be used as a brothel and was sentenced to the maximum term of imprisonment of six months and a fine of £200, and in default of payment, a further term of six months' imprisonment. On appeal on the ground that the court had no power to impose the further term:—

Held, that whatever might have been the position before the passing of the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, section 14 (1) (c) of that Act gave the court power to fix a term of imprisonment, in addition to any term already imposed, if a fine was not paid.

Rex v. Brook [1949] 2 K.B. 138; 65 T.L.R. 273; [1949] 1 All E.R. 787 applied.

APPEAL against sentence.

The appellant, Gladys Mary Carver, was convicted at the County of London Quarter Sessions of permitting premises to be used as a brothel contrary to the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, s. 13, as amended by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1922, s. 3, after a previous conviction, and was sentenced to six months' imprisonment and a fine of £200, and in default of payment a further term of six months' imprisonment.

Counsel for the appellant contended that since the maximum term of imprisonment under the Act was six months, no further term could be imposed on failure to pay the fine, the only remedy being by way of distress under the Levy of Fines Act, 1822.

Peter Bruce for the appellant.
Michael Corkrey for the Crown.

LORD GODDARD C.J. The appellant was convicted under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, of permitting premises to be used as a brothel after a previous conviction for that offence and the court imposed the maximum sentence of six months' imprisonment and ordered her to pay a fine. When I say the "maximum sentence" what I mean is this: the statute, as amended, under which she was convicted, authorizes the court to impose imprisonment for six months and a fine not exceeding £250. The court imposed the sentence of imprisonment for six months, and as they looked upon it as a very bad case they also imposed a fine of £200. Then the court said that in default of payment the appellant would serve a further term of six months making twelve months in all.

C. C. A.
1955
REGINA
v.
CARVER.

Mr. Bruce has contended that that sentence is not authorized by law because, Parliament having provided a maximum sentence of six months, no further sentence of imprisonment could be imposed. But the statute provides that the sentence that can be imposed is six months plus a fine. If a person does not pay the fine obviously it does not mean that the person with no money is to be in a better position than the person who can afford to pay, because it would mean that, if he could afford to pay, he would lose £200.

One looks to see what are the powers of the court under the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, which made very considerable changes in the law in regard to the recovery of fines. In the decision of this court—and we are bound by it—in Rex v. Brook,[1] this court said that an entirely new procedure was introduced by the Act of 1948 with regard to the payment of fines and, although the Levy of Fines Act, 1822, and the Queen's Remembrancer Act, 1859, were not repealed, so that certain matters of machinery still had to be carried out, as for instance, entry of the fine on the estreat roll and the return to the sheriff, we have now to consider simply the provisions of section 14 of the Act of 1948, which provides: "(1) Subject to the provisions of this section, where a "fine is imposed by, or a recognizance is forfeited before, a court "of assize or quarter sessions, an order may be made in accord-"ance with the provisions of this section." That seems to me to apply to any fine. Fines have always been enforced before courts of summary jurisdiction by means of a sentence of imprisonment being imposed in default of payment or in default of distress. The Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, provides a short code of the length of imprisonment that can be imposed according to the size of the fine. Under section 5 of that Act the maximum sentence that can be imposed by a court of summary jurisdiction for non-payment of a fine is three months, but it has always been the policy of the legislature, certainly before courts of summary jurisdiction, to deal with the question of non-payment of fines by a sentence of imprisonment. The Criminal Justice Act, 1948, introduced a considerable change in the law. Among other things, courts before whom accused persons were convicted on indictment were given powers to impose fines for felony; they had always power to impose a fine for misdemeanours, and the section provides: " . . . where a fine is "imposed "—it does not limit it to cases where a fine but no sentence of imprisonment is imposed—" by . . . a court of assize "or quarter sessions, an order may be made . . . (c) fixing a term "of imprisoment which the person liable to make the payment is "to undergo if any sum which he is liable to pay is not duly "paid or recovered."

In these circumstances, we think that quarter sessions were entitled to make the order which they did. It may be that the sheriff can still distrain on the goods. If he does so while the appellant is serving her sentence and recovers the sum of £200 by distraint, when her sentence of six months is up, there will be an end of it; but if distraint does not produce the £200 or the fine has not been paid, she will have to do a further six months. In all these circumstances the appeal is dismissed.

[1] [1949] 2 K.B. 138; 65 T.L.R. 273; [1949] 1 All E.R. 787.

C. C. A.
1955
REGINA v. CARVER.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Alfred Bieber & Bieber; P. W. Tice.

J. D. P.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* SIMMONS v. PENNINGTON & SON.

C. A.
1954
Nov. 26, 29.
Denning, Hodson and Parker L.JJ.

Solicitor—Negligence—Sale of land—Land of client sold by auction—Requisition by purchaser as to title — Requisition answered in accordance with general conveyancing practice—Purchaser thereby enabled to refuse to complete and to recover deposit—Opportunity for resale—Advice against resale pending trial of action to recover deposit — Property damaged by fire — Uninsured — Remoteness of damage.

Premises owned by the plaintiff were subject to an obsolete covenant restricting their use to that of a private dwelling-house, but had in fact been used continuously for many years, both before and after the plaintiff became owner, for business purposes, without any complaint being made. In 1948 the plaintiff sold the premises by auction to B, who paid a deposit. The property was described in the particulars of sale as "valuable and commanding freehold "corner shop premises," and by special condition of sale No. 7 it was stated that the property was sold subject to the restrictive covenants as to user contained in a deed of 1870 (which restricted the user to that of a private dwelling-house), so far as those covenants were subsisting and capable of taking effect. Answering a requisition as to title, whether the premises were subject to restrictive covenants, the defendants, acting as solicitors for the plaintiff, replied: "Yes. See special condition 7. There appear to have "been breaches of the covenant as to user but no notice of breach has "been served." The purchaser accepted that reply as a repudiation of the contract, and in an action recovered his deposit from the plaintiff.

While that action was pending another purchaser offered to buy the premises, but on the advice of the defendants, through their managing clerk, not to sell pending the trial of the above action, the plaintiff refused the offer. Subsequently the property was badly damaged by fire, and, as he had allowed the insurance to lapse, the plaintiff suffered loss. In the present action he claimed damages from the defendants for negligence as his solicitors:—

Held, (1) that the defendants having, in answering the requisition, acted in accordance with the general practice of conveyancers, which had been followed for many years without any ill consequence, they could not be held to have acted negligently or failed to come up to a reasonable standard of care, for they could not reasonably have anticipated the result which had flowed from it.

C. A.
1954
SIMMONS v. PENNINGTON & SON.

(2) That it was unnecessary to determine whether or not the defendants had been negligent in advising the plaintiff not to resell pending the trial of the deposit action, because the claim of the plaintiff failed on the ground that the damages were too remote and that the loss by fire was entirely due to the failure of the plaintiff to insure, an omission which the defendants could not be expected to foresee.

Decision of Harman J. affirmed.

APPEAL from Harman J.

The plaintiff, in about 1922, became the owner of some shop premises at 297 Romford Road, Forest Gate. The land, which had originally belonged to one Gurney, had been bought from him in 1870 by one Weddall with a view to building on it. Gurney had imposed restrictive covenants whereby the purchaser covenanted that he would not "use, exercise or carry on or permit "to be used, exercised or carried on upon the said premises hereby "granted any trade, manufactory or business whatever . . . but "to use the said premises as private dwelling-houses only." When the premises were purchased by the plaintiff their character had greatly changed. They had been converted to business premises and consisted of a shop, with a garage or workshop behind. No complaint had been or ever was made of the use to which the premises were put.

In 1948 the plaintiff, desiring to sell the premises by auction, placed them in the hands of his agent, who in his particulars of sale described them as "valuable and commanding freehold corner "shop premises," and a special condition which was inserted on the advice of the defendants, Pennington & Son, Lincoln's Inn Fields, the plaintiff's solicitors, read: "7. The property is sold "subject to the restrictive covenants as to user and other matters "contained in a deed dated September 29, 1870, and made "between John Gurney of the one part and George Edward "Waddell of the other part as far as the same are still subsisting "and capable of taking effect and the purchaser shall in the con-"veyance to him covenant to observe the same so far as aforesaid "and to indemnify the vendor in respect thereof. A copy of the "said restrictive covenants may be inspected at the offices of the "vendor's solicitors at any time during business hours or at the "auction room and the purchaser whether he inspects the same "or not shall be deemed to purchase with full notice thereof."

One Barnett purchased the premises at the auction for £9,000, signed a contract and paid a deposit. He had known the premises for twenty-seven years as shop premises. In due course his solicitors made the following requisition as to title:

"(14) Is the property, or any part thereof, subject to any "covenant or agreement restrictive of the use or enjoyment there-"of or otherwise? If so, has the same been duly observed or "performed?" The answer returned by the defendants, acting as the plaintiff's solicitors, appointed to carry through the conveyance, was "Yes, see special condition 7. There appear to have "been breaches of the covenant as to user but no notice of breach "has been served." On receipt of this answer the purchaser refused to complete the purchase and demanded the return of his deposit. Later he brought an action against the plaintiff to recover the deposit, and in 1951 obtained judgment against the plaintiff.

In 1949, pending the trial of the action, the plaintiff had another opportunity of selling the property, but was advised by the defendants, through their managing clerk, that it would be unwise to do so pending the trial of the action. In October, 1949, a fire at the premises caused a great deal of damage, at a time when they were uninsured, the plaintiff not having renewed his insurance since the auction sale, on the understanding that the purchaser would insure.

In the above circumstances the plaintiff brought the present action against the defendants for damages for negligence as his solicitors in answering the requisition as to title in terms which represented, impliedly or expressly, that the restrictive covenant was or might be enforceable, and also in advising against a sale in 1949 when the premises were uninsured.

Harman J. acquitted the defendants of negligence in regard to the answer to the requisition, but found that they were negligent in regard to the advice given in regard to the sale in 1949. He held, however, that the fire damage was too remote and was attributable to the plaintiff's own omission to insure the premises, an omission which the defendants could not be expected to have foreseen.

The plaintiff appealed.

Melford Stevenson Q.C. and J. T. Molony for the plaintiff.
Gerald Gardiner Q.C. and P. M. O'Connor for the defendants.

All cases cited in argument are mentioned in the judgment.

DENNING L.J., having stated the facts, continued: The action about the deposit came to trial in 1951 before Romer J. and then it went to the Court of Appeal. Both courts held that the purchaser was entitled to recover his deposit. The reason was because of the answer which the defendants gave to the requisition. It was wrong, they said, for the solicitors to answer "Yes," because that meant that there was a restrictive covenant; and to say: "There appear to have been breaches of the covenant," because that meant that the covenant was still subsisting. Both courts said that the answer to the requisition was plain and unambiguous. It meant that the property, although sold as shop premises, was still subject to a covenant forbidding it to be used except as a private dwelling-house. It showed that the vendor was not going to make a good title. It was equivalent to a repudiation or a refusal to perform his part of the bargain, and the purchaser on

C. A.
1954
SIMMONS v. PENNINGTON & SON.
Denning L.J.

that account was entitled to call off the contract. That appears, I think, most distinctly, from the judgments of Evershed M.R. and of Birkett L.J. in the Court of Appeal. The Master of the Rolls said that the answer to the requisition provided the purchaser "with a heaven sent opportunity to resile from a bargain of which "he had already repented and he embraced that opportunity with "alacrity . . . he undoubtedly took advantage of the rigour of the "game and the loss must fall upon the vendor." So the answer to the requisition was a fatal mistake. It enabled the purchaser at once to get out of the bargain. He was entitled to cancel the contract forthwith and did so.

The plaintiff, as vendor, naturally enough turns round to his solicitors and blames them for what has happened. He says: "I "instructed you to carry this contract through for me. Instead "of doing so, you repudiated it and lost me the contract. It is "all very well for you to say you did not mean to repudiate it, "but everyone knows that, in order for a statement to be a "repudiation, it must be clear and unequivocal, evincing an "intention no longer to be bound by the contract. If you made "such a statement on my behalf you must have been negligent."

I find it very difficult to give a satisfactory answer to this argument, but I know there must be one: for I am quite satisfied that the solicitors here were not negligent. Let any lawyer put himself in their position. They knew that there were some old restrictions on these premises which had not been enforced for years. The restrictions were in all probability obsolete, but the solicitors could not assert categorically that they were obsolete. It would obviously not be right for solicitors, without full investigation, to commit the vendor to a warranty that the restrictions were obsolete. So they guarded their client by putting a special condition in the contract saying that he sold the property subject to the restrictions so far as they were still subsisting and capable of taking effect: and when it came to the answer to the requisition, they tried to protect their client by saying the same thing over again or, rather, what they thought was the same thing. It was, in the words of the very experienced managing clerk who dealt with it, a "stock requisition," and he answered in the "stock "form." He answered it in the way in which Harman J. said such questions had been answered from the time of the memory of man, or at all events for a long time. But by ill luck the courts have held that the words which the solicitors used, instead of protecting their client, amounted to a repudiation of the contract. That was, in my view, not their fault: it was not a thing which could reasonably have been anticipated to flow from the answer to the requisition. The solicitors acted in accordance with the general practice of conveyancers. No ill consequences had ever been known to flow from an answer in this form. Now that the case has gone adversely to the vendor, we can see that it was a mistake, but it is so easy to be wise after the event. One has to try to put oneself in the position of the solicitors at the time and see whether they failed to come up to a reasonable standard of care and skill such as is rightfully required of an ordinary prudent solicitor. It seems to me, applying that test, that it is impossible to say that these solicitors were guilty of a breach of duty to their client. It was one of those misadventures and misfortunes which do sometimes happen even in the best conducted businesses. I think that Harman J. was right in holding the solicitors were not guilty of negligence in regard to the answer to the requisition.

The next point is as to the advice which the solicitors gave to their client, that he should not sell pending the action. The judge has found that the solicitors were negligent in giving that advice, because the action only affected the deposit. Neither side was at that time insisting on the sale or asking for specific performance. If the solicitors had thought about the matter for ten minutes, they would have realised there was no objection to the sale. I do not propose to say anything on the question of negligence because, in my judgment, the plaintiff's claim on this point fails because the damage is too remote. The market price did not go down at all and no damage would have been sustained if the property had been insured. The trouble was that the property was not insured against damage or loss by fire, and that was the fault of the plaintiff himself. He had the whole insurance entirely in his own hands: and the loss was due to his own omission to insure. The ordinary prudent course for owners of property is to insure against fire, and he did not do it. The defendants could not be expected reasonably to foresee that damage by fire would fall on the vendor. It was not, to use Asquith L.J.'s phrase in Victoria Laundry (Windsor) Ld. v. Newman Industries Ld.,[1] a thing which was "on the cards." The result is that I am in complete agreement with the judgment of Harman J. on both points and I would dismiss the appeal.

HODSON L.J. I agree. The gist of the plaintiff's action on the first point was that he had lost the benefit of his bargain for the sale of his property by reason of the negligence of the experienced managing clerk employed by the solicitors who were doing the work for him. The particular act of negligence relied upon is the giving by the clerk, Mr. Ridpath, of an answer to a requisition, which had the effect, as this court has held, of making the vendor say to the purchaser that he was forcing on him a property essentially different from that which was advertised. Reference to the advertisement shows that the property in question was advertised as "freehold corner shop premises." The answer to the requisition: "Is the property, or any part "thereof, subject to any covenant or agreement restrictive of

[1] [1949] 2 K.B. 528, 540; 65 T.L.R. 274; [1949] 1 All E.R. 997.

C. A.
1954
SIMMONS v. PENNINGTON & SON.
Hodson L.J.

" the user or enjoyment thereof or otherwise? If so, has the " same been duly observed or performed?" was " Yes. See " Special Condition 7. There appear to have been breaches of " the covenant as to user but no notice of breach has been " served." There being a covenant against user of the premises except for the purpose of a private dwelling-house, that was the answer which the managing clerk naturally gave, and he drew attention to the special conditions in the catalogue which, if followed up, would have shown the purchaser the existence of the restrictive covenant. Admittedly, in answering the question in what was described as the usual way, he had not in mind, nor had anybody else in mind until long after this action started, that he was raising the difficulty in this case and that he was putting forward a description of the property which was not the same but vitally different from the property advertised for sale. That is the force of the plaintiff's case. He says that the solicitors ought to have been alive to this and to have stated that the restrictive covenant was obsolete, which was admitted on both sides at the hearing before Romer J.

Harman J. has considered this matter and I think it worth while to read what he said. " Was he [the managing clerk] " negligent in putting his answer in that way even though he " did not mean to do so? If he did it by carelessness it may well " be negligence on his part. I cannot see that there was any " negligence at all. He answered in a way which, although " unfortunate in form, was in substance a way in which such " questions have been answered from the time of memory of " man." I should imagine the judge was drawing on his own experience as a practitioner in the Chancery Court. He went on: " Both the experienced Chancery counsel who represented " the plaintiff thought he should succeed and that this pretext " of the purchasers would not be held valid. It turned out to be " wrong, but if Mr. Ridpath was wrong he was wrong in very " good company, and everyone knows that it is not every piece " of wrong advice which a lawyer gives which is held in our law " to be negligence."

Both the counsel referred to, Mr. Milner Holland and Mr. Dunbar, gave evidence in this case and they thought the opinion expressed by Romer J., that this inconsistency defeated the plaintiff, was wrong. They advised an appeal and a division of this court took a different view. In those circumstances, it would be a remarkable thing if a solicitor's managing clerk who had produced that result, which was ultimately found to be wrong, should be held to be negligent within the ordinary principles of the law of negligence. Harman J., it is said, misdirected himself on the matter, but I cannot accept that. What he said was: " I do not think I need deal at any great length " with the question of a solicitor's liability or negligence. It is " the same as anybody else's liability; having regard to the degree " of skill held out to the public by solicitors, does the conduct of " the solicitor fall short of the standard which the public has " been led to expect of the solicitor? " I think that that direction was right and consistent with authority.

To my mind, the strongest way in which the plaintiff's case could be put is that this is not a case of negligent advice, which is the subject-matter of most of the decisions on solicitors' negligence, but it is really a case of misdescription by a professional man in describing a piece of property. It is said that a solicitor acting for a vendor if he misdescribes the property, having regard to the professional skill which a solicitor must be expected to exercise, must be regarded as negligent. I have in mind, in considering the direction which Harman J. gave to himself, the language of Scrutton L.J. in Fletcher & Son v. Jubb, Booth & Helliwell.[2] " . . . it would be extremely difficult to define " the exact limit by which the skill and diligence which a " solicitor undertakes to furnish in the conduct of a case is " bounded, or to trace precisely the dividing line between that " reasonable skill and diligence which appears to satisfy his " undertaking, and that crassa negligentia, or lata culpa " mentioned in some of the cases, for which he is undoubtedly " responsible. It is a question of degree and there is a border-" land within which it is difficult to say whether a breach of duty " has or has not been committed." " Crass " and other adjectives attached to " negligence " are no longer used.

The judge did not limit himself in any way. He did not direct himself by that adjective, although he did quote a passage from a decision in the House of Lords in Purves v. Landell[3] in which it appears. He had also before him a Scottish case, Adam Bell v. Strathern & Blair,[4] in which a number of the authorities were brought together, and in particular there was a passage which does seem to me to be applicable to this case which has not any direct reference to professional advice but rather to other professional activities. In Cooke v. Falconer's Representatives,[5] Lord Fullerton said: " A professional man does not warrant that " what he does will certainly have the effect which is expected " from it. . . . He warrants only that he shall bestow on the " matter committed to him, the skill generally possessed by his " brethren in the profession. It is not enough, in order to recover " damages from a professional man, to show that something which " was committed to him to do, has not had the effect which was " expected from it; he must show an act of gross ignorance, such " as could not have been committed by any other ordinarily " informed member of the profession." I have no hesitation in

[2] [1920] 1 K.B. 275, 280; 36 T.L.R. 19.
[3] (1845) 12 Cl. & Fin. 91; 8 E.R. 1332.
[4] (1954) 104 L.J. 618.
[5] (1850) 13 D. 157, 172.

C. A.

1954

SIMMONS v. PENNINGTON & SON.

Hodson L.J.

coming to the conclusion on this evidence that the judge came to a right conclusion on this part of the case.

On the second question, I agree with what my Lord has said as to the remoteness of the damage claimed and I have very little to add. It is unnecessary to go further and consider whether in any event the judge was right in finding negligence against the solicitors in view of the fact that during the pendency of the litigation in question Mr. Ridpath had advised his client not to sell the property. I think, in fairness to Mr. Ridpath, it might be well to set out the reasons why he said that he gave that advice. The first one was: "I thought the status quo should be main-"tained, as there was a pending action, until the action was "decided." That may be not a very good reason, but it is a very natural reaction of a solicitor to give such advice to his client when an action which concerns a particular subject-matter is before the court. To continue with his answer: "A second "reason was that in the defence we were claiming forfeiture of "the deposit and I thought that the court might order, if they "decided that there was a binding contract, that the purchaser "should have an opportunity of completing the purchase instead "of forfeiting his deposit." There seems to be some force, at any rate, in that reason, although it is perfectly true, no doubt, if Mr. Ridpath had thought the matter over deeply or considered the matter with his principals or with counsel, he would have appreciated that if the property had been in fact disposed of and his client was free to sell and had sold there would be no question of specific performance of the contract should it arise. The third reason he gave was: "That in the defence we were asking the "court for a declaration that we were entitled to resell, and I "thought that if we were asking the court to say that we are "entitled to resell we should not resell until the court says we "can." It is unnecessary to express any conclusion about that matter and I for my part am not prepared, in those circumstances, nor is it necessary to do so, to criticize the judge's finding upon it. I have drawn attention to the answers which the solicitors gave which show, at any rate, that there was something to be said for the view that there was no negligence on that part of the matter. I agree that the appeal fails.

PARKER L.J. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed. The first ground upon which it is said the defendants were negligent is based on the answer given by Mr. Ridpath to requisition 14. That requisition, and the answer to it, have been already read, but it is to be observed that nowhere in the answer is there a plain statement, as it is said there should have been, that any restrictions as to user were obsolete and unenforceable. On the contrary, it has been held by this court that the words are plain and unambiguous and amount to a statement that the restrictions are living restrictions of which there have been breaches and that, accordingly, the statement in the answer amounts to a repudiation, in that it was being stated that property of a different description was being sold from that advertised in the particulars. In those circumstances, the plaintiff says, in effect: "I employed "you, the defendant, to carry through the transaction. I did "not employ you to repudiate it, and your statement giving rise "to this repudiation was a misstatement made with no con- "ceivable excuse and you have fallen short of your duty to "exercise reasonable skill." In the light of after events that argument is a very attractive one, but at the same time I have no doubt that it fails. To state affirmatively that the covenants were obsolete and unenforceable was something Mr. Ridpath was not called upon to do. That was a matter for the purchaser to satisfy himself about. Indeed, if Mr. Ridpath had taken upon himself to state that the restrictions were obsolete and it turned out that he was wrong in some respect, it might well be said that he was negligent for having taken upon himself something which it was not part of his duty to do.

What it really comes to is this. It is said that he should have used some more negative words such as "There appears to have "been a user inconsistent with the covenant, assuming it is not "obsolete, but no notice of breach has been served"; in other words, some words which fell short of affirming that the restrictions were living restrictions. For my part I am quite satisfied that at the time when that answer was made no one, be he solicitor or counsel, could reasonably be expected to foresee the difficulties which might follow according to whether one formula was used rather than another.

So far as the second question is concerned, I find it unnecessary to go into the question whether the advice given by Mr. Ridpath was given negligently, because it has not been shown, as it must be shown before damage can be recovered, that it was, to use the phrase used by Asquith L.J., "on the cards," not merely that a fire might result but that a fire might result at a time when the plaintiff was uninsured. For these reasons, in my opinion the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.
Leave to appeal to House of Lords refused.

Solicitors: Cree, Godfrey & Wood, for Preston & Redman, Bournemouth; Hewitt, Woollacott & Chown.

A. W. G.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1955
Feb. 10.

Danckwerts J.

* In re BRASSEY'S SETTLEMENT. BARCLAYS BANK LD. v. BRASSEY.

[1954 B. 5457.]

Settlement — Construction — Investment clause — Power to invest in stocks of "any British colony or dependency"—Whether Dominion stocks included — "Colony" — "Dependency" — Statute of Westminster, 1931 (22 & 23 Geo. 5, c. 4), ss. 1, 2.
Canada. Commonwealth.

A settlement made in 1936 gave the trustees power to invest in "any of the public stocks or funds or government securities "of Great Britain or Northern Ireland or India or any British "colony or dependency or any foreign government or state," and in "the stocks (etc.) of any company . . . or corporation authority "or body . . . in Great Britain or Northern Ireland or India or "any British colony or dependency or any foreign country."

The trustees, who desired to make investments in certain Canadian companies, took out a summons to ascertain whether this was within their powers under the investment clause:—

Held, that after the coming into force of the Statute of Westminster, 1931,[1] it was not possible to hold that a self-governing Dominion was a "colony or dependency," so that the language of the investment clause did not cover investments in the Dominion of Canada.

In re Maryon-Wilson's Estate [1912] 1 Ch. 55; 28 T.L.R. 49 and British Coal Corporation v. The King [1935] A.C. 500; 51 T.L.R. 508 considered.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

The facts are stated in the judgment.

A. H. Droop for the trustees.
R. Cozens-Hardy Horne for the tenant for life.
John Bradburn for other beneficiaries.

The cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgment.

[1] Statute of Westminster, 1931, s. 2: "(1) The Colonial Laws "Validity Act, 1865, shall not apply "to any law made after the com- "mencement of this Act by the "Parliament of a Dominion. (2) No "law and no provision of any law "made after the commencement of "this Act by the Parliament of a "Dominion shall be void or inopera- "tive on the ground that it is repug- "nant to the law of England, or "to the provisions of any existing "or future Act of Parliament of the "United Kingdom, or to any order, "rule or regulation made under any "such Act, and the powers of the "Parliament of a Dominion shall "include the power to repeal or "amend any such Act, order, rule or "regulation in so far as the same is "part of the law of the Dominion."

S. 7: "(1) Nothing in this Act shall "be deemed to apply to the repeal, "amendment or alteration of the "British North America Acts, 1867 "to 1930, or any order, rule or regu- "lation made thereunder . . . (3) The "powers conferred by this Act upon "the Parliament of Canada . . . "shall be restricted to the enactment "of laws in relation to matters "within the competence of the Par- "liament of Canada . . ."

DANCKWERTS J. This is a question of construction which arises on a settlement made by the first defendant on August 5, 1936. It is concerned entirely with the investment clause of the settlement in question.

As the settlement was made in 1936 it was later in date than the Statute of Westminster, 1931, which declared and regulated the status of British Dominions and the United Kingdom as between themselves.

The clause in question is in these terms: "Trust moneys "may at such discretion as aforesaid be invested in or upon "(A) Any of the public stocks or funds or government securities "of Great Britain or Northern Ireland or India or any British "colony or dependency or any foreign government or state or "any security the interest on which is or shall be guaranteed by "Parliament." I need not read (B) and (C). (D) is: "The "stocks funds bonds debentures debenture stock mortgages "obligations or securities or the guaranteed preference or "ordinary stock or shares of any company (whether limited or "unlimited and whether public or private) or corporation "authority or body (whether public municipal county local or "otherwise) in Great Britain or Northern Ireland or India or "any British colony or dependency or any foreign country."

The trustees (and in this they are supported by the beneficiaries) are desirous of investing part of the settlement funds in stocks or shares of banking companies carrying on business in the Dominion of Canada. Therefore the question arises whether they may lawfully make that investment under the terms of this investment clause.

I have been referred to a decision in the Court of Appeal in 1911 of In re Maryon-Wilson's Estate.[1] The point in that case was whether a power to invest in stocks or securities of any British colony or dependency—similar words to the material words in the present case—permitted investment in the stocks of any province of the Dominion of Canada unless that province had complied with the requirements of the Colonial Stock Act, 1900. Therefore the question in that case was whether investments in the stocks of a constituent province of the Dominion of Canada was permissible under that clause. The point decided by the Court of Appeal was no more than this: that subject to the provisions of the Colonial Stock Act, 1900, the provinces of Canada were not either British colonies or dependencies, but were part of the whole Dominion of Canada. The case is of some interest because the court expressed the opinion that "dependency" was a wider term than "colony." They said: "Its exact meaning has not been judicially deter-"mined," but they expressed the opinion that Canada was a colony or dependency. It was observed that the word "dependency" might in certain ways be regarded as a more

[1] [1912] 1 Ch. 55; 28 T.L.R. 49.

1955

BRASSEY'S SETTLEMENT, In re. BARCLAYS BANK LD. v. BRASSEY.

Danckwerts J.

dignified phrase than "colony." On the other hand, Cozens-Hardy M.R. and Farwell L.J. indicated that "clauses in trust "instruments enlarging the power of investment beyond what "the general law sanctions ought to be construed strictly."

It is said on behalf of the persons who wish investments of this kind to be made, that if Canada was a dependency in 1911 it would still be a dependency now, because certain sections of the British North America Act, 1867, have been expressly reserved by the Statute of Westminster, 1931. Therefore, if Canada is a dependency, it is still a dependency and is still within the words in the relevant investment clause.

The Statute of Westminster was passed as a result of certain Imperial Conferences, and in the report of the Inter-Imperial Relations Committee of the Imperial Conference of 1926 it is said[2]: "They [Great Britain and the Dominions] are autono-"mous communities within the British Empire, equal in status, "in no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their "domestic or internal affairs, though united by a common "allegiance to the Crown, and freely associated members of the "British Commonwealth of Nations." The report proceeds: "On "the question raised with regard to the legislative competence of "members of the British Commonwealth of Nations other than "Great Britain, and in particular to the desirability of those "members being enabled to legislate with extra-territorial effect, "we think that it should similarly be placed on record that the "constitutional practice is that legislation by the Parliament at "Westminster applying to a Dominion would only be passed "with the consent of the Dominions concerned."

The preamble to the Statute recites: "And whereas it is "meet and proper to set out by way of preamble to this Act "that, inasmuch as the Crown is the symbol of the free associa-"tion of the members of the British Commonwealth of Nations, "and as they are united by a common allegiance to the Crown, "it would be in accord with the established constitutional "position of all the members of the Commonwealth in relation "to one another that any alteration in the law touching the "Succession to the Throne or the Royal Style and Titles shall "hereafter require the assent as well of the Parliaments of all "the Dominions as of the Parliament of the United Kingdom: "And whereas it is in accord with the established constitutional "position that no law hereafter made by the Parliament of the "United Kingdom shall extend to any of the said Dominions as "part of the law of that Dominion otherwise than at the request "and with the consent of that Dominion: And whereas it is "necessary for the ratifying, confirming and establishing of "certain of the said declarations and resolutions of the said "Conferences that a law be made and enacted in due form by "authority of the Parliament of the United Kingdom." Then the Statute proceeds to provide by section 1 that the expression "Dominion" means "any of the following Dominions, that is "to say, the Dominion of Canada, the Commonwealth of "Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand, the Union of South "Africa, the Irish Free State and Newfoundland." Those last two have ceased to be dominions, Newfoundland by becoming a province of Canada, and the Irish Free State by virtue of the Ireland Act, 1949, which provided that the Irish Free State ceased to be a dominion though it does not become a foreign country for the purposes of any instrument. [His Lordship read section 2 of the Statute of Westminster, 1931, and continued:] An example of the effect of that section was the Act passed by the Canadian Parliament restricting the right of appeal to the Privy Council which was considered by the Privy Council in British Coal Corporation v. The King.[3] In that case a preliminary objection was taken to the competency of a petition for special leave to appeal to the King in Council from a judgment of the Court of King's Bench (Appeal Side) of the Province of Quebec in a criminal matter on the ground that the petition was incompetent by reason of the Canadian statute to which I have just referred. It was held by the Privy Council that the petition was incompetent. The headnote states: "Before the Statute of Westminster, "1931, the Canadian Legislature was subject to the limitations "imposed by the Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865, by which "legislation repugnant to an Act of the Imperial Parliament was "declared void, by section 129 of the British North America "Act, 1867, and also by the doctrine forbidding extra-territorial "legislation. These limitations were abrogated by the Statute "of Westminster." The result was that the preliminary objection succeeded.

[2] See Halsbury's Statutes of England, 2nd ed., Vol. 6, p. 194.

However, Mr. Bradburn, on behalf of persons interested under the settlement, relied upon a passage in the advice of the Privy Council delivered by Lord Sankey.[4] Lord Sankey referred to section 7 of the Statute of Westminster which reserved from the effect of the Statute certain sections of the British North America Act, 1867, being sections which prevented any alteration of the Canadian constitution. Then he observed: "But it "is well known that section 7 was inserted at the request of "Canada and for reasons which are familiar. It is doubtless "true that the power of the Imperial Parliament to pass on its "own initiative any legislation that it thought fit extending to "Canada remains in theory unimpaired: indeed, the Imperial "Parliament could, as a matter of abstract law, repeal or disre-"gard section 4 of the Statute. But that is theory and has no "relation to realities. In truth Canada is in enjoyment of the "full scope of self-government: its Legislature was invested "with all necessary powers for that purpose by the Act, and

[3] [1935] A.C. 500; 51 T.L.R. 508. [4] [1935] A.C. 500, 520.

1955

BRASSEY'S SETTLEMENT, In re. BARCLAYS BANK LD. v. BRASSEY.

Danckwerts J.

"what the Statute did was to remove the two fetters which "have already been discussed."

It seems to me that in deciding this question I must have regard to realities and not to abstract theory. Since the Statute of Westminster, 1931, I cannot possibly hold that the Dominion of Canada is either a colony or a dependency. No doubt the change in political thought was gradual, but there has been a change, as it seems to me, in the way in which the position of the Dominions and the Mother Country was regarded during the years which passed between 1911 and 1931, and the Statute of 1931 was passed to give effect to that change in political thought. That change in thought is expressed in the report of the Imperial Conference of 1926 in the words which I have already read. It described Great Britain and the Dominions as being equal in status, and in no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their domestic or internal affairs, being united by a common allegiance to the Crown, and being freely associated as members of the British Commonwealth of Nations. I cannot see how states equal in status and in no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their domestic or internal affairs can possibly be said in any respect to be dependent one upon another. As it seems to me, they are equal sovereign states and not dependencies, and, of course, not subordinate to the Parliament of the United Kingdom. The Statute of Westminster was giving effect to that conception. and I have to give effect to it also. Accordingly, I am compelled to conclude, however convenient it might have been to decide in the other way, that in this settlement the words "British colony or dependency" cannot be given effect to in such a way as to include the Dominion of Canada.

It is very strange that a clause should have been inserted in this form in 1936. No doubt it was taken from some old and obsolescent precedent in a book of conveyancing precedents. It would have been so easy to have inserted the word "dominion" before the words "colony or dependency." I cannot say why the draftsman elected to omit that word, but I am afraid that I must construe the words in the investment clause as I find them, and the decision must be as I have already stated.

[His Lordship then gave leave to amend the summons by the addition of an application under section 57 of the Trustee Act, 1925, and made an order conferring on the trustees the power to invest in stocks, etc., "in any dominion."]

Orders accordingly.

Solicitors: Norton, Rose, Greenwell & Co.

F. R. D.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* In re LONGMAN. WESTMINSTER BANK LD. v. HATTON.

1955 Feb. 4.

Danckwerts J.

[1953 L. 152.]

Will—Forfeiture clause—Protective trust—Beneficial interest in income subject to forfeiture if income became payable to any other person—Authority given by beneficiary for payment of debts out of future dividend of a company—Dividend never declared—Authority nugatory—Interest not forfeited.
Trust—Protective trust.

A testatrix appointed a bank to be the executor and trustee of her will and devised and bequeathed her residuary estate on trust to pay the income to her son and, on his attaining the age of 55 years, on trust as to the income and capital for him absolutely.

These provisions were subject to a forfeiture clause, if he should commit, permit or suffer any act whereby any part of the income or capital of the residuary estate became vested in or payable to any other person.

The testatrix died in 1949, and in 1953 the son gave letters of authority to firms of solicitors acting for sundry creditors, authorizing and requesting the bank to pay to the respective solicitors the sums of money mentioned in the letters "from the "dividend due to me in July next from [a certain company]." The dividend was, however, passed and never declared.

The bank took out a summons to determine whether the son had incurred a forfeiture of his interest under the trusts of the will:—

Held, that as the company had passed its dividend, the authorities given by the son were nugatory as, there being nothing on which they could or did operate, the words of the forfeiture clause did not apply and no forfeiture had been incurred.

ORIGINATING SUMMONS.

By her will dated October 11, 1949, Evelyn Mary Longman appointed Westminster Bank Ld. executor and trustee of her will and she devised and bequeathed her residuary estate "(a) upon "trust to pay the income arising therefrom to my son John "Edward Hatton Longman until he attains the age of 55 years "provided always and I hereby direct that if my said son shall "commit permit or suffer any act default of [sic] process whereby "the said income or any part thereof or the capital of my "residuary estate or any part thereof would or might but for this "present proviso become vested in or payable to any other person "or persons then the whole of such income as aforesaid shall "immediately thereupon absolutely cease and determine as if "my said son were dead and both capital and income of my "residuary estate shall be held by the bank upon trust for my "said grandson. On my said son attaining the age of 55 years "then subject as aforesaid (b) upon trust as to both capital "and income of my residuary estate for my said son absolutely. "(c) In the event of my said son predeceasing me or surviving "me dying under the age of 55 years then upon trust as to both

1955

Longman, In re. Westminster Bank Ld. v. Hatton.

" capital and income of my residuary estate for my said grandson " absolutely."

The testatrix died on October 12, 1949, and in March, 1954, her residuary estate included 4,893 shares in W. E. and J. Pebody Ld. of £1 each.

The testatrix's son John Edward Hatton Longman, by a statutory declaration dated October 20, 1951, abandoned the use of his Christian names Edward Hatton and his former surname of Longman and assumed the first names of John Christopher and the surname of Hatton. The infant defendant Christopher Francis Hatton was born on January 7, 1948, and was the son of the defendant John Christopher Hatton.

In May, 1953, John Christopher Hatton gave to three separate firms of solicitors, acting for sundry creditors, letters of authority to the Bank Trustee Department authorizing and requesting the bank to pay to the respective solicitors on behalf of the respective creditors the sums of money therein mentioned " from the " dividend due to me in July next from W. E. and J. Pebody " Ld." He also gave to another firm of solicitors a letter of authority to the Bank Trustee Department requesting the bank to pay to the said firm of solicitors " on behalf of [a named com- " pany] for the satisfaction of a debt due to them the dividend " due to me in July next from W. E. and J. Pebody Ld."

The bank was advised that, in view of the forfeiture provisions in the will, as the letters of authority referred to a dividend which had not been declared (and was in fact never declared), the bank could not safely act on these authorities and the bank gave notice to the firms of solicitors to that effect.

The bank also wrote a letter to John Christopher Hatton informing him that unless the authorities were withdrawn with the consent of the creditors before the dividend was received he would incur a forfeiture, if he had not already done so; and in consequence of that letter he forthwith purported to revoke the letters of authority.

In view, therefore, of the forfeiture provisions contained in the will and in view of the circumstances, the bank took out a summons to ascertain whether on the true construction of the will and in the events which had happened the defendant John Christopher Hatton had incurred a forfeiture of his life interest under the trusts thereof and if so from what date such forfeiture was incurred.

Hector Hillaby for the plaintiff bank.

The first defendant John Christopher Hatton did not appear.

M. J. Fox for an infant grandson of the testatrix.

Cases referred to in argument: In re Mair [1]; In re Baker [2]; In re Forder. [3]

[1] [1909] 2 Ch. 280.
[2] [1904] 1 Ch. 157.
[3] [1927] 2 Ch. 291.

DANCKWERTS J. stated the facts and continued: The first authority given to the bank by the first defendant has in fact been withdrawn. I do not think that that makes any difference to the decision which I have to reach in this case, as a much more important event happened, namely, that both in 1953 and in 1954 the company in question passed its dividend and consequently there was no dividend which became payable by the company in July, 1953, or at any time in the years 1953 and 1954. Accordingly, it seems to me that the authorities given by the son were completely nugatory, and that there was nothing on which they could operate and they never did operate on anything. Therefore, it seems to me that, in the events which happened, the words of the forfeiture clause do not apply.

Any decision in a case of this kind must depend on the precise terms of the clause which is involved and also on the events which have happened.

Mr. Fox on behalf of the grandson referred me to In re Baker,[1] In re Mair[2] and In re Forder.[3] But, in my opinion, none of those three cases really touches the point on which the present case turns. The important words in the will are "shall commit "permit or suffer any act default or process whereby the said "income or any part thereof or the capital of my residuary estate "or any part thereof would or might but for this present proviso "become vested in or payable to any other person or persons." In the events which happened the dividend payable in July, 1953, or indeed in any other part of 1953, was never paid and, therefore, it never did form any part of the income of the residuary estate. Consequently, there was no act by the son which in any way directed any payment of income of the estate to anybody else. It seems to me that the word "might" carries the matter no further. In my view, therefore, though one may consider the son to be very lucky, in the events which have happened he has not forfeited his interest in the income of the estate.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Peacock & Goddard for Buchanan & Llewellyn, Bournemouth; Official Solicitor.

J. L. D.

[1] [1904] 1 Ch. 157.
[2] [1909] 2 Ch. 280.
[3] [1927] 2 Ch. 291.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1954
Oct. 28.

Lord Goddard C.J., Hodson L.J. and Vaisey J.

*LAWSON v. LAWSON.

Husband and Wife—Justices—Cruelty—Sodomy—Corroboration—Submission to, but not consent, by wife—Desirability of corroboration of wife's evidence—No legal necessity for corroboration.

On a summons by a wife against her husband before justices on the ground of persistent cruelty, the substantive allegation was that the husband had insisted on his wife committing acts of sodomy with him. The justices found that the wife, although submitting to the acts in question, was not a consenting party to them. They directed themselves as to the desirability of, but not of the necessity for corroboration of the wife's evidence. They accepted the wife's story as true, and were of opinion that it was corroborated in certain respects by other evidence given. They accordingly found the husband guilty of persistent cruelty. The husband appealed to the Divisional Court who affirmed the decision of the justices. The court was of opinion that the justices, having correctly directed themselves as to the desirability, but not the legal necessity for corroboration, were entitled to accept the wife's evidence, even if the matters relied on did not amount to corroboration. The husband appealed:—

Held, that a wife who is forced to submit to acts of sodomy or to attempts at sodomy, but who is not a consenting party thereto, is not an accomplice; and that although in sexual cases, including cruelty cases, a warning should be given that it is dangerous to convict on the uncorroborated evidence of the complainant, if that warning be borne in mind, there is no legal necessity for corroboration even in the case of an accomplice, and justices or a jury may accept the evidence of the wife even in the absence of corroboration; and that the appeal should be dismissed.

Statham v. Statham [1929] P. 131; 45 T.L.R. 127 distinguished.

Appeal from a decision of the Divisional Court (Lord Merriman P. and Barnard J.) dismissing an appeal by the respondent husband from a decision of justices on a summons under the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Acts, 1895 to 1949, whereby they found him guilty of persistent cruelty to his wife.

The cruelty alleged by the wife was that the husband on three occasions insisted on committing acts of sodomy upon her and that he had insisted on her masturbating him. The justices having advised themselves of the desirability but not of the necessity for corroboration of the wife's evidence accepted it as being true, and convicted the respondent. They were also of opinion that certain facts proved before them constituted corroboration of the evidence given by the wife. The Divisional Court held that the justices having properly directed themselves were entitled to come to the conclusion that the wife's evidence was true even in the absence of corroboration and that she had established a case of persistent cruelty. The husband appealed. The material facts are set out in detail in the judgment of Lord Goddard C.J.

Joseph Jackson for the appellant husband.
D. R. Ellison for the respondent wife.

The only case cited in argument is referred to in the judgment.

LORD GODDARD C.J. This is an appeal from a decision of the Divisional Court, consisting of the President and Barnard J., to whom the present husband, who had been the respondent in the court below and before the justices appealed against the decision of the justices, that he had been guilty of persistent cruelty to his wife.

The cruelty alleged by the wife was that her husband insisted on committing acts of sodomy upon her on at least three occasions, on one of which she was so much hurt that she said she was unable to walk for some days. The wife further alleged that the husband insisted on her masturbating him. This is a minor point, but I attach rather more importance to it, perhaps, than the President did in one particular respect, because, if true, it shows that he was a man who was given to filthy practices with his wife. The importance I attach to that is that, in my opinion, a statement which the man made in front of a police constable could, and I think did, amount to corroboration of that matter, and would tend to show that the wife's evidence was true. If it can be shown that the wife has given evidence on three or four matters and, at any rate, one of those matters is corroborated, I think it may rightly lead the tribunal of fact to come to the conclusion that she was a truthful witness.

The reasons which the justices gave for their decision were as follows: "1. That on the evidence given before us, it was "proved that the defendant (a) in April, 1953, and June, 1953, "committed sodomy upon the complainant against her wish; "(b) that on many occasions he tried to force the complainant to "submit to sodomy up to and including November, 1953." So there are two findings on sodomy; one finding that sodomy had been committed, and another finding that sodomy had been attempted on several occasions. "On Wednesday, November "25, 1953, the defendant had insisted upon the complainant "masturbating him against her wish. 2. That the complainant "had not consented to the acts of sodomy committed upon her, "or to being a party to the act of masturbation." That, as I understand it, means that, although the wife submitted to what was done, she was not a consenting party and submitted to it against her wishes or against her will. "3. That the com-"plainant's evidence that after the second act of sodomy upon her, "the defendant told her 'that if she bought Vaseline it would "'not hurt so much' was true, and rejected the defendant's "explanation that the Vaseline was for some other purpose, as

C. A.
1954
LAWSON v. LAWSON.
Lord Goddard C.J.

"untrue. 4. That the complainant's statement made in the "presence of police officer Whittaker 'Look what you made me "'do on Wednesday night before I went to my mother's' and "the defendant's reply 'that is personal between us' referred "to the act of masturbation insisted upon by the defendant on "Wednesday, November 25, 1953, and not to a discussion about "money as stated by the defendant. 5. That the defendant had "offered to buy two single beds if the complainant would return "to him. 6. That on Saturday, November 28, 1953, the day the "complainant left the matrimonial home, the defendant tried to "pull her upstairs. 7. That the complainant's distressed and "nervous condition was the outcome of the defendant's conduct "towards her."

Then the justices say: "In coming to our decision we con- "sidered the question of corroboration raised by the defendant's "solicitor, and being advised of the desirability but not the "absolute necessity for corroboration, and having considered the "evidence of the parties, we accepted the complainant's evidence "as true, and further that paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 set out above "corroborated her allegations."

The Divisional Court made a very careful analysis of the evidence and both judges came to the conclusion that the justices were quite justified, on the evidence, in preferring the evidence of the wife to that of her husband, and came to the conclusion that she had made out her case. There was a difference of opinion between the two judges whether the acts relied on amounted to corroboration. In my opinion, however, it is not necessary for this court to consider the matter of corroboration, for the reason that cases such as the present are not cases in which corroboration is required as a matter of law. It is required as a matter of precaution, and a jury should always be directed, if it is a trial on an indictment, that whether the person concerned is to be regarded as an accomplice or not, it would be undesirable or dangerous to convict upon the evidence of that person alone, but that it is open to the jury, if they are satisfied with the evidence, to convict.

The question of corroboration very often comes up. It does so in three different ways. First, it arises in the case of the unsworn evidence of a child. Although such evidence may be taken in certain cases, for example, if a man is being tried for an offence against the child, there can be no case to go to the jury unless the evidence is corroborated. Then, it is for the judge to say whether there is any evidence that can amount to corroboration, and it is for the jury to say whether they are satisfied with the evidence that is tendered as corroboration.

The second case in which the question of corroboration arises is where the witness, whose evidence it is said should be corroborated, is an accomplice. An accomplice is a person who, in a matter of crime or in such a case as the present, is a consenting party or a participant in the crime. In such a case, a jury is always directed that it is unsafe to convict upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice; but there again, if the jury are satisfied that the evidence of the accomplice has established the case and if they feel that they can, without doubt, trust that evidence, it is within their province to convict, and they do convict quite often.

The third case is the ordinary sexual case, where a woman complains of an indecent assault or a rape. It has been the practice of judges for very many years to warn juries that they should be reluctant to convict on the uncorroborated evidence of the woman, because it is so easy to make a charge of that description and so extremely difficult to repel.

Therefore, it really comes to this, that, in substance, the warning given to a jury is the same whether you are warning a jury about the evidence of an accomplice or whether you are warning them about the evidence of a woman in a sexual case, and it makes no difference whether the act which the woman alleges has been committed is what I may call a natural act or an unnatural act, as it was in this case.

After a very full and careful analysis of the evidence, the Divisional Court decided that the justices were entitled to come to the conclusion that the wife's evidence was true and that she had made out her case. The judges in the Divisional Court had not, of course, seen the witnesses any more than we have, but I think it would be a very strong thing for this court now to say that, in their opinion, the evidence was not such as the justices were entitled to rely upon.

Some comment was made by Mr. Jackson, who put every conceivable point that could be put for his client, that it was unfortunate that the two justices in this case were both women. I do not think that that is a disadvantage in such a case as this, because, in the first place, one of the great advantages of lay magistrates is that they live, work and act amongst the people in their district. They know their characteristics, their trials, their difficulties, and so forth, and are often in a very good position to come to a conclusion on the question whether the person with whom they are dealing is telling the truth. Women justices can often be very valuable judges of fact when they have to consider whether women are telling the truth. Very often, I think that a woman may be able to come to a better conclusion than a man on the question whether a woman is likely to be telling the truth, though of course there is always the risk of mistakes which cannot be avoided in human justice.

In the present case the justices found that the wife was not a consenting party. That means that she, being forced by her husband, submitted to the acts which were done but that she was not a willing party to them. That seems to me to remove her from the category of an accomplice.

Putting that aside for the moment, if the justices came to the conclusion that these acts had been committed upon the

C. A.
1954
LAWSON v. LAWSON.
Lord Goddard C.J.

wife, then whether she was an accomplice or not, provided she was not a consenting party, in the sense that she voluntarily allowed her husband to satisfy himself in this unnatural way, I do not see how it could be said that she was not assaulted and was not entitled to say that these were acts of cruelty committed upon her, or, at any rate, attempted acts of cruelty, which she must have resisted and, for that reason, the husband could not consummate them. That, surely, would be a case of persistent assaults upon her.

I do not propose to say more about the question of corroboration than this, that I think that the acts here which the justices say, in their opinion, corroborated her evidence, are not very strong. The President thought—and, on the whole, I agree with him—that the justices having come to the conclusion that her story about buying Vaseline was correct, that would afford some corroboration of her story that she complained that these acts of her husband hurt her and he told her to go and buy Vaseline, because that would make it easier. He denied that, but admitted that he did tell her to buy Vaseline. That is the point it corroborates. The reason he gave for telling her to buy the Vaseline the justices rejected, but I think this did amount to some corroboration.

The second matter relied on as corroboration was the statement that the husband made in front of the police officer, when the woman made what was obviously intended to be a reproach and complaint to the husband. He said: "That is "personal between us," in other words, "Something very "private that took place between us." The justices thought that corroborated her story about masturbation. As I have already said, that in itself, is not corroboration with regard to the masturbation, but it enabled the justices, in my opinion, to come to a conclusion on the question whether she was telling the truth about a very shocking incident when she gave as one reason why she left her husband that he made her masturbate him shortly before. When she went back to the house with the police officer, she said something which could be interpreted as relating to this incident and the husband then said: "That is "personal between us." I do not think it goes any further than this, that it would enable the justices to come to the conclusion that the woman was a truthful witness; that in some of the things she said she was telling the truth and was not inventing these shocking stories. Of course the story about the husband offering to buy two single beds is neither here nor there, nor is the fact that he attempted to pull her upstairs; but, as I have said, corroboration, although most desirable in these cases, is not necessary in point of law. I do not think that Statham v. Statham,[1] to which we have been referred, lays that down. When reference is made to that case, the great thing to remember about it is that it depended upon very peculiar and special facts. There is no doubt there, that the husband explained to his wife what he desired to do to her, and she readily consented to place her body to him in the way he wanted and thereby became a principal in the felony. That is a very different case from the case here, where the justices expressly found—and I think were well justified in finding—that the woman, although she may have submitted, was not a consenting party.

[1] [1929] P. 131; 45 T.L.R. 127.

For those reasons, I can find no reason why we should disturb the decision of the Divisional Court, and, therefore, the appeal fails and must be dismissed.

HODSON L.J. I agree. The findings of the justices here are very clear, that the husband: "(a) In April, 1953, and June, 1953, "committed sodomy upon the complainant against her wish. "(b) On many occasions tried to force the complainant to submit "to sodomy up to and including November, 1953. (c) On Wednes- "day, November 25, 1953, had insisted upon the complainant "masturbating him against her wish." They made a separate finding: "That the complainant had not consented to the acts of "sodomy committed upon her, or to being a party to the act of "masturbation," and they directed themselves that there was a desirability, but not an absolute necessity, for corroboration of her evidence. The Divisional Court, on the hearing of the appeal, upheld the decision of the justices.

There has been some confusion of thought in this case, at any rate, in argument, because the argument has been conducted in this court on the footing that the wife was an accomplice. involving, to my mind, that she was what the magistrates found she was not, namely, a consenting party to the acts of sodomy and the specific act of masturbation. I think it was open to the justices, on the evidence, to find as they did, and as the Divisional Court agreed they were entitled to find, that this woman was not a consenting party and that the acts were inflicted upon her against her will. In those circumstances, no particular rule relating to an accomplice applies.

Statham v. Statham,[2] to which my Lord has referred, does not, however, assist the husband, because that was a case in which the wife alleged sodomy against her husband, and an insufficient direction had been given to the jury who tried the case. The facts in that case showed clearly that the husband had explained to her the exact physical act which he wished to do to her, that she consented and placed her body at his disposal for the act to be committed and that no compulsion of any kind was put upon her. Her only reason for not allowing her husband to do it again was because she said it hurt her too much and she could not stand it again. That is not this case.

The law is, as I understand it, that in cases of cruelty, just as much as in other sexual cases, corroboration is looked for.

[2] [1929] P. 131.

C. A.
1954
LAWSON v. LAWSON.
Hodson L.J.

That does not say the court cannot act without corroboration. Of course, in a case of this kind of an unnatural offence, one looks more anxiously for corroboration, and here the justices came to the conclusion, on one view of the case, in favour of the wife without any corroboration at all. I respectfully agree with what the President said in his judgment in dealing with this point. He said the justices "having, as I think properly, directed themselves "about the warning which a court must give to itself in these "matters, have considered the evidence of the parties and "accepted the wife's evidence as true." Then he went on: "It "is true that they have gone further; they think that it was "corroborated in that way; but they were entitled to accept her "evidence as true even if they had not thought that this "particular matter afforded corroboration."

Mr. Jackson has said that that will not do, because when the justices have found sodomy and also in their findings have found corroboration where none existed, that must necessarily stultify their decision. I do not agree with that. I think that the decision based on the evidence of the wife, believing her and disbelieving her husband, can stand with a proper direction.

In the Divisional Court there was a difference of opinion as to corroboration in regard to the Vaseline. I take the view that the story about the Vaseline told by the wife, having regard to the false explanation that the husband gave, as the justices found, is capable of being corroboration.

So far as the statement referring to masturbation is concerned, I think there is a difficulty about that, because it is not capable of being related to the sodomy, and one has to be rather careful in considering questions of corroboration, to see to what part of the case the corroboration is capable of being directed. It is quite true that it is capable of being used as corroboration of the act of masturbation, but I do not attach much importance to that in this case. It seems to me that this case is essentially one in which this woman was complaining of what she believed to be completed acts of sodomy, but which the Divisional Court thought more likely to have been attempts at sodomy, not completed acts. That conclusion seems to me the more probable, having regard to the careful analysis of the evidence of the wife which each of the judges gave. The finding of fact of the justices, modified as it is by the Divisional Court, is, I think, quite unassailable. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Vaisey J. I fully concur with every word that has fallen from my Lords, and I can add nothing worth hearing to what they have said. I agree that this appeal fails.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Craigen, Hicks & Co. for Patrick Bennett, Maddison & Wainwright, Newcastle-on-Tyne; Peacock & Goddard for Donald Harvey & Co., South Shields.

P. B. D.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* SLADE v. BATTERSEA AND PUTNEY HOSPITAL MANAGEMENT COMMITTEE.

1955
Feb. 2, 3.

Finnemore J.

[X. 1954 S. No. 1158.]

Invitor and invitee—Invitee or licensee—Hospital—Visitor—Patient dangerously ill—Wife permitted to visit at any time—Fall on slippery floor in process of being polished—Unusual danger—Concealed danger—Liability of hospital.

Licensor and Licensee—Hidden trap—Trap known to licensor.

A wife, with the permission of the hospital authorities, visited her husband, a patient dangerously ill, at 10 o'clock one morning. At that time cleaners were in the ward but there was no indication that floor polishing was going on. In fact, polish had been applied to part of the floor but had not been rubbed off; and when leaving the ward the plaintiff slipped and fell on a part of the floor which was in this unfinished state. In an action for damages for personal injuries in which the plaintiff alleged negligence by the defendants for causing or permitting the floor to be slippery and in failing to warn her of its condition:—

Held, that a visit by a wife at the invitation of the hospital authorities to her dangerously ill husband in the hospital was a matter of material interest to both the wife and the hospital and therefore the plaintiff was an invitee and was entitled to recover damages as the condition of the floor was an unusual danger of which the defendants knew and of which they failed to warn her; that even if the plaintiff was merely a licensee she would be entitled to succeed, as although the floor appeared to be safe, the safety was wholly illusory, and there was a concealed danger from which a licensee was entitled to be protected. Moreover, in the circumstances of the present case, it was immaterial whether the plaintiff was an invitee or a licensee as the defendants had been negligent in failing to warn her of an extraneous danger introduced into the ward after she had entered it.

Observations of Denning L.J. in Dunster v. Abbott [1954] 1 W.L.R. 58; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1572 applied.

ACTION.

The plaintiff's husband was a patient in a hospital controlled by the defendants and, in October, 1953, he was placed on the danger list and the plaintiff was given permission to visit him at any time. Pursuant to that invitation the plaintiff visited her husband one morning at a time when cleaners were in the ward. At the conclusion of her visit the plaintiff, when walking from her husband's bed to the door of the ward, passed two ward maids with mops in their hands but not actually doing any polishing, and proceeded towards the door. When about six to twelve feet from the door she slipped on a part of the floor where liquid polish had been spread but had not been polished, and she fell, fracturing her thigh. She sought damages for personal injuries, alleging that the accident was due to negligence on the part of the defendants. She alleged that the floor, which was a polished floor, was slippery by reason of the fact that polish had been applied and not rubbed in, and that the condition of the floor was a concealed danger of which the defendants knew and of which they gave no warning.

1955

Slade v. Battersea and Putney Hospital Management Committee.

The defendants denied liability. They admitted the presence of polish on the floor but alleged that the accident was due to the plaintiff's own negligence in failing to observe the polish and failing to take any sufficient precautions to ensure her own safety.

Felix Denny for the plaintiff.

E. Daly Lewis for the defendants.

The following cases were cited in argument: Dunster v. Abbott [1]; Latham v. R. Johnson & Nephew [2]; Pearson v. Lambeth Borough Council [3]; Weigall v. Westminster Hospital (Governors) [4]; Pitt v. Jackson [5]; Jennings v. Cole [6]; Stowell v. Railway Executive [7]; Turner v. Arding and Hobbs [8]; Bell v. Travco Hotels Ltd. [9]

Finnemore J. stated the facts and continued: It is said in the present case that there was a very obvious cause for the plaintiff's slip, namely that the ward maids had been polishing the floor and had not finished; the polish which they had spread over the floor with their mops had not been either rubbed into the floor or removed from it. Clearly, the plaintiff could, in my opinion, have no complaint if all that happened was that she slipped on a highly polished floor which she knew was highly polished and to which she was accustomed. Her case is that she came suddenly and without warning on a particularly dangerous part of the floor. If any findings of fact are required on this, I am satisfied that the plaintiff slipped on a part of the floor where the polish was in its unfinished state. [His Lordship referred to the evidence and continued:] I am satisfied that this liquid which is spread over the floor is, until it is properly finished off and polished, a slippery substance, and I think it is just the sort of thing to cause a person coming on it unexpectedly to slip. I am satisfied that that is what the plaintiff in fact did. The evidence of her daughter-in-law about the state of her clothing, I think, abundantly shows that it was on this patch of unfinished floor that she fell.

The question is, whether that is negligence on the part of anybody on the hospital staff. I think that the case turns on the question of warning, subject, of course, to contributory

[1] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 58; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1572.

[2] [1913] 1 K.B. 398; 29 T.L.R. 124.

[3] [1950] 2 K.B. 353; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 561; [1950] 1 All E.R. 682.

[4] (1936) 52 T.L.R. 301; [1936] 1 All E.R. 232.

[5] [1939] 1 All E.R. 129.

[6] [1949] 2 All E.R. 191.

[7] [1949] 2 K.B. 519; 65 T.L.R. 387; [1949] 2 All E.R. 193.

[8] [1949] 2 All E.R. 911.

[9] [1953] 1 Q.B. 473; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 556; [1953] 1 All E.R. 638.

negligence. When the plaintiff went into the ward she saw no polishing actually going on. When she came out, it is true she said she could see that polishing was in progress in the sense that the general process of polishing was going on, but at that time, on what I might call the fairway along which she was going, no work was being done and there was nothing to show her, and she said she did not know, whether the ward maids had just begun or had finished their work. She therefore assumed it was all right, and walked on towards the door along the proper part of the floor across which she would have trodden, and came to disaster. Ought the ward maids or somebody to have warned her?

The defendants pleaded that the plaintiff had been warned to be careful, that she had been warned on previous occasions and in particular that she had been warned about the polish on the actual day in question. It is quite plain now that she was not warned on October 27. It is obvious that the ward maids who were cleaning were not prepared to come into the witness-box and say that they had warned her. Indeed, it is not contradicted now that when the plaintiff fell one of the ward maids who had been doing this work came up to her and said, "I forgot "to tell you the polish was on the floor." That fits in with the evidence that it is a golden rule that polishers will always give a warning. I think the truth is that on this particular day that golden rule was forgotten.

Those are the facts as I find them. Do they constitute a state of affairs where there is liability? First of all, one has to face the question, whether the plaintiff was an invitee or a licensee. I respectfully agree with Denning L.J. in Dunster v. Abbott [1] that the law in this country on this matter has got into what he calls a morass; and if I can avoid it I do not propose to follow into that morass too deeply. If I were free to say so I should venture, with great respect to many decisions of very high courts, to regret that anybody ever defined "invitee" as being anything but a person who is invited and "licensee" as anything but a person who is allowed. But that is not the law as we know it. The law is that for the purposes of responsibility in regard to occupation of a building, an invitee is a person who is invited on business in which the invitor and the invitee have a common interest; and it has been said that the interest is one which is either pecuniary or material. A great deal of discussion has taken place on this distinction between invitees and licensees because the occupier's scope of duty has been held to be different in the two cases. The well-known words of Willes J. in Indermaur v. Dames [2] that the invitee "is entitled to expect that "the occupier shall on his part use reasonable care to prevent "damage from unusual danger, which he knows or ought to "know" have been cited over and over again. If the plaintiff

[1] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 58; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1572.

[2] (1866) L.R. 1 C.P. 274, 288.

1955

Slade v. Battersea and Putney Hospital Management Committee.

Finnemore J.

was an invitee, I am fully satisfied that this was a danger of which the defendants knew and was an unusual one of which the plaintiff did not know. The defendants obviously knew because their servants were engaged in the task of spreading polish on the floor. The plaintiff did not know, because nobody told her. Ought she to have seen it?

The evidence is that this liquid spread on the floor did impart a rather darker tinge to that part of the floor, and, of course, it would tend to appear dull rather than polished. But even in a well lighted ward that is not a thing which an ordinary person walking along the way provided for a person to walk would notice without any warning; and I am satisfied not only that the plaintiff did not notice it but that it was not through any negligence on her part that she failed to notice that very small difference in the appearance of the floor and she had no reason to suppose that there was in front of her a much more slippery surface. I am fully satisfied that when polish is spread on a floor it is far more slippery than it is after one has polished it; in fact, it is a very dangerous thing indeed. No warning was in fact given to Mrs. Slade as in my opinion there should have been. There was an unusual danger because she did not know it was there, and it was a danger perfectly well known to the defendants because their servants were actually engaged in the process. Therefore it would follow, if she was an invitee, that she would plainly be entitled to recover.

The question is whether she was an invitee. Many cases have been referred to and I am obliged to Mr. Daly Lewis for his luminous survey of them. It is tempting to follow him to discuss them all, but I do not think that it is really necessary. In modern times I think it is fair to say, having in mind Pearson v. Lambeth Borough Council,[3] that within certain reasonable limits we tend rather to widen the definition or description of "invitee." In the 11th edition of Salmond on Torts, page 558, the editor quotes Sir John Salmond himself, saying that he "thought it sufficient if the occupier had a "material interest in the visitor's presence." He [Sir John Salmond] defined an invitee as "a person who enters on the "premises by the permission of the occupier granted in a matter "in which the occupier himself has some pecuniary or material "interest." There are other definitions or descriptions which confine it to a pecuniary interest only. In Weigall v. Westminster Hospital (Governors),[4] the mother of a patient visited him, and went from the ward to see the surgeon. She trod on a mat which was placed on a highly polished surface and was held to be entitled to recover as being an invitee who met an unusual danger, that is to say, a mat on a highly polished surface without anything under the mat to prevent it slipping. It is true that in that case the patient, a boy, was a paying patient. Asquith L.J. in Pearson v. Lambeth Borough Council [5] queried whether that really made any difference. Again, I think it may well be that the position today is rather different, because a person who goes to a State Hospital is not a person going to a charitable voluntary hospital as in the old days; he is a person going to a hospital maintained by the State, towards which he himself pays his contributions through National Health Insurance and in other ways; and he might even on the narrower interpretation of "invitee" be brought within the definition. I would be satisfied in the present case to say that in my view a visit by a wife at the invitation of a hospital to her dangerously ill husband in the hospital is a matter of material interest both to her and to the hospital.

[3] [1950] 2 K.B. 353; 66 (Pt. 1) T.L.R. 561; [1950] 1 All E.R. 682.

[4] (1936) 52 T.L.R. 301; [1936] 1 All E.R. 232.

If on the other hand that be wrong and the true position be that she was there only by leave and licence as a licensee, I think that she would still be entitled to recover because, in my view on the evidence before me, this was a concealed danger. The word "trap" was often used, but, as Hamilton L.J. pointed out in Latham v. R. Johnson & Nephew Ld.[6] "A trap is a figure of speech, not a formula. It involves the idea of concealment and surprise of an appearance of safety under circumstances cloaking a reality of danger." If the floor where the polish was spread was to the plaintiff no different in essence from the rest of the floor and looked safe, it seems to me that it was a safety which was wholly illusory. It was not safe. It was plainly slippery and dangerous for the reasons I have already indicated, and there was nothing, in my opinion, reasonably to bring to her attention that difference; so, even if she were a licensee, I still think that she suffered damage as a result of coming on a concealed danger of the sort against which a licensee as well as an invitee is entitled to be protected. In the absence of any warning and in the absence of anything put in the way or any obvious appearance, I think that this danger was a concealed danger. Mr. Daly Lewis argued that it was obvious; but I do not agree. It would be obvious, I suppose, if one walked down the ward with one's eyes fixed on the ground to see when and where and if the boards changed at all; but that is not what people are supposed to do when they walk along the ward of a hospital. A person looks in front of himself for any obvious obstruction: it does not seem to me that he is called upon to make a particular search of the floor as he goes along. He is entitled to assume that the person who allowed him to walk along that floor and is in charge of it has not left there or put there some danger which is not an obvious danger.

There is a final point which I confess appeals to me because it seems to be common sense; and that is one which was indicated very plainly indeed by Denning L.J. in Dunster v. Abbott,[7] and, I think, indicated by Somervell L.J. also. After all, does it

[5] [1950] 2 K.B. 353, 366.
[6] [1913] 1 K.B. 398, 415; 29 T.L.R. 124.
[7] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 58, 62.

1955

Slade v. Battersea and Putney Hospital Management Committee.

Finnemore J.

matter what the plaintiff was? Everybody agrees that she was properly in the ward: indeed, she had asked permission to go in. After she has entered the ward, taking the premises as she finds them as a licensee must, and whilst she is there a wholly extraneous danger, no part of the property itself or of the structure, is introduced into the ward on the floor. The simple question seems to me to be, was that negligence? That is to say, was it negligent to leave that polish on the floor without giving a warning to a person walking on the floor? In Dunster v. Abbott [7] which was decided in favour of the defendant on appeal Denning L.J. said: "In this case, however, it does not matter whether the "plaintiff was an invitee or licensee. That distinction is only "material in regard to the static condition of the premises. It "is concerned with dangers which have been present for some "time in the physical structure of the premises. It has no "relevance in regard to current operations, that is, to things "being done on the premises, to dangers which are brought about "by the contemporaneous activities of the occupier or his "servants or of anyone else." I think that is right to be applied to the present case, with perhaps certain qualifications. Denning L.J. continued: "In regard to current operations, the duty of the "occupier—or of the person conducting the operations—is simply "to use reasonable care in all the circumstances. This duty is "owed alike to all persons lawfully on the premises who may "be affected by his activities: and it is the same whether the "person injured is an invitee or a licensee, a volunteer or a "guest. Negligence causing damage gives a cause of action, "and it is not proper nowadays in this regard to draw any dis-"tinction between negligent acts of commission and negligent "omissions." It was held in that case that while there was no complaint about the premises, what the occupier had actually done in regard to providing light was to act with reasonable care and therefore the defendant succeeded and the plaintiff failed.

In the present case the position is that the defendants through their servant did not act with reasonable care, which required a warning to be given to the plaintiff that as she walked towards the door the polish was in the way. This is not a case where nobody was negligent. There was an obvious cause for the slipping. Further, I think that it is not a case of contributory negligence. I do not think that the plaintiff was negligent in the way she walked along the floor or in failing to see the unpolished liquid still on the floor.

[His Lordship then considered the question of damages and continued.] I propose to assess general damages at the sum of £750 and to add to that the agreed sum of special damage.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors: R. I. Lewis & Co.; Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. for J. S. Tapsfield.

E. M. W.

[7] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 58, 62.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1955
Feb. 1, 2, 3.

Evershed M.R., Jenkins and Morris L.JJ.

* HOPGOOD v. BROWN.

[Plaint K. No. 1209.]

Vendor and Purchaser—Conveyance—Parcels—Ill-defined boundary—Inference of straight line—Agreement by adjoining landowners as to position of boundary—Whether successors in title bound—Estoppel — The subsequent conveyance — Parcels as previously described—Construction.

Estoppel—Conduct, by. Easement—Drainage—Licence—Reciprocal—Revocation—Benefit of manhole and outflow.

In 1932, two adjoining plots on a building estate were conveyed to T. by separate conveyances. The description of the parcels was similar in both conveyances and in both there was a reference to a small plan attached to the conveyance for identification of the parcels only. In neither of the conveyances was the position of the dividing boundary indicated precisely. T. subsequently sold both plots and, in 1951, the southern plot was owned by the defendant, the other being owned by a company of which the defendant was a director. The defendant commenced to build on his plot and, pursuant to an agreement between himself and the company, built in such a way that the wall of his garage formed an apparent boundary between the plots which was continued to the back by a wall and fence. This boundary did not run in a straight line parallel with the other side boundaries from the front of the plot to the rear but included a wedge-shaped strip lying to the north of such a straight line. In 1952, the northern plot was conveyed to L., who resold to the plaintiff. In both conveyances no mention was made of the then existing apparent boundary; the area conveyed was described in exactly the terms used in the relevant conveyance of 1932 and there was a reference to the plan attached to that conveyance. The plaintiff claimed that the area conveyed to him was that conveyed to T. in 1932 and that that part of the defendant's garage which stood on the wedge-shaped strip now apparently forming part of the southern plot was an encroachment.

The plaintiff further claimed that a manhole (and connecting drain) put into his land by the defendant to act as a junction for the collection of the separate flows of water from the two plots to flow thence by a single outflow under the defendant's land to the main drain under the road was a nuisance:—

Held that, (1) the dividing line between the two plots as conveyed in 1932 must be inferred to have been a straight line;

(2) (per Jenkins L.J. and Morris L.J.) in each subsequent conveyance the use of the same terms and the reference to the one plan showed that the same area was conveyed;

(3) the company as a party to the agreement of 1951 would have been estopped, once the garage had been erected by the defendant, from asserting that the boundary was anywhere other than as agreed, and the plaintiff as successor in title to the company was similarly bound; and that accordingly the plot conveyed to the plaintiff did not include the disputed strip;

Principle in Caincross v. Lorimer (1860) 3 L.T. 130, cited with approval in In re William Porter & Co. Ld. [1937] 2 All E.R. 361, applied;

Taylor v. Needham (1810) 2 Taunt. 278 applied;

C. A.

1955

HOPGOOD v. BROWN.

(4) that the drainage system conferred on the plaintiff and defendant rights in the nature of reciprocal licences so that the plaintiff could not revoke the defendant's licence to discharge water through his drain to the manhole on the plaintiff's land whilst he, the plaintiff, was continuing to enjoy the benefit of the outflow from that manhole under the defendant's land.

APPEAL from Judge Howard, sitting at Ilford County Court.

The plaintiff, Boyd Hilary Hopgood, and the defendant, Maurice Walter Brown, were the freehold owners of one each of two adjacent plots of land, formerly in common ownership, and being part of an area divided into small building plots. The action was concerned with an alleged encroachment over the boundary between the two plots.

On June 22, 1932, one Allen Ansell conveyed both plots to one Cyril Regent Turner by two separate conveyances. The parcels in the deed relating to the plot ultimately to be owned by the defendant, that is the more southerly of the two plots were: "All that piece of land situate in the parish of Romford in the "county of Essex part of the land known as the Havering Park "Estate conveyed by a conveyance . . . which said piece of land "has the several dimensions following, namely, a frontage to "the . . . proposed Hamlet Road of 40 feet or thereabouts, a "length along its south-west side of 170 feet or thereabouts and "a width at its rear or south-east side of 31 feet or thereabouts, "is adjoined on its north-east side by other land conveyed or "about to be conveyed by the vendor to the purchaser, and com-"prises the whole of the plot numbered 56 and the south-"westerly portion of the plot numbered 55 in the vendor's "development of that portion of the estate and for the purpose "of facilitating identification only is delineated and shown by the "pink colour on the plan drawn on these presents," and a small plan was attached.

The second schedule to the deed contained a number of covenants which the purchaser entered into, referring to such matters as building line and fences. The conveyance relating to the other plot, that is the northerly plot, ultimately to be owned by the plaintiff, contained a description corresponding in all respects to that of the southerly plot, except that the northern boundary of that plot was slightly longer, 173 feet, and the eastern boundary slighter shorter, 30 feet, than the corresponding measurements of the southern and eastern boundaries of the southerly plot. In neither of the conveyances was a measurement given for the dividing boundary between the two plots.

Turner sold both plots to Arthur Charles Walker who, on July 18, 1949, sold the southerly plot to the defendant, Brown, and on the same day sold the northerly plot to Walter and Maurice Brown (Builders) Ld. The defendant had an interest in the building company, but not a controlling interest; he was a director, but the greater part of the shares and the control of the company was in his father, Walter Brown. At that time both the plots were vacant and unbuilt upon.

In 1951, the defendant desired to build a bungalow and a garage on his plot and plans were prepared. With the plans he approached the company owning the other plot to agree with him the position which, as a result of the building, the boundary between his plot and the company's plot would inevitably take and, secondly, to build for him the bungalow and garage according to his plans. Pursuant to that agreement, the substance of which as found by the county court judge is set out and considered in the judgments, the bungalow and garage were erected in such a position that part of the garage encroached into the northern plot (assuming that the boundary between the two plots followed a straight line substantially parallel with the northern boundary of the northern plot, beginning at a post at the extreme north-west corner of the southern plot). The encroachment varied between two and three feet in width. At the same time a drain was constructed from the southern plot to a manhole on the northern plot and thence back under to the southern plot, and so to the main drain; the intention being that a single outflow could then serve both properties.

On April 29, 1952, the company sold the northern plot, which was still vacant, to Leonard George Lister, the conveyance containing an exact repetition of the dimensions of the plot in the conveyance of 1932, with a similar reference to the numbers on the Park Estate plan, and concluding: " and for the purposes " of facilitating identification only is delineated and shown by " the colour pink on the plan drawn on " the conveyance of 1932.

On November 18, 1952, Lister sold the northern plot to the plaintiff, Boyd Hilary Hopgood, the description of the plot being identical with that in the conveyance to Lister. He also bought a plan of a bungalow from Lister. In due course Hopgood proceeded to build, without apparently being advised as to the exact dimensions of the plot as shown on the surface of the ground. Eventually he discovered that there was insufficient room for a car to pass at the southern side of his newly-erected bungalow to his proposed garage at the rear, because of the defendant's garage.

In the course of building, the manhole put in by the defendant on the north plot was discovered, but it was found that position was not convenient for the plaintiff's bungalow. The builder communicated with the plaintiff and with the defendant because he was proposing to move the manhole, which was obviously connected with an underground drain leading from the defendant's land. The plaintiff told the builder that he refused all responsibility and gave the builder no authority. The builder moved the manhole to a more suitable position and reconnected the drain from the defendant's land, linking up as before with a single outflow which, according to the plaintiff's plan, went under the defendant's land and thence to the main drain or sewer under Hamlet Road.

C. A.
1955
Hopgood v. Brown.

In an action for trespass [1] the plaintiff sought a declaration as to the position of the boundary, an injunction requiring the defendant to remove the encroaching part of the garage, and damages, the estimated sum for damages suffered to date being £19. The defendant counterclaimed for a declaration that the boundary excluded from the northern plot the disputed strip. The claim for the injunction was abandoned at the trial. The county court judge dismissed that part of the claim, holding that although the conveyances subsequent to that of 1932 from Ansell to Turner relating to the northern plot, and particularly the conveyance from the company to Lister, were apt to convey and did convey the whole area conveyed in 1932 to Turner, that is the area including the disputed strip, the company and its successors in title, including the plaintiff, were estopped from asserting that the boundary was at any other position than was shown on the ground by the garage wall and fence. The plea of estoppel was not pleaded by the defendant but was taken by the judge himself at the trial.

The plaintiff further claimed that the defendant had trespassed on the plaintiff's land by putting thereon a manhole and drains, though it became clear at the trial that the cause of complaint was not, strictly speaking, a trespass but something in the nature of a nuisance, resulting from the discharge through an underground drain on to the plaintiff's land of water from the defendant's land. On that matter the judge found for the plaintiff. He concluded that the right which the defendant had enjoyed at one time to discharge water from his land into the manhole on the plaintiff's land by the underground drain was the subject of a revocable licence, and that that licence had been revoked in fact. He, therefore, awarded to the plaintiff in respect of that matter one shilling damages, but made no order as to costs either on the claim or on the counterclaim.

The plaintiff appealed and the defendant cross-appealed.

Harry Lester for the plaintiff.
A. E. Holdsworth for the defendant.

In addition to the cases referred to in the judgments the following were cited in argument: Ramsden v. Dyson [2]; Plimmer v. Mayor of Wellington [3]; Shore v. Wilson [4]; Waterpark v. Fennell.[5]

Evershed M.R. At the beginning of his judgment in Wallington v. Townsend [1] (a case which, on its facts, is sufficiently near to the present to be useful and to which, therefore, I shall return

[1] The action would have been more correctly described as an action for ejectment, as is stated in the judgment of Evershed M.R.
[2] (1865) L.R. 1 H.L. 129.
[3] (1884) 9 App.Cas. 699.
[4] (1839) 9 Cl. & F. 355.
[5] (1859) 7 H.L.Cas. 650.
[1] 55 T.L.R. 531; [1939] 2 All E.R. 225.

later), Morton J. observed[2]: "The case is a good illustration of "the fact that actions in which the subject-matter is compara- "tively trifling often give rise to the most difficult questions of "fact and of law." The hearing of the present case in the county court lasted, I believe, two days and has taken nearly two days in this court and we are now called upon to deliver judgment in respect of a matter which, to an outsider, might appear to be of a somewhat trifling character. It is certain that this litigation can fairly be said to be the result of misfortune, of want of good advice (I do not say of bad advice, because I know not sufficiently of the facts) given to the plaintiff, and some lack of good temper, which I think is inevitable in such cases.

[His Lordship having referred to the description of the two plots in the conveyances of 1932 continued:] It is obvious, having looked at the plans attached to the conveyances of 1932, that the plots are of regular dimensions, as would inevitably be the case with building lots of this kind. It is not possible to imagine that the boundaries were intended to be otherwise than along straight lines from the frontage to the rear. But the plans are small; there is no description in the conveyances of the area, and it was "for the "purpose of facilitating identification only" that the plots were delineated on the plan. At that time it appears that both these plots were wholly vacant and unbuilt upon. I say "it appears" because it is not entirely clear whether at that stage there was on any part of the land anything to indicate the line of any of its boundaries, but from my understanding of the facts this much is clear: that nothing had been placed along the southern boundary of the northern plot, or along the northern boundary of the southern plot (which is the same thing) to indicate on the surface of the earth where the boundary between the two plots ran; nor, of course, was there any need at that time or for some little time afterwards so to do, since both plots were in the same hands.

[His Lordship referred to the conveyances of July 18, 1949, and continued:] In 1951 the first events occurred from which all that has happened in this litigation has flowed. The defendant, owner of the southern plot, desired to build upon his plot a bungalow and a garage, and for that purpose plans were prepared by him or on his behalf. He proceeded, with those plans, to approach the company in which he was interested, but which he did not control, and invited the company, first of all, to agree with him the position which, as a result of the building, the boundary between his plot and the company's plot would inevitably take, and secondly, to build for him the bungalow and garage according to the plan.

The most satisfactory way for me to deal with this exceedingly important matter of fact is to read two paragraphs from the judgment of the county court judge. "Mr. Brown himself stated in "evidence that he had no intention of encroaching upon the

[2] Ibid. 228.

C. A.
1955 Hopgood
v.
Brown.
Evershed M.R.

"company's boundary and that there was no intention on the "company's part of permitting him to do so. He was supported "on both points by his father who, as I have said, was in a position "to control the company. There was no cross-examination to "suggest that this encroachment was a matter of design. Both "witnesses struck me as completely honest and reliable. Neither "they nor anybody else had apparently ever taken measurements "to show exactly where the dividing line between the two "properties ought to run. I have come to the conclusion of fact "that both Brown and the company acted with complete bona "fides and intended the flank wall of the garage to run along and "for its full length of 15 feet to be the boundary line of their "respective properties." I understood that it was suggested that there was no evidence to support that final conclusion of fact, but I am clear that there was ample evidence to support it: for example, the defendant said in cross-examination: "No question "of company giving me any extra land. If in fact it was built on "adjoining land, this was a mistake. The brick wall was put up "intending it for the boundary between my property and the "company's. It was so understood by me in my capacity as "owner of the south property and as director of the company "owning the north property."

Arising from that last sentence, Mr. Lester submitted that, whatever might have happened in other circumstances the company here was not bound by any of the consequences which might otherwise have flowed from what took place between the defendant and the company. Mr. Lester said that, following the strict language of the answer given by the defendant, the extent of the agreement was merely that the defendant had agreed with himself as director, and that the company as such should not be taken as having accepted the arrangements which the defendant was seeking to make. I am satisfied that that is not so. From the evidence of Mr. Brown senior it is plain that he was fully aware of what his son was proposing and doing; that he, controlling the company, fully authorized the company's participation in what followed and assented to it, and, therefore, he assumed for the company all the consequences that would naturally and properly flow from that arrangement.

It is plain that the garage, part of the building which was proposed and which was in fact executed and the north wall of which was to form the boundary, encroached on the northern plot: that is to say, if a straight line were drawn from the post which was on the site marking the extreme north-west corner, adjacent to Hamlet Road, of the southern plot back to the back line substantially parallel with the southern boundary, then one part of the garage extended over that line by 2 or 3 feet into the north plot. That encroachment has given rise to the present action. Assuming that the boundary were to go along the north side of the garage, it would run from Hamlet Road forming, not a single straight line, but two lines at an extremely obtuse angle, and the plaintiff claims relief to the extent of the part of the land which would lie between the obtuse angle and the straight line. From the east side of the garage a wall and a post-and-wire fence ran to the back of the plot and the judge found that the mutual intention of the company and the defendant (for I now shall treat them, having regard to what I have earlier said, as two quite independent persons) was that thenceforth the garage wall and the fence should be and constitute the actual boundary between their plots.

At the same time as this building operation occurred, another operation of a somewhat different character also took place. In order, as I understand, to save the expense of having two pipes or drains from the two plots of land, or from any houses built on them, to the road, the water which would flow from the newly erected premises of the defendant was to be brought by an underground drain to a manhole put on the northern plot flowing from thence to the road by a route which recrossed the boundary and went under the defendant's land. It was intended that in due course of time the manhole should also collect water from the north land, the company's land, and there would then be the single outflow to the main drain in the road serving both properties. That was a sensible and economical arrangement.

On April 29, 1952, the company disposed of its still vacant plot to Lister. The evidence given by the defendant (and the judge expressed the view that he was a witness of care and reliability) was that Lister came and inspected the property. The judge said: "I should be perfectly prepared to hold as a "question of fact—if indeed it were relevant—that the company "never intended in the minds of their officers to convey anything "more than what they had enjoyed. Indeed, as I have already "said, they had always considered what I have called the actual "boundary as representing the true boundary. Mr. Lister was "not called, but the defendant gave evidence, which I accept, "that he (Lister) visited the site before he purchased, and that "he saw, or could see, exactly where the actual boundary lay." Unfortunately, it appears that no thought was given at that stage to verifying the position of the boundary, and in the conveyance to Lister the parcels were described as "All that piece of land "situate in the parish of Romford in the county of Essex part "of the land known as the Havering Park Estate and abutting "upon the south-east side of a road known as Hamlet Road "which said piece of land has the several dimensions following, "namely." There then followed an exact repetition of the dimensions mentioned in the conveyance of 1932 of the north plot and with a similar reference to the numbers on the Park Estate plan, and the description concluded again, echoing the language of the earlier deed, "and for the purposes of facilitating "identification only is delineated and shown by the colour pink "on the plan drawn on" the conveyance of 1932 from Ansell to Turner. It is, of course, elementary that the mutual intentions of the parties to a deed cannot override or distort its

C. A.
1955 HOPGOOD
v.
BROWN.
Evershed M.R.

language, though intentions may give rise to the right of one or other of the parties to have that language rectified. I will not, however, express any view of the meaning of that conveyance for the moment. It is obvious that if that conveyance according to its true effect and construction was apt to convey to Lister only the land which in fact lay to the north of the garage wall and the post-and-wire fence, then that was all Lister had when he resold the plot in November, 1952, to the plaintiff. The language of the conveyance to the plaintiff was, so far as is relevant, identical with that which I have already read in the conveyance from the company to Lister. It appears that the plaintiff also bought for a cash consideration some plan of a bungalow, and in due course he proceeded to build his bungalow.

At the beginning of my judgment I expressed some regret that the unhappy position in which these two people now find themselves was in some measure due to want of good advice, and it is at this point, most unhappily (as I think) for the plaintiff, that he was not advised as to the precise dimensions which the surface of the ground appeared to show to be comprised within his plot and the dimensions which, according to the various plans, ought to have been shown. It seems that he had proceeded to a very advanced stage with his bungalow before he realized that the small projection, which I have attempted to describe, made by the defendant's garage, operated so that the passage between the southern part of the plaintiff's bungalow and the boundary was insufficient to enable the plaintiff to get a motor-car through it so as to garage the motor-car at the back of the plot. It was no doubt a substantial disappointment, to say the least, to the plaintiff. He then discovered the divergence from the area as shown on the plan of 1932, on the footing that the southern boundary of his plot was a straight line parallel, or substantially parallel to the northern boundary. It is not quite parallel, for the eastern boundary is shorter than the road frontage, but the regularity of the design, as I have already indicated, is apparent, and the position of the defendant's garage was inconsistent, and shown to the plaintiff to be inconsistent, with the natural inferences from the plan.

The defendant made a laudable and by no means ungenerous attempt to assist the plaintiff which failed, and the present action was begun. It was stated to be an action for trespass, but, as Mr. Holdsworth pointed out, it may be that it would be more correct to describe it as an action for ejectment. [His Lordship referred to the trial in the county court and to the decision there made and went on:]

On the main question, the broad conclusion at which the judge arrived, namely, that the plaintiff failed, appears to me to be in accordance with common sense and the realities of the case and a conclusion that after all that has occurred the boundary should be treated for all practical purposes as being along the straight line shown on the plan, with the result that, apart from Mr. Lester's concession, as a matter of strict right the plaintiff could require the removal of the garage, or part of it, and of the fence, would appear hardly comprehensible, I should have thought, to anybody but a lawyer. But as Morton J. observed,[3] these apparently simple, even trifling, questions have an unhappy knack of giving rise to most difficult questions. The first question, which has formed a part of the cross-appeal, is whether the judge was right to hold, as he did, that on the true construction of the deeds there was conveyed to Lister, and by Lister to the plaintiff, the whole area defined and also delineated on the conveyance of 1932 of the northern plot. The judge said: "It seems to me that it would be a wrong "method of construction to give to the parcels of the conveyance "of April 29, 1952"—that is the conveyance from the company to Lister—"a different meaning from that of the parcels and "earlier conveyance of June 22, 1932, and that the property "conveyed by the former must have had the same boundaries "as the property conveyed by the latter." I have been very much impressed by the forceful character of the argument in the other direction. A conveyance purports, on the face of it, to be a conveyance of a piece of land, of something real, of part of the surface of the earth and that which underlies it. It is, therefore, as I understand it, legitimate to look at the physical facts, not for the purpose of distorting the language of the deed, but for the better identification of that which the language describes. The present description is of a plot of land fronting on a road called Hamlet Road in Romford. If, at the relevant date in 1952, the locus in quo had been inspected, the apparent southern boundary of the plot then intended to be the subject of the deed was plainly marked on the surface of the earth by that which had been put upon it. But the court is not concerned with the intention of the parties, but with the words of the deed of April, 1952: "All that piece of land situate in the parish "of Romford in the county of Essex part of the land known as "the Havering Park Estate and abutting upon the south-east "side of a road known as Hamlet Road which said piece of land "has the several dimensions following, namely, a frontage to "the said Hamlet Road of 40 feet or thereabouts a length along "its north-east side of 173 feet or thereabouts and a width at "its rear or south-east side of 30 feet or thereabouts and com-"prises the north-easterly portion of plot numbered 55 and the "south-westerly portion of plot numbered 54 on the said Haver-"ing Park Estate." If the description had stopped at that point (subject to the possible effect of the reference to plots on the Havering Park Estate about which we have heard no argument), I confess that I should have thought it would be plain that the thing intended to be described was to be identified as that which on the surface of the earth was, inter alia, indicated and marked

[3] [1939] 2 All E.R. 225, 228.

C. A.
1955
HOPGOOD v. BROWN.
Evershed M.R.

by the northern wall of the garage and the post-and-wire fence. There was no exact delineation of the vital boundary, the southern or south-western boundary. The area is not stated and there is nothing, as a matter of words, which I should have thought would have inclined a court to hold that the thing conveyed was to be indentified otherwise than by reference to what was to be found on the site. But, of course, the parcels do not stop there. They proceed " and for the purposes of facilitating " identification only is delineated and shown by the pink colour " on the plan drawn on a conveyance dated . . . ", and then there is a reference to the conveyance of 1932 from Ansell to Turner. I do not doubt that that reference is a strong indication to the reader of the deed of 1952 that the subject of that deed was the same as the subject of the deed of 1932; but the question is whether that inference from the language is so compelling as to govern the matter, to the exclusion of the facts to be discerned from looking at the land. Mr. Holdsworth, in a very forceful and persuasive argument, drew attention in this respect to the difference between the language in this case and that in the conveyance which fell to be construed in Wallington v. Townsend,[4] to which I have already referred. In that case, the problem was of a similar nature, but the conveyance contained this very different formula, " as the same is more particularly delineated on the plan " annexed hereto and thereon coloured pink." Morton J. stated that the view which he felt compelled to adopt was one which he would not adopt unless the words were so strong that he felt himself judicially incapable of resisting their proper inference, and he thought that those words which I have just read were too strong. " I find myself," he said,[5] " unable to come to any " conclusion other than that, on the true construction of the " contract, the disputed strip is included in the land contracted to " be sold." As will have been observed from what I have just read, that was a case of contract, where it might perhaps have been thought that there was less compulsion than in the case of a conveyance, and I do not minimise the effect that must be given to the circumstance that we are dealing with of the completed deed, a conveyance. But, as I have already indicated, I have found great force and persuasiveness in the argument of Mr. Holdsworth that this somewhat imprecise and certainly very different language from that in Wallington v. Townsend [6] does not compel the conclusion that as a matter of construction, the area conveyed in 1952 must be the same as the area which was indicated in the deed of 1932 so that the conveyance of 1952 would be regarded as comprehending a strip bounded on the south side by an absolutely straight line.

Although the problem is very difficult, one thing is plain, that the plots shown on the plan of a building estate divided as this one is are intended to be regular and uniform. But I have felt much strength in the submission that, although the words which I have read are plainly apt to describe the original subject-matter of the deed of 1932, they are also equally apt to describe a plot of land which is to some extent (I think it is a matter of degree, and I would, therefore, say a small extent) different from the original as a result of some slight differences on the surface. During the argument I instanced the following example: If, in making up Hamlet Road for public use, a small piece at a corner, or along the front, had been taken from or added to the area originally intended as the north plot, I should have been strongly inclined to suppose that the description which I have read was apt to describe the slightly altered configuration of that which was in substance the same plot. But my two brothers do not take that view. They take the view which the judge expressed that, as a matter of construction, the conveyance to Lister must be taken to have conveyed the same thing, the same property, as had the deed of 1932, and they indicate that a contrary view (tempting though it is, because in line with the manifest intention of both parties) is to yield to distortion of the language in order to try to give effect to intention, a thing which, in itself, is not, of course, legitimate. Having regard to the view which they take, I do not, therefore, propose to express any conclusion of my own on this part of the case.

[4] [1939] 2 All E.R. 225, 236.
[5] Ibid. 236.
[6] [1939] 2 All E.R. 225.

I turn to the question of estoppel, upon which (as I have earlier said) the judge found in favour of the defendant. I have already disposed of Mr. Lester's point that because the defendant, the owner of the southern plot, was a director of the company which owned the northern plot, the natural consequences which would flow from activities otherwise to be attributed to the company were qualified in some way. Mr. Lester also maintained that the conclusion based on estoppel was erroneous because of the absence of what he said was an essential element in a case of estoppel of this kind, namely, knowledge by the party alleged to be estopped of that party's true right. Mr. Lester referred us to the formulation of the requisites of estoppel in the class of case with which he was dealing by Fry J. in Willmott v. Barber.[7] In my judgment, that formulation was addressed to and limited to cases where the party is alleged to be estopped by acquiescence, and it is not intended to be a comprehensive formulation of the necessary requisites of any case of estoppel by representation. The doctrine of such estoppel, which is really a rule of evidence, is to be found in many circumstances and is of a much more general character. I adopt as accurate for the purposes of this judgment the statement of the governing principle given in Spencer Bower on Estoppel (1923), at pp. 9 and 10: "From a careful "scrutiny and collation of the various judicial pronouncements "on the subject, of which no single one is, or was perhaps "intended to be, quite adequate . . ."—I think the learned writer

[7] (1880) 15 Ch.D. 96, 105.

C. A.
1955 Hopgood
v.
Brown.
Evershed M.R.

is using the word "adequate" as meaning "exhaustive"—"The following general statement of the doctrine of estoppel by "representation emerges: where one person ('the representor') "has made a representation to another person ('the representee') "in words, or by acts and conduct, or (being under a duty to the "representee to speak or act) by silence or inaction, with the "intention (actual or presumptive), and with the result, of "inducing the representee on the faith of such representation to "alter his position to his detriment, the representor, in any "litigation which may afterwards take place between him and "the representee, is estopped, as against the representee, from "making, or attempting to establish by evidence, any averment "substantially at variance with his former representation, if the "representee at the proper time, and in the proper manner, "objects thereto."

In my judgment, there was, beyond a peradventure, a representation by the company to the defendant which had all the qualities which Mr. Spencer Bower enumerated, and which had, therefore, all its consequences. In effect, and by way of paraphrase only, the defendant was saying to his northern neighbour, the company: "Our boundary shown on the small plan has never "been marked out on the land. I want to build a bungalow and "a garage. I have made plans, and I believe that the boundary "goes as it is shown on my plans. I want to build accordingly. "It may be that I shall take a little bit of your land or that you "will take a little bit of mine, or both, but do you assent to the "boundary being so assumed and fixed?" and the company said: "Yes. What is more, we will assist you to carry out your "purpose and build for you at your cost your house and garage." I think it may well be, if it were necessary and matters had turned out otherwise, that this would be a case of mutual representations of fact made with the intention that they should be acted on, and acted upon in fact; but I am only concerned with the company and, as I have already said, it is clear that the company represented that the position of the boundary was where the defendant had shown that he thought it ought to go. Is it really suggested (for this must, I think, follow from an argument to the contrary) that the company, having assented to what had been proposed, having participated in what followed, and having taken the sum of £2,200 from the defendant for building the garage and his house in the places which he had identified, could tell the defendant next day that they had now measured the plot more accurately, and that he must take down that part of the garage which encroached upon the company's land, and which they had just built at his entire expense? It seems to me that such a suggestion would, indeed, shock common sense and be contrary to the realities of the case.

If that is right, the only other question is whether the disability on the company's part from averring the boundary to be in any place other than that where they, with the defendant, had put it, is equally binding on the plaintiff. In my judgment, that can also be answered in favour of the defendant; and I accept the passage which Mr. Holdsworth read from the judgment of Mansfield C.J. in Taylor v. Needham.[8] That was a case of estoppel between lessor and lessee, but the principle is the same. Mansfield C.J. said[9]: "Then the question comes, "whether the assignee of the lease may be allowed to controvert "the title of the lessor, when the lessee, under whom he derives, "could not controvert the title of the lessor; so that the assignee "should have a better right than he from whom he derives it. "Exclusive of all the dicta, it would be a very odd thing in "the law of any country, if A. could take, by any form of "conveyance, a greater or better right than he had who conveys "it to him; it would be contrary to all principle. But it does not "rest merely on the general principle; for if you look into all the "books upon estoppel, you find it laid down, that parties and "privies are estopped, and he who takes an estate under a deed, "is privy in estate, and therefore never can be in a better "situation than he from whom he takes it." My conclusion, therefore, is that Mr. Lester has failed to satisfy me that there are any good grounds for differing from the judge's conclusion.

I now come to the vexed but trivial matter of the manhole. [His Lordship referred to the discovery of and moving of the manhole, and continued:] What happened as regards the outflow is not absolutely clear, but the plan which was prepared by the plaintiff's surveyors shows that the outflow went back under the defendant's land, and the facts justify the inference that the substantial result was as before, that the manhole served the discharge from both plots, and that that discharge was taken from the manhole into an outflow under the defendant's land into the main drain or sewer under Hamlet Road. In the prayer of the claim the plaintiff sought to say that the wrong of which he complained was the putting or building on the plaintiff's land of a manhole and a drain, but it became clear that the real cause of complaint was (technical though it be) something in the nature of a nuisance rather than a trespass, namely, the discharge through an underground drain on to the plaintiff's land of water from the defendant's land, and the judge, who found in the plaintiff's favour on that matter, awarded to him the contemptuous figure of twelve pennies in respect of that wrong.

The judge concluded that, although at the time when these arrangements for underground drainage were originally made something in the nature of an equitable easement came into existence, failure to register that interest had had the result that the defendant's rights were not binding on the plaintiff. The judge went on, however, to say that the effect of the reconnexion with the drain was that the defendant had a licence to go on discharging until the licence was revoked, and that that licence had [8] (1810) 2 Taunt. 278. [9] Ibid. 282.

C. A.
1955
HOPGOOD v. BROWN.
Evershed M.R.

been revoked by a letter which is part of the correspondence. I have, with all respect to the judge, come to a different conclusion. I think that he omitted to take note of the fact (which I have stated and which I have inferred) that from the manhole the outflow taking the water from the plaintiff's and the defendant's land came through an underground channel under the defendant's land into the main drain. There was, therefore, something in the nature of mutual licences; and it seems to me, as a matter of plain justice and of law, that a person who is enjoying one part of such reciprocal licences cannot at the same time purport to revoke the other part which imposes a burden on him. In other words, so long as the defendant was taking the water from the plaintiff's land, or was liable to take it, through his drain under his land, the plaintiff was not entitled to revoke, or to purport to revoke, the licence which the defendant had to discharge into the manhole of the plaintiff. In my judgment, therefore, the sum of one shilling should not have been awarded. There should have been no award, and this part of the plaintiff's claim, like the rest of it, should have been dismissed.

The last matter is that of the cross-appeal, and I regret that, here again, the question with which we have to deal is by no means easy. I am conscious of considerable sympathy for both of the unfortunate parties to this litigation, and I know full well that, whatever be the end of it, the costs which will fall upon one or other or both will be severe and will probably leave them both with a feeling that the battle hardly justified the costs which it involved. I have said that the judge's judgment awarded no costs to either side on the claim or on the counterclaim. [His Lordship referred to the counterclaim.]

The decision went in favour of the defendant, not on the ground that the construction of the deeds was as the defendant claimed that they should be held to be, but on the ground that the plaintiff was estopped from averring to the contrary; and that was a matter not pleaded in the defence. The question of estoppel by representation was raised by the judge himself, but, having been raised, was treated as open, was not objected to by the plaintiff, and indeed he had some time for cogitation, for 14 days (I understand) elapsed between the first day of the hearing and the second. The judge, after hearing further argument, made no order as to costs for reasons which he has expressed in a letter addressed by him to the associate of this court, in which he said: "I rejected Mr. Lester's argument" (namely, that he was entitled to the costs of the action, having recovered a shilling damages) "on the ground that the plaintiff had not succeeded "in the main object for which he had brought the case and had "only recovered purely nominal damages of one shilling. On the "other hand, it seemed to me that the defendant had wrongly "resisted liability upon the subsidiary issue of the manhole. He "had failed upon the arguments put forward on the question of "construction and, although he had succeeded upon the issue of " estoppel, this matter had never been raised in his written " defence, and the defendant had further failed to obtain any " relief by the counterclaim."

The cross-notice of appeal asked for three things by way of variation of the judgment. It first asked that the judgment in favour of the plaintiff on the manhole point should be reversed and the damages awarded struck out. It also complained of the dismissal of the defendant's counterclaim, and prayed that in the circumstances the judge's decision to award no costs should be reviewed. It will have been observed from what I read that the first matter which the judge took into account, in exercising the discretion which he did, was that the plaintiff had succeeded and that the defendant had wrongfully resisted liability, in respect of the manhole issue, subsidiary though it was. Since, therefore, the first main matter on which the judge relied is, if my view is right, not one which should have been taken into account in the way which the judge records, it seems to me that the discretion must be open and that it is for this court to decide anew (but bearing in mind, of course, what the judge has said) how the discretion should be exercised. I think the point that the estoppel defence was not in terms raised in the pleading should not be forgotten. All the same, the matter proceeded without objection throughout as though this question was open, and upon it the plaintiff, who had to prove his case, eventually failed, and fails still. I add finally, as a material circumstance in the exercise of discretion, that the plaintiff before the judge (no doubt very wisely and properly) ceased to claim any injunction, and it is, I think, manifest that no court, in the circumstances, would have granted an injunction. In all the circumstances, I do not think it right that the defendant should be wholly deprived of his costs at the hearing. It is true that his counterclaim in terms depended upon his view of construction and therefore, so far as his cross-appeal is concerned, that part of it strictly must also fail, but it is an altogether negligible matter and on his cross-appeal he succeeds, both as regards the manhole and (as I have indicated) on the question of costs. Giving the matter the best consideration I can, and bearing in mind all the tribulations of both these parties, I think that the just course would be to direct that the defendant should recover one half of his costs in the court below. So far as this court is concerned, subject to further argument, since the appeal fails and the cross-appeal substantially succeeds, I think Mr. Holdsworth is entitled to his costs of the appeal and of the cross-appeal in this court.

JENKINS L.J. I agree that this appeal fails. The defence as pleaded was to the effect that, on the true construction of the conveyances, the conveyance of November 18, 1952, from Lister to the plaintiff conveyed to the plaintiff only that area of land remaining if the wall which had been erected from the south-western extremity of the plaintiff's frontage back to the garage,

C. A.
1955 Hopgood
v.
Brown.
Jenkins L.J.

the northern wall of the garage itself, and eastward of that again the chicken-wire fence, constituted the southern boundary of the plot. Of course, if that line did constitute the boundary there would have been no encroachment. The judge rejected that contention and, in my opinion, he was right in rejecting it.

Having stated the facts his Lordship said: I have no doubt that the conveyance of 1932 must have operated, as the judge held, to convey a plot of land with three sides of the dimensions stated, and the fourth side a straight line from the southern extremity of the plot's frontage to the proposed Hamlet Road to such a point as would give the stipulated width of 30 feet to the rear boundary of the plot. That the southern boundary should be anything other than straight seems to me an impossibility. If it was not straight, the whole matter as regards the parcels would be involved in complete uncertainty. It might be a wavy line, it might be a curved line, and no-one could tell how much land was being conveyed or what its shape or area might be. One, therefore, starts with a conveyance, as I think, of a plot with a straight southern boundary between the points I have mentioned. In every subsequent conveyance the same description in all material respects is used, and there is in each such conveyance a reference back to the same plan. It is true that the plan is referred to as being for the purpose of facilitating identification only, and therefore, it cannot control the parcels in the body of any of the deeds. Nevertheless, the use of the same plan, I think, makes it clear beyond argument, having regard to the repetition of precisely the same dimensions, that what was conveyed on each occasion, so far as the northern land was concerned, was precisely the same plot as was conveyed in 1932. Speaking for myself, I fail to see how the meaning of the language of the conveyance to the plaintiff can be affected by the circumstance that, before the conveyance to Lister, W. & M. Brown (Builders) Ld. and the defendant had made these allegedly encroaching erections. Accordingly, I am unable to take the same view as my Lord on this part of the case; for, to my mind, the judge was clearly right in holding that this contention failed and that, accordingly, the low wall running back from the north-west corner of the defendant's premises, and the northern portion of the garage to a width varying from 2 feet to about 5 feet, did encroach on the plaintiff's land as conveyed to him by Lister.

That, however, does not conclude the matter; for the defendant also relied on the doctrine of estoppel, the suggestion that this doctrine might be relevant here having fallen from the judge in the course of the hearing. I will not take up time by repeating the reasons which my Lord the Master of the Rolls has given for his view on this aspect of the case; for, in my judgment, a clear case of estoppel is made out, having regard to the circumstances in which the wall and the garage were erected. I think probably the most apposite statement of the rule regarding estoppel is the one to which the county court judge referred, which is cited with approval by Simonds J. in In re William Porter & Co. Ld.,[10] the passage cited being from the judgment of Lord Chancellor Campbell in Cairncross v. Lorimer.[11] I need not take up time by referring to the passage at length again, but I think it is in complete accord with the conclusion that the company was estopped in this case. If the company was estopped, it follows (as the Master of the Rolls has said) that, on the principle stated in Taylor v. Needham,[12] the plaintiff as successor in title of the company can be in no better position. Accordingly, I agree that the appeal fails.

[His Lordship stated the facts relating to the manhole and went on:] In those circumstances, as my Lord the Master of the Rolls has pointed out, the position is that the original manhole was laid under a reciprocal arrangement whereby the company was to receive the water from the defendant's land and collect it in a manhole on the company's property, the company was to be at liberty to make a further connexion to that manhole, and a connexion between the manhole and the main sewer would be made for the benefit of both parties by means of a pipe running across the defendant's land. I think it is a fair inference on the evidence that, although a fresh manhole was substituted, the existing system of pipes, in conjunction with the new manhole, continued to perform the function contemplated at the time of the original installation and the water from the manhole is still flowing across the defendant's land by means of the outflow pipe laid in his land. That being so, I agree with my Lord that it is not open to the plaintiff to object to the defendant's pipes or to the flow of water through the defendant's pipes on to his land as constituting a trespass, inasmuch as this is part of a reciprocal arrangement of which the plaintiff still has the benefit in the shape of the flow of water allowed to him through the pipe going back on to the defendants' land, across that land, and into the main sewer in the roadway outside.

Accordingly, in my view, the appeal fails and the cross-appeal should be allowed, with the consequences my Lord has indicated.

MORRIS L.J. In my judgment, it has first to be considered what land is referred to and denoted in the conveyance to the plaintiff of the plot which he bought. [Having referred to the description of the parcels in the conveyance of 1952, his Lordship continued:] A perusal of the conveyance so referred to, that is the conveyance from Ansell to Turner, shows that the plot of land was there described in almost identical terms. In the earlier conveyance the reference is to a proposed road intended to be called Hamlet Road. The words of description and limitation which are used thus contain three measurements, namely, those of the frontage to Hamlet Road, the length of the north-east side and

[10] [1937] 2 All E.R. 361.
[11] (1860) 3 L.T. 130.
[12] 2 Taunt. 278.

C. A.
1955
Hopgood v. Brown.
Morris L.J.

the width at the rear. The plan is to be looked at in order to assist in identifying the plot of land. If the plan is so used, there is nothing which suggests that the lines of the boundaries connecting the frontage to Hamlet Road with the rear are other than straight. That they should be so would, in my judgment, be the natural supposition and inference.

[His Lordship stated further facts, and continued:] In view of all those circumstances, I have formed the conclusion that, as a matter of construction, the plot which was conveyed to the plaintiff was the same plot as was described in the conveyance of 1932 and that its boundaries in length followed straight and direct lines. It follows from this view that, unless precluded from so doing, the plaintiff can complain of the presence on his land of some part of the defendant's garage and of the low wall. In considering whether the plaintiff can so complain, it has first to be decided whether the company, Walter & Maurice Brown (Builders) Ld., could, in the period just before they sold the plot to Lister on April 29, 1952, have made complaint. In my judgment, they could not. The company accepted the instructions of the defendant Brown to build for him on his plot. There was then no marked-out boundary between the two plots. The company acted both through the defendant and also through his father, who held the majority of shares in the company. The bungalow and garage of the defendant Brown were built, and the company received payment. There was no intention of ceding any land from the company to the defendant Brown and the latter had no intention of encroaching over his boundary. The defendant's father said in evidence that he intended to build only on the land of the defendant. The defendant said: "The brick wall was put up intending it "for the boundary between my property and the company's. "It was so understood by me in my capacity as owner of the "south property and as director of the company owning the "north property." If the company, acting through its agents, had said in terms to the defendant Brown that they recognized that there were no visible boundaries between the two plots and appreciated that the defendant wished to have an assurance that he could safely proceed to build in accordance with his projected plans without being in danger of being accused by the company of encroaching on their land, and that they were willing to give such an assurance, I cannot conceive that after the defendant had relied on such assurance and had paid the company for building according to plan, the company could have complained that the defendant was trespassing on their land. The company would have been estopped. Though the company did not make express statements in the terms which I have mentioned, they did, in my judgment, by their conduct impliedly represent that the defendant could safely proceed to build as he planned, and the company would, in my judgment, at a later date have been estopped from alleging that the defendant had done wrong and was trespassing on their land. If this would have been the position of the company, would Lister have been and is the plaintiff better placed? In my judgment, the answer is no. The judgment of Mansfield C.J. in Taylor v. Needham [13] is, in my judgment, clear authority for this view. I, therefore, consider that, as regards these matters, the appeal against the judgment of the judge fails.

With regard to all the other matters relating to the issue of the manhole and the drains, and the issues in relation to costs, I do not desire to add anything to what my Lords have said, beyond saying that I am in agreement with the conclusions which they have expressed.

Appeal dismissed with costs. Cross-appeal allowed with costs. Judgment for damages set aside; Defendant to recover one-half his costs in the county court on scale 3; defendant's costs of the appeal and the cross-appeal to be taxed, as between solicitor and client, in accordance with the schedule to the Legal Aid and Advice Act.

Solicitors: Sidney Torrance & Co.; Sackville, Hulkes & Archdale, Hornchurch, Essex.

[13] 2 Taunt. 278.

[PRIVY COUNCIL.]

* CHIEF J. M. KODILINYE AND ANOTHER . APPELLANTS;
AND
PHILIP AKUNNE ANATOGU AND ANOTHER . RESPONDENTS.

J. C.†
1955
Feb. 14.

ON APPEAL FROM THE WEST AFRICAN COURT OF APPEAL.

West Africa (Nigeria) — Land — Ownership — Statutory transfer of land to Crown—Subsequent abandonment under statute as amended —Effect—Title to ownership reverting to original owners—Usufructuary and occupancy rights intermediately acquired not affected—To be decided in independent proceedings—Declaration and injunction—Desirability of formal order embodying precise language of relief granted—Niger Lands Transfer Ordinance, 1916, c. 86 (as amended by Ordinances Nos. 22 and 61 of 1945), s. 14 (now s. 15 of c. 149 of the Laws of Nigeria, 1948 Rev.).

In 1882, confirmed by an instrument in 1884, certain land, including that now in dispute known as Ugborimili, situate at Onitsha, Nigeria, was granted by a Native Chief to the National † Present: VISCOUNT SIMONDS, LORD OAKSEY, LORD TUCKER, LORD SOMERVELL OF HARROW and MR. L. M. D. DE SILVA.

J. C.

1955

Kodilinye v. Anatogu.

African Co. Ld., which company was subsequently merged in the Royal Niger Co., who succeeded to their title to the suit land. The grant reserved certain farming, fishing and occupancy rights. In 1916 the Niger Lands Transfer Ordinance was passed, vesting in the Governor in trust for His Majesty as from January 1, 1900, certain specified lands belonging to the Niger Co., including the suit land. By Ordinance No. 22 of 1945, the Ordinance of 1916 was amended and the Governor was empowered to abandon all the right, title or interest vested in him by the Ordinance of 1916 in the trust lands. In December, 1948, the Governor made an order abandoning as from January 1, 1949, all right, title or interest in the suit land. Section 14 of the Ordinance of 1916 (as amended by Ordinances Nos. 22 and 61 of 1945) provided that: "Where the Governor "abandons all the right, title or interest vested in him by virtue "of this Ordinance in any vested trust lands or part thereof . . . "then such abandonment shall have effect as if such vested trust "lands or part thereof had never been included in the instru- "ment . . . by which the same were originally transferred to the "company."

The respondents, in a representative action on behalf of the Onitsha tribe or family, alleging that the Native Chief in 1882 had transferred the suit land to the company on behalf of the Onitshas, and that pursuant to the abandonment order of the Governor it reverted to them on January 1, 1949, claimed a declaration of title to the land and an injunction to restrain the appellants, the Obosi tribe or family (a number of whom had, between 1882 and 1945, entered on the suit land and built houses thereon, which had given rise to numerous legal proceedings as to their rights), from "inter- "fering with or disturbing the plaintiffs' ownership and possession "of the said land."

On appeal by the appellants against the orders of the courts below granting the declaration and injunction claimed:—

Held, (1) that there were no grounds for interfering with the concurrent findings of fact that the respondents were the lawful owners to whom the title in the land reverted on the abandonment by the Crown and entitled to the declaration; but (2) that, the only issue in the action being the ownership or radical title to the land, nothing could or should have been decided which would in any way affect the usufructuary rights, if any, of people on the land or any portions thereof, and the injunction would be varied by omitting the words "and possession" from the injunction granted.

Section 14 of the Niger Lands Transfer Ordinance, 1916, as amended, dealt only with the title to ownership of the land and was not to be construed as compelling the court to disregard all events which had happened in the period between 1882 and 1949, in so far as they might affect any rights of use and occupation in respect of such land as might have been acquired or have accrued by acquiescence or otherwise during those years.

It is desirable—whatever the rules of the Supreme Court of Nigeria may permit—that a successful party should obtain a formal order embodying the precise language of the relief granted to him by the judge in cases in which a declaration of title and/or an injunction has been granted.

Judgment of the West African Court of Appeal varied.

Appeal (No. 39 of 1951) from a judgment of the West African Court of Appeal (November 14, 1950), affirming a judgment of the Supreme Court of Nigeria, Onitsha Judicial Division (October 1, 1949).

The following facts are taken from the judgment of the Judicial Committee: This appeal concerned a dispute between two tribes or, more accurately, families as to the title to part of an area of land called Ugborimili which was bounded in the west by the river Niger and lay between the Ndende stream in the north and the river Idemili in the south. Those two tribes or families are hereinafter referred to as the Onitshas and the Obosis. The Onitshas (the respondents to the present appeal) were the plaintiffs in a representative action brought by them against the Obosis (the present appellants) claiming a declaration of title to the disputed land and an injunction.

In 1882 certain land (including that now in dispute) was granted by one Orikagbue to the National African Co. Ld. The grant was evidenced by the production of a certificate dated October 8, 1884, confirming the grant of 1882. That document was Ex. 53 in the case. The National African Co. Ld. was subsequently merged in the Royal Niger Co., who succeeded to their title in the land. On October 26, 1896, a further grant of a portion of the land included in the 1882 grant was made by Orikagbue and four others to the Niger Co. That was Ex. 54. Those grants expressly reserved certain farming, fishing and occupancy rights.

In 1916 the Niger Lands Transfer Ordinance (c. 86) was passed, vesting in the Governor and his successors in office in trust for His Majesty as from January 1, 1900, the lands belonging to the Niger Co. specified in the first schedule thereto. Certain portions of such lands were, however, reserved to the Niger Co. and were referred to in the fourth schedule. Included in the list of agreements in the first schedule were instruments No. 72 and No. 40, which were Exs. 53 and 54 referred to above. The date 1894 in instrument 72 was a mistake for 1884. Between 1882 and 1945 it appeared that a number of persons entered on the land in dispute and built houses thereon. That had given rise to numerous legal proceedings as to their rights or as to the payment of rent or tribute. The Onitshas, through their legal advisers, protested to the Government with regard to their failure to prevent such encroachments since the land had become vested in them in 1916. In 1945, by Ordinance No. 22/1945 the Ordinance of 1916 was amended. Section 4 empowered the Governor by order to abandon all the right, title or interest vested in him by the Ordinance of 1916 in the whole or any part of the lands called the "vested trust lands." Under that authority the Governor made an order (No. 29/1948) dated December 11, 1948, abandoning as from January 1, 1949, all the right, title or interest in a part of the vested trust lands specified in instruments 72 and 40. The portion abandoned was the area south of the green line running east and west on Ex. 10, which was the plan put in evidence and showing the area now in dispute.

Section 14 of chapter 86 (as amended by Ordinances Nos. 22 and 61/1945) provided as follows with regard to the effect of such

J. C.
1955
Kodilinye v. Anatogu.

divesting order: "Where the Governor abandons all the right, "title or interest vested in him by virtue of this Ordinance in any "vested trust lands or part thereof in accordance with the pro- "visions of this Ordinance then such abandonment shall have "effect as if such vested trust lands or part thereof had never been "included in the instrument, agreement or document, as the case "may be, by which the same were originally transferred to the "company."

The only issue before the court was who were the lawful owners to whom the title in the lands in dispute reverted on the abandonment by the Crown on January 1, 1949.

The Onitshas based their claim on traditional evidence as to the migration of their tribe from Benin and their conquest of the Ozeh people who were driven out by them. They said that having thus acquired the land, Orikagbue on their behalf transferred it to the National African Co. and the Niger Co. by the instruments Exs. 53 and 54, and that the ownership of the land reverted to them on January 1, 1949.

The trial judge (Manson J.) granted the respondents a declaration of title to the suit land, and also an injunction restraining the appellants "and their people of Obosi from interfering with or "disturbing the plaintiffs' ownership and possession of the said "land." On appeal the West African Court of Appeal (Blackall P., Verity (C.J. Nigeria), and Lewey J.A.) affirmed that decision.

1955. Jan. 12, 13, 17, 18 and 19. Sir Hartley Shawcross Q.C., Dingle Foot Q.C. and R. K. Handoo for the appellants.

S. Cope Morgan Q.C. and F. R. McQuown for the respondents.

Feb. 14. The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Lord Tucker, who stated the facts as set out above and continued: It is interesting, having regard to the appellants' case as presented to the Board, to see what has been their attitude to this document Ex. 53 at various stages of the proceedings. By their defence and at the trial they denied that Orikagbue was an ancestor of the respondents. They said that he was an Obosi man residing at Onitsha where he was practising as a native doctor and that he contracted for himself and the Obosi people. This issue having been decided against them by the trial judge, who accepted the evidence, inter alios, of Orikagbue's own son that his father had no connexion with the Obosis, and that he and the four other signatories to Ex. 54 were all members of the Ogbo family (i.e., Onitshas), the appellants subsequently contended that Ex. 53 was inadmissible and should never have been received in evidence. This was reason No. 2 in their case. On the hearing of this appeal this contention was abandoned, but at one stage it was suggested that Ex. 53 had been annulled by the later agreement Ex. 54. Ultimately it formed the basis of their submission that it was a vital piece of evidence recognizing their usufructuary title to the land with regard to which the trial judge had so misdirected himself as to require that the case should be sent back for a new trial.

The trial occupied 11 days, and 36 witnesses were called. The judge (Manson J.) in a careful and lucid judgment decided the issue of fact as to who were the lawful owners of the land in dispute in favour of the respondents (the Onitshas) and granted them the declaration asked for, viz., "a declaration of title to all "that piece or parcel of land known as Ugborimili situate at "Onitsha, in the Onitsha Division." No formal order appears to have been drawn up. This, it seems, is not necessary under the rules of the Supreme Court of Nigeria unless specifically applied for, the minute of the judgment taking the place of the formal order or decree. The area to which this declaration relates is the area shown on Ex. 10 below the green line.

On appeal to the West African Court of Appeal the judgment of the trial judge was upheld, the court merely stating that the evidence fully supported his findings.

On this issue there are accordingly concurrent findings of fact as to which it is conceded there are no grounds which would warrant their review by the Board.

The trial judge, however, not only made the declaration already referred to, but granted an injunction. He said: "I also "grant the injunction sought." The injunction sought was as follows: "An injunction to restrain the defendants and their "people of Obosi from interfering with or disturbing the plaintiffs' "ownership and possession of the said land." The judge went on to say: "The defendants must in no way interfere with the "beneficial enjoyment by the plaintiffs of the above area. The "defendants are occupying many houses and other buildings on "the land. The plaintiffs do not ask for an order of ejectment "of defendants. If they want an order they must apply for it. "In the meanwhile the defendants are liable to pay to the plain-"tiffs rent for the use and occupation of the plaintiffs' land. If "plaintiffs demand rent, the defendants must pay it unless they "remove their buildings and vacate the plots."

Here again, no formal order seems to have been drawn up, but the language used by the judge, coupled with the reference to "possession" in the injunction asked for, might well be interpreted as going far beyond the only issue in the action, viz., the ownership or radical title to the land. Unfortunately, the judge was not asked to modify the form of order or to clarify the position. Nor was this matter ever raised in the Court of Appeal. None the less, their Lordships having had their attention drawn to this point feel compelled to make some observations with regard thereto.

The only issue having been as to ownership nothing could or should have been decided which would in any way affect the usufructuary rights, if any, of individuals or of families or tribes to the land in dispute or any portions thereof, or as to whether any such rights are or are not conditional upon payment of rent or

J. C.
1955
KODILINYE
v.
ANATOGU.

tribute. All such matters can only be decided in proceedings in which such issues are properly raised.

The appellants relied on Ex. 53 which states "He (i.e., "Orikagbue) asked that the Abutshi (i.e., Obosi) people might be "allowed to use the land for raising yams, corn, etc., and to fish "from those parts of the bank which were not in the occupation "of the company, . . . he also asked that if any of his sons or "daughters wished for a portion of the land for farming purposes "that they should be allowed and that these requests were acceded "to." They contended that this was evidence of recognition of a previous grant to the Obosi people under which they would at any rate be entitled to occupy the land in dispute, even if the ownership reverted to the Onitshas. They further relied on several passages in the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses and in their pleadings to the like effect.

Their Lordships express no view on these matters, which may require consideration in the light of further evidence directed to these issues and to questions of native law and customs if and when they arise in proceedings in which they call for decision. They do, however, consider that it is right that they should express their view as to the proper construction of section 14 of the Niger Lands Transfer Ordinance as amended (which now appears as section 15 of chapter 149 of Laws of Nigeria, 1948 edition) which has been set out above. In their opinion this section only deals with the title to ownership of the land, and is not to be construed as compelling the court to disregard all events which have happened in the period between 1882 and 1949 in so far as they may affect any rights of use and occupation in respect of such land as may have been acquired or have accrued by acquiescence or otherwise during those years.

No case has been made out for a new trial, but their Lordships consider that the form of the injunction and the language used by the judge in connexion therewith require that the order for the injunction should be varied so as to follow the declaration by omitting the words "and possession" in the injunction sought and granted by the judge.

Their Lordships would stress the desirability—whatever the rules may permit—of a successful party obtaining a formal order embodying the precise language of the relief granted to them by the judge in cases in which a declaration of title and/or an injunction has been granted.

For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the order for an injunction granted by the judge be varied by omitting the words "and possession," but save as aforesaid the judgment do stand.

The appellants must bear their own costs of this appeal and pay to the respondents one half of their costs.

Solicitors: Watkins, Pullcyn & Ellison; Rexworthy, Bonser & Wadkin.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1955
Feb. 7, 8.

Evershed M.R., Jenkins and Morris L.JJ.

* HAYMILLS HOUSES LD. v. BLAKE.

[Plaint No. K. 1590.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent Restriction—Possession—Arrears of Rent —Conditional order—Condition not complied with by date fixed —Subsequent order extending time for compliance with condition —Validity—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923 (13 & 14 Geo. 5, c. 32), s. 4 (2).

Under a tenancy agreement of 1948, which contained a proviso for forfeiture for non-payment of rent, the defendant was tenant of premises within the Rent Acts. The landlords on August 28, 1954, issued a plaint claiming possession on the ground of non-payment of rent, arrears of rent amounting to £28 8s. 7d. and costs. The plaint was subsequently amended to include a further claim for arrears of rent. The case was heard on September 29, 1954, at which date the landlords had not been paid in full and an order was then made for possession on or before October 27, 1954, being four weeks from the date of the order, unless the rent in arrears and costs were paid before that date. The tenant having failed to comply with that order, the landlords applied for a warrant of possession. The tenant subsequently paid all moneys due under the order of September 29 and applied for the suspension of the order for possession. On November 29 the county court judge made the following order:—"It is ordered that the time of the order of 29th September, "1954, be extended for a further 28 days. Debt and costs have "been paid; order therefore of 29th September, 1954, be extin- "guished. Possession warrant revoked."

The landlords contended that since the order of September 29, 1954, had become absolute, the county court judge had no jurisdiction, having regard to the provisions of section 4 (2) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923, to discharge the order for possession.

It was conceded that the tenant not having complied with the order for payment of arrears of rent within four weeks his rights under section 180 (1) (b) of the County Courts Act, 1934, had ceased and the landlord's right of forfeiture for non-payment of rent was effectively exercised and the tenant's rights had become those of a statutory tenant only.

Held, that whether or not an absolute order can be converted into a conditional one so as to give rise to the power of discharge under section 4 (2) of the Act of 1923, on the facts, both the orders of September 29 and November 29 were conditional orders and, accordingly, the county court judge had jurisdiction to discharge the first order.

Per Evershed M.R. It may well be that, if an absolute order for possession is made, then, when it is not yet executed, the court may under section 4 (2) make an order postponing the date of possession on conditions, and, if the conditions are performed, the final words of the subsection may give power to discharge the original order, even though absolute in form.

American Economic Laundry v. Little [1951] 1 K.B. 400; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1186; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 1080 and Mills v. Allen [1953] 2 Q.B. 341; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 356; [1953] 2 All E.R. 534 considered.

C. A.
1955
Haymills Houses Ld. v. Blake.

Appeal from Judge Tudor Rees sitting at Brentford County Court.

By a tenancy agreement dated September 1, 1948, a ground floor flat at No. 78, The Ridings, Ealing, being premises within the Rent Acts, was let by the plaintiffs, Haymills Houses Ld., to the defendant, Roy George Blake. The agreement, determinable by three months' notice to quit, contained a provision for re-entry on non-payment of rent. On August 28, 1954, the landlords served on the tenant a plaint claiming possession and a sum of £20 8s. 7d. for rent in arrears and costs. Subsequently, the plaint was amended to include a claim for the additional sum of £9 17s. 6d., representing further arrears of rent. The case was heard on September 29, 1954, when judgment was given for £39 1s., being the arrears of rent and costs, and it was further ordered that "the defendant do give to the plaintiff possession of "the said land on or before the said 27th day of October, 1954, "unless the said rent in arrear and costs be paid into court before "such 27th day of October, 1954." The tenant paid the arrears of rent before October 27, but not the balance due in respect of costs. The landlords applied for a warrant for possession. The tenant then paid the remaining moneys due under the order of September 29, and applied for an order suspending the order for possession. On November 29 the county court judge made an order in the following terms: "It is ordered that the time of the "order of 29th September, 1954, be extended for a further 28 "days. Debt and costs have been paid; order therefore of "29th September, 1954, be extinguished. Possession warrant "revoked."

The landlords appealed, contending that having regard to the provisions of section 4 (2) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923,[1] the county court judge had no jurisdiction to revoke the order for possession made on September 29 after it had become absolute.

The facts are more fully stated in the judgment of Evershed M.R.

R. O. C. Stable for the landlords.
Alan de Piro for the tenant.

The following cases, in addition to those cited in the judgment of Evershed M.R., were referred to in argument: Goldthorpe v.

[1] Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923, s. 4 (2): "At "the time of the application for or the "making or giving of any order or "judgment for the recovery of posses- "sion of any such dwelling-house, or "for the ejectment of a tenant there- "from, or in the case of any such "order or judgment which has been "made or given, whether before or "after the passing of this Act, and "not executed at any subsequent "time, the court may adjourn the "application, or stay or suspend exe- "cution on any such order or judg- "ment, or postpone the date of "possession for such period or periods "as it thinks fit, and subject to such "conditions (if any) in regard to pay- "ment by the tenant of arrears of "rent, rent, or mesne profits and "otherwise as the court thinks fit.

Bain[2]; King v. Taylor[3]; R. F. Fuggle Ld. v. Gadsden[4]; Chandless-Chandless v. Nicholson[5]; Rossiter v. Langley[6]; Dellenty v. Pellow[7]; Yates v. Morris.[8]

EVERSHED M.R. This appeal has raised a point of no little difficulty under the terms of what is now section 4 (2) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923. Observations have from time to time fallen from judges about that subsection in a number of cases to which our attention has been drawn during the course of what has been a very careful and helpful argument from counsel.

[His Lordship read section 4 (2) of the Act of 1923, and continued:] It is, I think, clear that the section 4 (2) is not syntactically entirely elegant, but it comprehends two types of cases, of which we are concerned with one. One type of case is that in which the powers of the subsection may be available at the time of the application for making an order for possession. The second type of case is that where an order for possession has been made, but has not been executed; and in that latter type of case, the powers of the subsection are available at any subsequent time, so long, of course, as the order remains unexecuted. The present case is related to the second type.

The property is a flat, No. 78, The Ridings, in London, and it is a dwelling-house within the comprehension of the Rent Acts. The plaintiffs were the landlords of the defendant under a written agreement dated September 1, 1948. The agreement provided that the tenancy of the flat was determinable upon three months' notice. The rent was over £90 per annum. A right of re-entry was reserved to the landlords in case of non-payment of rent.

It has been said by Mr. Stable for the landlords that this tenant has in the past been unsatisfactory in that he has shown a lack of promptitude in payment of rent. Whether that is so or not is a matter with which we have not been concerned; but, if it be true, then, as I ventured to observe during the course of argument, the continuance of that lack of promptitude on the part of the tenant may be found by him to be most disadvantageous if there be future excursions to the county court.

However that may be, on August 28, 1954, a plaint was issued and served upon the tenant claiming possession on the ground of arrears of rent, and the plaint showed that the rent in arrear was

"and, if such conditions are complied "with, the court may, if it thinks fit, "discharge or rescind any such order "or judgment."

[2] [1952] 2 Q.B. 455; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1512; [1952] 2 All E.R. 23.

[3] [1954] 3 W.L.R. 669; [1954] 3 All E.R. 373.

[4] [1948] 2 K.B. 236; [1948] 2 All E.R. 160; 64 T.L.R. 364.

[5] [1942] 2 K.B. 321; [1942] 2 All E.R. 315.

[6] [1925] 1 K.B. 741; 41 T.L.R. 304.

[7] [1951] 2 K.B. 858; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 733; [1951] 2 All E.R. 716.

[8] [1951] 1 K.B. 77; [1950] 2 All E.R. 577; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 707.

C. A.
1955
Haymills Houses Ld. v. Blake.
Evershed M.R.

£20 8s. 7d.; a sum of £2 10s. for costs was added, making a monetary claim of £22 18s. 7d. The plaintiffs claimed in accordance with the terms of the agreement to exercise their right of re-entry as upon a forfeiture for non-payment of rent, and in obedience to section 180 of the County Courts Act, 1934, there appeared on the face of the plaint the following: "If you pay "the rent in arrear and costs into court five clear days before "the date of hearing the action will cease."

Before the case came on for hearing the particulars of claim were amended by adding a claim for further arrears of rent which had accrued since the issue of the plaint, and Mr. de Piro for the tenant has said that that amendment was, in strictness, out of order. The effect, however, was to increase the total sum which was due or alleged to be due for rent by about £10.

When the case came on for hearing on September 29 the tenant had not availed himself of the suggestion made on the plaint of payment into court within five days of the return date, but he had sent to the landlords a cheque for the sum which was alleged to be due for rent and costs on the plaint in its original form, namely, £22 18s. 7d. At the date of the hearing that cheque had not been cleared and the landlords therefore had not received the money. I have already said that the plaint had been amended by adding a further claim for £9 17s. 6d. The landlords were represented at the hearing, but the tenant abstained from attending. It appears that the court had received from the tenant a further cheque for £9 17s. 6d., the balance alleged to be due on the amended claim, and that cheque, which was in fact post-dated, was handed down at the hearing to the landlords or their representatives.

In those circumstances the order made by the court on September 29 was as follows: "It is adjudged that the plaintiff "is entitled to recover against the defendant possession of the "land mentioned in the particulars annexed to the summons in "this action, that is to say, Lower Flat 78 The Ridings, W.5, "the rent of the said land amounting to £30 6s. 1d., being in "arrear and the plaintiff having a right of re-entry or forfeiture "in respect thereof, and it is adjudged that the plaintiff do "recover against the defendant the sum of £30 6s. 1d. for the "arrears of rent aforesaid," that was the original £20 odd plus the added £9 17s. 6d., "and the sum of £8 15s. for costs, "amounting together to the sum of £39 1s. And it is ordered "that the defendant do pay the said sum of £39 1s. to "the registrar of this court, on or before the 27th day "of October, 1954, and it is ordered that the defendant do give "to the plaintiff possession of the said land on or before the "said 27th day of October, 1954, unless the said rent in arrear "and costs be paid into court before such 27th day of October, "1954."

It will be observed, therefore, that the order which the court made was what has been many times called a conditional order for possession, a type of order commonly made in these cases and, by the description which I have given to it, distinguishable from what is called an absolute order for possession, namely, an order upon the tenant to give up possession on some fixed date without any condition attached thereto performance of which would make the order inoperative.

The tenant had given to the landlords two cheques, the total of which on their face was £32 16s. 1d., a sum less by £6 odd than the total amount mentioned in the order. The two cheques appear to have been met; but when October 27, 1954, arrived (that being the date fixed in the order for possession unless in the meantime the sums stated in the order had been paid), nothing further in fact had been paid. The result was that, according to its terms, the order for possession was liable forthwith to operate.

Section 180 of the County Courts Act, 1934—a section devoted to forfeiture for non-payment of rent—provides: "(1) Where a "lessor is proceeding by action in a county court (being an "action in which a county court has jurisdiction) to enforce "against a lessee a right of re-entry or forfeiture in respect of "any land for non-payment of rent, the following provisions shall "have effect." Paragraph (a) deals with the case where the lessee pays into court not less than five days before the return date the rent in arrears and the costs; and the subsection provides that, if the lessee so does, then the action shall cease and the lessee shall hold the land according to the lease without any new lease; in other words, the exercise of the right of forfeiture is rendered, in the event, ineffective, and the lease remains subsisting. This lessee did not take that opportunity.

Subsection (1) continues: "(b) If the action does not cease as "aforesaid"—that is, under (a)—"and the court at the trial is "satisfied that the lessor is entitled to enforce the right of "re-entry or forfeiture, the court shall order possession of the "land to be given to the lessor at the expiration of such period, "not being less than four weeks from the date of the order, as "the court thinks fit, unless within that period"—that is, four weeks or a greater period from the date of the order—"the "lessee pays into court all the rent in arrear and the costs of the "action; (c) if within the period specified in the order, the lessee "pays into court all the rent in arrear and the costs of the action, "he shall hold the land according to the lease without any new "lease, but if the lessee does not, within the said period, pay "into court all the rent in arrear and the costs of the action, "the order shall be enforced in the prescribed manner, and so "long as the order remains unreversed, the lessee shall be barred "from all relief." The tenant did not avail himself of that second alternative either, for he had not on October 27, paid into court the sum ordered to be paid by way of rent arrears and

C. A.
1955
Haymills Houses Ld. v. Blake.
Evershed M.R.

costs. The date October 27 was plainly fixed in the light of paragraph (b), for it was a date 28 days from the date of the order.

Mr. de Piro has contended that the words "so long as the "order remains unreversed" carry implicit in them a power in the county court judge himself, upon some later application, to reverse or rescind or extinguish his original order, so as to give rise to a revival, so to speak, of the contractual tenancy, notwithstanding failure on the lessee's part to avail himself of the provisions of paragraphs (b) and (c).

I do not find it necessary to express any view upon that matter. In the events which have happened Mr. de Piro has plainly conceded that the contractual tenancy must now be treated as gone. The right of forfeiture for non-payment of rent was in the circumstances effectively exercised; but this is a rent restriction case and, therefore, apart from and in succession to his contractual rights, the tenant has the rights conferred upon him by the Rent Acts, compendiously referred to as the rights of a statutory tenant. Accepting, as I do, Mr. de Piro's concession on this matter, the question henceforth is: What is the position of the tenant? Is he now bound to go out at once, as Mr. Stable has contended, or can he remain on, but in the latter case with only the rights of occupation conferred upon a statutory tenant?

Many points were adumbrated during the course of argument and at this stage I would like to dispose of one or two more. Mr. de Piro contended that the amendment made by the plaintiffs in their plaint was out of order, and that it was not competent for the landlords to add to the claim of £20 odd for arrears of rent due when the proceedings started, further arrears of rent which later fell due. Whether that was a matter which might have been the subject of a valid objection, it was not in fact objected to. The tenant allowed the matter to be dealt with by the county court judge on September 29, and the order which the county court judge made on that date, and which required payment of the enlarged figure of £39 1s., went unappealed. It therefore seems to me too late for Mr. de Piro to take any point based on the possible vice of the amendment.

Mr. Stable, in turn, by way I think of an argumentum in terrorem, suggested, particularly in the light of certain observations from judges in this court, that since the original order had become absolute, in the sense that the condition imposed in relation to it had not been fulfilled, an interesting question might arise in the unhappy event of the death of the tenant, leaving some person who might claim to be, quoad the Rent Acts, his successor by virtue of the definition of section 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920. Mr. Stable referred to some observations of my brother Jenkins [1] indicating that, where an absolute order for possession has been made, a person who might loosely be described as a statutory tenant had at least not the quality necessary to pass to such a successor any corresponding right of occupation. I again find it unnecessary to try to forecast what might be said and what the result might be in the event of the death of the tenant. For the purposes of this appeal, it seems to me, in view of Mr. de Piro's concession, that the tenant's right of occupation is that of a statutory tenant, but I am not proposing to define more precisely the exact scope of the rights under the statute which, in the circumstances, the tenant and members of his family might hereafter be held entitled to enjoy.

[1] In American Economic Laundry Ld. v. Little [1951] 1 K.B. 400; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 1080; [1950] 2 All E.R. 1186.

I return to the narrative of this case: The tenant, preferring to remain inops consilii, and persisting in his reluctance to pay more quickly than absolute compulsion required, took no further step after October 27 to pay the balance of the sum of £39 odd and a warrant for possession was applied for. This action did stir the tenant into a measure of activity, for he applied in person on November 6, 1954, to the judge to suspend the possession order, and on the same day he took the precaution of paying the added sum of £7 2s. (that is, the balance of the £39 odd swollen by the charges of the warrant) into court or to the plaintiffs. Nevertheless, on November 12, 1954, the tenant personally applying to the county court, failed in his application for a suspension of the order. At that point of time he wisely thought it would be desirable to take professional advice. The order still being unexecuted, on November 24, 1954, the solicitor, whose aid the defendant had somewhat belatedly sought, applied on his behalf as follows: "Take notice that the above-"named defendant intends to apply to the judge," and then details of the place are given "on Monday, the 29th November, ". . . for suspension of the possession warrant issued in this "action under an order of the court dated the 1st day of October, "1954"—that is the same order as the order of September 29, the later date being the date it actually bore—"and further for "a suspension of the operation of the said order for possession of "the premises in question on the ground that the defendant had "discharged the whole of the arrears and the costs of the action "in respect of which the defendant was held to be liable for "forfeiture of his tenancy of the said premises."

It is the fact that on that day the tenant's two cheques, plus the sum of £7 2s., had made up the full sum for which he was then liable for arrears in rent, costs and solicitors' charges. The matter coming before the county court judge on November 29, and his attention being directed to the terms of section 4 (2) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923, he made the following order: "It is ordered that the time of the "order of 29th September, 1954, be extended for a further 28 "days. Debt and costs have been paid; order therefore of 29th "September, 1954, be extinguished. Possession warrant revoked. "Costs of today £2 2s. to plaintiff."

C. A.
1955
HAYMILLS HOUSES LD. v. BLAKE.
Evershed M.R.

I have ventured to refer to the inelegance of the subsection which we are called upon to construe, and I hope I shall be forgiven if I use similar language in regard to this order, which seems to me on certain vital matters to be in addition somewhat obscure. For example, were the words "ordered that the time "of the order of 29th September be extended" meant to relate merely to the date on which possession should be given, leaving the date for performance of the condition as it originally stood? Or did it mean to substitute in all material places in the original order for October 27 another date described as arriving at the end of "a further 28 days"? And it is also not entirely clear to me, at first sight at any rate, whether the further 28 days were intended to run from October 27 or from November 29. But, read in its context, I have come clearly to the conclusion that what the county court judge intended to do was to make an order to the following effect (and for future reference may I express the hope that orders should broadly in similar circumstances take the form I am now going to state?)—I think that the proper way of expressing it would have been to say: "In "exercise of the powers under section 4 (2) the date of possession "in the earlier order, namely October 27, 1954, be postponed for "28 days from the date of this order, namely until," and then I suppose the date would have been December 27. Having done that, the order should then have gone on to say (for so I think the judge intended): "upon the condition that on or before such "last-mentioned date the defendant shall pay or shall have paid "the sum of £39 1s. mentioned in the order of September 29, "together with the further sum of £x for costs since incurred, "including £2 2s. for the costs of today's hearing."

I think that, if the order had taken that form, it would have been in strict accordance with the power in section 4 (2) to postpone the date of possession for a period which the court thought fit, subject to a condition in regard to the payment of arrears of rent and otherwise as the court thought fit. I think it would then have been competent for the judge, again within the terms of the subsection, to have gone on as follows: "And it further "appearing that the defendant has on or before this date paid "the whole of the sums above mentioned, then it is further "ordered that the order of September 29, 1954, be discharged "from this date." I do not think that the word "extinguished" was one appropriate to be used. That, I think, was the intention, and an order in that form would have been in proper compliance with the powers set out in section 4 (2). The result would have been the same as that which the tenant in the present case, and the landlords also, have apprehended that the order of November 29 did produce.

I will return and read again so much of section 4 (2) as relates to the second or alternative class of case, of which the present is one: "in the case of any such order"—that is, an order for the recovery of possession of a dwelling-house, etc.—

" which has been made . . . and not executed at any subsequent " time, the court may . . . stay or suspend execution on any such " order or judgment, or postpone the date of possession for such " period or periods as it thinks fit, and subject to such " conditions (if any) in regard to payment by the tenant of arrears " of rent, rent, or mesne profits and otherwise as the court " thinks fit, and, if such conditions are complied with, the court " may, if it thinks fit, discharge or rescind any such order or " judgment." Notwithstanding the inelegance, which I think must be confessed to exist in this language, I cannot myself see any answer to the proposition that the final words of the subsection empower the county court, given the preceding circumstances, to discharge or rescind the original order.

It was very strongly argued by Mr. Stable that, if an unconditional order for possession is made, there is no power in any circumstances for the court afterwards to discharge it or rescind it. The making of the first order has, so Mr. Stable argues, such a quality of finality as does not permit of that power of revision. It was in support of that view that certain observations from other cases were cited, observations of my brethren in this court and of Somervell L.J. and of myself, directed, however, to differing circumstances and in other contexts. I shall presently refer to two only of those observations, for I do not think that any of the others cited has any real relevance to the problem with which we are concerned, or in any way disables the conclusion which I reach upon the application of this subsection to the facts of this case. I agree with Mr. Stable, and it is, I think, necessarily inherent in the language of the subsection, that an order discharging a previous order for possession can only be made where there has been a subsequent order in accordance with the terms of the subsection itself. So far as now relevant, the power of discharge arises where the date of possession in what I will call the first order has been postponed subject to conditions, and those latter conditions have been complied with. I emphasize those last words. The power to discharge depends upon compliance with conditions imposed by what I will call the second order.

As I have interpreted the order of November 29, 1954, which I will call here the second order, that order did postpone the date of possession on conditions, the conditions being, in part, the performance of the obligation to pay the same sum as the first order specified and, in part, the payment of certain further sums. Those conditions were fulfilled and, therefore, as I think, the power did vest in the county court judge in the exercise of his discretion to discharge the first order.

I propose to confine myself in this judgment to that set of facts and to such a limited interpretation of this subsection as is necessary to deal with this case. I do so more particularly because of the two observations from other cases to which I wish to refer. The first was the case in this court of American

C. A.
1955
HAYMILLS HOUSES LD. v. BLAKE.
Evershed M.R.

Economic Laundry Ld. v. Little,[1] which came before Somervell, Jenkins and Birkett L.JJ. It was a case quite different from the present, a case in which a final order had been made against the tenant of certain premises and he, the tenant, then applied for and obtained a suspension of the execution of the order, but during the period of the suspension the tenant died. The question was: What was the position of his daughter, who claimed to have succeeded under the definition in section 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920? The form of the order for possession, and this is the only real relevance of this case, had been an absolute order for possession. It was not one made subject to condition, in the sense, for example, that the possession order would not go if the tenant paid certain sums or performed certain other obligations within a stated time. The distinction between absolute and conditional orders having been raised, Somervell L.J. said[2]: "The difference between those two kinds of order is "illustrated by these concluding words of the subsection: 'if "'such conditions,' that is to say, conditions to which an order "is made subject' are complied with, the court may, if it thinks "'fit, discharge' the order. That cannot be done when an "absolute order has been made; it can only be done if the order "is made conditional."

Mr. Stable contended that, when Somervell L.J. spoke of conditional orders, he was meaning that the power of discharge following the making of conditional orders only arose if all the conditions according to their strict terms had been performed ab initio, that is to say, not only the conditions in the second order, but the conditions in the first also.

I am unable to accept that. If the conditions in the first had been performed according to their terms, of course no second order would ever have been made; but the language does also lend support to the general proposition for which Mr. Stable argued, namely, that the power of discharge, simpliciter, does not apply to an absolute order for possession.

I pass to the second observation, which is one of my own in Mills v. Allen,[3] a case of great complexity, in which the main question involved was the validity of a certain justices' warrant. The case came before my brethren Birkett and Romer L.JJ., and myself, and there was some discussion as to the form of order. In the course of my judgment I expressed the view that I might perhaps assist in the future administration of this difficult branch of the law if I made some observations about the form of order. I referred to the American Economic Laundry case[4] and to certain other cases—I am reported as saying: "I begin by "observing that, though the original order be absolute, neverthe- "less, as I read section 4 (2) of the Act of 1923, it may not "only be discharged on application, but it may, in effect, be

[1] [1951] 1 K.B. 400; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 1080; [1951] 2 All E.R. 1186.
[2] [1951] 1 K.B. 400, 406.
[3] [1953] 2 Q.B. 341; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 356; [1953] 2 All E.R. 534.
[4] [1951] 1 K.B. 400.

"converted thereafter into a conditional order, for the language "at the end of the subsection seems to contemplate that "possibility."

That general observation may now require to be a little expounded. I still think it may well be that if an absolute order for possession is made, then, when it is not yet executed, the court may under the section make an order postponing the date of possession on conditions, and, if it did that, then, if the conditions were performed, it may well be that the final words of the subsection would give power to discharge the original order, even though absolute in form. If that is right, then it would justify the language I there used: that an absolute order may be in effect converted into a conditional one, so as to give rise to the power of discharge. But I am not saying anything which would conflict with Somervell L.J.'s expression of opinion that an absolute order, as such, would not be liable to be discharged under the powers of the final terms of the subsection; I prefer not to express further than I have already tried to intimate conclusions as to the general operation of this section, but to confine myself, for the present at any rate, to the particular facts of this particular case, which is one in which there followed one after the other, as I understand them, two so-called conditional orders.

Interpreting the order of November 29 as I have done, it will be appreciated that in my judgment the county court judge had jurisdiction to do what he did and that, therefore, the appeal based on the invalidity, through want of jurisdiction, of the order of November 29 fails.

Mr. Stable suggested that the making of an order in the form which I have explained would not have been a proper exercise of discretion having regard to the previous performances, as regards rent payments, of this tenant. Quite plainly that matter was not raised or argued before the county court judge. It is no doubt easy to be wise after the event; but it was not raised; and according to well settled principles it is, in my judgment, not now open to Mr. Stable. True it is that the application of the tenant's solicitor was in terms one for suspension rather than postponing the date of possession and for ultimate discharge, but still the matter obviously was dealt with in accordance with the general scope of the jurisdiction. And if matters of that sort are gone into it will be also recalled that by amendment of the particulars of claim the landlords may have gained an advantage over the tenant for the purposes of the proceedings which might in strictness be open to some challenge. These matters, I think, are however irrelevant and not now open on one side or the other.

This appeal fails, but I repeat that if there be truth in what Mr. Stable has said, the tenant would be well advised to take advice, as he now has taken it, and to observe a greater promptitude in the performance of his obligations.

C. A.
1955
HAYMILLS HOUSES LD. v. BLAKE.
Evershed M.R.

I conclude only with this. If it be said, as was suggested in the argument, that as I have construed it the power to discharge a previous order is linked to a particular class of case only, namely, cases where conditions have been imposed which have been fulfilled, then that seems to me sensible enough; for obviously the kind of case with which section 4 (2) is dealing (and it would seem to be right that it should be limited to that type of case) is the kind of case where the default on the part of the lessee is one which is fairly capable of remedy, of which the simplest case is such a case as the present, namely, failure to pay promptly the rent that is due.

For the reasons which I have given in a somewhat complicated matter, I think that the appeal fails. I would like to repay my indebtedness to learned counsel for their most lucid exposition of the problem presented.

JENKINS L.J. I agree and have nothing to add.

MORRIS L.J. I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Redfern, Barron & Morton; Edward Mackie & Co.

B. A. B.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1955
Feb. 17.
Lord Goddard C.J., Singleton and Romer L.JJ.

* ORMAN BROTHERS LD. v. GREENBAUM.

[1954 O. No. 1741.]

Landlord and Tenant—Act of 1954—Notice to quit—Validity—Notice given on August 31, 1954, expiring October 4—Regulations prescribing form of notice under Act brought into operation on August 27—Act coming into force October 1—Notice not in prescribed form—Landlord and Tenant (Notices) Regulations, 1954 (S.I. 1954 No. 1107)—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 56), ss. 23, 24 (1), (3) (b), 25, 66, 68 (2); Sch. 9.
Statute—Retroactive effect.

By section 24 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, "A "tenancy to which this Part of this Act applies shall not come "to an end unless terminated in accordance with the provisions of "this Part of this Act"; and by subsection (3) of that section: "Notwithstanding anything in subsection (1) of this section . . . "(b) where, at any time when a tenancy is not one to which this "Part of this Act applies, the landlord gives notice to quit, the "operation of the notice shall not be affected by reason that the "tenancy becomes one to which this Part of this Act applies "after the giving of the notice." The Act received the royal assent on July 30 and came into force on October 1; but regulations prescribing forms of notices for the purposes of the Act were brought into operation on August 27, in the exercise of powers to make and bring into operation such regulations "at any "time after the passing and before the commencement of" the Act.

Three days later, on August 31, landlords gave notice to quit, expiring on October 4, to a tenant of business premises to which the Act applied. The notice was not in the form prescribed by the regulations:—

Held, that under the provisions of the Act and the Ninth Schedule thereto, a notice to quit, issued after the Act had been passed and after the regulations had come into operation, and purporting to take effect after the Act had come into force, must be in the form prescribed under the Act; and that as the landlord's notice was not in that form, the tenancy, by virtue of section 24 (1), had not come to an end; nor was the notice saved by the provisions of subsection (3) (b) of section 24, since that subsection applied only to tenancies where there had been a change of user of the premises between the serving of the notice and its taking effect, and the present tenancy was not of that character.

Decision of Devlin J. ([1954] 1 W.L.R. 1520; [1954] 3 All E.R. 731) affirmed.

APPEAL from Devlin J.

By an agreement in writing dated December 7, 1953, between landlords, Orman Brothers Ld., and a tenant, Woolf Barnett Greenbaum, the landlords let to the tenant the top and second floor of factory premises at 167–173 Goswell Road, Finsbury, for one year certain from March 9, 1953, at a rent of £20 a week. The tenancy expired on March 9, 1954, after which the tenant continued in possession as a four-weekly tenant. By a notice in writing dated August 31, 1954, the landlords gave the tenant notice to quit the premises on October 4, 1954.

On July 30, 1954, the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, received the royal assent, and by section 70 (2) came into force on October 1. On August 19, the Landlord and Tenant (Notices) Regulations, 1954 (S.I. 1954, No. 1107) were made and were brought into operation on August 27, in the exercise of the powers conferred on the Lord Chancellor by section 66 and the Ninth Schedule to the Act to make such regulations "at any "time after the passing and before the commencement of this "Act so as to bring the regulations into operation at any time "after they are made." The tenancy was a tenancy of business premises to which, it was agreed, the provisions of the Act of 1954 applied.

In an action for possession by the landlords, the tenant contended that as the tenancy was one to which the Act of 1954 applied, and the notice to quit was not in the form prescribed under that Act, the tenancy, by virtue of section 24 (1),[1] was not

[1] Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, s. 24 (1): "A tenancy to which this "Part of this Act applies shall not "come to an end unless terminated "in accordance with the provisions "of this Part of this Act."

S. 24 (3): "Notwithstanding any-"thing in subsection (1) of this sec-"tion . . . (b) where, at a time when "a tenancy is not one to which this "Part of this Act applies, the land-lord gives notice to quit, the "operation of the notice shall not be "affected by reason that the tenancy "becomes one to which this Part of "this Act applies after the giving of "the notice."

C. A.
1955
ORMAN BROTHERS LD. v. GREENBAUM.

terminated by the notice. The landlords contended that, as the notice had been given before the Act came into force on October 1, the Act was not retrospective so as to invalidate the notice; alternatively, that, even if section 24 (1) applied, the notice was still a good notice by virtue of section 24 (3) (b).[1]

Devlin J. on December 3, 1954,[2] held that as on October 1 the notice to quit did not comply with the requirements of the Act, the tenancy had not come to an end; and that the notice was not saved by the provisions of section 24 (3) (b).

The landlords appealed.

Roy Wilson Q.C. and Montague Waters for the landlords.
Charles Lawson for the tenant.

LORD GODDARD C.J. This is an appeal from a judgment of Devlin J., who has held that a notice to quit given by a landlord on August 31, 1954, to terminate the lease of business premises on October 4 is rendered ineffective by the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954.

The judgment of the judge, in my opinion, is entirely right and impeccable, and I should be quite content to adopt it as my own, but out of deference to the argument which Mr. Wilson has addressed to this court I will add a few words. The main point which arises on the appeal is this. The Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, received the royal assent on July 30, 1954, and by the provisions of section 70 the Act was to come into force on October 1, 1954. Therefore it appears at first sight an attractive argument to say in those circumstances that the notice to quit which was served in this case was a good notice at common law and apart from the provisions of the Act; but Devlin J. held that that argument was not sound.

Section 23 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, provides: "(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, this Part of this Act "applies to any tenancy where the property comprised in the "tenancy is or includes premises which are occupied by the "tenant and are so occupied for the purposes of a business "carried on by him or for those and other purposes." By section 24: "(1) A tenancy to which this Part of this Act applies "shall not come to an end unless terminated in accordance with "the provisions of this Part of this Act. . . ."

The first thing I would say is that "A tenancy to which this "Part of this Act applies" clearly means only a tenancy in respect of a business carried on for professional or other purposes mentioned in section 23, and has nothing to do with the commencement of the Act. It concerns the same sort of premises as those mentioned in section 23; that is to say, premises to which "this Part of this Act" applies.

Section 25 provides: "(1) The landlord may terminate a "tenancy to which this Part of this Act applies by a notice given

[1] See note on p. 251. [2] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1520; [1954] 3 All E.R. 731.

" to the tenant in the prescribed form specifying the date at " which the tenancy is to come to an end (hereinafter referred " to as ' the date of termination ')."

The effect of this section, I do not think it can be denied for a moment, is that when the Act is in operation, the landlord can only terminate a lease of property to which this part of the Act applies by giving notice in the prescribed form. The object of the Act, as is shown in its long title, is, among other things, to provide security of tenure for occupying tenants under certain leases of residential property at low rents, and for occupying sub-tenants of tenants under such leases, and to enable tenants occupying property for business, professional or certain other purposes, to obtain new tenancies in certain cases; and the notice to quit which has to be given by a landlord is a somewhat lengthy and formidable document telling the tenant whether the landlord is willing to negotiate a new lease or whether he must go to the court, and setting out, no doubt succinctly, the provisions of the Act.

Therefore the position is that the Act was passed on July 30 and was to come into force on October 1; and when the Act is in force there can be no doubt that the landlord must give a notice in the prescribed form. I do not think anyone doubts that the words " A tenancy to which this Part of this Act applies shall not " come to an end unless terminated in accordance with the " provisions of this Part of this Act " means " shall not come to " an end unless it is brought to an end by the method laid down " by the Act "; that is to say, by notice to quit in the prescribed form.

Section 66 of the Act is in these terms: " (1) Any form of " notice required by this Act to be prescribed shall be prescribed " by regulations made by the Lord Chancellor by statutory " instrument."

If the matter stood there, there is no doubt that under section 37 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, which applies to all Acts unless the contrary intention is shown or unless it is expressly excluded, the Lord Chancellor, who is the rule-making authority, could have made any rules or regulations which were necessary for the working of the Act when it came into force. Section 37 states: " Where an Act passed after the commencement of this " Act is not to come into operation immediately on the passing " thereof, and confers power to make any appointment, to make, " grant, or issue any instrument, that is to say, any Order in " Council, order, warrant, scheme, letters patent, rules, regula- " tions, or byelaws, to give notices, to prescribe forms, or to do " any other thing for the purposes of the Act, that power may, " unless the contrary intention appears, be exercised at any time " after the passing of the Act, so far as may be necessary or " expedient for the purpose of bringing the Act into operation " at the date of the commencement thereof, subject to this " restriction, that any instrument made under the power shall not,

C. A.
1955
Orman Brothers Ld. v. Greenbaum.
Lord Goddard C.J.

" unless the contrary intention appears in the Act, or the contrary " is necessary for bringing the Act into operation, come into " operation until the Act comes into operation."

That is perfectly clear. The object of the Interpretation Act is that provision very often has to be made for the working of an Act which is to come into operation on a certain date, and the rules or regulations have to come into force at once directly the Act does, and therefore the rules and regulations can be made before the Act comes into force; but ordinarily under the provisions of the Interpretation Act those rules will not come into force, unless the contrary appears, before the Act itself comes into force. In this case, however, it is quite clear that the contrary does appear, because in the Ninth Schedule to the Act of 1954 there is a provision that: " 1. The power under section " sixty-six of this Act to make regulations prescribing forms of " notices for the purposes of this Act may be exercised at any " time after the passing and before the commencement of this " Act so as to bring the regulations into operation at any time " after . . . they are made; and where the date, or the end of a " period, specified by a notice which is given in a form so pre- " scribed falls after the time at which this Act comes into " operation the notice shall not be invalid by reason only that it " was served before that time." There an express power is given to the Lord Chancellor to make regulations under this Act, which shall come into force whenever he chooses and before the Act itself comes into force.

I desire to say that we are here considering a notice to quit given after the regulations came into force—because the regulations came into force on August 27—which became effective on a day after the Act came into force. It is not a notice to quit given before the regulations came into force, nor is this a case in which the notice to quit was given for a day before the Act came into force. It is a case where the regulations had come into force three days before the notice to quit was given, and where the date of expiry of the notice to quit was October 4, that is, three days after the Act came into operation.

When one bears that in mind, it is really unarguable that the landlord had not to use the statutory form, because the provisions of the Act are, first of all, that the Lord Chancellor can by regulation prescribe when a particular form is to become effective; that is to say, he can prescribe the date on which the regulation is to come into operation. The regulation came into force on August 27, and by that time a particular form of notice to quit had been prescribed. That notice having been prescribed, section 25 provides: " (1) The landlord may terminate a tenancy " to which this Part of this Act applies by a notice given to the " tenant in the prescribed form," and by section 24: " (1) A " tenancy to which this Part of this Act applies shall not come " to an end unless terminated in accordance with the provisions " of this Part of this Act . . ." So the tenancy does not come to an end unless it has been terminated in the way laid down in the Act, and that is by means of giving the prescribed form of notice. If it had not been for the words of the Ninth Schedule as to the Lord Chancellor's regulations coming into force at the time they are made and before the Act comes into force, the matter would have been unarguable the other way, and Mr. Wilson's point would be quite right; but I think I have already said enough to show that I cannot read the words in section 24, "A tenancy to which this Part of this Act applies," as meaning that the Act is not to apply to any tenancy before the Act comes into operation. "A tenancy to which this Part of this Act "applies" I think only refers to the class of tenancy, that is to say, the tenancies mentioned in Part II, which may for convenience be called business premises.

The only other point on which it is necessary to say a word is this: Mr. Wilson's submission was that if we were against him on the point which I have just decided, the position is saved for him by section 24 (3). [His Lordship read section 24 (3), and continued:] The judge thought that that subsection quite clearly meant that if the tenancy was, say, of a private house to which Part II did not apply at all, and notice to quit that house was given, such notice would remain good and effective although before it became effective the house had been turned into a shop, and therefore would otherwise be the subject of Part II of the Act. That view is one with which I entirely agree. I think that Devlin J.'s judgment was perfectly right, and that this appeal fails.

SINGLETON L.J. I agree.

ROMER L.J. I agree. Section 68 (2) of the Act provides: "The transitional provisions set out in the Ninth Schedule to "this Act shall have effect." Then the second part of paragraph 1 of the Ninth Schedule provides: " . . . where the date, "or the end of a period, specified by a notice which is given in a "form so prescribed"—that means prescribed by rules made by the Lord Chancellor—"falls after the time at which this Act "comes into operation"—that is, October 1—"the notice shall "not be invalid by reason only that it was served before that "time."

It appears to me an almost irresistible inference from that that the legislature, in stating that provided that a notice which is given before October 1 is in the prescribed form it shall not be invalid by reason only that it was served before that time, is indicating that any notice which is served before that time and which is not in the prescribed form is invalid, and it seems to me that that presents an obstacle to Mr. Wilson's argument which is wellnigh insuperable.

The next point is, that unless Parliament intended that the regulations which could be made and brought into operation

C. A.
1955
Orman Brothers Ld. v. Greenbaum.
Romer L.J.

before the commencement of the Act were to have immediate obligatory force and effect, I find the greatest difficulty in seeing what the object of providing for these regulations was, because if the whole object was merely to show the landlord beforehand what the form of notice would be after the Act came into operation, the regulations could have been made under section 37 of the Interpretation Act; and I think Mr. Wilson's explanation, or attempted explanation, of the point by referring to the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, and the Leasehold Property (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1951, is not a satisfactory or adequate explanation. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: E. Kleinman; Tringhams.

M. M. H.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

1955
Jan. 17.
Davies J.

* CARAS v. CARAS.

[Practice Note.]

Husband and Wife—Maintenance—High Court—Jurisdiction—Parties resident in same house—Neglect to maintain—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 5, c. 25), s. 23.

Originating summons.

After a dispute between the parties in November, 1952, a husband and wife continued to live in the same house but slept apart and never resumed a normal relationship. In September, 1953, the husband reduced the wife's housekeeping allowance from £11 to £7 a week, and in October, 1953, removed the wife from her position as joint director with him in a company from which the husband received £2,000 a year and the wife £500 a year as directors. The husband continued to pay for the outgoings of the house in which the parties were still living when the wife issued a summons under section 23 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950,[1] on the ground of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance,

[1] Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, s. 23 (1): "Where a husband has "been guilty of wilful neglect to "provide reasonable maintenance for "his wife or the infant children of "the marriage, the court, if it would "have jurisdiction to entertain proceedings by the wife for judicial "separation, may, on the application "of the wife, order the husband to "make to her such periodical payments "as may be just; and the order may "be enforced in the same manner as "an order for alimony in proceedings "for judicial separation."

(2) "Where the court makes an "order under this section . . . it "may . . . order that the husband "shall . . . secure to the wife the "periodical payments . . ."

and in which the parties continued to live up to the date of the hearing.

1955

CARAS v. CARAS.

P. H. M. Oppenheimer for the wife.
M. P. Picard for the husband.

DAVIES J., after consideration of the facts and financial circumstances, made an order for periodical payments by the husband to the wife of £11 a week, less tax, upon the basis that the wife was going to continue to live in the house, and that the husband was going to continue to discharge all the outgoings, saying that if the wife were turned out of the house, or if the husband did not pay the bills, then she would have to take such further steps as were available to her.

Solicitors: Headley, Dalzell & Dickinson; Amphlett & Co.

J. B. G.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

*RANDALL v. TARRANT.

C. A.

1955
Feb. 4.

[Plaint No. K. 918.]

Evershed M.R., Jenkins and Morris L.JJ.

Road Traffic—Negligence—Collision—Inference from facts—Stationary vehicle—Narrow clearance—Standard of care demanded of driver of moving vehicle—"All possible care."

Nuisance—Highway—Obstruction—Parking—Driver a trespasser on adjoining land—Whether legality of parking tainted.

The defendant drove a tractor, which was towing a baler, along a public highway in daylight and collided with a stationary car belonging to the plaintiff. The car had been parked close to the near side hedge and the plaintiff and his son had gone into a field belonging to the defendant at the side of the road, leaving two people in the car. The clearance between the car and the baler at its widest point was only about 6 to 9 inches. The defendant's servant was sitting on the baler and he shouted to his master that he thought that there was sufficient room to pass but he did not dismount to confirm his belief and the defendant drove on, merely slackening speed to about two miles an hour, and attempted to pass:—

Held, that the defendant was negligent. A driver on a highway who sees a stationary vehicle has to take all possible care to avoid a collision. If there is insufficient room to pass, he is negligent if he attempts to do so. If, however, there is enough room but a collision occurs, then prima facie he is again negligent, the onus being on him to show that he has taken all the steps which a reasonable man would take in the circumstances, that is, all possible care to avoid a collision.

(2) That the parking of the car was not, on the facts, so intimately bound up with an act of trespass on the defendant's field as to make the car itself either the symbol of a trespass or the instrument of a nuisance.

C. A.
1955
RANDALL
v.
TARRANT.

APPEAL from Judge Elder-Jones sitting at Windsor County Court.

On August 3, 1953, which was August bank holiday in that year, the plaintiff, H. H. Randall, accompanied by his wife, another lady, his son and a dog drove a car from their home to the neighbourhood of Windsor. At about 7 p.m. they came to a lane about 15 feet wide leading only to a farm of which the defendant, R. H. Tarrant, was the tenant in possession. The lane, which was a public highway, was bounded on both sides by fields forming part of the farm.

The plaintiff drove his car a short distance up the narrow highway, drew it into the near side and got out, accompanied by his son and the dog. He left his wife and the other passenger in the car. While the car was stationary in the highway the defendant, who had been hay-making, drove out of one of his fields into the lane on a tractor which was towing a baler, measuring 9 feet at its widest point, that is across a string box at the back. Having regard to the width of the lane the margin which was allowed for the defendant to pass the plaintiff's stationary car without impact was only 6 inches to 9 inches, a margin which the county court judge described as a "dangerous margin of safety"; adding the following note: "By the rather "obscure expression 'dangerous margin of safety' I intended "to convey that with only 6 inches to 9 inches maximum clear- "ance available between his own string box and the car's wing "the defendant towing the baler with a tractor could not pass the car without considerable risk of touching it." The defendant reduced his speed to about 2 miles an hour and being reassured by his servant, one Bride, who was sitting on the baler, that there was sufficient room to pass, he attempted to drive through the gap. The tractor went safely past and so did the front part of the baler; but the string box at the back struck the offside wing of the car and damaged it. At the material time the plaintiff and his son were trespassers in the hayfield at the side of the lane.

The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant alleging negligence and claiming damages.

The county court judge held that the defendant was not guilty of negligence and dismissed the action. He held that if the plaintiff had been entitled to succeed the damages, including special damage, should be assessed at £21 1s. 6d.

The plaintiff appealed.

John Stocker for the plaintiff.
Geoffrey Lane for the defendant.

In addition to the cases referred to in the judgments, the following was cited in argument: Edwards v. Railway Executive.[1]

[1] [1952] A.C. 737; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 237; [1952] 2 All E.R. 430.

EVERSHED M.R. This case is by no means easy and has raised questions of some interest. When Mr. Stocker first began to open the appeal I thought that he was faced with a short but fatal answer to the appeal; for this was an action for damages for negligence and there is here a finding by the judge that the defendant was not negligent. Prima facie that would be a finding of fact from which, in a county court case, there could be no appeal to this court; but after further attention to the argument of Mr. Stocker, and after hearing argument also from Mr. Lane, I have now reached a conclusion contrary to that which I was first inclined to entertain. [His Lordship stated the facts and continued:] There was an acute conflict of evidence upon one matter. The plaintiff and his son alleged that they were in the road at the time when the accident occurred and that they saw what happened. They were perhaps not unnaturally somewhat annoyed and, if I may guess somewhat from the conversation which later took place, the defendant, also perhaps not unnaturally, became annoyed too. But the judge plainly disbelieved the plaintiff and the plaintiff's son. In particular, he wholly discredited the somewhat extravagant estimate which the son gave of the speed of this tractor pulling a baler in a narrow lane, which the son said was going at no less than 25 miles an hour.

Another matter upon which they were disbelieved has a bearing on a point of great interest taken by Mr. Lane. The judge said (I quote from the note of his judgment which, as amended, has been agreed between the two sides): "I am led to "believe plaintiff and son did not see the accident and were, in "fact, the other side of the hedge." The significance of that finding is this. On the other side of the hedge was the defendant's field on which was standing hay. The plaintiff and his son went at some stage clearly into the field, for they were warned to go off it by a policeman. They were in truth trespassers. According to the defendant, the plaintiff and his son at the time of the accident were still in the field trespassing. The judge accepted in this matter, and indeed in other matters of conflict, the evidence of the defendant in preference to that of the plaintiff and his son.

The case appears, therefore, to be of this character. A man driving a tractor with a large agricultural implement in tow on a public highway in daylight sees stationary on that highway a motor-car. As the highway is narrow the inevitable question which arises is whether there is or is not room to pass. If there was no room to pass, a man who attempts so to do without pausing to make further investigation, prima facie must be negligent if, as would be inevitably the result, a collision occurs. Mr. Lane did not contest that proposition. But here there was room to pass. There were some 6 inches to 9 inches to spare between the two vehicles at the greatest width of the baler; but in regard to that the judge used this pregnant phrase: "It was a

C. A.
1955
Randall
v.
Tarrant.
Evershed M.R.

" dangerous margin of safety," adding a note which I take to mean that the road being so narrow and the baler so wide, to pass in such circumstances was an enterprise attended with risk. Obviously great care was needed if a collision was to be avoided.

In those circumstances what is the evidence of the care taken? Accepting, as the judge did, the evidence of the defendant and his servant, Sidney Bride, it appears that as the defendant approached the plaintiff's motor-car he reduced his speed to the very low rate of 2 miles an hour or thereabouts. Bride was seated somewhere at the back of the trailed baler and he shouted to the defendant: " I think we can get through " guvnor." Acting on that cheerful prophecy, the defendant proceeded on his way; but unfortunately the prophecy was falsified and the string box struck the car. The defendant said, and was believed by the judge, that he did not see that at the time two passengers were in the car. The conclusion which the judge reached on that matter and on that evidence was: " Defendant reduced speed to safety consistent with long vehicle " behind him and signals from man behind him and was directed " by man and was not guilty of negligence in attempting to pass " and proceed on his lawful occasion. It is too much to say he " should be precluded from moving as he had a small margin " of safety. He saw nobody in the car and he had to make up " his mind to give up or to go on and attempt to do it. He was " justified in making the attempt with all possible care and with- " out excessive speed. Not insurer of plaintiff's car against " possibility of its being struck."

Mr. Lane said, with force, that there was evidence which justified the vital conclusion that the defendant was justified in making the attempt " with all possible care." But in my judgment there was not. A driver going along a highway who sees a stationary vehicle or other object on the highway plainly has to take " all possible care " to avoid a collision and, if there is in fact room to pass but nevertheless a collision occurs, then it seems to me that, prima facie, he has failed to discharge the duty which those circumstances have laid upon him. I am unable to conclude that merely by reducing the speed and thereafter relying on the prognostication of the servant behind him, the defendant was taking all the care which he should have done. It is, I hope, not illegitimate to have in mind the kind of operation in which so many of us are sometimes engaged when driving a motor-car in or out of a place where there is very little room between other cars. It is common knowledge that if the driver has a friend or other person available to help, that other person often watches and tells the driver, as he slowly proceeds, if it is apparent that there is not sufficient room to pass. Quite apart from the fact that greater care would have disclosed the presence of the two ladies in the car, there is, in my judgment, no evidence here to support the view that " all possible care " was in fact taken. It is true, as Mr. Lane suggested, that the impact might have been caused by roughness on the surface of the road throwing the trailer slightly off its proper line and thus casting it, so to speak, on to the motor-car. If there had been any evidence that that was so, it might well have been that the accident would be properly attributed to something that reasonable care in all the circumstances could not have foreseen; but to suggest that that was the cause is merely to speculate. Prima facie, given the circumstances of a stationary motor-car on a highway and another car approaching with room to pass, the onus is on the driver of the motor vehicle if an accident occurs to show that " all possible care " was taken: for if there is room to pass, yet a collision has occurred and the moving vehicle has struck the stationary vehicle, how did it come to do so?

I have read the judge's phrase " all possible care," but I do not, of course, forget that in judging of negligence the standard is that of reasonableness. Given the circumstances which I have tried to state, the test is whether the driver took all the careful steps which a reasonable man in those circumstances should have taken. I think that in such circumstances the reasonable man would indeed take what may be called in ordinary language " all possible care," at any rate a greater degree of care than is shown by the facts of the present case which amounted to no more than driving at a very slow speed in reliance upon the shouted assurance of Mr. Bride seated somewhere on the baler. Upon that matter, therefore, I conclude that the defendant is not shown to have taken all the steps which reasonably ought to have been taken in the circumstances.

Mr. Lane also took another point. The rights of members of the public to use a highway are, prima facie, rights of passage to and from places which the highway adjoins; but equally clearly it is not a user of the highway beyond what is legitimate if, for some purposes, a driver of a vehicle pauses from time to time on the highway. Nobody would suggest to the contrary. On the other hand, it is well established that a highway must not be used in quite a different manner from passage along it and the pretext of walking up and down along it will not legitimize such a use. Mr. Lane referred to the well-known case of Hickman v. Maisey,[1] in which the defendant, who was the proprietor of a publication which gave to its public accounts of the doings of racehorses in training, walked up and down a highway making notes of the performance of the horses in training for the better information of his paper. It was held that that was not a legitimate use of the highway as such by a member of the public and, since the racehorses' trainer was in lawful possession of the land adjoining the highway, the defendant was thereby trespassing.

Mr. Lane sought to contend that that case was analogous to the present one. He said that, on the facts, it was found that the plaintiff and his son at the critical point of time were trespassing

[1] [1900] 1 Q.B. 752; 16 T.L.R. 274.

C. A.
1955
RANDALL
v.
TARRANT.
Evershed M.R.

on the defendant's field. In so far as they were trespassers on the field, the motor-car left standing by them on the highway was, equally, trespassing: it constituted a part of their trespass. In other words, it was no longer a legitimate use of the highway by the plaintiff to put the car there and then to trespass into the defendant's fields. Alternatively, Mr. Lane said that the motor-car standing thus on the highway was prima facie an obstruction and, therefore, a nuisance; and the obstruction could not be justified since its manifest object or the activity with which it was shown to be essentially connected was the wrongful activity of the plaintiff and his son in trespassing on the field. Mr. Lane said that, given those premises, the standard of care required from the defendant was for all practical purposes discharged. He owed to such a wrongdoer or his motor-car no duty of care such as the user of a highway in ordinary circumstances is entitled to demand; his obligation was limited to that which Lord Hailsham expressed in Robert Addie & Sons (Collieries) Ld. v. Dumbreck[2]: "An occupier is in such a case"—that is, where a trespasser comes on to the premises—"liable only where the "injury is due to some wilful act involving something more than "an absence of reasonable care. There must be some act done "with the deliberate intention of doing harm to the trespasser, or "at least some act done with reckless disregard of the presence "of the trespasser." I agree with Mr. Lane that, if the premises are established and that is a correct statement of the consequent extent of liability on the defendant, the defendant beyond doubt amply satisfied what was required of him. No similar case has been so far before the courts, according to the reports, or at least so far as the investigations of counsel have discovered. On some future occasion it may be necessary to consider the application of those principles. But in the present case I am satisfied that the facts do not justify the premise of the argument. The mere circumstance that, as the judge found, the plaintiff and his son were on the wrong side of the hedge at the time when the impact occurred, does not seem to me to involve the conclusion that, in leaving the motor-car where he did on the road the plaintiff either was, in respect of the motor-car, a trespasser throughout, or was by the motor-car's presence committing a nuisance on the highway. It does not require much imagination to picture the kind of circumstance that so often arises, particularly on a bank holiday, where a driver of a motor-car, having driven for some time, pauses to rest. He may or may not, thereafter, trespass on somebody's land. But it seems to me to be going in this case altogether too far to hold that the parking of the car was so bound up with the act of trespass which was ultimately proved as to make the car itself either the symbol of a trespass or the instrument of a nuisance. I am, therefore, unable to accept that argument in support of the judge's conclusion.

[2] [1929] A.C. 358, 365; 45 T.L.R. 267.

I desire to make one other reference to a case which was heard in this court, Foster v. Bush House Ld.[3] As I am reported to have said, the case was a most difficult one. It was a case in which a waitress unfortunately stumbled or tripped against the leg of a chair on which a diner was sitting and thereby decanted some soup on to the lady or her dress. The judge in that case held that negligence had not been established. I remember the great difficulty which the Court of Appeal entertained and I think I am right in saying that one or more of us expressed the view that if we were trying the case at first instance we felt strongly disposed to think that we should have come to a different conclusion. But a waitress in a busy restaurant has to work quickly, carrying food; she is apt to be called for by other customers, which inevitably distracts her attention to some extent from where she is going. That case, therefore, seems to me to be different from that of a man driving a tractor in daylight in a lane where he sees plainly a stationary motor-car. If, as I assume, the court rightly held in the Foster case [3] that there was evidence to support the judge's finding acquitting the waitress of want of reasonable care, it does not seem to me to follow that the facts in this case equally had the effect of justifying a conclusion of no negligence in favour of the defendant.

Although I appreciate the great difficulty of the present case, I have, on the whole, come to the conclusion that the evidence of the defendant did not discharge the prima facie conclusion from the collision in the circumstances of the case, namely, the conclusion that he had not taken all reasonable care. I, therefore, think that the plaintiff should have recovered judgment for £21 1s. 6d. and I would allow the appeal.

JENKINS L.J. I agree. In my opinion it follows from the facts as found by the judge that as a matter of law the defendant in this case should have been held guilty of negligence. [His Lordship referred to the facts, and continued:] I think it must have been obvious to the defendant, when he attempted to pass the car, that he was undertaking an operation fraught with considerable risk. In his evidence he said: "When I saw "the car, which was unattended, I just thought we could not "get through; then I thought we could. My man was on the "baler and he shouted: 'I think we can get through, guvnor.'" The defendant said that the car was unattended. In that he was in error. The plaintiff and his son had left the car, but the plaintiff's wife and another passenger were in the car. The wife was sitting in the driver's seat. In those circumstances it seems to me that there is force in the dilemma put against the defendant. Either there was room to pass or there was [3] (1952) 96 S.J. 763.

C. A.
1955
RANDALL
v.
TARRANT.
Jenkins L.J.

not. If there was room to pass then the fact that he damaged the plaintiff's vehicle in passing was, prima facie, evidence of negligence. If there was no room to pass, then he was negligent in attempting to do so when there was no room. If the plaintiff's vehicle had in fact been unattended, it may very well be that the defendant would have been justified, having assured himself that it was unattended, in going on his way with all the care he could. It might be unreasonable to expect him to hold up his operations until such time as the owner of the car chose to return. But he took no steps to satisfy himself that the car was unattended. If he had taken the simple precaution of stopping his vehicle, going forward and seeing whether there was anyone inside the car, the car could have been driven away to a place which would have allowed the tractor and the baler towed by it sufficient room to pass and the accident would never have happened. Accordingly, I agree with Evershed M.R. that the defendant should be found guilty of negligence.

As to the defence based on trespass, I need only say that I agree that the evidence before the court has not established that the plaintiff by his motor-car was trespassing on the road, or that the car standing on the road was a nuisance. Accordingly, it is unnecessary to express any view of the consequences which might have ensued if the presence of the car had been shown to be wrongful in either of these two ways. I agree that this appeal should be allowed.

Morris L.J. I also agree. It seems to me that if there was no room for the defendant to have passed then he ought not to have proceeded. If there was room to enable him to pass and to get through in safety, then it seems to me that he should have got through in safety and that a failure to do so convicts him of negligence. For on the facts of this case I can find no material for saying that, in what was, after all, a very ordinary and often-experienced situation, any entirely unexpected circumstance came into play. In my judgment the evidence showed that there was negligence in the defendant. There was a failure to take any of the possible courses open to him which a reasonable man could have adopted. He could have stopped. He could have gone to the car. If he had done so he would have found the two ladies in it, one of them being at the driving seat. If he had wanted the car moved, either the lady was able to move it or her menfolk were within very easy call and they could have moved the car. If it had not been thought necessary to move the car then the defendant could have put his servant on the road and, with the guidance of his servant so placed, he could have proceeded at such a speed and in such a manner as to avoid touching the stationary vehicle. With the exercise of reasonable care I am confident that no impact in this case need have occurred.

In my judgment, in the light of the facts as found and the facts admitted, it is not right to say that the defendant took all reasonable steps but, on the contrary, it is shown that he was negligent and that it was his negligence which resulted in the damage caused to the plaintiff's car.

Appeal allowed; Plaintiff awarded £21 1s. 6d. damages, costs of appeal and half costs in county court on scale 3.

Solicitors: *John Holt, Hearts of Oak Buildings, Euston Road, N.W.*1; Horwood & James, Aylesbury.

E. D.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

* THE RENE (OWNERS) v. THE ALENQUER (OWNERS).

THE ALENQUER.

THE ALENQUER (OWNERS, MASTER AND CREW) v. THE RENE, HER CARGO AND FREIGHT (OWNERS).

THE RENE.

1955
Jan. 26;
Feb. 1, 2, 3.

Willmer J.

Shipping—Collision—Salvors' vessel in collision with salved property—Standard of care—Principles applicable.

Shipping — Salvage — Services at request — Vessel answering S.O.S. and distress signals—Misconduct of salvors—Negligent navigation—Forfeiture of award.

The Rene with engines broken down was in imminent danger of drifting onto the Fàrilhoes Rocks, off the coast of Portugal. Distress signals were sent up from the Rene, and the Alenquer, in answer to these signals and to an S.O.S. flashed to her, deviated from her voyage to assist the Rene. On the vessels nearing each other, the master of the Rene requested to be taken in tow. The Alenquer collided with the Rene during an attempt at close quarters to establish a towing connexion by heaving line, and the Rene suffered extensive damage. Thereafter at the request of the master of the Rene, the Alenquer stood by until the Rene had drifted out of all immediate danger. The Rene was eventually towed safely to Lisbon by a tug.

Willmer J. found that the Alenquer had come to the Rene to render such services as were possible and later at request had stood by the Rene; that the services rendered had conferred no actual benefit on the Rene; and that the collision was occasioned by the action of the Alenquer, adopting an unseamanlike manoeuvre when attempting to make fast to the Rene and coming astern while in close proximity to the Rene:—

Held, (1) that the Alenquer came to the Rene on a salvage basis and, having done what she was requested to do, would ordinarily be entitled to a salvage award; but (2) that, although the court should err, if anything, on the side of leniency towards salvors, the misconduct of the Alenquer exceeded that permissible to a salvor and she was liable for the damage occasioned by the collision; and (3) that the Alenquer had rendered services worthy of only a slight award and in the circumstances that award was forfeited.

1955

THE ALENQUER.

The Dart (1899) 8 Asp.M.L.C. 481 and The Stiklestad [1926] P. 205; 42 T.L.R. 118 applied.

Per curiam. Where a service is a substantial one, such as would be likely to warrant a very substantial award, the fact that in the course of rendering such a service a salvor is to blame for a relatively trivial collision, causing only minor damage, would not be a sufficient reason for depriving him altogether of any award.

ACTIONS.

The owners, master and crew of the Alenquer, a motor-vessel of 5,311 tons gross, 435 feet in length, 58·8 feet in beam and valued at £475,594 claimed a salvage award from the owners of the Rene, her cargo and freight. The Rene was a motor-vessel of 1,276 tons gross, 247 feet in length, 37 feet in beam valued at £173,607 and her cargo and freight were valued at £31,000. The owners of the Rene in a separate action against the owners of the Alenquer claimed for damage occasioned to the Rene by a collision with the Alenquer during the salvage services. The owners of the Alenquer counterclaimed for the damage occasioned to their vessel by reason of the collision. Both actions were tried together by order of the court.

The engines of the Rene broke down off the coast of Portugal during the course of a voyage from Antwerp to Naples. By means of radio-telephone the master of the Rene was able to contact the ship's agents in Lisbon and it was arranged that the tug Estoril would come to the assistance of the Rene. The Rene was drifting in the regular track of shipping passing north and south along the Portuguese coast, but in a southerly direction towards the Farilhoes Rocks at a rate of about 2 knots. The wind was of an appreciable force and at this rate of drift the Rene would have reached these rocks at about 4 o'clock in the morning of August 22, 1952. The Rene was able to communicate with passing vessels by means of visual signals. On the night of August 21, since there was no sign of the tug Estoril, and the situation had become dangerous, distress signals were given. The Alenquer, which was in the same ownership as the Estoril, was in the vicinity and had been warned of the situation of the Rene. Those on board the Alenquer were on the lookout for the Rene and, on sighting the distress signals, the Alenquer deviated to come to the assistance of the Rene. Later an S O S signal was flashed from the Rene to the Alenquer and when the vessels closed the master of the Rene requested to be taken in tow. Attempts were made throughout the night to pass a towing hawser by means of buoys and rockets. These attempts were unsuccessful and in the morning the Rene had drifted clear of the Farilhoes Rocks, but was still in the vicinity of these rocks. An attempt was then made to bring the vessels into close proximity to pass a line to the Rene. During this attempt the Alenquer collided with the Rene. The master of the Rene signalled to the Alenquer to abandon any further attempts at towage. At the request of the master of the Rene the Alenquer stood by the Rene and a message was sent to the shore detailing the position of the vessels. Later when the Rene had drifted out of all immediate danger the Alenquer left and continued on her voyage. Subsequently she returned on instructions from her owners and made an abortive search for the Rene, which was finally abandoned on further instructions when the tug Estoril had the Rene in tow. The Rene eventually was safely towed to Lisbon. The damage to the Alenquer was £981 12s. 11d. and that to the Rene was considerably more extensive.

In the collision action the owners of the Rene contended that the Alenquer was negligently navigated, in that an attempt to make fast was made in an unseamanlike manner, and, when in a position of close proximity to the Rene, the engines of the Alenquer were put astern or were not put ahead in due time. The owners of the Alenquer denied these charges and counterclaimed against the owners of the Rene alleging failure to put out fenders. In the salvage action the owners of the Alenquer claimed an award for "engaged services" rendered to the Rene. These services were alleged to consist of standing by the Rene, sending a wireless message of her position and making a search for her. The owners of the Rene denied salvage.

J. B. Hewson and R. F. Stone for the owners of the Rene.

J. Roland Adams Q.C. and P. T. Bucknill for the owners of the Alenquer.

A nautical assessor sat with the judge.

The following cases and authority were cited in argument: Kennedy's Law of Civil Salvage, 3rd ed., pp. 33, 159, 162, 163, 177 and 178; The Thetis [1]; The C. S. Butler [2]; The Stiklestad [3]; The Dart [4]; The Dwina.[5]

WILLMER J. stated the facts and found that the Alenquer had not conferred any benefit on the Rene by her towage attempts, by standing by, or by sending the wireless message of her position, since there was no evidence of the Estoril having received and acted on the message. He continued: That makes it necessary for me to consider whether the Alenquer comes within the exceptional class of cases where salvage is awarded for "engaged services." This is a case in which at any rate some of the necessary conditions are, on anybody's

[1] (1869) L.R. 2 A. & E. 365; 3 Mar.L.C. 357.
[2] (1874) 2 Asp.M.L.C. 237; L.R. 4 A. & E. 178.
[3] [1926] P. 205; 42 T.L.R. 118.
[4] (1899) 8 Asp.M.L.C. 481.
[5] [1892] P. 58; 7 Asp.M.L.C. 173.

1955

THE ALENQUER.

Willmer J.

case, satisfied. The Rene was in fact ultimately saved and taken to a place of safety. Undoubtedly there was some request made by the Rene to the Alenquer, and I think it may be important to consider exactly what that request was. It may perhaps be useful to refer first to what I think is the locus classicus on the subject of "engaged services" to see how the facts of the present case come within the principles enunciated. I refer to the remarks of Phillimore J. in The Dart.[1] There the matter is summed up in three sentences: "If a salvor is employed to do anything and does it, and the property is ultimately saved, he may claim a salvage award, though the thing which he does, in the events which happen, produces no good effect. "If a salvor is employed to complete a salvage and does not, but, without any misconduct on his part, fails after he has performed a beneficial service, he is entitled also to a salvage award. "If a salvor is employed to do a thing and does not do it, and no doubt uses strenuous exertions and makes sacrifices, but does no good at all, then it seems to me he is not entitled to salvage." My finding that the Alenquer in fact conferred no benefit on the Rene rules out the application of the proposition in the second sentence of that extract. The contest between the parties comes down to whether this case is governed by the first sentence or whether it is governed by the third sentence.

For the Rene, it is alleged that on the evidence the only engagement of the Alenquer was an engagement to tow her to Lisbon, or at least to tow her out of immediate danger. If that were the only engagement entered into, it is clear on both sides' case that that engagement was never carried out. On that basis the Rene says that this case falls within the third of Phillimore J.'s propositions, and that, in those circumstances, the Alenquer, not having conferred any benefit on the Rene and not having carried out the services which she was engaged to perform, is not entitled to salvage. The Alenquer, on the other hand, submits that she comes within the first of the propositions of Phillimore J., and that submission is arrived at by playing down, if I may use that expression, the evidence with regard to the request to tow the Rene to Lisbon. Emphasis is rather placed by the Alenquer on the fact that the Rene sent an S O S message, and that the Alenquer came up in response to that message. As I understand the argument for the Alenquer it is to be implied from those facts that the Alenquer came up to the Rene at the request of the Rene, to render her such assistance as she was able to render her. If that be the right approach to the matter, then the subsequent request to tow the Rene to Lisbon, or to tow her out of immediate danger, was merely something which arose incidentally in the course of carrying out the prior engagement to come and render such assistance to the Rene as she could. In support of their proposition, those representing the Alenquer cited to me The Stiklestad,[2] in which an award of salvage, albeit a small one, was made by Bateson J. to a ship which in mid-Atlantic had deviated some substantial distance in order to answer an S O S call from another ship in distress, and had in fact made quite a serious, although abortive, attempt to take that vessel in tow. The vessel in distress was subsequently salved with the assistance of another vessel, and, in those circumstances, the question arose whether the first ship that came up, the Dampfen, was entitled to remuneration as for engaged services. Bateson J. held that she was entitled to a salvage award on the basis that the original exchange of messages between the two vessels amounted to an engagement of the Dampfen substantially on the following terms: "Come to my "assistance on a salvage basis." In those circumstances, the Dampfen having gone to the assistance of the Stiklestad on a salvage basis and the Stiklestad having ultimately been saved, the judge held that a good claim for salvage was made out. At the conclusion of his judgment he was careful, however, to point out that it did not follow from this decision that every time any ship sends out an S O S message every other ship on the sea would be entitled to go to that ship and say: "Now I want to "be paid a salvage award." It is contended that, on the facts, the present case is on all fours with The Stiklestad,[3] because here there was a message transmitted by the Rene directly to the Alenquer specifically requesting the assistance of the Alenquer. Because the Alenquer came up to the Rene and stood by her in response to that signal, it is claimed that she is entitled to be paid, and paid on a salvage basis.

[1] (1899) 8 Asp.M.L.C. 481, 483.

It seems to me that some corroboration of this interpretation of what took place is to be obtained from the circumstance that, after the abortive towing attempts had been discontinued, the master of the Rene did send a specific request to the Alenquer to stand by her. The master of the Rene described in evidence the sending of that signal. The fact that it was sent is also confirmed by the log-books of the Rene, by the master's report, and by the protest which he made. Oddly enough, however, no reference is made to it either in the evidence of the master of the Alenquer or in any of the documents of the Alenquer. It seems to me, however, that I cannot ignore the evidence from the Rene, which really amounts to an admission against her own interest. It does seem to be the fact that for some time at any rate, although not for very long, the Alenquer did continue to stand by the Rene; and I think it is clear on both sides' stories that the Alenquer did not leave until the Rene was quite clearly out of danger. Therefore, accepting the evidence that this subsequent signal requesting the Alenquer to stand by the Rene was sent, I think that does afford some confirmation of the view that the original transaction amounted in substance to a request to

[2] [1926] P. 205.

[3] Ibid.

1955

THE ALENQUER.

Willmer J.

the Alenquer to come to the assistance of the Rene on a salvage basis, and at least to stand by her, if nothing else. If that is so, then the Alenquer would be entitled to some salvage award on the basis that she deviated from her course and in fact stood by the Rene at request for a period of some hours. I do not think the fact that during the time the Alenquer was standing by the Rene she made a number of abortive attempts to take the Rene in tow, following a further request made by the master of the Rene, affects my conclusion with regard to the original engagement. In the circumstances, I accept the contention that the Alenquer brings herself within the first proposition laid down by Phillimore J., and I come to the conclusion that, other things being equal, she would qualify to obtain a salvage award on the basis of performing services which she was engaged to perform.

[His Lordship then considered the merits of the parties in respect of the collision action, found the Rene free from blame and summarized the allegations against the Alenquer, namely that she approached the Rene stern first on her lee side in an unseamanlike manner, and, being in dangerous proximity to the Rene, put her engines astern, or failed to put her engines ahead in time. He continued:] Before I consider what the facts are in relation to these allegations—and I need hardly say that the material facts, and particularly the allegation that the Alenquer went astern, are very much in dispute—I must consider on what principle allegations of this sort are to be approached when they are made in connexion with a claim for salvage. I think I must in the first instance bear in mind the fact that the Rene had specifically requested the Alenquer to take her in tow; that request, at any rate after the failure of the attempts to make fast by means of floating buoys and rocket apparatus, virtually necessitated the Alenquer manoeuvering at close quarters with the Rene. To that extent it must be said that the Rene voluntarily accepted some risk. I am not saying that the maxim volenti non fit injuria covers the case, for it cannot be suggested that the Rene voluntarily accepted the risk of the Alenquer behaving in a negligent manner. But clearly she must be taken to have accepted the risks necessarily attendant upon the Alenquer, a much larger ship than the Rene, manoeuvring at close quarters, and manoeuvring in a way which would not be tolerated for a moment and could not possibly be justified in the ordinary course of navigation. I say that having in mind those cases which come before this court where collisions are brought about by what is called "close shaving," which is generally regarded as negligent navigation. But that sort of risk, while quite unjustifiable in ordinary navigation, is precisely the sort of risk which a vessel requesting a tow must necessarily accept.

Then one must, I think, have regard to the urgency of the situation. When one is judging the navigation of a salving ship one must do it against the background of the circumstances as they existed. Here the Alenquer was attending on a ship which had been adrift for nearly 48 hours, drifting to leeward, and getting ever closer and closer to the Farilhoes rocks. She had spent the night making abortive attempts to get the Rene in tow, first with the aid of floating buoys, and, secondly, by firing rockets. The evidence, it is true, shows that by daylight the Rene was drifting clear of the Farilhoes rocks; indeed, the master of the Alenquer himself admitted that that danger had already passed at the time when the collision happened. But I do not think that that admission should be pressed too far against the Alenquer, because the vessels were still in very close proximity with the Farilhoes rocks—a proximity which I think can fairly be described as dangerous. The situation even then could very well have become alarming in the event of a sudden change of wind. That, I hope, gives a not unfair picture of the circumstances in which the manoeuvre of the Alenquer came to be undertaken. The situation was still fraught with danger, although the immediate peril, which had looked so threatening throughout the night, had, at any rate for the time being, passed.

Furthermore, it seems to me that I have to pay regard to the general principles of policy in relation to salvage which have been laid down over the years by this court. Those general principles require that this court in judging the conduct of salvors should err, if anything, on the side of leniency towards salvors insofar as their behaviour is criticised. As was pointed out very forcibly by Mr. Adams in his argument on behalf of the Alenquer, it would be a disaster, and quite contrary to the public interest, if the result of the decisions of this court were such as to discourage salvors from taking risks and showing enterprise when rendering services at sea. The matter is summed up in a passage in Kennedy L.J.'s book on Salvage, to which I was referred in the course of the argument. There, at page 162, the learned author says: "In considering whether a salvor has "shown such a want of reasonable skill and knowledge as ought "materially to affect the court's award, or is guilty only of an "error of judgment, the court will incline to the lenient view, "and will take into favourable consideration any special circum-"stances which tend to exonerate the salvor from blame, such "as, e.g., a request for help, the suddenness of the emergency, "or the absence of more efficient means of succour." That appears to me to be the correct approach to the matter, and I gladly adopt that paragraph as part of my judgment.

[After considering the charges of negligence against the Alenquer, his Lordship stated that he was advised by the Elder Brother, that the manoeuvre adopted was wholly unseamanlike, and that the proper method would have been to keep the vessels on parallel courses one ahead of the other. He found that the Alenquer, having wrongfully put her engines astern, failed to correct the error promptly, and further that she attempted to carry out the manoeuvre of making fast to the Rene

1955

THE ALENQUER.

Willmer J.

in an unseamanlike manner. He continued:] Now, what is the result of that? Here was the Alenquer embarked on this unseamanlike manoeuvre, with the result that she got herself into an extremely dangerous position, at close quarters, with nothing more than 20 to 40 metres between her stern and the drifting Rene. That of itself involved an unnecessary and undue risk—but, on top of that, the Alenquer was guilty of a wrong manoeuvre while in this very critical position—a wrong manoeuvre which within a matter of seconds must have brought the two vessels into very serious collision. I have asked myself whether in the circumstances, and bearing in mind the considerations I have already detailed which apply in favour of a salvor, I ought to hold the Alenquer to blame for this collision in the sense of holding her liable in damages. I have hesitated long before doing so, and I wish to make it clear that I have no desire to say anything which will discourage salvors from taking fair risks and showing their customary enterprise in rendering salvage services. But, having taken all the circumstances into consideration, I have come to the conclusion that the wrongdoing of the Alenquer in this case does exceed that which is permissible even to a salvor, and that in the circumstances the Alenquer has no defence to this damage claim brought against her by the owners of the Rene.

Bearing in mind that the service rendered by the Alenquer to the Rene was a very trifling service, which could in any case only merit a very slight award, and bearing in mind that the damage occasioned by the collision was very substantial and such as must far exceed any sum which could possibly be awarded by way of salvage to the Alenquer, I put it to Mr. Adams, and he very fairly accepted, that on the facts of this case, if I found that the Alenquer was to blame for the collision, he could not justify claiming any award of salvage. I think Mr. Adams was well founded in making that admission on the facts of this case—and I also think he was right when he said that each case must depend on its own particular facts. It must be clearly understood that my decision in the present case does not govern any other case where the facts may be different. I can well understand that where the service is a substantial one, such as would be likely to warrant a very substantial award, the fact that in the course of rendering such a service a salvor is to blame for a relatively trivial collision, causing only minor damage, would not be a sufficient reason for depriving him altogether of any award. But, bearing in mind the sort of figures we are dealing with in this case, it seems to me that the fact of the Alenquer being seriously to blame in respect of this very substantial collision, makes it quite impossible for me to make any award of salvage in her favour.

That is sufficient to dispose of this case, but I think it might be helpful to the parties if I go on to say this. Even if I had not been satisfied that the Alenquer was answerable in damages for the collision, I think I should in any event (particularly having regard to the advice that I have received from the Elder Brother) have been forced to come to the conclusion that no very high degree of skill was exercised by her and that at the best her manoeuvres were open to criticism. Bearing in mind that these manoeuvres did lead to substantial damage, I think that in any case that would necessarily have been a matter to take into consideration in making any award I might otherwise have made. Awards of salvage are necessarily very much at large, but it is a commonplace that the figure to be awarded depends very much on the merits of the service. Having regard to the criticisms levelled against the navigation of the Alenquer, I do not think that upon any view it would have been possible to put her merits very high. I think it also right to say this. Had I felt able to make a salvage award in favour of the Alenquer, I do not think I could in any case have made an award sufficient to cover the figure at which she puts forward her own damage, namely, £981 12s. 11d. I need not refer at length to this matter, as it has now become an academic question, but Mr. Hewson satisfied me by reference to the authorities cited on pages 177 and 178 of Kennedy L.J.'s book on Salvage that all the circumstances, of which damages and expenses are only a part, must be looked at in determining the amount of an award of salvage. The fact that the damage sustained may be great is no ground for making an extravagant award in respect of trivial services. I should in any case have been forced to the conclusion that this was an extremely trivial service. As I have said, it in fact achieved no result at all and conferred no benefit on the Rene. Upon any view the right to any award at all would have been based upon a mere technicality, for the award could only have been one for standing by the Rene at request for the brief period that the Alenquer was engaged. Mr. Adams, in the course of his very fair argument, abandoned any claim in respect of the subsequent return and search made by the Alenquer. In all the circumstances, although I am not making an award, the sort of award I should have had in mind for this class of service, if I had felt able to make an award at all, would not have exceeded £450. As it is, my decision is that the collision action is determined in favour of the Rene, the Alenquer's counterclaim is dismissed—and, with regard to the salvage action, the Alenquer's claim for salvage is dismissed.

Claim in the collision action allowed—counterclaim dismissed.
Claim in the salvage action dismissed.

Solicitors: Ingledew, Brown, Bennison and Garrett; Thomas Cooper and Co.

A. S-R.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1955
Feb. 7.

Singleton and Romer L.JJ.

* WESTMINSTER AND KENSINGTON FREEHOLDS LD. v. HOLME.

Landlord and Tenant — Rent restriction — Standard rent — Permitted increase—Rates—Covenant by landlords to pay rates during term — Expiration of lease — Tenant remaining as statutory tenant — Increase in rates before expiration of term—Claim for higher rent —Liability of statutory tenant—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17), ss. 2 (1) (b) (3), 15 (1).

By the terms of a contractual tenancy for 14 years, which expired on March 25, 1942, the landlords covenanted during the continuance of the term to pay all the rates charged or to be charged on the premises. On the expiration of the lease the tenant remained in possession as a statutory tenant. Between September 1, 1939, and the expiration of the contractual tenancy on March 25, 1942, there had been an increase in the rates of about £12 a year, and these had been duly paid by the landlords in accordance with their covenant in the lease. In an action to recover rent due after the expiration of the contractual tenancy the landlords claimed to recover as part of the rent the amount of the additional rates imposed between September 1, 1939, and the date of the expiration of the contractual tenancy:—

Held, that the tenant was liable to pay those increased rates, since the words of section 2 (1) (b) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, "a dwelling-house for "which no rates were payable," meant payable by anyone, and not only by the tenant; and the tenant could not claim the benefit of the landlord's covenant to pay the rates in the original lease under section 15 (1) of the Act of 1920, since that provision was inconsistent with the provision in section 2 (1) (b) entitling the landlord to claim from the tenant additional rates over and above those payable on September 1, 1939.

INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL from an order of Glyn-Jones J.

The plaintiffs, Westminster and Kensington Freeholds Ld., were the owners of a flat, No. 43 Morpeth Mansions, Morpeth Terrace, S.W.1, of which the defendant, Mrs. Catherine Elizabeth Holme, was the tenant. The landlords brought an action against the tenant to recover a sum of £114 12s. 2d. made up of various items including a sum, expressed to be in respect of excess rates, amounting to £8 15s. 6d. The rent of the flat when the tenancy began in 1928 was £265 a year and it was common ground that, by reason of their rateable value, the premises came within the terms of the Rent Acts. The lease was for a term of 14 years from March 25, 1928, and on its expiration in 1942 the tenant remained on the premises as a statutory tenant. By clause 5 of the lease, the landlords covenanted with the tenant "(A) That "the lessors will during the continuance of the term pay all the "rates, taxes and assessments charged or to be charged on the "premises." The lease expired on March 25, 1942, and up to that time the landlords paid all the rates in accordance with their covenant. They were not in a position, by reason of the terms of their covenant, to increase the tenant's rent down to the expiration of the lease in respect of increases of rates which had been made between September, 1939, and March, 1942, but they contended that they were entitled to recover the increases at the end of the contractual tenancy by virtue of section 2 (1) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920.[1] The tenant relied on the provisions of sections 2 (3) and 15 (1) of the Act.

The landlords applied for leave under R.S.C., Ord. 14, to sign judgment for the whole sum of £114 12s. 2d. claimed by them and an order to that effect was made by Master Clayton and affirmed on appeal by Glyn-Jones J. The tenant appealed.

W. J. Williams for the tenant.
James Miskin for the landlords.

SINGLETON L.J., having considered the other items of the plaintiffs' claim, to which he held that the defendant had no defence, continued: The only remaining claim arises in respect of what are described upon the writ as excess rates. That claim has given rise to a little difficulty and to some interesting argument. The rental of the flat, as agreed in the year 1928, was £265 a year. It is common ground between the parties that, by reason of the rateable value of the premises, they are premises which fall under the terms of the Rent Acts. The lease was for the term of 14 years from March 25, 1928; it continued throughout that period, and on its expiration the tenant remained in the premises and became a statutory tenant. Under clause 5 of the lease the landlords covenanted with the lessee: "(A) That the "lessors will during the continuance of the term pay all the "rates taxes and assessments charged or to be charged on the

[1] Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 2 (1) (as amended by Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, Sch. I): "The amount by which the "increased rent of a dwelling-house "to which this Act applies may "exceed the standard rent shall, sub-"ject to the provisions of this Act, "be as follows, that is to say:—. . . "(b) An amount not exceeding any "increase in the amount for the time "being payable by the landlord in "respect of rates over the correspond-"ing amount paid in respect of the "yearly, half-yearly or other period "which included September 1, 1939, "or in the case of a dwelling-house "for which no rates were payable in "respect of any period which included "the said date, the period which "included the date on which the rates "first became payable thereafter. . . . "(3) Any transfer to a tenant of any "burden or liability previously borne "by the landlord shall . . . be treated "as an alteration of the rent,' and "where, as the result of such a trans-"fer, the terms on which a dwelling-"house is held are on the whole less "favourable to the tenant than the "previous terms, the rent shall be "deemed to be increased. . ."
S 15: "(1) A tenant who by virtue "of the provisions of this Act retains "possession of any dwelling-house to "which this Act applies shall, so long "as he retains possession, observe "and be entitled to the benefit of all "the terms and conditions of the "original contract of tenancy, so far "as the same are consistent with the "provisions of this Act. . ."

C. A.
1955
WESTMINSTER AND KENSINGTON FREEHOLDS LD. v. HOLME.
Singleton L.J.

"premises." The lease expired on March 25, 1942, and until that date the landlords were under covenant to pay, and did in fact pay, all the rates, and up to that time they could not make any charge against the tenant in respect of rates, because they had covenanted to pay them themselves.

The question which arises is, what is the true position as to rates after the expiration of the lease? [His Lordship read section 15 (1) of the Act of 1920 and continued:] Mr. Williams, on behalf of the tenant, claims that the landlords are seeking to put an additional burden on the tenant, in that they say: "As "from the end of the contractual tenancy we are entitled to "charge against you increases in rates made after September 1, "1939, but not commencing to run until the end of the tenancy." Mr. Williams submitted that as there were increases of rates between September 1, 1939, and the end of the tenancy in March, 1942, those increases could not be put upon the tenant, for to do so would be adding to the burden of the tenant, and would fall within the terms of section 2 (3) of the Act of 1920.

Mr. Miskin, on behalf of the landlords, relied on section 2 (1) of the Act of 1920, which permits landlords, in certain cases, to make an increase of rent against the tenant. [His Lordship read section 2 (1) (b) and continued:] Mr. Williams claims in aid the concluding four lines of paragraph (b), which begin "or in "the case of a dwelling-house for which no rates were payable." He submits that the tenant's case falls within those words, and that this house ought to be regarded as a dwelling-house for which no rates were payable in respect of the period by reason of the fact that the tenant was not paying rates up to the end of the lease because of the provisions of clause 5 of the lease.

I do not think that that submission is sound. The words are not "shall in the case of a dwelling-house for which no rates "are payable by the tenant." The words cover the case of a dwelling-house for which no rates were payable at the material time. That means payable by anyone. The provisions of paragraph (b) would meet the case of a house built after September 1, 1939, or a house which had not been subject to rating for one reason or another, and which later becomes subject to rating. I do not think that it helps the tenant in this case.

Mr. Williams saw his difficulty if his case was not covered by the last four lines of paragraph (b), and, indeed, it is obvious, for if it is not so covered, one is forced back to the correct construction of the earlier part of (b), which reads together with the commencement of the section: "The amount by which the "increased rent of a dwelling-house to which this Act applies "may exceed the standard rent shall, subject to the provisions "of this Act, be as follows . . . (b) An amount not exceeding "any increase in the amount for the time being payable by the "landlord in respect of rates over the corresponding amount paid "in respect of the yearly, half-yearly or other period which "included September 1, 1939. . . ."

The notices given by the landlords are, admittedly, in order as notices. When the contractual tenancy had ended, and the statutory tenancy had come into play, they gave notice that they claimed that there was an increase in the amount for the time being payable by the landlords in respect of rates over the corresponding amount payable on September 1, 1939, and there is no doubt as to that. It appears that between September 1, 1939, and March 25, 1942, there had been an increase in the rates of something over £12 a year, and after the year 1942 there were further increases of rates.

Mr. Williams agreed that the landlords were entitled to recover against the tenant increases after March 25, 1942, but he submitted that the amount of the increase before the conclusion of the contractual tenancy could not be recovered even in respect of a period after the contractual tenancy had ended. On the strict wording of section 2 (1) (b), it appears to me that the submission made by Mr. Miskin on behalf of the landlords is right. There is an increase over the corresponding amount paid in respect of the period which ended September 1, 1939, and upon the reading of the Act, I think the landlords were entitled to recover the amount of that increase in respect of each period after the contractual tenancy came to an end. Section 15 of the Act does not apply, for though the tenant is entitled to the benefit of all the terms and conditions of the original contract of tenancy, that only applies so far as it is consistent with the provisions of the Act, and one provision of the Act is that under section 2 (1) (b) the landlords are entitled to claim and to recover against the tenant additional rates over and above those which were payable on September 1, 1939.

I ought to add that the claim of the tenant could only be to recover two years' increased payment if her contention was right. That arises under section 7 (6) of the Act of 1938, which amended section 8 (2) of the Act of 1923, under which there had been a limit of six months; but perhaps this case is of more importance than appears at first sight, because it would appear that the judgment of this court covers rent for the future. It appears to me that the appeal of the defendant must be dismissed.

ROMER L.J. I agree. The only point of any substance in this appeal is that relating to the charge by the landlords in respect of increases of rates which took place between the years 1939 and 1942, and it appears to me that the tenant here can only achieve the result which she desires to attain by doing very considerable violence to the language of section 2 (1) (b) of the Act of 1920. That subsection refers to two periods of time. The first period is that which included September 1, 1939, and the second period which is mentioned, and which is introduced in

C. A.
1955
Westminster and Kensington Freeholds Ld. v. Holme.
Romer L.J.

the case of a dwelling-house for which no rates were payable in respect of the first period, is the period which included the date on which the rates first became payable thereafter. It is plain, if either of those periods had applied to the present case, that the landlords were well justified in demanding the increases which they did in fact require by their notice of 1948, but the tenant seeks to alter this provision by, in effect, introducing for the purposes of the present case a third period which would include the date when the tenant ceased to be a contractual tenant and became a statutory tenant instead. The justification which it is sought to bring to bear in supporting that third period is the argument that in this subsection in which the legislature speaks of payment of rates, it is meaning payment by the tenant. I can see no possible warrant for that suggestion at all, and if one takes the language of the subsection as one finds it, it is quite clear on the facts that the relevant period is the first period mentioned in the subsection, namely, the period which included September 1, 1939; and from that it follows that if one applies the language which is used there, the landlords were entitled, when the contractual tenancy came to an end, to increase the standard rent by reference to the period specified in the first part of the subsection.

It is quite true that that does result, in some measure, in the transfer of a burden from the landlord to the tenant which, during the contractual tenancy, had been borne by the landlord, but that consideration in itself affords, as I think, no answer to the argument of the landlords, which is founded upon the express language of this provision, and to which effect must be given accordingly; and I fail to see any hardship to the tenant because a landlord, who over a period of years has taken the liability, as these landlords did, for an increase of rates which might from time to time occur during the period of the contractual tenancy, when that tenancy comes to an end and the tenant is foisted upon them willy-nilly as a person with an irremovable status, transfers the burden to that person so that it would form a term of his future right to occupy the premises. I agree that this appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Greenwood, Milne & Lyall; Pierron & Morley.

P. B. D.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

*GAHAN (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. CHLORIDE BATTERIES LD.

C. A.

1955
Feb. 17, 18.

Evershed M.R., Jenkins and Morris L.JJ.

Revenue—Profits tax—Company—Principal and subsidiary companies—Grouping notice—Sums paid to principal company by subsidiary "by way of reimbursement of profits tax"—Amount deductible for income tax—Finance Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 54), s. 22—Finance Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 35), s. 38 (3).

A subsidiary company paid to the principal company an amount by way of reimbursement of profits tax, which tax (a grouping notice having been given by the principal company) was payable by the principal company in respect of the chargeable accounting periods ending December 31, 1950, and the companies jointly elected under section 38 (3) of the Finance Act, 1947:—

Held, that the amount which the subsidiary could deduct for the purpose of assessment to income tax was that sum of profits tax which was payable by the principal company by virtue of the notice having been given, that was the amount which was attributable solely to the giving of the notice, which would not have been payable by the principal company if the notice had not been given; in other words, it was the increase in the total amount of profits tax payable by the principal brought by the grouping notice, as distinct from the prior obligation to profits tax of the principal company.

Decision of Upjohn J. reversed.

APPEAL from Upjohn J.

Chloride Batteries Ltd., a wholly owned subsidiary of Chloride Electrical Storage Co. Ltd., commenced business on January 1, 1950, and made up its first accounts to December 31, 1950. The principal company served a grouping notice under section 22 of the Finance Act, 1937,[1] which was accepted by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, and for purposes of profits tax, the profits of the subsidiary company were treated as the profits of the principal company. For the chargeable accounting period ended December 31, 1950, the principal company paid £209,437 profits tax, but if no grouping notice had been given the profits tax

[1] Finance Act, 1937, s. 22: "(1) "Where a body corporate resident in "the United Kingdom is a subsidiary "of another body corporate so resi- "dent (hereafter in this section re- "ferred to as 'the principal com- "pany') the principal company "may, by notice in writing given to "the Commissioners of Inland Reve- "nue before the expiration of any "chargeable accounting period of the "subsidiary or within two months "thereafter, require that the provi- "sions of subsection (2) of this sec- "tion shall apply to the subsidiary as "respects that period and all subse- "quent chargeable accounting periods "throughout which it continues to be "a subsidiary of the principal com- "pany . . . (2) Where such a notice "is given, the profits or losses aris- "ing in any chargeable accounting "period to which the notice relates "from the trade or business carried "on by the subsidiary shall be "treated, for the purpose of the pro- "visions of this Act relating to "[profits tax] . . . as if they were "profits or losses arising in the cor- "responding chargeable accounting "period from the trade or business "carried on by the principal com- "pany."

C. A.
1955
GAHAN v. CHLORIDE BATTERIES LD.

payable by the principal company would have been £131,742 and that payable by the subsidiary would have been £191,420. The difference between that latter amount and the addition to the assessment on the principal company (£77,695) was due to the fact that the subsidiary, if assessed independently, would have been liable to tax at a higher rate.

The subsidiary company paid to the principal company £191,420 "by way of reimbursement of profits tax." The companies then made a joint election under section 38 (3) of the Finance Act, 1947.[2]

The subsidiary company claimed that, for the purpose of assessment to income tax under Case I of Schedule D for the years 1949–50, 1950–51, and 1951–52, it was entitled to deduct the whole of the amount of the profits tax paid by the principal company, though (considering only the figures for the first year) for commercial reasons the claim was in fact limited to £191,420, that was the maximum amount which it appeared to the directors of the subsidiary company that they ought to reimburse to the principal company. The Crown contended that only the difference between the amount which was actually assessed on the principal company and the amount which that company would have been called on to pay if no notice was served could be deducted by the subsidiary, that is, £77,695. The Special Commissioners upheld the taxpayer company, and on appeal Upjohn J. affirmed that decision. The Crown appealed.

J. Millard Tucker Q.C., Sir Reginald Hills and J. H. Stamp for the Crown.

F. Heyworth Talbot Q.C. and H. Major Allen for the taxpayers.

In addition to the cases referred to in the judgment, the following were cited in argument: Astor v. Perry[3]; Birmingham

[2] Finance Act, 1947, s. 38: "(3) "Where—(a) such a notice as aforesaid is in force; and (b) the subsidiary to which the notice relates pays to the principal company an amount by way of reimbursement of profits tax which by virtue of the notice having been given is payable by that company for any chargeable accounting period ending after the thirty-first day of December, 1946; and (c) the principal company and the subsidiary jointly so elect by notice in writing given to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue within six months from the end of that chargeable accounting period or such longer time as those Commissioners may in any case allow, the amount so paid, and any amount so paid in relation to a subsequent chargeable accounting period, by the subsidiary to the principal company shall for all the purposes of the Income Tax Acts be treated—(i) as regards the subsidiary, as an amount of profits tax payable in respect of its profits arising in the chargeable accounting period of the subsidiary corresponding to the chargeable accounting period to which the payment relates; and (ii) as regards the principal company, as reducing the amount of the profits tax payable by the principal company for the chargeable accounting period to which the payment relates."

[3] [1935] A.C. 398; 51 T.L.R. 325; 19 T.C. 255.

Small Arms Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [4]; Scottish Shire Line Ld. v. Lethem. [5]

EVERSHED M.R. As Upjohn J. observed, the question in this appeal is a short one. It turns on the meaning of parts of two sections relating to profits tax, although as will later appear the actual question between Crown and taxpayer relates to income tax.

The two sections are section 22 of the Finance Act, 1937, which imposed, sub nomine the national defence contribution, what is now called profits tax, and section 38 of the Finance Act, 1947, which in many substantial (but for the purposes of this case not material) respects amended the Act originally passed. Those sections related to the case of what are called in the Acts "principal and subsidiary" companies. It is a well-known and frequent feature of trading companies to have companies controlled, sometimes wholly controlled, by what is more generally called a "parent" company. It is to that kind of case that the phrase "principal and subsidiary companies" relates, and I need not take time by referring to those parts of the section which define what constitutes principal or subsidiary companies, for in this case it is not in dispute that the taxpayer company, Chloride Batteries Ld., is a subsidiary company within the meaning of those sections, the principal or parent company relevant for consideration being another company called Chloride Electrical Storage Co. Ld.

The broad purpose of the two sections which I have mentioned was first to enable a principal company, if it so chose, to serve a notice (which once served was continuous in effect and was not apparently capable of being recalled) on the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, assuming to itself all the profits tax which might be properly leviable both on itself and on its subsidiary. Thereupon, so far as the Commissioners of Inland Revenue were concerned, they would look exclusively to the principal or parent company, and for the purposes of assessment the profits from the trade or business of the subsidiary would be treated as part of the profits of the trade or business of the principal; and, similarly, if the subsidiary suffered a trading loss the loss would be taken into account in computing the principal company's liability. But the effect was not limited to such an assumption by the principal company of the profits tax liability for itself and the subsidiary, for by section 38 of the Finance Act, 1947, it was possible for the subsidiary then to make a payment "by way of reimbursement" to the principal company, and if it did so and if the principal and the subsidiary jointly elected and communicated that election in writing to the commissioners, then for income

[4] [1951] W.N. 349; [1951] 2 All E.R. 296.

[5] (1912) 6 T.C. 91.

C. A.
1955
Gahan
v.
Chloride Batteries Ld.
Evershed M.R.

tax purposes there was a consequential adjustment of the respective liabilities of principal and subsidiary; for at that time (though I think it is not so now [see section 25 (1) of the Finance Act, 1937, re-enacted by section 141 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1952, but repealed as respects profits tax for chargeable accounting periods ending after the beginning of 1952 by section 76 (8) of the Finance Act, 1952, and Sch. XIV, and see now Finance Act, 1952, s. 33 (1).]) profits tax paid by a company was a legitimate deduction for income tax purposes.

The present case has arisen because all those options, so to speak, have been exercised. The principal company sent the requisite notice under the Act of 1937, and thereby assumed to itself exclusively the profits tax liability both in respect of its own and in respect of the subsidiary company's businesses. The subsidiary company then paid a series of sums (for there is more than one accountable year in question) to its principal company, and as a consequence the question now before the court is the resultant deduction which the subsidiary claims to make for income tax purposes by virtue of having made those payments.

It so happens that if the contentions of the subsidiary company are right they can, in the circumstances of the case, get a very considerable advantage by way of income tax relief, and that circumstance arises mainly from the fact that the subsidiary company began its business on January 1, 1950. Beyond question, for income tax purposes, deductions of this kind or of other corresponding kinds serve a very useful purpose extending over more than two years during the infancy of such a company. The fact that if the subsidiary company is right it will financially be able to benefit very considerably is plainly irrelevant for the purposes in view.

I will state as respects one year, for that will suffice for present purposes, what the figures are, to illustrate the points as my judgment proceeds. For the first year of the subsidiary company's life the total amount of profits tax which became leviable in respect of the joint enterprises of principal and subsidiary was the not inconsiderable sum of £209,437. The profits tax which the principal company would have been liable to pay, had there not been what Mr. Heyworth Talbot called this amalgamation of profits for tax purposes, would have been £131,742, that is, £77,695 less than the first total which I mentioned. But there is this complication which has to be stated, to make what follows clear; if there had been no notice served and if the subsidiary company had been left, accordingly, to pay its own profits tax in respect of its own trading profits, it would have paid a good deal more than £77,695 because it would have had to pay at a much higher rate. I need not explain why that was so; the difference depends on the fact that under the scheme of the profits tax there are variations in rate. The tax was at that time particularly designed to discourage distribution, but when there was an amalgamation and a distribution by a subsidiary to a principal it did not, so to speak, count as a distribution. The figure—and this is the important matter—which the subsidiary company would have paid, if left to its own devices, would have been £191,420, much more than £77,695.

It is alleged on behalf of the subsidiary company that the option given by the joint effect of these sections to the subsidiary, or to the subsidiary and the principal working in collaboration, enables the subsidiary to reimburse the entire sum of profits tax which the principal, in the events which have happened, has been called on to pay, that is, £209,437, and that then the subsidiary may bring that sum into its accounts as a deduction in computing liability for income tax.

On behalf of the Crown it is said: "No; on a proper interpretation of the relevant parts of the sections the most that the subsidiary can pay over by way of reimbursement is the amount of additional tax which fell upon the shoulders of the principal company when, and because, it had assumed this liability, namely, £77,695." It is the fact that the sum which the subsidiary company paid to the principal and which it claims to be entitled to bring into its income tax account was not £209,437 but £191,420. The reason for that figure being paid was that those responsible thought that the fairest sum, as between the principal company and the subsidiary, and the commercially correct figure to pay over was a figure which represented what the subsidiary's liability would have been in respect of profits tax had it not been for the notice served by the principal company. But the fact that the subsidiary company paid £191,420, and not £209,437, is for the purposes of the argument irrelevant, and must not be allowed to affect it. Put another way, there is no case for saying that, if there be a limit to the amount which the subsidiary can reimburse, that limit is represented, not by the added obligation imposed on the principal, but by the obligation from which the subsidiary was saved.

I must now refer to the terms of the two sections so far as they are relevant. I gladly omit the parts of those sections concerning differential rates which were used, quite properly, to illustrate the argument, because, on the view which I take, I do not think that they really bear on the question which we have to decide. Section 22 (1) of the Act of 1937 provides that a principal company, as there defined, may by notice in writing given to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, before a certain date related to any chargeable accounting period of the subsidiary, "require that the provisions of subsection (2) . . . shall apply "to the subsidiary as respects that period and all subsequent "chargeable accounting periods throughout which it . . ."—that is the subsidiary—". . . continues to be a subsidiary of "the principal company." I can pass over the proviso. Subsection (2) explains how the notice shall take effect: "Where "such a notice is given, the profits or losses arising in any "chargeable accounting period to which the notice relates from

C. A.
1955
GAHAN
v.
CHLORIDE BATTERIES LD.
Evershed M.R.

"the trade or business carried on by the subsidiary shall be "treated . . . as if they were profits or losses arising in the "corresponding chargeable accounting period from the trade or "business carried on by the principal company." If the provision had stopped there, there would be, at any rate in this case, no problem at all. The notice having been given, there would have been for profits tax purposes an amalgamation—I use again Mr. Heyworth Talbot's word—of the profits or losses of both principal and subsidiary, and the charge for tax would be on the amalgam.

Section 38 (3) of the Act of 1947, however, introduced this further option. [His Lordship read subsection (3), pointing out that the notice like the other, if given, was irrevocable so long as the relationship continued.] The effect for present purposes of subparagraphs (i) and (ii) is that, as regards the subsidiary with which the court is concerned, the amount so paid by way of reimbursement is to be treated for income tax purposes as a deduction.

The whole question turns on these few words "an amount by "way of reimbursement of profits tax which by virtue of the "notice having been given is payable by that company." It is not an involved formula; on the face of it, it is simple enough; but, beyond a peradventure, it has given rise to a sharp distinction between the views taken on either side. It is said by the taxpayers that the phrase "profits tax which by virtue of the "notice having been given is payable by that company" means the total resultant figure for which the principal company is liable since the notice has been given. I will try to use language which is clearly expressive of the point, but it can be most clearly stated by saying that in this case the figure is £209,437. That, it is said, is the profits tax payable by the principal company by virtue of the notice, because that is the sum which, the notice having been given, the principal company is now bound to pay; and if the notice had not been given some quite different and much smaller sum, namely, £131,742, would have been exigible.

On the other side it is said for the Crown: "No; the profits "tax which is payable by the principal company 'by virtue of "'the notice' means that part of the total obligation which is "exclusively referable to, and derives its force from, the notice, "as distinct from the obligations to which by virtue of the other "sections of the Act the principal company in any event, notice "or no notice, would have been liable."

The Special Commissioners and Upjohn J. favoured the view for which Mr. Heyworth Talbot has contended. I feel diffident in expressing a view contrary to that which commended itself to them, but having given the matter my best attention, the meaning which those words have to me is that for which the Crown contends. Perhaps it is right to say, as Mr. Heyworth Talbot said, that this should not be regarded as a matter of first impression; and indeed, after listening for a day to the argument carefully presented in this court, the first impression has, perhaps, faded away a little. But in the end, and I shall try to give reasons in support of that view, the question is, having read those words, which are straightforward words in the English language, what do they mean to the reader (who is, in this case, myself)? Presumably, the draftsman had a clear idea of what he meant when he drafted the subparagraph. If anybody had suggested that the words were equivocal the doubt could have been resolved in the simplest possible way. If the draftsman had wanted to make clear beyond any doubt that the intention was in conformity with Mr. Heyworth Talbot's view he would, I should have thought, have said: "an amount by way of reimbursement of "the total profits tax which . . ." If he wanted to make certain that the view submitted for the Crown would be regarded as intended he would have said something to the effect, "by way "of reimbursement of the additional profits tax. . . ." But he has not said either of those things. I do not think that to conclude in the Crown's favour involves reading in words, any more than the view in favour of Mr. Heyworth Talbot would involve reading in words. The court cannot supply words which are not there. What we have to do is to say what the words, which are there, mean.

Upjohn J., at the end of his judgment, saying that he had agreed with the commissioners, said: "I think there can be only "one answer to this question. The profits tax payable by virtue "of the notice having been given is the whole profits tax." I am sorry to say that I cannot accept that view. I emphasized, when I read that sentence, that Upjohn J. had put in the definite article so that the vital words would read: "Where the subsidiary "to which the notice relates pays to the principal company an "amount by way of reimbursement of the profits tax which by "virtue of the notice having been given is payable by that "company. . . ." I do not say that this is by any means conclusive, but I confess that, if the definite article had been in, I should have been at least more inclined to think that "the "profits tax which by virtue of the notice" might have meant the whole, final, total sum; and when in the subparagraph (ii) below just that phrase is used, "the profits tax payable by the "principal company," it does mean the total sum so paid. And it will be noticed that the words "by virtue of the notice" do not occur in that subparagraph. But in the paragraph which the court has to construe the definite article is absent—"an amount "by way of reimbursement of profits tax which by virtue of the "notice . . ."

I follow the point that, since the subsidiary is not bound to reimburse the whole, or indeed anything, it might have been desirable, if the definite article had been in, or if it had clearly been the total sum which was referred to in the vital sentence, to have said "in or towards reimbursement," instead of saying

C. A.
1955
GAHAN
v.
CHLORIDE BATTERIES LD.
Evershed M.R.

"by way of reimbursement." It is idle speculation to try to guess how this sentence was built up; but the fact is that the phrase "profits tax" is used without the definite article. As I have said, I think that is a small point favourable to the view which I entertain. But more substantial, I think, is this: as a matter of strict English, if the question be asked: "What is "the amount of profits tax payable by the principal company by "virtue of the notice having been given?" surely the answer is "that amount of profits tax the obligation to pay which the "notice, and only the notice, brought about." As I have said, in the absence of the notice, the principal company would have been liable to pay £131,742. What the notice did as regards its liability to profits tax was to impose the additional obligation of £77,695.

I asked Mr. Heyworth Talbot whether it was a fair paraphrase to say that the question which this vital sentence raises was: how much of the obligation for profits tax was attributable to the giving of the notice? Mr. Heyworth Talbot agreed that those words would fairly pose the question. The next question is, how much was attributable to the giving of the notice? I do not think that it is true to say that the whole sum was so attributable. It is right to say that the final figure was arrived at because the notice had been given; and had it not been for the notice some other figure would have been arrived at. But of the sum of £209,437, £131,742 was an obligation wholly independent of the giving of the notice. To that view of the matter I think considerable support is lent by the use of the word "payable." It will be remembered that the tax in question (that is, the subject-matter which may be reimbursed) is profits tax which is payable and not that which has been paid. In other words, the use of the word "payable" introduces the conception of obligation and, as I think, justifies the formulation of the question which I have just put, that is, how much of the obligation is attributable to the giving of the notice?

Finally, I think that if one starts by having clearly in mind what is the notice, if in other words, instead of subparagraph (a) the necessary language is taken from section 22 of the Act of 1937, again one is assisted towards the conclusion which I have mentioned. What is the notice? It would read: "Where a "principal company has given a notice applicable to a subsidiary "and requiring that the profits or losses arising in any account-"able period from the trade or business of the subsidiary shall "be treated as if they were profits or losses arising from the trade "or business of the principal company, and the subsidiary to "which the notice relates . . ." The form and character of the notice is a notice by a principal company requiring that for a limited purpose, namely, for the purpose of ascertaining profits tax, the business profits or losses of the subsidiary shall be treated as the principal's. In this case, therefore, the effect of the notice, for the purpose of profits tax, is to increase by the amount of the subsidiary's trading profit, the subject-matter to be taxed in the principal's hands.

It is against that background that the subsidiary pays to the principal a sum " by way of reimbursement of profits tax which " by virtue of the notice " which I have just read is payable by the principal. I think the vital sentence in that context shows that the notice is one by virtue of which for profits tax purposes an added burden is imposed on the principal. It would be strange if it were otherwise for what other purpose have the words " which by virtue of the notice . . . " served? The principal is given power, by notice, to assume to itself the whole of the profits tax, both its own and its subsidiary's. There is no corresponding option which would entitle it to place on the subsidiary the whole profits tax of itself and the subsidiary. Yet, if the taxpayer's argument is right, the subsequent option has the oblique effect of transferring to the subsidiary for income tax purposes the higher profits tax obligation of both of them put together. It seems to me that that effect is out of keeping with the general tenor of the sections and the rights conferred. For those reasons my reading of the vital words is not the reading which commended itself to the judge.

If I am wrong, at the very least, it seems to me that there is a real ambiguity. I do not mean an ambiguity which arises because counsel on one side and the other have contended for different meanings, but a real doubt of what the sentence does mean. If that is so, then the court is entitled to consider the general scope of the Act, and I have given a reason for thinking that Mr. Heyworth Talbot's view is out of keeping with my understanding of the scope of the section.

It is legitimate also to consider the anomalous results to which, I think, Mr. Heyworth Talbot's view would lead. I do not propose to elaborate this matter. Nor do I doubt that when regard is had to the differential rates, to the ingenuity of mankind and to the infinite variety of circumstances of life, peculiar results may on any view sometimes arise, not the less so because these options once exercised cannot be recalled. But we have been dealing with the case of a parent with one child, and, as Mr. Millard Tucker rightly pointed out, not only may a company commonly have more than one subsidiary, but the sections themselves show that a plurality of subsidiaries is contemplated. I think Mr. Millard Tucker is entitled to ask, if Mr. Heyworth Talbot's view is right and notices have been given in respect of two or three subsidiary companies, what would be the rights inter se of each of them? Each company, prima facie, is entitled to repay the whole joint profits tax for the whole group. The effect of that, of course, would be a greater benefit to the parent company than obviously it was entitled to receive. Mr. Heyworth Talbot's answer was: " The right to make payment is " expressed ' by way of reimbursement,' and if I undertake to " reimburse another for the expenses which he has incurred in

C. A.
1955
GAHAN v. CHLORIDE BATTERIES LD.
Evershed M.R.

" some particular connexion, then, once he has had from me " the amount which he has expended, he cannot be further " ' reimbursed ' in respect of those same expenses." I am not sure that that is necessarily so, but it is a very great deal to get out of those four words " by way of reimbursement " if the general argument is right. On any view, it seems to me that as the years roll by it might create very difficult problems of priority between the subsidiaries as to who was going to pay, to get in first, to reimburse the parent and gain the best advantage from the income tax provisions, assuming, of course, that the right to make the deduction had continued. I think Mr. Millard Tucker has made good his point that the view contended for on behalf of the company produces anomalies, and obviously does so as soon as the case of a plurality of subsidiaries is considered.

Mr. Heyworth Talbot took, as an example, a case where a company, a subsidiary, made a loss of £500, but the parent made a profit of £1,000. Notice had been given, with the result that the business profits for the purpose of profits tax were reduced from £1,000 to £500. Assuming profits tax at the rate of 10 per cent., the tax would be reduced from £100 to £50. Mr. Heyworth Talbot asked what, on the Crown's view, would be the amount which, within the terms of the vital sentence " of " profits tax which by virtue of the notice having been given," would be payable by the principal company. He contended that the answer in that case must be £50, and if that was so, all else followed. I agree with Mr. Millard Tucker that in those circumstances the right answer would be nil. The result of the notice produced no obligation to profits tax on the parent company. What it did in fact was to relieve the principal company of part of the obligation which the company would otherwise have had to bear.

It has been said so many times that on matters of construction over-elaboration may not be useful, but that, in the end, it is a question of interpreting, fairly and according to ordinary English sense, the words used. For the reasons which I have stated I would allow the appeal.

Jenkins L.J. I agree that this appeal should be allowed. I only venture to add a few observations of my own because we are differing both from the special commissioners and from the judge.

The case resolves itself into the question what section 38 (3) (b) of the Finance Act, 1947, means by " profits tax which by " virtue of the notice having been given is payable by that " company " that is to say, the principal company. It is to be observed that the expression is not simply " profits tax payable " by that company," but it is " profits tax which by virtue of the " notice having been given " is so payable. What profits tax can answer the description of being payable by the principal company by virtue of the notice? Surely only such profits tax as is payable by the principal company by reason of the notice having been given, and which would not have been payable by the principal company if the notice had not been given. That seems to me to be the natural and inescapable meaning of the language used.

I think that that conclusion is reinforced if one reads into subsection (3) (b) of section 38 of the Act of 1947 the effect of the notice referred to in section 22 of the Act of 1937. It is a notice, to put it shortly, that the profits or losses of the subsidiary are to be treated as profits or losses of the principal company. If the effect of the notice is thus read into subsection (3) (b) it seems to me to be reasonably plain that the profits tax in this context which answers the description of being payable by the principal company by virtue of the notice is so much of the total profits tax payable by the principal company as is payable by that company by virtue of the fact that the profits of the subsidiary company are added to its own profits for the purpose of ascertaining its liability to profits tax. Accordingly, in my view, the relevant payment for the purposes of section 38 in this case must consist, as contended for on behalf of the Crown, of the £77,695, representing the increase brought about by the section 22 notice in the total amount of tax payable by the principal company.

The short point of construction admits of no great elaboration, but I would call attention to this. The argument for the subsidiary company is to the effect that the profits tax payable by virtue of the notice is the whole of the profits tax payable by the principal company on the combined profits of the principal and subsidiary. For the reasons which I have endeavoured to state I think that is a wrong construction; but by way of reinforcement of this view it is not without significance that, whereas the reference in subsection (3) (b) is to "profits tax "which by virtue of the notice having been given is payable by" the principal company and so on, when one comes to subparagraph (ii) of subsection (3), which states the effect on the tax position of the principal company of the payment by way of reimbursement, one finds this expression, "As regards the "principal company, as reducing the amount of the profits tax "payable by the principal company for the chargeable account-"ing period to which the payment relates." That is the expression used in the section to denote the whole of the profits tax liability of the principal company. I venture to think that, when the different and qualified expression "profits tax which by "virtue of the notice having been given is payable . . ." is used in subsection (3) (b), it is used because the reference is not to the whole of the profits tax payable by the principal company but only to that part of the total profits tax payable by the principal company which is payable by that company by virtue of the notice. Accordingly, in my view, and as a matter of construction, after paying the best attention I can to the careful arguments presented, I think that the Crown's contention is right.

C. A.
1955
GAHAN v. CHLORIDE BATTERIES LD.
Jenkins L.J.

I will not pursue the arguments which were directed to the anomalies which it was said might arise one way or another whichever construction of the word is adopted. I will content myself by saying that it seems to me that, on the whole, the possible anomalies instanced by Mr. Tucker were more surprising than those which were suggested on the other side; but I prefer to found myself on the construction of the relevant sections and, having construed them, I agree with the Master of the Rolls that this appeal should be allowed.

MORRIS L.J. I am of the same opinion. The construction contended for by the subsidiary company is one which, in my judgment, might result if the words of section 38 (3) (b) of the Finance Act, 1947, were "the subsidiary to which the notice "relates pays to the principal company an amount by way of "reimbursement of profits tax payable by that company." But the words which by such a reading are omitted are, in my judgment, words which have significance and meaning. I refer to the words "which by virtue of the notice having been given." With the inclusion of those words an inquiry is denoted to determine what profits tax is payable by the principal company "by virtue "of the notice having been given." This, in turn, suggests an inquiry as to what the position would have been if no notice had been given, and what the position is "the notice having been "given." If no notice had been given, then on the figures in this case, the profits tax payable by the principal company would have been £131,742. "The notice having been given," the profits tax payable was £209,437. What then is the profits tax which by virtue of the notice having been given was payable by the principal company? In my judgment it was the difference between the two. If there is to be payment of "an amount by "way of reimbursement of profits tax" which is payable "by "virtue of the notice having been given," the amount referred to is, in my judgment, the amount of any resulting additional tax.

The notion of paying "an amount by way of reimbursement" suggests a measure of responsibility for that which is to be reimbursed. The principal company would have had, unless a notice was given, a liability to pay £131,742 by way of profits tax. When a notice was given, liability to that extent did not owe its origin to the giving of the notice, and was not payable by virtue of the notice having been given. But the amount of the resulting additional liability would be by virtue of the notice having been given.

Appeal allowed.
Leave to appeal to the House of Lords.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue; Simpson, North, Harley & Co., for March, Pearson & Green, Manchester.

E. D.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

*HEELEX INVESTMENTS LD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

C. A.

1955
Feb. 18.

Evershed M.R., Jenkins and Morris L.JJ.

Revenue—Profits tax—Company—Principal and subsidiary company—Grouping notice—Subsequent exemption of principal company from profits tax—Whether subsidiary assessable to profits tax—Finance Act, 1922 (12 & 13 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 21—Finance Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6, c. 54), ss. 19, 22 (1) (2)—Finance Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6, c. 35), s. 31 (2).

H. company was a wholly-owned subsidiary company of S. Co. On September 28, 1948, S. Co. gave a "grouping" notice, which was accepted, to the Inland Revenue Commissioners under section 22 [1] of the Finance Act, 1937, requiring that the profits of H. Co. should be treated as the profits of S. Co., the principal company, for the purposes of profits tax. As a result of giving the notice, assessments to profits tax for the years 1947, 1948 and 1949 were made in respect of both companies and the tax was paid. By a notice given in September, 1952, the commissioners directed, pursuant to section 21 of the Finance Act, 1922, that the income of S. Co. for each of the years 1946–47 to 1948–49 should be deemed to be the income of the members and apportioned accordingly. On the footing that when the direction was made all the members of S. Co. were individuals, by virtue of section 31 (2) of the Finance Act, 1947,[2] the income of S. Co. became exempt from liability for profits tax.

The Inland Revenue Commissioners, having repaid the tax already paid for the period to which the direction related, made assessments on H. Co. for the profits for the chargeable accounting periods ending on January 31, 1948, and January 31, 1949. On appeal to the special commissioners it was contended on behalf of H. Co. that the effect of the grouping notice given in 1948 was that

[1] Finance Act, 1937, s. 22: "(1) "Where a body corporate resident in "the United Kingdom is a subsidiary "of another body corporate so resi- "dent (hereafter in this section "referred to as 'the principal com- "'pany') the principal company "may, by notice in writing given to "the Commissioners of Inland Reve- "nue before the expiration of any "chargeable accounting period of the "subsidiary or within two months "thereafter, require that the provi- "sions of subsection (2) of this sec- "tion shall apply to the subsidiary "as respects that period and all "subsequent chargeable accounting "periods throughout which it con- "tinues to be a subsidiary of the "principal company. . . . (2) Where "such a notice is given, the profits "or losses arising in any chargeable "accounting period to which the "notice relates from the trade or "business carried on by the sub- "sidiary shall be treated, for the "purpose of the provisions of this "Act relating to [profits tax] . . . "as if they were profits or losses "arising in the corresponding charge- "able accounting period from the "trade or business carried on by the "principal company."

[2] Finance Act, 1947, s. 31: "(2) "The said section 19 [the principal "charging section of the Act of "1937] shall not apply to any trade "or business carried on by a body "corporate during any chargeable "accounting period if, for a year or "period which includes, or for years "or periods which together include, "the whole of the chargeable account- "ing period, the actual income of the "body corporate from all sources is "apportioned under or for the pur- "poses of section 21 of the Finance "Act, 1922, and all the persons to "whom it is apportioned are "individuals."

C. A.

1955

Heelex Investments Ld. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners.

there were no profits assessable to profits tax of H. Co. for these years. The Crown contended that, when the principal company was exempt from profits tax, the provisions of section 22 (2) of the Act of 1937 were no longer operative, as there was an inherent assumption that the principal company must be liable for profits tax or section 22 would not operate.

On appeal to Upjohn J. from the decision of the special commissioners affirming the assessments, the assessments were discharged. The Crown appealed:—

Held, that there was no justification for holding that the subsidiary company was liable to profits tax on the ground that the exemption of the principal company by implication suspended or defeated the operation of and effect of the grouping notice, and there was nothing in section 22 of the Act of 1937 justifying an assumption that it was limited to cases where profits tax would be exigible. The words "for the purpose of the provisions of this "Act relating to" profits tax meant "for the purpose of ascer- "taining what profits tax, if any, would be exigible on the profits "of the principal and subsidiary companies respectively."

Dicta in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Birmingham District Power and Traction Co. Ld. (1928) 141 L.T. 1 considered.

Decision of Upjohn J. [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1368; [1954] 3 All E.R. 379 affirmed.

Appeal from Upjohn J.

Heelex Investments Ld., a wholly-owned subsidiary company of Sidcup Investments Ld., was assessed to profits tax for the two accounting periods February 1, 1947, to January 31, 1948, and February 1, 1948, to January 31, 1949, in the respective sums of £12,903 16s. and £7,130 4s.

On September 28, 1948, Sidcup Investments Ld., the principal company, had given a notice under section 22 (1) of the Finance Act, 1937, requiring that the provisions of subsection (2) should apply to Heelex Investments Ld. as regards those periods. The notice was given out of time but was accepted by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. No determination was given by the commissioners in accordance with section 22 (3) (c) relating to the accounting periods of the principal company to which the accounting periods under appeal were to be deemed to correspond.

On September 29, 1952, the special commissioners, by notice to the principal company, directed under section 21 of the Finance Act, 1922, that the income of that company for each of the years 1946–47, 1947–48 and 1948–49 be deemed to be the income of its members and that the amount thereof be apportioned among the members. The principal company was an investment company within section 20 of the Finance Act, 1936, and section 14 of the Finance Act, 1939, was therefore applicable.

On August 26, 1953, the subsidiary company gave notice of appeal against the two assessments to profits tax for the periods above mentioned. The special commissioners, on appeal, confirmed the assessments and the subsidiary company appealed. At the hearing before Upjohn J. the following matters were taken to be common ground, in addition to those set out above: (a) it was assumed that all the members of the principal company were individuals, as required by the exempting section 31 (2) of the Finance Act, 1947; and (b) the assessments made on the principal company for the group profits for the years 1947, 1948 and 1949 were discharged following the direction under section 21 of the Act of 1922, and the tax already paid was repaid.

Upjohn J. reversed the decision of the special commissioners and the assessments on the subsidiary company under appeal were discharged.

The Crown appealed.

At the hearing before the Court of Appeal it was said on behalf of the Crown that the additional matters accepted before Upjohn J. had been taken to be common ground on the footing that certain correspondence was in evidence before the special commissioners. It had since transpired that that was not so. If it was sought to say that there was no evidence that all the members of the principal company were individuals, counsel for the Crown would submit that the point was not open to the subsidiary company, but, subject to that, the submission put on behalf of the Crown was on the footing that that correspondence had been before the commissioners. Counsel for the subsidiary company intimated that he would, if necessary, take the point, but he was not called upon to make any submission.

Geoffrey Cross Q.C. and Sir Reginald Hills for the Crown.
L. C. Graham-Dixon Q.C. and John Creese for the company.

The case cited in argument is referred to in the judgment.

EVERSHED M.R. I will ask Jenkins L.J. to deliver the first judgment.

JENKINS L.J. This is an appeal by the Crown from a decision of Upjohn J. which reversed a decision of the special commissioners concerning the liability to profits tax of a company called Heelex Investments Ld. Heelex Investments Ld. is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Sidcup Investments Ld., and, accordingly, the provisions of section 22 of the Finance Act, 1937, apply to it. It has been assumed for the purposes of this case that all the shares in the principal company are held by individuals. Furthermore, it appears that the principal company is, and has at all material times been, a company in respect of which a direction could be given under section 21 of the Finance Act, 1922. [His Lordship read section 31 (2) of the Finance Act, 1947.]

It appears that on September 28, 1948, the principal company gave a notice under section 22 of the Act of 1937. A notice under that section can be given by a body corporate resident in the United Kingdom in respect of any other body corporate resident in the United Kingdom when the latter body corporate is a

C. A.
1955
Hedlex Investments Ld. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners.
Jenkins L.J.

subsidiary of the former, as in this case, requiring the provisions of section 22 (2) to be put into operation. The effect of the provisions of section 22 (2) is that during all relevant accounting periods while the notice is in force—and I should add that the notice is irrevocable once given—the profits or losses of the subsidiary are to be treated for the purpose of the provisions of the Act of 1937 relating to profits tax as if they were profits or losses arising in the corresponding chargeable accounting period from the trade or business carried on by the principal company. On September 28, 1948, the principal company availed itself of the provisions of section 22 (1), and gave notice in accordance with that section in respect of the subsidiary company, thereby bringing into operation as regards the profits of that subsidiary the provisions of section 22 (2). It is not in dispute that this notice was, under the statutory provisions as they now stand, a valid notice, and was accepted as such by the commissioners; although, apparently, it was given out of time according to the provisions of section 22 as originally framed.

On September 29, 1952, which is to be observed is some four years after the section 22 notice was given, the special commissioners made a direction under section 21 of the Finance Act, 1922, to the effect that the actual income from all sources of Sidcup Investments Ld. should be treated as being income of its members and apportioned amongst its members accordingly. On the assumption made by Upjohn J., which for the purposes of this appeal can be adopted, that all the members of the principal company were individuals, that direction brought into play for the benefit of the principal company the exemption afforded by section 31 (2) of the Act of 1947. That concatenation of events produced a result unacceptable to the Revenue, inasmuch as the profits of the subsidiary company, which considered as a separate entity was liable to pay profits tax, were to be treated for the purposes of profits tax as though they were profits of the principal company; and as the profits of the principal company were exempted from profits tax by virtue of section 31 (2) of the Act of 1947, the effect of treating the profits of the subsidiary company for the purposes of profits tax as though they were profits of the principal company was to exempt the profits of the subsidiary company from profits tax altogether.

Mr. Cross has said all that could be said in support of the appeal. He admits very fairly, and rightly as I think, that in view of the language of section 22, any body corporate resident in the United Kingdom which is a principal company in relation to a subsidiary which is also a corporate body so resident, can give the notice referred to in section 22 irrespective of its own liability to profits tax. He, therefore, cannot and does not claim that the notice given under section 22 in the present case, which, indeed, was given long before the exemption of the principal company from profits tax under section 31 (2) of the Act of 1947 arose, was an invalid notice. He says, however, that words must, by necessary implication, be read into section 22 (2) to the effect that the profits of the subsidiary company are only to be treated as profits of the principal if, and so long as, the income of the principal company is liable to profits tax. He spells that qualification out of the words " for the purpose of the provisions " of this Act relating to " profits tax, and he invites us to construe those words as meaning " for the purpose of charging " the profits of the subsidiary to profits tax." With respect to Mr. Cross I cannot find that these words are capable of any such meaning. It seems to me that the words " for the purpose of " the provisions of this Act relating to " profits tax mean " for " the purpose of ascertaining what profits tax, if any, is exigible " on the profits of principal and subsidiary companies respec- " tively." I see no reason for construing these words as limited to cases where tax will in the result be exigible.

Mr. Cross invites us to construe the section in this way on the ground that anomalous results, which could not have been intended by the legislature, would otherwise ensue; but it is not open to us to rectify defects in the language of taxing statutes. The subject must bear tax only if, on a fair construction of the statute as it actually stands, he falls within the charge to tax. I cannot find on that principle any sufficient justification for holding that the subsidiary company is liable to profits tax on the ground that the exemption of the principal company by implication suspends or defeats the operation and effect of the notice given under section 22.

Upjohn J., with whose judgment and the reasoning on which it is based I entirely concur, was referred, as this court was referred, to the case in the House of Lords of Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Birmingham District Power and Traction Co. Ld.[1] That case was concerned with corporation profits tax and it raised a comparable question, inasmuch as there was a provision in section 53 (3) of the Finance Act, 1920 (the Act imposing that tax) under which the profits of a subsidiary company, as therein defined, were, on the appropriate application being made, to be treated for the purposes of that part of that Act, that is to say, for the purposes of the provisions charging the corporation profits tax, as being the profits of its principal company. The Birmingham District Power and Traction Co. Ld. was exempt from the tax by virtue of the fact that it was carrying on a particular class of business, which was one of a number of businesses in respect of which exemption from tax could be claimed. That principal company had subsidiary companies which were not themselves exempt; and under section 53 (3) of the Act it made an application, which was accepted by the Inland Revenue Commissioners, for the profits of the subsidiaries to be treated as being profits of the principal company. Notwithstanding that application and its acceptance, assessments were

[1] (1928) 141 L.T. 1.

C. A.
1955
HEELEX INVESTMENTS LD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.
Jenkins L.J.

made on the subsidiary companies. When these were objected to, they were discharged, and it was sought to charge the principal company, notwithstanding that it was exempted from tax by the express terms of the Act. Their Lordships were unanimously of opinion that the principal company could not be so assessed in the face of the statutory exemption. In the course of their speeches some of their Lordships made observations bearing to some extent upon the present question.

Lord Buckmaster, so far as his actual conclusion was concerned, held that as the application for the amalgamation of profits, if I may so describe it, had been, in fact, made by the principal company and had been accepted by the Inland Revenue Commissioners, and as the principal company was exempt from the tax, the assessments on the principal company could not stand. But he used language which suggested that had it not been for the fact that the application had been made and accepted, he would have taken the view that the provisions of section 53 (3) of the Act of 1920 did not apply at all in a case where the principal company was exempt from the tax. The language which he used does not, in so many words, state that conclusion, but it suggests that he would have arrived at that conclusion had the state of the case left it open for him so to do.

The other members of the House who touched on this aspect of the question were both, I think, of opinion that it was irrelevant that the principal company was exempt from tax, inasmuch as the provisions of the Act expressly enabled such a company to make an application under section 53 (3). As the plain terms of the Act allowed an application to be made by such a company, the consequences of such an application had to be accepted, whatever the result might be from the tax point of view. Accordingly, if a principal company, which was entitled to make an application under section 53 (3), did make such an application, it was no objection that, on account of the exemption of the principal company, the result might be that the profits of the subsidiary would escape tax.

All the observations in the speeches of their Lordships in that case which have a bearing on this aspect of the question were, strictly speaking, obiter, because the question actually in issue was whether the exempted principal company could itself be assessed to tax. That was the subject-matter of the decision. As regards the obiter dicta, it seems to me that, on balance, they tend in the present case to support the position of the subsidiary company rather than that of the Crown.

Accordingly, I find nothing in that authority which would prevent me from following what I conceive to be the true construction of the sections which are relevant in the present case. On the true construction of those sections, it seems to me to be plain that in the present case the notice which was given under section 22 operated to amalgamate the profits of the subsidiary with those of the principal company for the purposes of profits tax with the consequence that, as the principal company was, for the time being at all events, exempt from profits tax (on the assumption on which the case has proceeded that all its shares were held by individuals at the material time), the subsidiary company's profits were relieved from profits tax because they fell to be treated for the purposes of that tax as being profits of the exempted principal company. In short, I entirely agree with the reasoning of Upjohn J. and his conclusion, and, indeed, I might have contented myself by adopting them without adding any reasons of my own. I am, accordingly, of opinion that this appeal fails and should be dismissed.

EVERSHED M.R. I agree. I cannot entertain any doubt that the judge was entirely right in his conclusion.

I would like to associate myself with what Jenkins L.J. has said about the Birmingham District Power and Traction Co. Ld. case,[2] because I am by no means satisfied that Lord Buckmaster went as far as Mr. Cross submitted. I doubt whether Lord Buckmaster was doing more than intimating his view that a company which was at the time exempt from corporation profits tax, could not make a valid or effectual application under section 53 of the Finance Act, 1920, or that, if it did make such an application, the commissioners were not bound to accept it. As they had done so, Lord Buckmaster took the view that it was then too late to challenge the result so far as that company was concerned.

In the present case, as Jenkins L.J. observed, Mr. Cross has conceded (and I think rightly conceded) that the principal company was entitled at the time of service to give a notice under the Finance Act, 1937, and in those circumstances I doubt whether Lord Buckmaster's language is of any assistance at all to Mr. Cross's argument. I do, however, observe that, in regard to the Act there in question, Lord Buckmaster said[3]: " . . . but " where the language is plain it cannot be altered by declaring it " to be irrational or assuming that it is something that Parlia- " ment could not have intended. In the last resort Parliament " intends what in the language of an Act of Parliament it says " and it would indeed be dangerous to depart from this rule in " the administration of the law." I find that expression of a well-known principle peculiarly apt in the present case.

MORRIS L.J. I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue; Titmuss, Sainer & Webb.

E. D.

[2] 141 L.T. 1.

[3] Ibid. 4.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1955
Feb. 10, 11.

Harman J.

* THEOCHARIDES v. JOANNOU.

[1950 T. 1205.]

Legal Aid — Costs — Taxation — Solicitor — Instructions for brief and supplemental instructions for brief — Whether permissible to be grouped as one item—Power of judge to overrule taxing master on question of quantum—Exceptional circumstance—Country solicitor —Attendance in London.

On the taxation of the defendant's bill of costs of an action brought in the High Court in which both parties were in receipt of legal aid, the taxing master disallowed certain items and reduced others. The defendant objected to the taxation. The relevant items of objection were:

(a) Fees and travelling expenses charged by the defendant's country solicitor in respect of attendance in London at the examination of a witness on commission. These items were disallowed.

(b) A fee of three guineas for instructions for brief to counsel to attend the examination of the witness on commission. The taxing master disallowed this item on the ground that it was taken into account in assessing the amount allowed for instructions for brief.

(c) Nine items in respect of fees charged for attendance of the country solicitor in London at conferences and consultations and at the hearing. The taxing master allowed the R.S.C. Appendix N items for the attendances. He added a sum of 20 guineas to the amount allowed for the instructions for the main brief by way of extra remuneration for the extra items involved through attendance from the country.

(d) Instructions for the main brief. A sum of 600 guineas was claimed and 200 guineas was allowed (together with the sum of 20 guineas above referred to). The allowance was made by the taxing master in the exercise of his discretion over questions of quantum after taking into consideration all the circumstances.

(e) A fee of 50 guineas for supplemental instructions for brief which was prepared after the trial had lasted several days and for the purposes of its continuance after an adjournment. The taxing master disallowed this item and stated in his answers that he had taken it into account in the item "Instructions for brief."

The defendant took out a summons for a review of the taxation:—

Held, (1) that the items in respect of the attendance of the country solicitor in London were not matters of quantum but of principle, and that since the attendance of the country solicitor was essential for the proper conduct of the case those items should be allowed; and that in respect of such of those items which the taxing master had allowed at minimum fees (R.S.C., Appendix N) it was wrong in principle for him in answer to the objections to add 20 guineas to the block fee for instructions on brief to compensate the country solicitor, but that this sum was to be distributed among the items in question.

(2) That it was wrong in principle for the taxing master to group under one item, "Instructions for brief," all the remuneration to which the solicitor was entitled for drawing whatever instructions it might be necessary to give counsel at whatever stage in the proceedings. Accordingly, in the circumstances, the item for instructions for brief to counsel to attend at the examination of the witness on commission should be allowed at the fee of three guineas, and that of the supplemental instructions for brief at 25 guineas.

(3) That although the reduction of the item, "Instructions for "main brief," from 600 guineas to 200 guineas was substantial, it was not, in the circumstances, so exceptional as to justify the judge, contrary to established practice, overruling the taxing master on a question of quantum.

Observations of Sachs J. in Self v. Self [1954] P. 480; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 119; [1954] 2 All E.R. 550 considered.

Observations on reviews of taxation in legal aid cases and on the practice to be followed.

SUMMONS to review taxation.

The plaintiff, a Cypriot, brought proceedings in the Chancery Division against his brother in which (1) he asked for an account in respect of certain moneys which he alleged his brother held on trust; (2) he claimed that a partnership subsisted between himself and the defendant in respect of two restaurant businesses. Both parties to these proceedings were granted civil aid certificates under the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949.

The action was heard before Roxburgh J. on April 28, 29, 30, and May 1, 1953. On May 4, 1953, the action was ordered to stand over with liberty to apply to restore it. On June 23, 1953, terms of settlement were approved by the judge under which the plaintiff accepted £500 in full satisfaction and an order was made for the taxation of the plaintiff's and the defendant's costs pursuant to Sch. 3, para. 4 (1) to the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949. The Law Society with leave of the Treasury agreed to waive its lien on the £500 in aid of the Legal Aid Fund.

On the taxation of the defendant's costs the taxing master disallowed certain items and reduced others. The defendant objected to the taxation.

The relevant items of objection were: (a) Items Nos. 2 to 5. The defendant's country solicitor attended in London at the examination of a witness on commission, and fees and travelling expenses were charged. The fees were reduced and the travelling expenses were disallowed. The ground of reduction and disallowance was that the defendant's solicitor's London agents could have attended at the examination. In his answers the taxing master referred to W. F. Marshall v. Barnes and Fitzpatrick,[1] and ruled that the expenses were incurred by overcaution.

(b) Item No. 1, a fee of three guineas for instructions for brief to counsel to attend the examination of the witness on commission. The taxing master disallowed this fee on the ground that this item was taken into account in assessing the amount allowed for instructions for brief.

(c) Items Nos. 12A, 17, 19, 21, 23, 25, 26, 28 and 30. These were fees charged for the defendant's country solicitor's attending a conference, consultations and at the trial in London. The taxing master allowed the R.S.C. Appendix N items for the attendances. On objection he added a sum of 20 guineas to the amount allowed for instructions for the main brief (item No. 12) by way of extra remuneration for the extra items involved through attendance from the country.

[1] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 639; [1953] 1 All E.R. 970.

1955

Theocharides v. Joannou.

(d) Item No. 12, "Instructions for the main brief." A sum of 600 guineas was claimed and 200 guineas was allowed, apart from the extra 20 guineas mentioned in (c) above. The allowance was made by the taxing master in the exercise of his discretion over questions of quantum after taking into consideration all the circumstances. The particular circumstances were that the effective period covered by the civil aid certificate was the 56 days before trial of the action, and that the defendant's solicitors did not produce any record or entry of attendances stating that they could not afford the time necessary to keep such records.

(e) Item No. 27. This was a fee for supplemental instructions for brief, which was prepared after the trial had lasted four days and for the purposes of its continuance after adjournment. The fee claimed was 50 guineas. The taxing master disallowed this item, and he stated in his answers that he had taken it into account in the item, "Instructions for brief" (item No. 12).

The defendant took out a summons for a review of the taxation.

Mark Nesbitt for the defendant.

Peter Foster for the Official Solicitor, as amicus curiae.

Harman J. This is a summons to review a taxation in a case in which both parties were granted legal aid certificates. Earlier applications of this kind have appeared in the reports, one of them before myself, Warman v. Barclays Bank Ld.,[1] and another before Sachs J., Self v. Self.[2] The difficulty in these cases is that the applicant whose solicitor's costs are being taxed, has, in effect, no interest in the matter. If he has a nil contribution, he cannot have any interest, and with a contribution of the sort which is usually found in legal aid cases, he practically never will have an interest. The application, therefore, is made for the benefit of the solicitor and possibly for the benefit of counsel who have been concerned in the case. In Self v. Self,[3] it was for the benefit of counsel, because where counsel takes a legal aid case he agrees to be satisfied with a proportion of the taxed fee and there is no agreement between him and the solicitor, such as is usual as between solicitor and counsel in an ordinary case, to pay him the fee marked on his brief. Another anomaly is that the other party to the litigation is not interested either. It is the Legal Aid Fund which is interested. The result is that there is nobody to put the other side of the picture, and the taxing master suffers under that difficulty. He may well consider himself to some extent forced into the position of guardian of the public purse because there is no one else to see to it. A good deal of the dissatisfaction in the present case has been caused by the fact that the taxing master avowedly adopted that attitude here. I do not think that he could help it. When this matter came before me, I was not satisfied to ply the labouring oar in that way. I therefore made application to the Lord Chancellor, by whose direction the Official Solicitor was appointed as amicus curiae, to put before me such considerations as the public interests demanded, and Mr. Foster very ably and temperately has carried out that task. There still remains, or may remain, a difficulty which I foresee, and that is this: in this case, as indeed in Warman v. Barclays Bank Ld.,[4] though not in Self v. Self,[5] the Legal Aid Committee had been asked to give and had given a fresh certificate or an amendment to a certificate to enable the application to be made. Suppose, then, the application wholly to fail. Suppose, moreover, that the respondent be not a person legally aided. Then costs might be given against the applicant to the extent of his means, and one would arrive, as far as I can see, at the position where the legally aided person might be liable to pay, at any rate in part, the costs of an application made solely for the benefit of his solicitor or counsel and which could not enure to his benefit in any event. That is a very extraordinary state of things which has not yet arisen and I do not know what may happen when it does arise.

[1] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 191; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1575.

[2] [1954] P. 480; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 119; [1954] 2 All E.R. 550.

[3] [1954] P. 480.

The present case is a remarkable one. The defendant's bill of costs was brought in for some £2,400 and of that the taxing master has taxed off about £1,100. The defendant's solicitor says, in effect, that such a disallowance shows, on its face, that the taxing master was not exercising a judicial discretion. I have already felt bound to reject that plea because I do not think that there is any evidence to support it.

The objections taken were 33 in number and for the most part they were for comparatively small sums. With a good many of them I have dealt as the case proceeded. Those which I have allowed are certain items for the attendance of the country solicitor, because, as it seems to me, those were not matters of quantum. They were matters of principle, and it is not right that the country solicitor's expenses of attendance on difficult matters, as these were, should be denied him when the application is such that his attendance is really required. Consequently, items Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 were allowed on that footing. I have also allowed a small item, No. 8, which was for a copy of the statement of claim which seemed to me reasonable under the circumstances.

[4] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 191.

[5] [1954] P. 480.

1955

Theocharides v. Joannou.

Harman J.

A number of items was abandoned. There remain also items Nos. 6, 10, 32 and 33 which I disallowed on the footing that they were mere matters of quantum; and further a series of items, Nos. 12A, 14, 17. 19, 21, 23, 25, 26, 28 and 30, which represent attendance fees for the solicitor, all based on R.S.C. Appendix N; all, that is to say, minimum fees. When that was pointed out to the taxing master on the objections, he, I think, regarded it as a reasonable objection and he added 20 guineas to the (so to speak) block fee for instructions on brief to compensate the country solicitor. In my judgment that was not the right way of doing it. I propose to distribute that 20 guineas among those items. That will have the effect of reducing the amount allowed by the taxing master for instructions on brief to 200 guineas.

There are three other matters with which I have not dealt. The first (item No. 1) was in respect of the instructions given to counsel who attended on the examination on commission of a witness. A modest fee of 3 guineas was asked for, and the taxing master disallowed it, or, rather, he stated that he had taken it into account in his instructions on brief. He overruled the objection. How much he took into account in those instructions, I do not know. Rather similar is item No. 27, which was a fee to the solicitor of 50 guineas for drawing supplemental instructions on the brief. These supplemental instructions were given to leading counsel during the intermission of the hearing, after the action had been heard for four days in the High Court and then adjourned, and at that point, having regard to the conduct of the proceedings and the course which the action had taken, a supplemental set of instructions became necessary. The solicitor asked 50 guineas for drawing it, and there were long and complicated documents. The taxing master again stated: "I "have taken this item into account in the item 'Instructions "'for brief.'" He considered that there should only be one item "Instructions for brief" and that that should include all the remuneration the solicitor got for drawing whatever instructions he gave to counsel at whatever stage in the proceedings. There was one set of instructions for examining or cross-examining the witness on commission (item No. 1), and there were the main instructions for the brief (item No. 12), and the supplemental instructions necessitated by the changes in the situation occurring during the hearing (item No. 27). It does not seem to me to be right to group all those items together in that way. Instructions to counsel for the examination or cross-examination of a witness on commission are quite a different matter from instructions for the trial, and the exceptional circumstance of the litigation, which was between two Cypriots whose affairs were in the greatest obscurity, and whose conduct was very difficult to ascertain as their language also was hard to make out, is a circumstance which would well justify further instructions to counsel quite distinct from the instructions upon which his brief was based. I propose to allow those two items, but not at the amounts asked for. I propose to allow 3 guineas for item No. 1 and 25 guineas for item No. 27. I think that 50 guineas was too much to ask.

After taking out those two items, there remains the 200 guineas which the taxing master thought was a proper fee for the instructions on the main brief. Counsel for the defendant submitted that this fell so far short of the 600 guineas asked for, as of itself to show that the taxing master cannot have taken the matter properly into consideration. Secondly, it was said the taxing master went wrong because he did not believe that the work on which the instructions were based had all been done after the civil aid certificate was granted. Further, it was said that the taxing master had no right to disbelieve or discredit the solicitor's managing clerk, who told him that the whole staff had been engaged on this matter for the 56 days between the date of the certificate and the trial but who could not produce any attendances or diary to show how the work had been done, such as a London office might have been able to furnish.

I do not think that the taxing master did anything of the sort. What he said in effect was that he had kept in mind the fact that the work for which payment could be made under the certificate only represented the work of the last 56 days before the trial, the action having been started a long time before and pleadings having been long closed when the certificate was issued. He was entitled, therefore, to consider that the solicitor must have gathered a certain amount of information on which the defence had been settled. He was entitled, I think, to take into account that matter; in other words, that when the certificate was given, the solicitors did not start entirely de novo. He was also, I think, entitled to take the view that he should have been furnished with details to substantiate the claim as to the amount of work which had been done; but, on the other hand, the amount of a fee of this kind and for work of this nature does not depend upon a precise estimate of the time which the work took. It is a guess, for what it is worth. It seems to me the taxing master's guess is quite as good as another's, and very much better than anything of mine would be, because he is very much more experienced. I cannot say whether 200 guineas is the sort of fee which ought to be allowed on this sort of occasion. What was asked was 600 guineas. The taxing master considered that 200 guineas was a proper amount to allow. Before I could reject that, I should have to be satisfied that it was not an amount which any reasonable taxing officer could assess, and I can find no possible basis on which I can do that; it is, after all, well settled that the taxing office, except in very exceptional circumstances, must have the last word in these matters.

The authorities were reviewed by Wynn-Parry J. in Coon v.

1955

Theocharides v. Joannou.

Harman J.

Diamond Tread Company (1938) Ld.[6] He there cited White v. Altrincham Urban District Council,[7] in the Court of Appeal, where Greene L.J. said: "The rule that the decision of a taxing "officer on questions of quantum ought not to be overruled by "the judge on a review of taxation has long been established. "This rule, in my opinion, applies generally to taxations in the "county court as it applies to taxations in the High Court, and "it is only in exceptional circumstances (which do not exist in "the present case) that a decision of the taxing officer on a "question of quantum should be overruled." What are exceptional circumstances is a matter on which it is very difficult to decide, but I do not see that the mere fact that what was asked was 600 guineas and what was given was 200 guineas can possibly be an exceptional circumstance. The difference is merely one of quantum and is not so outrageous as to speak for itself and show that the taxing officer did not exercise his discretion in a proper manner. I feel quite unable to interfere on that ground.

Then it is said that a principle has been established in Self v. Self,[8] and is stated in the headnote of the report of that case in the Law Reports as a principle of law. It reads: "It is "not a proper exercise of judicial discretion so to assess the fees "of counsel upon a taxation under the Third Schedule of the "Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, as to deprive those who do "such work under the Act of the 85 per cent. of that fair and "reasonable remuneration which is provided by the Schedule." I do not myself feel that the judgment really justifies that headnote. The judge did state that he would have been prepared to decide the case upon the footing that the registrar had disregarded a fee that was fair; in other words, that the registrar had not exercised his discretion on a proper basis. It does not go, I think, beyond that. If it did, it was not a dictum that I could follow, because it would be stating that the judge and not the taxing master is the proper arbiter in matters of quantum, and that is not the rule. What Sachs J. really said was that the registrar there taxing the bill only arrived at the figure he did arrive at because he took altogether wrong matters into consideration. On that footing, of course, the decision is perfectly understandable and right. I think that the obiter dicta at the end of the judgment[9] need rather a cautious approach. I do not see here that the taxing officer has been shown to have taken into account anything which he was not entitled to take into account, or to have left out of account anything he was bound to take in. That being so, it is not a matter of whether I will but whether I can interfere, and I cannot interfere. Therefore, I do not propose to alter the 200 guineas fee, allowed on the main instructions for brief.

[6] [1950] W.N. 343; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 8; [1950] 2 All E.R. 385.
[7] [1936] 2 K.B. 138, 145 (C.A.).
[8] [1954] P. 480.
[9] Ibid. 485.

1955

THEO-CHARIDES v. JOANNOU.

Harman J.

The result of that will be that I make certain allowances and reject the rest. I think an order in that form will be satisfactory, and I do not think I need send it back to the Taxing Office. I shall order that objections Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 8 be allowed at the amount appearing in the bill, that item 27 be allowed at a fee of 25 guineas. Item 12 may in effect stand at 220 guineas, although, as I have explained, I have attributed 20 guineas of that sum to certain other items. I propose to make the usual order for taxation of the applicant's costs under the Legal Aid and Advice Act, he having, rightly or wrongly, got a certificate covering this application. It is not a case in which I think I should order him to pay anybody else's costs.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Joynson-Hicks & Co., for Robert C. Wilson, Margate; Official Solicitor.

J. A. G.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* MEARNS v. MEARNS.

C. A.

1955

Feb. 7, 28.

Jenkins and Morris L.JJ.

Husband and Wife—Divorce—Costs—Petition and answer—Wife's allegations of cruelty — Adultery of wife admitted — Measure of liability of party cited to pay costs.

A wife petitioned for divorce on the grounds of her husband's cruelty. By his answer the husband denied the wife's allegations of cruelty and asked for the dissolution of the marriage on the ground that his wife had committed adultery with the party cited and further asked that the party cited might be condemned in the costs of the suit. The wife and the party cited admitted the adultery. The party cited did not enter an appearance nor was he represented at the hearing. The commissioner, after rejecting the wife's petition and granting a decree nisi on the cross-prayer in the husband's answer, ordered the party cited to pay the husband's costs and the husband to pay the wife's costs, such costs to be recoverable by the husband from the party cited. The party cited appealed against the order as to costs:—

Held, (1) that it was wrong in principle to saddle a party cited, whose adultery with a wife was proved or admitted, with the costs of other issues raised between the husband and wife in which the party cited was in no way concerned and neither arising out of nor connected with the misconduct of which he was proved or admitted to have been guilty; (2) that as the commissioner had not found that any of the episodes relied on by the wife as cruelty were caused or contributed to by the party cited, the order he made was wrong in principle and the court was free to vary the order in accordance with the justice of the case; (3) that the proper order to be made was that: (i) the husband should bear and pay so much of his own and his wife's costs as would have been incurred if his answer had been confined to contesting the charges of cruelty without raising the issue of adultery; (ii) the party cited should pay the balance of the husband's costs; and (iii) the husband

C. A.
1955
Mearns
v.
Mearns.

should pay the balance of the wife's costs but should be entitled to recover such balance from the party cited.

Kara v. Kara and Holman [1948] P. 287; 64 T.L.R. 329; [1948] 2 All E.R. 16 distinguished.

Appeal from Commissioner Sir Harry Trusted.

The wife, Shirley Rhona Mearns, petitioned for divorce on the ground of her husband's cruelty. In his answer the husband denied cruelty and prayed for the dissolution of his marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery with John Edward Bullen, whom he cited. The wife and the party cited admitted the adultery. The party cited did not enter an appearance and was not present or represented at the hearing. After a trial lasting three days the commissioner dismissed the wife's petition and granted a decree nisi on the cross-prayer in the husband's answer. He ordered the party cited to pay the husband's costs, the husband to pay the wife's costs and that such costs should be recoverable by the husband from the party cited. The party cited was informed on May 20, 1954, that the husband's costs amounted to £383 19s. 4d., and subsequently that he would also be liable for the wife's costs, which had not yet been taxed but which it was thought would amount to about the same figure.

The party cited obtained leave from the commissioner to appeal out of time against the order as to costs.

Bruce Campbell for the party cited.
J. G. K. Sheldon for the husband.

The following cases were cited in argument in addition to those referred to in the judgment of the court: Langrick v. Langrick and Funnell [1]; Codrington v. Codrington and Anderson [2]; Bew v. Bew [3]; Rotch v. Crosbie [4]; Lever Brothers Ld. v. Masbro' Equitable Pioneer Society Ld. [5]; Société des Hôtels Réunis (Société Anonyme) v. Hawker [6]; British Russian Gazette and Trade Outlook Ld. v. Associated Newspapers Ld. [7]; Barker v. Barker [8]; Badcock v. Badcock and Chamberlain [9]; Rayden on Divorce, 6th ed., pp. 478, 481.

Cur. adv. vult.

February 28. The judgment of the court was read by Jenkins L.J. The suit in which this appeal arises began with a petition by the wife, dated July 9, 1952, for dissolution of her marriage to the husband, a naval officer, on the grounds of cruelty. By his answer dated October 29, 1952, the husband denied the wife's allegations of cruelty, alleged that the wife had in or about June, 1950, committed adultery with one John

[1] [1920] P. 90; 36 T.L.R. 308.
[2] (1865) 4 Sw. & Tr. 63.
[3] [1899] 2 Ch. 467.
[4] (1909) 54 S.J. 30.
[5] (1912) 28 T.L.R. 294.
[6] (1914) 30 T.L.R. 423.
[7] [1933] 2 K.B. 616.
[8] [1950] 1 All E.R. 812; [1950] W.N. 158.
[9] (1858) 1 Sw. & Tr. 189.

Edward Bullen, another naval officer, whom he cited, at Pisky Cottage, Tregarnon Bay, Cornwall, and prayed dissolution of the marriage on this ground with costs against the party cited. The wife put in a reply to the husband's answer whereby she admitted the adultery therein alleged, but claimed that the husband had condoned such adultery and further that he had conduced to it by his cruelty. By her discretion statement dated December 14, 1953, the wife admitted adultery with the party cited on two occasions in 1950 at hotels in London in addition to the occasion mentioned in the answer. At the hearing of the suit the husband, with leave, amended his answer by adding an allegation of the wife's adultery with the party cited on the two occasions in London admitted in her discretion statement. The party cited, who did not dispute the adultery alleged against him, entered no appearance and was not present or represented at the hearing.

The case was tried by Commissioner Sir Harry Trusted on December 14, 15 and 16, 1953. The wife's charges of cruelty against the husband were fully investigated and on December 16 the commissioner delivered a careful and detailed judgment in which he reached the conclusion that " on the whole " the wife had not made out a case of cruelty which would justify the granting to her of a divorce. He added that had he thought otherwise he would have had very grave doubt whether or not it would be right to exercise discretion in her favour. As to the prayer in the answer, he held that there was no doubt at all that the wife had committed adultery with the party cited. That was, of course, obvious, as the wife admitted it and the party cited did not dispute it. The commissioner rejected the wife's plea of condonation on the ground that the forgiveness relied on by the wife as condonation took place when the husband was only aware of the one act of adultery at Pisky Cottage originally alleged in his answer, his knowledge of which depended on an admission made to him by the wife as to that one occasion only, without any reference to the two other occasions in London. The commissioner also rejected the wife's plea that the husband had conduced to the adultery, holding " that there was no possible " conduct of his which could conduce to her behaviour and there " was clearly no excuse for her behaviour." Accordingly the commissioner rejected the prayer in the wife's petition and granted a decree nisi on the cross-prayer in the husband's answer. The delivery of the judgment was followed by a discussion about costs, which resulted in an order to the effect that the party cited was to pay the husband's costs, and that the husband was to pay the wife's costs, such costs to be recoverable by the husband from the party cited as costs in the cause.

On December 21, 1954, the party cited obtained the leave of the commissioner to appeal out of time from this order as to costs, and pursuant to such leave he now appeals to this court. [After considering the reason for the party cited's delay in appealing, his Lordship continued:] In all the circumstances we

C. A.
1955
MEARNS
v.
MEARNS.

do not think the appeal should be rejected merely on account of the party cited's delay, which cannot be said to have prejudiced the husband in any way.

We pass, therefore, to consideration of the question whether this case is one in which the Court of Appeal can properly interfere with the order as to costs made by the commissioner.

The order here made undoubtedly bears heavily on the party cited, inasmuch as it makes him liable not merely for the husband's and the wife's costs of the issue of adultery, which he must clearly bear, as the costs which the husband has incurred on his own behalf or must defray on his wife's behalf in proceedings justly brought by him on account of the admitted adultery of the party cited with the wife, but also for the costs of both spouses on the issue of cruelty, although that issue was wholly concerned with charges made by the wife against the husband with which, prima facie, the party cited had nothing to do.

Mr. Sheldon, for the husband, referred us to some of the numerous cases which establish the well-known proposition that the power of a trial judge, under section 50 of the Judicature Act, 1925, and Rules of the Supreme Court, Order 65, r. 1, to determine by whom and to what extent the costs are to be paid, being by the express terms of the section and rule a discretionary power, his exercise of such discretion, by making some particular order as to costs in any given case, should not be interfered with by this court, even though he has given the necessary leave to appeal under section 31 (1) (h) of the Act, unless the circumstances are such as to warrant the conclusion that, in making the order under appeal, the judge took into consideration some irrelevant matter, or excluded from consideration some relevant matter, or proceeded upon some wrong principle, so that the order made was not the product of a proper exercise of the discretion reposed in him.

We need not refer to the authorities cited by Mr. Sheldon in support of this unassailable proposition, which of course we fully accept, and from which it follows that, in the present case, this court should not interfere with the commissioner's order as to costs merely on the ground that if it had rested with us to exercise the discretion we would for our part have exercised it in a different manner.

But it must in our view be wrong in principle to saddle a party cited, whose adultery with the wife is proved or admitted, with the costs of other issues raised between the husband and the wife in which the party cited is in no way concerned, and neither arising out of nor connected with the misconduct of which he is proved or admitted to be guilty.

Thus, in the present case, if the facts had been that the last act of cruelty relied on by the wife had taken place before the wife even became acquainted with the party cited and that she had at some later date admittedly committed adultery with him, it would in our view clearly be wrong in principle to make the party cited liable for the costs of the issue of cruelty raised by the wife's petition.

In Kara v. Kara and Holman,[1] Hodson J., sitting in the Court of Appeal in a case in which a co-respondent was held liable for the costs of cross-charges of cruelty made by the wife against the husband, and delivering the judgment of the court on the question of costs, explained in these words the court's reason for holding the co-respondent liable for the costs of these cross-charges[2]: "We condemned the co-respondent in the costs of "the allegations of cruelty on the ground that the history of the "case showed that his association and eventual adultery with "the wife were bound up with the matrimonial disputes from "which the allegations of cruelty arose. In particular, he was "closely concerned with the final act of cruelty relied on and "was a discredited witness called to support the wife in respect "of this final act. In this connection the court was referred to a "decision of Hill J. in Darnborough v. Darnborough and Smith,[3] "in which considerations of this kind actuated the learned judge "to make a like order."

In the present case the commissioner gave no reasons for making the order as to costs appealed from by the party cited. Mr. Sheldon, for the husband, urged that we should assume that the commissioner, having heard all the evidence, came to the conclusion that, as in Kara v. Kara and Holman,[4] the association and adultery of the wife and the party cited were bound up with the disputes out of which the allegations of cruelty arose and that, accordingly, the party cited should be saddled with the whole of the costs.

Having read the commissioner's judgment, we can make no such assumption. The sequence of events as narrated in his judgment is plainly against it. The behaviour of the husband relied on by the wife as amounting to cruelty arose, according to her, out of the husband's excessive sexual demands and his rough, not to say brutal, conduct in forcing such demands upon her at times when she was unwilling to comply with them. The parties were married on October 6, 1945. The first specific instance of cruelty relied on by the wife took place in December, 1946. At this time the spouses were at Lossiemouth, where the husband was stationed. The party cited was also stationed there, and we gather on friendly terms with both spouses, but there is nothing in the judgment to suggest that the unsatisfactory relations obtaining between the husband and the wife at that period had anything to do with the party cited. The adultery did not take place until the first half of 1950, when the husband was on service abroad, the last of the three occasions being in

[1] [1948] P. 287; 64 T.L.R. 329; [1948] 2 All E.R. 16.
[2] [1948] 2 All E.R. 16, 18.
[3] (1926) 96 L.J.P. 24.
[4] [1948] P. 287.

C. A.
1955
MEARNS
v.
MEARNS.

June, 1950. The husband returned in November, 1950. There is no doubt that the wife's brief association with the party cited was by then a thing of the past. He was in fact married in December, 1950. The wife's admission to the husband of one of three acts of adultery took place in December, 1950, when, knowing only of this one incident, he seems to have forgiven her. He did not know of the other two occasions until they were disclosed by her discretion statement. The last two incidents of cruelty relied on by the wife were of precisely the same character as the incident of December, 1946, and the inference seems irresistible that they were recrudescent symptoms of the same sexual maladjustment as had caused the earlier trouble. We have been unable to discern in the commissioner's judgment any finding, express or implied, to the effect that any of the episodes relied on by the wife as cruelty were caused or contributed to by the party cited. On the contrary, he seems to us to treat the husband's allegedly cruel conduct on the one hand and the wife's brief adulterous association with the party cited on the other hand as entirely distinct and separate matters; and we think this must be taken to have been his view of the facts.

In the brief discussion about costs which followed the judgment, no one was concerned to argue that the party cited should not bear all the costs. In substance the only question debated was whether the wife should be given her costs against the party cited or the husband should pay the wife's costs, with a right to recoupment against the party cited, and the commissioner adopted the latter alternative.

For the reasons we have endeavoured to state, we think that the order made was wrong in principle, so far as it made the party cited liable for the costs of the husband and the wife on the issue of cruelty. In our judgment, therefore, this court is free to vary the order in accordance with our own view of the justice of the case. We think the proper order to be made in the circumstances is an order to the effect that: (i) The husband should bear and pay so much of his own and the wife's costs as would have been incurred if the answer had been confined to contesting the charges of cruelty without raising the issue of adultery; (ii) the party cited should pay the balance of the husband's costs; and (iii) the husband should pay the balance of the wife's costs, but should be entitled to recover such balance from the party cited.

The effect of an order in this form should be to make the party cited liable for the costs of the issue of adultery, including the costs of the pleas of condonation and conduct conducive raised by the wife, so far as the raising of those pleas occasioned any addition to the costs which would have been incurred on the hypothesis mentioned in (i) above. Accordingly, we would allow this appeal and vary the commissioner's order as to costs in the way we have indicated.

We were told that the party cited has already paid a total of some £320 on account of the husband's costs. Any excess of this amount over and above the total sum payable by the party cited under the order now to be made should be repaid to him.

C. A.
1955
MEARNS v. MEARNS.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Bircham & Co.; Wedlake, Letts & Birds.

B. A. B.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

* WELLS-KING v. WELLS-KING.

1955
Jan. 28.

Lord Merriman P. and Collingwood J.

Husband and Wife—Divorce—Rehearing—Jurisdiction of Divisional Court—Concurrent appeal to Court of Appeal—Allegation of undisclosed adultery—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950 (S.I. 1950, No. 1940), r. 36 (1).

A wife was granted a decree nisi of divorce on the ground of cruelty in a defended suit, but her allegations of sodomy were rejected. The husband afterwards obtained evidence which, he alleged, showed that the wife had committed adultery prior to the hearing. After receiving an intimation that the Queen's Proctor did not intend to intervene the husband filed two notices of motion for a rehearing, one in the Court of Appeal (which was asked in the alternative to rescind the decree), and one in the Divisional Court under rule 36 (1) of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950. After the motion had been adjourned in the Court of Appeal the application under rule 36 (1) came before the Divisional Court:—

Held, that although the discovery, after the hearing, that the wife had previously committed adultery might be a ground for an application under rule 36 (1) (although it might also have been open to go to the Court of Appeal) the application to the Court of Appeal was a clear allegation of error in the court below. In such circumstances the Divisional Court had no jurisdiction to hear the motion before it, for that application concerned one aspect only of a matter which was indivisible.

Prince v. Prince [1951] P. 71; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 493; [1950] 2 All E.R. 375 applied; Alhadeff v. Alhadeff [1951] W.N. 367 considered.

Per curiam: The fact that a wife is carrying on a clandestine adulterous association at the material times is plainly a matter to be taken into account in assessing allegations made by her of cruelty, particularly in sexual matters, for it throws light upon charges of abnormality which she has brought and affords a possible cause to which her nervous and mental condition might be referable. If she has suppressed her own guilt not only to her husband but to the court to which she has complained, the effect of that suppression upon her credibility will also be material.

1955

Wells-King v. Wells-King.

Motion for a rehearing under rule 36 (1) of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950.[1]

A wife by her petition dated June 22, 1953, alleged that her husband had treated her with cruelty and had committed, and attempted to commit, sodomy upon her. The husband denied these allegations, but made no cross-charge, and on July 28, 1954, after a three-day hearing, Mr. Commissioner Blanco White Q.C. dismissed the charge of actual sodomy but granted a decree nisi on the ground of cruelty. It was extracted from the wife in cross-examination, and the admission was accepted as accurate, that the main body of her case was the charge of sodomy, not only the charge of actual sodomy, but of attempts to commit sodomy, in the course of which, and in connexion with which, much of the ill-treatment of which she complained was said to have occurred. Other charges made concerned alleged ill-treatment in connexion with the chastisement of the daughter of the marriage, the husband being said to have lost his temper with the wife when she tried to interfere.

The husband alleged on the present application that as a result of investigations subsequent to the granting of the decree he had obtained evidence that the wife had frequently committed adultery with a named man, prior to the date of the hearing, of which he then had no knowledge. On August 20, 1954, he submitted this evidence for the consideration of the Queen's Proctor. On September 6, 1954, an intimation was received from the Queen's Proctor that he did not propose to take action. The six weeks from the date of the decree nisi expired on September 8, 1954, and the first date for the application to make that decree absolute was September 9, 1954. On September 7, 1954, the husband filed two notices of motion, one to the Court of Appeal in general terms, asking that the decree nisi might be set aside and the petition dismissed or, alternatively, for a new trial, and the other to the Divisional Court under rule 36 (1) asking for the decree to be set aside and a new trial ordered, on the ground that the wife had committed adultery on various specified occasions, and had "failed to disclose to the court at the hearing of the "suit any of the said adultery committed by her."

The appeal to the Court of Appeal came into the list first, and after a brief hearing at which the court was informed that the application to the Divisional Court was pending, it was intimated that if the two proceedings were both effective, it was manifestly

[1] Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950, r. 36: "(1) An application for "re-hearing of a cause heard by a "judge alone where no error of the "court at the hearing is alleged shall "be made to a Divisional Court of "the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty "Division. The application shall be "by notice of motion, stating the "grounds on which it is based, filed "in the Divorce Registry, and served "upon the opposite parties within "six weeks after judgment. The "notice shall be a fourteen days' "notice and may be amended at any "time by leave of the judge.

"(2) Any other application for re-"hearing shall be made by way of "appeal to the Court of Appeal."

convenient that the application to the Divisional Court should be heard first, and the other adjourned. No ruling was given upon the question of jurisdiction under rule 36 (1).

A. C. Munro Kerr for the husband.
Norman Lermon for the wife.

The following cases were cited in argument in addition to those cited in the judgment: Pattenden v. Pattenden & Herzfield [2]; Taylor v. Taylor & Darg [3]; Skull v. Skull [4]; Corbett v. Corbett.[5]

LORD MERRIMAN P. referred to the history of the case and to rule 36 of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1950, and said that it had been made perfectly clear in argument on behalf of the husband that the validity of the judgment of the commissioner was being emphatically challenged in the Court of Appeal. [His Lordship continued:] It is quite plain that the commissioner dismissed the charge of sodomy as such, that is, the completed offence. In effect, he said that on the evidence which was presented to him he was quite satisfied that no criminal court would convict, and he did not propose to do so himself. It is not so certain that he disregarded altogether the allegations of attempts, but there are parts of the judgment which we have read which appear to leave it in the air whether some of the quarrels between a husband, whom he described as highly-sexed, and a wife who was plainly dreading the possibility of a sixth or seventh pregnancy, were or were not accompanied by attempts at irregularity in sexual matters.

Otherwise, on the face of the pleadings there were added, by further and better particulars, certain charges of ill-treatment in connexion with chastisement of the daughter of the marriage. Put quite briefly, the suggestion was that when the wife resented and tried to interfere, the husband transferred his attentions to her, and she was the victim of his temper.

We have, of course, no means whatever of going into the merits of the criticisms and comments against this judgment, nor, indeed, have we any right to do so, but at the end of it all, the substance of the matter is this, that having got rid of the actual charge of sodomy, which, according to the opinion that he had formed, was really the background and the main part of the wife's case, the commissioner, nevertheless, found a charge of cruelty proved, on material which, it was suggested, did not reach the required standard. A challenge of this nature against the correctness of the judgment in a defended case—and I emphasize the fact that it was a contested case—makes it impossible

[2] (1868) 19 L.T. 612.
[3] (1899) 68 L.J.P. 116.
[4] [1954] P. 458; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 1049; [1954] 1 All E.R. 1030.
[5] [1953] P. 205; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 1124; [1953] 2 All E.R. 69.

1955

Wells-King v. Wells-King.

Lord Merriman P.

to say that it is a case of which it is even faintly possible to say that no error of the court at the hearing is alleged. In other words, it is quite plain that from that point of view it is a matter for appeal to the Court of Appeal.

That, however, is not the end of the matter. What is now said is that, unknown to the husband, at the time when the events of which the wife complained were happening, and unknown to the husband at the time of the hearing, or, indeed, at any material time, the wife was conducting a clandestine association of an adulterous character with a certain man. It is said that it is no fault of the commissioner that that aspect of the matter, if it exists at all, was not taken into account at the hearing, because nobody knew about it, least of all the commissioner, and it is on that ground that we are asked to order a rehearing.

Having taken the appropriate steps to ensure that he was in time, whatever way the spin of the coin resulted, the husband now asks this court to deal in isolation with one aspect of a matter which seems, to put it quite shortly, to be indivisible.

I will assume, for the purposes of the argument, that had the commissioner's judgment on the materials then before him been unchallenged and unchallengeable, it would have been appropriate to bring the motion to this court, on the basis that there was this undisclosed and unknown matter with which, through no fault of his own, he was precluded from dealing. I say I will assume this, and I do not think that it is necessary to go through the case law on this subject again. We have had the advantage of hearing the cases referred to, some of them old cases before the jurisdiction of this court was narrowed in the way which first occurred after the earlier Judicature Act,[1] and as it stands in terms of the present rule, which reflects the limitations imposed on our jurisdiction under the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1924, r. 46. I need only say that having had the advantage of re-reading Prince v. Prince,[2] the opportunity of doing so has only increased my admiration, if I may humbly say so, for the masterly survey of the history of this matter, and of the case law on the subject, in the judgment of Evershed M.R. By that test, and leaving out this question of adultery, it is, in my opinion, so plainly a case for the Court of Appeal that it is unnecessary to discuss the matter in detail.

The question, then, is whether the matter is disposed of by assuming, for the purposes of the argument, that if the introduction of the new issue of the wife's adultery afforded the only challenge against the commissioner's judgment and this motion were solely based upon the introduction of that fresh element, it might have been proper to come to this court, notwithstanding that, on such fresh material, it might also have been open, in what was a hotly contested case, to go to the Court of Appeal.

[1] Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890, s. 1.

[2] [1951] P. 71; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 493; [1950] 2 All E.R. 375.

Further, bearing in mind that it does not matter whether there is or is not a formal allegation of error, if in fact error is, and must be, alleged, I agree with Mr. Lermon's view that conversely, although a formal allegation of error is implicit in the filing of the notice of appeal to the Court of Appeal, if that were removed by the withdrawal of that particular challenge to the judgment, it might be open to us to deal with the adultery issue separately. That, quite definitely, is not this case, for Mr. Munro Kerr made it abundantly plain that he was not prepared to abandon either of the two horses and ride only one, and that the appeal to the Court of Appeal, with full force and effect, stands adjourned.

In my opinion, the only thing which has caused any doubt at all has been, upon what basis was the appeal adjourned by the Court of Appeal? It was suggested that when the appeal came into the list in that court before this motion was due to come on here, some expression of opinion or direction—it was not suggested that there was an order—was made, that this was a proper case for us to deal with rather than the Court of Appeal, and that it was suggested that, if it were desired to appeal from the decision of this court, the two appeals could be heard together in the Court of Appeal. It would have been surprising if that had been the basis of any direction to us to hear the merits of the motion, for it is plain that the mere fact that an appeal to the Court of Appeal from an erroneous decision of this court could be heard at the same time as the other appeal could not possibly give us jurisdiction if we had not already got it. We were informed that the Court of Appeal were told (and this is common ground) that it would be very much more convenient if we dealt with the case here because the appellant was a poor man, and because to bring out the points of criticism in the Court of Appeal would involve a transcript of the evidence, which would not necessarily be involved in this court. That again, though no doubt a matter of practical importance, could not possibly give us jurisdiction if we did not already possess it. However, there being no shorthand note of the proceedings in the Court of Appeal and, therefore, no possibility of obtaining a transcript, I made such inquiries as were open to me during the adjournment yesterday, and it is plain, as I announced at the time, beyond the slightest doubt that no direction that we should hear the case, nor anything resembling such a direction, was given. All that happened, when it was made clear that these proceedings were also pending, was that it was intimated, without any examination of papers or going into detail (for the whole matter lasted only a few minutes) that if these two proceedings were both effective, it was manifestly convenient that this one should come on first, and, for that purpose, that the other should be adjourned; but nothing whatever happened to decide that this proceeding was right and that we must deal with it.

If, as I am satisfied, the right course was taken in going to the Court of Appeal by way of challenging the correctness of the judgment of the commissioner, it seems to me to be beyond doubt that it would be open to the appellant to attempt to persuade the Court of Appeal either to hear the new evidence introducing the charge of adultery against the wife, or, if they did not wish to take that course, to order a rehearing in order that the issues raised by both parties might be considered together, for it really is unarguable that on a charge of cruelty by a wife, the fact that she is, during the whole of the material time, alleged to be conducting a clandestine adulterous association, is entirely disconnected with the charge of cruelty. It is said that in this case the husband is not alleging that anything he did wrong (if he did anything wrong, which he denies) was provoked by his knowledge, or suspicion even, of an adulterous association. Be it so. But that is not the only test. It really goes without saying that a tribunal, which is made aware of the fact that during the whole time covered by her complaints the wife is, or ought to be, suffering from a guilty conscience, may think that this must necessarily have an effect on her attitude to the married life; and this is plainly a matter to be taken into account in assessing allegations of cruelty, particularly of cruelty in connexion with sexual matters. Apart from that, of course, the effect on the wife's credibility of her having suppressed, if she has suppressed, her own guilt, not only to her husband at the material time but to the court to which she complained, is obvious. If, moreover, she succeeds in proving her charge of cruelty, and the husband also succeeds in proving his cross-charge of adultery, it would be a question for the judge who heard the case to decide whether to dismiss both the petition and the answer outright, on the rival discretionary bars provided by those circumstances, or to give a decree to the one or the other, according to his assessment of culpability, or even to give a decree to both.

1955

WELLS-KING v. WELLS-KING.

Lord Merriman P.

All these matters would be dealt with together on the appeal on the case as a whole. We are asked to deal with one aspect of it, and one aspect only, and on the ground of this undisclosed adultery to order a rehearing, because the commissioner did not know about the adultery and was not asked to deal with it. In my opinion it is clear that this is a case which, regarded as a whole, as it ought to be regarded, is one for the Court of Appeal and not for this court.

Collingwood J. I agree. [His Lordship referred to the history of the case, and continued:] The result is, that on the same day, September 7, 1954, the husband (1) invoked the jurisdiction of this court, a condition of his right to do so being that no error of the court at the hearing is alleged, and (2) gave notice to the Court of Appeal, thereby clearly challenging the correctness of the decision of the trial judge, albeit in a separate document. That application has not been withdrawn, and is still pending.

As Lord Merriman P. has said, there have been a number of decisions with regard to the limitation on the jurisdiction of this court under rule 36, and it is not necessary to go into them in any detail, more particularly because the law on the matter was exhaustively reviewed by Evershed M.R. in Prince v. Prince.[3] There are two short passages to which I would like to refer in that decision. After considering the early history of the rule and Winter v. Winter,[4] Evershed M.R. said[5]: "Up to this point "the Divisional Court had not considered any application for a "rehearing of a cause in which there had been a conflict of "evidence on vital matters, and in which the loser was seeking "to obtain a rehearing on the ground that fresh evidence was "available which would put an entirely different complexion on "the case. In such a case, if the Divisional Court has exclusive "jurisdiction to order a rehearing, such power obviously trenches "on the general jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal to make a "similar order." After pointing out that the question whether the Divisional Court had jurisdiction to order a rehearing in such a case was first raised in Petty v. Petty,[6] Evershed M.R. continued[7]: "The application was by the wife for the rehearing "of a contested case, in which the wife asked for a divorce on "the ground of her husband's cruelty and desertion, while the "husband denied those charges and charged the wife with "desertion. Both parties gave evidence and called witnesses. "The judge dismissed the wife's prayer and gave the husband a "decree because he preferred the husband's evidence to that of "the wife. The basis of the wife's application for a rehearing "was that since the hearing she had obtained statements from "several witnesses, whose evidence would persuade the court "that the truth lay with the wife and not with the husband. "Also it was said that the preparation of the wife's case had been "interfered with by enemy action." The passage to which I particularly wish to refer follows[8]: "Lord Merriman P., in the "course of his judgment, said: 'We feel that the peculiar juris-"'diction vested in this court by rule 36 (1) should only be "'exercised in cases in which it is plain that this court is "'intended to have the jurisdiction to the exclusion of the Court "'of Appeal.'" Evershed M.R. then continued[9]: "After "reviewing the history of the jurisdiction now embodied in the "rule, Lord Merriman P. said that, in his view, it was impossible "to attach to the word 'error' in the rule any interpretation or "limitation based solely on any part of the earlier history of the "court. 'It is much more likely,' he continued, 'that the words "'were deliberately chosen as being apt to impose a limitation

[3] [1951] P. 71.
[4] [1942] P. 151; 58 T.L.R. 365; [1942] 2 All E.R. 390.
[5] [1951] P. 71, 78.
[6] [1943] P. 101; 59 T.L.R. 385; [1943] 2 All E.R. 511.
[7] [1951] P. 71, 78.
[8] Ibid. 79.
[9] Ibid.

1955

WELLS-KING v. WELLS-KING.

Collingwood J.

"'on our special jurisdiction to order a rehearing notwith-
"'standing the vesting in the Court of Appeal of the general
"'right to deal with such applications from this Division.' Lord
"Merriman P., when presiding in the Court of Appeal in the "recent case of Everitt v. Everitt,[10] again emphasized this limitation of the jurisdiction of the Divisional Court under rule 36. "He said[11]: 'In dealing with cases under rule 36 of the Matri-
"'monial Causes Rules, 1947, the Divisional Court has always "'been careful to avoid any semblance of trespassing on the "'exclusive jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal: Petty v. Petty[12]
"'and Peek v. Peek[13]; although if the Divisional Court is "'satisfied that a case comes within the rule it is bound to deal
"'with it, as I pointed out in the Divisional Court in Peek v.
"'Peek,[13] because no other court can do so.'"

Applying those principles to the present case, it is quite clear that in the absence of any allegation of error the discovery, after the hearing before the commissioner, of a hitherto undiscovered adultery by the petitioner, would be a ground for application under rule 36. An outstanding example of that is Alhadeff v. Alhadeff.[14] But the fact remains that in the present case it is abundantly clear that the husband is alleging error on the part of the trial court, and that is so whether one does or does not have regard to the existence of the notice of motion to the Court of Appeal.

The limitations which have been placed upon the jurisdiction of this court in those passages which I read from the judgment of Lord Merriman P., however, exclude the case put forward today on behalf of this respondent from our consideration. Finally, I agree with what Lord Merriman P. has said with regard to the evidence which it is proposed to bring with reference to the adultery by the wife in this case. The sexual life of the parties here, certainly from 1948 onwards (and that is the date when the association with the named man is alleged to have begun) is of vital import in the case. The question Aye or No: Was there an adulterous association on the part of the wife at that time? is of paramount importance in two regards: (1) as throwing light on the charges of abnormality which she brings against her husband, and (2) as affording a possible cause to which her nervous and mental condition was referable.

This matter should be dealt with by the Court of Appeal, and not this court.

Application dismissed.

Solicitors: Gustavus Thompson & Sons for Herrington & Carmichael, Camberley; Kinch & Richardson for Close & Son, Camberley.

J. B. G.

[10] 65 T.L.R. 121; [1948] 2 All E.R. 545.
[11] 65 T.L.R. 123.
[12] [1943] P. 101; 59 T.L.R. 385; [1943] 2 All E.R. 511.
[13] 64 T.L.R. 429; [1948] 2 All E.R. 297.
[14] [1951] W.N. 367.

[CHESTER ASSIZES.]

*REGINA v. CHARLSON.

1955
Feb. 11.

Barry J.

Criminal Law—Wounding—Causing grievous bodily harm with intent to murder—Causing grievous bodily harm with intent to cause grievous bodily harm—Unlawful wounding—Defence that wounds inflicted while accused in state of automatism—Defence of insanity not raised—Onus on the prosecution to prove conscious acts.

The accused was charged with causing grievous bodily harm with intent to murder his son, causing him grievous bodily harm with intent to cause him grievous bodily harm, and unlawful wounding. No plea of insanity was raised. Medical evidence was given to the effect that the accused was not suffering from such a disease of the mind as to render him insane at the time of the commission of the acts; but that his actions were consistent with his having a cerebral tumour, a condition in which a person is liable to an outburst of impulsive violence, quite motiveless, and over which he has no control.

In his charge to the jury, the judge said that if they were satisfied that, owing to his condition, the accused did not knowingly strike his son, but was acting as an automaton without any knowledge of, or control over, his acts, it was open to them to return a verdict of Not Guilty on all three charges.

TRIAL ON INDICTMENT.

The accused Stanley Charlson, was charged on an indictment with the following offences: unlawfully and maliciously causing grievous bodily harm with intent to murder, contrary to section 11 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861; unlawfully and maliciously causing grievous bodily harm with intent to cause grievous bodily harm, contrary to section 18 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861; and unlawful wounding, contrary to section 20 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861.

At the trial the following facts were proved or admitted: The accused, who was a shopkeeper, lived in a house the back room windows of which overlooked a river two feet deep. The accused called his ten-year-old son Peter into the back room telling him that there was a rat to be seen standing on a stone in the river. When the boy came to the window the accused picked up a wooden mallet from the floor and struck the boy twice on the head, breaking the skin of the scalp and causing blood to flow. The boy tried to defend himself from further attack by wrapping his head in a towel. The accused thereupon picked the boy up and threw him out of the window. The boy fell twenty-five feet into the river and suffered severe injuries to his leg and arm. He eventually managed to crawl out of the river and call for assistance.

When the accused was interviewed by the police he appeared to be very distressed and bewildered. He admitted that he had struck the boy but he did not know why he had done so. A full account of his statements to the police and his demeanour upon apprehension is given below in the judge's charge to the jury. The material parts of his statement made under caution are also given.

[Reported by A. KYNRIC LEWIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

1955

Regina v. Charlson.

Evidence was given by the prison medical officer that the accused was sane and that he had no disease of the mind whatsoever. On the other hand, clinical examination and the history of the case pointed to the possibility that the accused was suffering from a cerebral tumour, in which case he would be liable to a motiveless outburst of impulsive violence over which he would have no control at all; and during such an outburst he would not know the difference between right and wrong.

H. Emlyn Hooson for the Crown.

D. Eifion Evans Q.C. and Philip Owen for the accused.

Barry J. (in his summing-up to the jury). Members of the jury; on any view you may think this is a very pathetic case. You have heard from the police officers, from other witnesses, and from the accused's own wife, the type of man he is. It is not disputed by the prosecution that he has been throughout his married life a very devoted husband and father, and there is nothing to suggest—indeed there is everything to suggest the contrary—that he and this little boy had any serious differences at all.

It is clear that he was a very devoted and indulgent father, and that he and his little son got on very well together. Such is the man who faces these very serious charges.

The charges are three in number. The first and most serious one is the charge of causing grievous bodily harm to this little boy—Peter Stanley Charlson—with intent to murder him. The second alternative charge, which is somewhat less serious than the first, is a charge of causing grievous bodily harm to this little boy with the intention of causing him grievous bodily harm. The third and least serious of the three charges, is the charge of inflicting grievous bodily harm upon this boy without any specific allegation as to his intention.

No plea of insanity is raised in this case. If the facts warrant it, it is always open to an accused person to say: "I "was guilty of the offence with which I am charged, but at the "time I committed the offence I was insane and therefore "should not be punished for what I did." That is a defence which has not been raised in this case. Indeed, you have heard from the medical officer of Her Majesty's Prison in Manchester that the accused man is sane and that he is not suffering from any disease of the mind.

That, however, does not conclude the matter. The prosecution have to prove the case against him. What have the prosecution to prove in relation to each of the three alternative charges? With regard to all of them they have to prove that the accused caused some grievous bodily harm to his son. There has been no dispute about the facts here. The defence accept the story told to you by this little boy about what happened on the evening of January 13, 1955; and they do not suggest that those blows upon the head did not amount to grievous bodily harm, quite apart from the injuries which the boy sustained when he fell into this shallow water from the window of the back room nearly 25 feet above. Therefore you need not trouble about that aspect of the case when considering any of these three alternative charges.

However, the prosecution must prove more than that. In relation to the first two charges it is necessary for the prosecution to prove the intention alleged in the indictment. That is to say, in relation to the first charge, the prosecution must satisfy you not only that the accused man did cause grievous bodily harm to his son, but also that at the time he did so he intended to murder this boy. Nothing short of that will suffice. Both the act of causing grievous bodily harm and the intent to murder must be established to your complete satisfaction.

The burden of proof rests upon the prosecution, who must satisfy you as to all the essential elements of each of the offences with which the accused is charged; it is not for him to prove his innocence. If you are in any doubt about the matter, then the accused is entitled to an acquittal.

Similar considerations apply to the second charge of causing grievous bodily harm with the intention of causing that grievous bodily harm. There again, the prosecution has not only to prove that the accused did inflict those injuries upon his son, they must also prove that when he inflicted the injuries he intended to do some serious injury to the boy.

Lastly there is the charge of inflicting grievous bodily harm and in relation to that the prosecution need not prove a definite intent either to murder or to inflict grievous bodily harm, as would be the case in relation to the first two charges. They do have to prove, however, that the grievous bodily harm was caused by the accused unlawfully and maliciously. That means that there must be a conscious act on the part of the accused. Malice does not necessarily involve the existence of some hostility to the person injured. It does, however, mean that the act must be done consciously. The accused, in order to commit an unlawful and malicious act, must know what he is doing, and also he must realize that he has no lawful justification for his act.

These are all criminal offences and the first two charges are of offences of the very utmost gravity. In order to commit any of these three offences there must be some sort of guilty mind. For example, an act that otherwise might be an assault would not be an assault if it were done purely accidentally. You or I in a public street might suddenly put our hands up to stop our hat being blown off and hit a passer-by on the nose without knowing he was there. If we had consciously put out our hands, whatever the motive, to hit the passer-by on the nose, it would be an assault; but it would have to be a conscious act. If it were purely accidental, no assault would be committed; the element of consciousness would not be present.

1955

REGINA v. CHARLSON.

Barry J.

Similarly in the case of certain diseases, a person suffering from a disease may be deprived of the control of his actions. We all of us know something about the effects of epilepsy and the actions of a man who is suffering at any given moment from an epileptic fit. A man in the throes of an epileptic fit does not know what he is doing. Thus if a friend bends over to assist the epileptic and in the midst of his fit the latter grips that friend by the throat, not knowing what he is doing, and in so doing throttles him and causes his death no offence has been committed against the criminal law; because the actions of an epileptic are automatic and unconscious, and his will and his consciousness are not applied to what he is doing; he is not in control of his actions. Let us apply those principles to the facts of the present case. [His Lordship referred to the boy's evidence and continued:] You have got to consider the whole of the evidence and apply your minds to each of these charges in turn. When you consider the first count you must ask yourselves whether there is anything in this case which could possibly justify you in reaching the view that this man really intended to murder his son. You remember that that intent to murder must be brought home to the accused with certainty. If you think it has not been proved, and there is nothing in the evidence to justify the conclusion that this man had a conscious intention of murdering his son, then you would proceed to the second alternative charge and consider that with equal care. Again, members of the jury, you will look at the whole picture. You will consider the sort of man that the accused was, and you will consider all the events leading up to the very tragic incidents which resulted in these injuries to the boy.

He was invited by his father to go and look at a rat which his father had seen below the window which was just above the river, and he did so. He did nothing which could have annoyed any parent, and the boy does not suggest that his father showed any signs of annoyance with him before he struck him in this way. All these are matters which you have to consider in addition, of course, to the evidence of the prison doctor. You have to ask yourselves whether, having regard to those circumstances, you ought to infer that the accused did have a real intention of causing serious injury to his son.

The intention of the accused can, of course, only be inferred from all the circumstances which have been proved before you. Neither you nor I can ever look into the mind of an accused person and say with positive certainty what his intention was at any particular time. A jury is entitled to infer a man's intentions from his acts. As you were rightly told by the counsel for the prosecution when this case was opened, under normal circumstances a man is presumed to intend the normal consequences of his acts. If a man consciously and deliberately strikes another man or woman with a mallet of this kind, in ordinary circumstances any jury would feel entitled to say that he must have intended to do some serious injury. You cannot strike people on the head with a mallet or stab them in the chest with a knife, without the extreme probability that serious injury will result; and therefore, other circumstances being equal, the jury is perfectly entitled to infer the intent from the mere act itself.

However, that is not an inference which must always be drawn. You should look at all the surrounding circumstances and ask yourselves what inference should be drawn in the present case. You may think, and it is open to you to think, that although an ordinary person under ordinary circumstances must inevitably have intended to do injury by using a mallet of this kind on the head of a little boy, none the less you are not satisfied that this particular man had that intention, owing to the state of his health as we now know it, and having regard to his relationship with the boy, and also to the lack of any provocation on the part of the boy or any motive of any kind for the crime.

It is for you to look at the whole of the circumstances and, having done so, to make up your minds whether it has been established to your satisfaction that the accused, when he inflicted those injuries, intended to do grievous bodily harm to his son. If you are not satisfied that that intention was there, then there must also be a verdict of not guilty on the second of those alternative charges, and you would have to consider the third.

As I have told you, no specific intention need be proved by the prosecution before the accused can be found guilty of the third charge of inflicting grievous bodily harm. You must, however, be satisfied that he was acting consciously and that he knew what he was doing when he inflicted those blows. If he did, however much his mind was disturbed and whatever mitigating circumstances there might be, he would be guilty of this offence. If he knew that he was striking his son, and realized that he had no legal excuse for striking him, as clearly he had not, and if he did that act consciously and of his own volition, then he would be guilty of inflicting grievous bodily harm.

Therefore, in considering this third charge you have to ask yourselves whether the accused knowingly struck his son, or whether he was acting as an automaton without any knowledge of or control over his acts. If you think that he was in a condition similar to that of a person in an epileptic fit, who does not know what he is doing at all, then the elements of malice and unlawfulness would not have been established. If the accused knew that he was striking the boy, and if he realized that he had no legal justification for what he was doing, then he is guilty of the charge. If you are left in doubt about the matter, and you think that he may well have been acting as an automaton without any real knowledge of what he was doing, then the proper verdict would be "not guilty," even on the third and least serious of these alternative charges.

1955

REGINA v. CHARLSON.

Barry J.

There is the evidence of a doctor on the vital issue of the accused's consciousness and the existence of any intention on his part at the time that these acts were committed. There is nothing in the boy's evidence or that of any other witness which suggests any sort of provocation or motive for these acts. There is also the evidence of the accused; and reading between the lines from his wife's evidence it appears that he was almost too lenient with his son and on occasions it was she who had to do the correcting when he had done wrong. There was nothing strange about the accused's actions or words before these acts were committed, and the little boy did not suggest that there had been anything untoward in any of his acts before this attack.

What happened afterwards? We have got his statement, and you will be able to take that with you when you retire to consider your verdict. He has given his account of what he remembers. You will remember that he describes how they got into this back room (I need not go through that again), and that the rat had gone. Then he said: "I kicked something on the floor "and I saw that it was the big joiners' mallet that's usually kept "in the drawer. I picked it up to put it back in the drawer. I "remember hitting Peter on the head with the mallet. I do not "know why I hit him, but I do remember hitting him."

He then says: "The next thing I remember was being in "Openshaw in my car." Of course, to remember something does not necessarily mean that one remembers the conscious act. You have got to ask yourselves: when he took this mallet into his hand and struck his son, did he know he was doing it? Did he intend to do it, and did he realize he was doing an unlawful act? If he did, then he is guilty of the third charge at least. On the other hand, you may consider that he may not have known what he was doing at all, although perhaps he remembered it in a vague sort of way. If you think it was purely automatic action for which he had no responsibility at all, and over which he had no control, then the proper verdict would be "not guilty."

He says: "The next thing I remember is being in Openshaw "in my car. I had my windjammer and my woollen pullover on. "My raincoat and scarf were on the seat beside me." Then he says: "I stopped, and I knew something dreadful had happened. "I backed into a little side street to think. I knew there was "something about Peter and that I should not be there. I put "my raincoat and scarf on as I felt shivery. I knew I should go "back. I drove back to Stalybridge, and when I got back I saw "a Morris 8 outside my door. I knew it was the police car and "then I knew that something was wrong. I had remembered "when I was driving home that I had hit Peter on the head with " the mallet. I drove round for a while, then I drove the car into " Revell's yard."

Sergeant Stewart then found him, and Sergeant Stewart has given an account of the conversation that he had with him. The conversation, you may think, largely bears out what the accused said in his statement. When the sergeant arrived he found the accused sitting in the driving seat of the car, and his head was bent forward on the steering wheel. The sergeant opened the off-side door and put his light into the car and shone it on to the accused's face. The accused then said very quietly: " My God, " tell me what I have done." Then there was a pause, and the accused went on: " It is something dreadful, isn't it; it's Peter, " isn't it?" The police sergeant said: " I don't know what you " have done; what have you done?" and the accused did not reply. By then it was just after half past nine. He was dazed and bewildered and was trembling violently.

A little later, you may remember, he was seen by Detective-Sergeant Charles Bentley who arrived at Revell's yard after Sergeant Stewart and Constable Merrick. He said to the accused: " I believe you are Mr. Charlson?" and the accused said " Yes." Sergeant Bentley then asked what had happened. The accused said: " I have done something dreadful to Peter "; and he was cautioned and told he would be taken to the police station. Again, according to the detective-sergeant, the accused appeared to be very distressed and was trembling violently. He was given a drink of water at his request, when he arrived at the police station, and Sergeant Bentley said that that seemed to revive him, and he said: " Why did I do it; I have done " wrong; I will have to be punished." The detective-sergeant told him that Peter, the little boy, was in the District Infirmary. He said to the accused: " He is injured, and he says you threw " him into the water." The accused replied: " Why did I do it?"

The detective-sergeant said to him: " Can you tell me what " did happen?" and the accused said: " We were in the back " room looking for a big rat which I had seen on a stone under " the window. I remember hitting Peter, but I don't know why " I did it; I will tell you what I remember." It was at that period that he wrote the statement that has been read to you more than once and the material portions of which I have just again brought to your attention. That is the evidence apart from the medical evidence.

The medical evidence shows that there has been a history of ill-health in the accused's family, and particularly ill-health of a certain kind, the existence of which in the accused is at least suspected by the medical officer of the prison. The accused's mother died of a cerebral haemorrhage; his aunt died of a cerebral tumour; his own sister died of meningitis; and his brother, who is still alive, has had an operation for a mastoid. That is the family history and there is a history of certain complaints which the accused has mentioned to the prison doctor. The accused has told the prison doctor that six or seven years ago he had some trouble with his legs which was then diagnosed as neuritis. No one suggests that what he says is untrue; the prison doctor appears to have accepted it, and there was no reason why he should not accept it. He said that after that he had increasing weakness in his legs and difficulty in co-ordinating their movements. He said that he could walk slowly satisfactorily, but he found difficulty in controlling the movements of his legs if he tried to run. Also he complained of persistent headaches which are sometimes of great severity, so severe as to be quite incapacitating.

1955

REGINA v. CHARLSON.

Barry J.

He was examined by the prison doctor, Dr. Williams, who said this. On clinical examination he found signs of organic disorder of the nervous system which clearly indicated the need for further investigation. Without further investigation the doctor was not going to commit himself to say that this man had got a cerebral tumour. On the other hand, he said that clinical examination and the history of the case pointed at least to that possibility. It may well be that such a tumour exists. If a man or a woman is suffering from a cerebral tumour, says the doctor, he or she is liable to an outburst of impulsive violence, quite motiveless, and over which the patient has no control at all. The doctor does not state positively that that is the inference to be drawn from these events, but he says that it may be; and if a tumour does in fact exist, then the conduct of the accused would be wholly consistent with that of someone suffering from such a disease.

You, members of the jury, must consider this matter; and, of course, the defence involves the accused's statement that he did not know what he was doing, nor what he had done, and so was not in any case responsible for his actions; and that kind of defence requires very careful consideration from a jury. There are, however, circumstances in this case which might lead you to accept that defence more readily than you would do in very many other cases. It is entirely a matter for you to decide.

Looking at the whole of these circumstances, are you satisfied that the accused intended to murder the boy when he caused these injuries to him? If you are so satisfied, beyond any real doubt, then the verdict would be " Guilty " on the first count. A verdict of " Guilty " on the first count means that the remaining two counts need not be further considered. On the other hand, if you are not satisfied that he intended to kill his son, you have to consider the second alternative charge; and there the problem is: are you satisfied beyond any real doubt that, when he inflicted those injuiries, he intended to inflict serious physical injuries to his son? If you are satisfied, the verdict is " Guilty "; if you do not think that intention is proved, then the proper verdict is " Not Guilty." If you find him " guilty " on the second charge, you have no need to proceed to the third count. If you find him " Not Guilty " on the first two charges, the third charge of inflicting grievous bodily harm must receive consideration.

1955

REGINA v. CHARLSON.

Barry J.

There you need not trouble yourselves with these questions of intention. The question is whether the accused knew what he was doing when he struck those blows. If he struck his son with the mallet, knowing what he was doing, and by those blows caused the injuries, then he is guilty of the third charge. If he did not know what he was doing, if his actions were purely automatic and his mind had no control over the movement of his limbs, if he was in the same position as a person in an epileptic fit then no responsibility rests upon him at all, and the proper verdict is " Not Guilty " of all the three charges.

Would you be good enough now to retire and let me know in due course whether you find the accused " Guilty " or " Not " Guilty " of any of the three offences with which he is charged. I will arrange for you to have a copy of the statement before you; and the document which shows that when he was formally charged by the police with this first offence he said: " I did not mean to " kill him; I don't know why I hit him "; and when before the magistrates he was asked if he wished to say anything, he said: " I can only plead Not Guilty to the charge; I would never want " to hurt Peter; I desire to reserve my defence."

Not Guilty on all three counts.

Solicitors: Solicitor, Cheshire County Council; Davis, Hope & Furniss, Glossop.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

* JOHN v. HUMPHREYS.

1955
Mar. 10.

Lord Goddard C.J., Ormerod and Gorman JJ.

Road Traffic—Licence—Driving licence—Onus of proof—Not for prosecutor to prove that the defendant was not the holder of licence—Burden on defendant—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), s. 4 (1).

The defendant, who was charged with driving a motor-vehicle, he not being the holder of a licence, contrary to section 4 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, did not appear in answer to the summons, but wrote to the court admitting the offence. The prosecution, having proved that the defendant drove a motor-vehicle at the time and in the place alleged, called no further evidence, contending that the burden of proving that he was the holder of a licence was on the defendant. The justices were of the opinion that before such burden passed to the defendant, the prosecutor must establish a prima facie case against him and that mere proof that the defendant had driven a motor-vehicle on the road did not establish a prima facie case, and they dismissed the information. On appeal by the prosecutor:—

1955

JOHN v. HUMPHREYS.

Held, that where the obtaining of a licence was by statute a prerequisite to the doing of some act, the onus was on the person doing the act to prove that he had a licence, it being a fact peculiarly within his own knowledge; thus in prosecutions under section 4 (1) of the Act of 1930 it was not for the prosecutor to prove that the defendant was not the holder of a driving licence; accordingly, in the present case, there being evidence that an offence had been committed, in the absence of proof by the defendant that he was the holder of a licence, the justices were bound to convict.

Rex v. Oliver [1944] K.B. 68; 60 T.L.R. 82; [1943] 2 All E.R. 800 applied.

CASE STATED by Bedfordshire justices sitting at Dunstable.

An information was preferred against the defendant, George William Joseph Humphreys, that he on August 14, 1954, in High Street, Dunstable, drove a motor-vehicle, he not being the holder of a licence, contrary to section 4 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930.[1]

The following facts were found by the justices: The defendant on the day and at the place alleged in the information drove a motor-vehicle of which he was the owner. He did not appear in answer to the summons, but a letter to the court purporting to be written by him was read in which he admitted the offence and requested the court to accept a plea of Guilty.

It was contended by the prosecutor that the provisions of section 4 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, constituted an absolute prohibition against a person driving a motor-vehicle on a road unless he was the holder of a licence and that, having proved that the defendant was the driver of the motor-vehicle on the occasion in question, no further evidence by the prosecution was required, and that the burden of proving that he was the holder of a licence was then on the defendant, since it was a fact peculiarly within his own knowledge.

The justices were of opinion that the prosecutor's contention was wrong in law and that before the burden of proving that he was the holder of a licence passed to the defendant, the prosecution must establish a prima facie case against him, and that mere proof that the defendant was driving a motor-vehicle on a road (that not being prima facie a wrongful act) did not establish such a case against him, and that if the prosecutor's contention was correct, the penalty could not be properly assessed as proof would be absent as to the date of expiry of the driving licence previously held, or whether he had in fact ever held such a licence. Accordingly, they dismissed the information.

[1] Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 4: "(1) A person shall not drive a motor "vehicle on a road unless he is the "holder of a licence . . . and if any "person acts in contravention of this "provision, he shall be guilty of an "offence. . . . (5) Any person driving "a motor vehicle on a road shall, on "being so required by a police con- "stable, produce his licence for ex- "amination . . . and if he fails so to "do, he shall be liable to a fine not "exceeding five pounds: Provided "that, if within five days after the "production of his licence was so "required the licensee produces the "licence in person at such police "station as may be specified by him "at the time its production was "required, he shall not be convicted "of an offence under this subsection."

The prosecutor appealed.

Peter Lewis, for the prosecutor, referred to Rex v. Oliver.[2]

The defendant did not appear and was not represented.

LORD GODDARD C.J. This is a case of a very unusual character which raises a point under the Road Traffic Act, 1930, which, so far as I know, has never been considered before. It is a case stated by justices for the county of Bedford, before whom the defendant was summoned for driving a car without a licence. He did not appear, but wrote a letter offering a plea of Guilty.

Unfortunately, at the present moment there is no machinery for enabling a plea of Guilty to be entered in this way by a defendant before a court of summary jurisdiction, although proposals are on foot at the present time for the purpose of saving man-power and expense to allow a person to send a formal plea to the court if he wishes to admit the case. In the present case, the defendant having admitted his offence, the police did not call any evidence except a police officer, who said that he had seen the defendant driving a car in Dunstable. The justices refused to convict because they had no evidence that he had not a licence. The police said that it was for him to prove that he had a licence. The justices were right, as the law is at present, in ignoring the defendant's letter, although I think that if the police could have proved that he was the person who had written the letter, that would have been evidence on which they could have convicted.

Mr. Lewis' point is that section 4 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, says that a person shall not drive a motor-vehicle on a road unless he is the holder of a licence; and that when an Act of Parliament provides that a person shall not do a certain thing unless he has a licence, the onus is always on that person to prove that he has a licence because it is a fact peculiarly within his own knowledge. Rex v. Oliver,[1] to which our attention has been called, after an elaborate review of the authorities, lays that down. Therefore, in theory, I suppose, a police officer who sees a car being driven in the street can always summon the driver of the car and leave it to the driver to prove that he had a licence. Of course, it is not to be contemplated for a moment that police officers would act in such a way; if they did, not only would they have costs given against them, but I should think that very severe steps would be taken. In the present case nothing of that sort happened. Although it is not stated in the case, we have been told, I think quite rightly, in the very unusual circumstances, and it is just as well that the court should know it, especially as the defendant has written to say he agrees with everything said in the case, that a police officer saw

[2] [1944] K.B. 68; 60 T.L.R. 82; [1943] 2 All E.R. 800.

[1] [1944] K.B. 68.

1955

John v. Humphreys.

Lord Goddard C.J.

the defendant nearly run over a child on a pedestrian crossing, and that he took his number but could not stop the car. When inquiries were made in Shropshire, where the car was registered, it could not be found that the defendant had a licence and so he was summoned for driving without a licence. Of course, if he had had a licence, he could have sent it to the clerk of the court and said: "Here is my licence, you can see it"; but the justices thought that as he was not present they could not convict him because there was no evidence, and they said—I can quite understand it, it is a sensible point to take—"If the prosecution's "contention is correct, the penalty could not be properly assessed "as proof would be absent as to the date of expiry of the driving "licence previously held, or whether he had in fact ever held "such a licence." All those things the defendant could have proved if he wanted to. He did not, and therefore I think that this case must go back to the justices with an intimation that there was evidence that an offence was committed, and as the onus was on the defendant to prove that he had a licence, they were bound to convict. If he did not choose to tell the police that he had a licence he must take the consequences and a proper penalty must be imposed. But it is not to be supposed that police officers will take these proceedings merely because they see somebody driving in the street, without having made proper inquiries, or think that there is ground for supposing that the driver had not a licence. In the present case there is every ground for thinking that the defendant had not a licence, and, therefore, there is no reason why he should not be convicted.

Ormerod J. I agree, although I come to the decision with some reluctance, as it seems an extraordinary position that if a police officer sees somebody driving in the street he can cause him to be summoned and put him to proof that he has a licence. There is some ground for my reluctance to be found in subsection (5) of section 4 of the Act of 1930, which provides the machinery for the police to demand a licence, and if the person has not got it, for giving him an opportunity to produce it in the next five days. My first view was that, reading the section as a whole, there must be some evidence to prove that the defendant did not possess a licence, but having regard to the decision in Rex v. Oliver,[2] it appears to me that there is no alternative but to say that this appeal must be allowed, and therefore I agree.

Gorman J. I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Turner & Evans for John Q. Clayton & Co., Luton.

J. F. L.

[2] [1944] K.B. 68.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

* PILINSKI v. PILINSKA

1955
Feb. 18.

Mr. Commissioner Latey Q.C.

Conflict of Laws—Marriage—Validity—Religious ceremony in Germany —No civil ceremony—Failure properly to register the marriage.

The parties, who were Poles, went through a religious ceremony of marriage in the Hamburg area of Germany in August, 1946, but there was no civil ceremony of marriage before a registrar as required by German law. By a decree of August 13, 1948, promulgated under the authority of the Allied Control Commission, religious ceremonies were, however, validated retrospectively if duly registered at Hamburg by December 31, 1950; but the only registration of marriage to be made in the present case was in the register of Papenburg in November, 1947:—

Held, that as the Papenburg registration was made in accordance with a temporary local arrangement between the district registrar and the regimental priest merely to record religious marriage ceremonies, it was not effective to validate the marriage in German law, and as the lex loci celebrationis governed the formalities the marriage in fact celebrated in church was null and void.

Starkowski v. Attorney-General [1954] A.C. 155; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 942; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1272 distinguished.

ISSUE as to validity of a marriage.

The following statement of the facts founded upon the evidence is taken from the judgment: The husband, Josef Pilinski, aged 41 years, who was formerly in the Polish Army serving with the Allied Forces in the late war, presented a petition for divorce on March 18, 1953 against his wife, Maria, née Romowicz, aged 32 years. The petition was amended in May, 1954, by a plea that the marriage was a nullity. On that plea an issue was ordered to be joined with the husband as plaintiff and the wife as defendant.

The plaintiff was a Pole who was called up to the Forces in 1939 when his country was invaded by the Nazis and like many of his compatriots he experienced many vicissitudes before joining the British Forces during the war. In 1946 he was stationed in Germany and having already been on terms of close friendship with the defendant in Poland he arranged for her to come to Germany. She came, and she was then suffering from consumption. He agreed to marry her so that she could go into hospital as a soldier's wife. They were both Roman Catholics and they went through a ceremony of marriage at the parish church at Tinnen, in the Hamburg area of Germany, on August 4, 1946, with the regimental priest officiating. There was never at any time a civil ceremony of marriage between them. Four days later she went into hospital. In May, 1947, the husband was transferred to England and in the autumn of that year the wife came to England also. She went into hospital and they never lived together again.

1955

PILINSKI v. PILINSKA.

Mark Smith for the husband.
John Latey for the wife, who offered no opposition.

Mr. COMMISSIONER LATEY, Q.C., stated the facts and continued: In August, 1946, the German law was that only a civil marriage before a registrar was valid. That was the German law even before the war and it is still the law. Non-civil marriages are void ab initio. (See Foreign Office Manual of German Law, 1950, vol. I, paragraph 488.) An expert in German law drew to my attention the fact that on August 13, 1948, a German decree was promulgated under the authority of the Allied Control Commission, the effect of which was to validate such marriages as this retrospectively if duly registered at the register office at Hamburg not later than December 31, 1950. The reference for that decree is Ordinance Gazette for the British Zone at page 238. This proviso was peremptory and laid down the time limit for registration.

The marriage certificate on the file purported to be a copy of the marriage entry in the register of Papenburg, bearing date November 18, 1947. On this a question arose that this might be registration within the meaning of the 1948 decree; but the expert in German law had taken pains to clear up this point himself. He received official communications from the marriage registrars at Papenburg and Hamburg, which, he assured me, would be admissible evidence in the German courts, to the effect (a) that this registration was merely a local and temporary arrangement between the district registrar and the then Polish regimental priest, placing on record that there had been a religious marriage ceremony; and (b) that this registration was not effective to validate the marriage in German law.,

The Hamburg marriage registrar in his declaration also referred to similar decrees dated March 17, and December 2, 1950, regarding "the recognition" of emergency marriage ceremonies, applications for which could not be entertained after December 31, 1951. I do not know if these decrees are at all relevant to this case as I have not seen their terms, but clearly December 31, 1951, was the last date for registration under those decrees also. The Hamburg marriage registrar also said in this communication that there had been no such registration at Hamburg in regard to this ceremony in what was the main register office for the district in which the ceremony was performed.

In English law the validity of a marriage abroad, unless it comes within the ambit of the Foreign Marriage Acts, 1892 to 1947, is governed as to form and formalities by the lex loci celebrationis, on the well-known authority of Berthiaume v. Dastous,[1] per Lord Dunedin, and therefore as the peremptory proviso of registration was not complied with in time or at all the retrospective decree

[1] [1930] A.C. 79, 83; 45 T.L.R. 607.

1955

PILINSKI v. PILINSKA.

Mr. Commissioner Latey Q.C.

or decrees did not validate this invalid marriage. In Starkowski v. Attorney-General [2] there was a religious ceremony of marriage between two Poles in Austria. In that case there was a retrospective validating decree with a proviso as to registration which was complied with and therefore it validated the originally invalid marriage.

Therefore on this issue the husband here succeeds. There was not a valid marriage, and on his petition I pronounce a decree nisi of nullity.

Decree nisi of nullity.

Solicitors: How, Davey & Lewis; Roche, Son & Neale for Lucas, Butter, Williams & Goude, Whitchurch, Shropshire.

J. B. G.

[2] [1954] A.C. 155; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 942; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1272 (H.L.); aff. [1952] P. 302; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 606; [1952] 2 All E.R. 616 (C.A.); aff. [1952] P. 135; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 851; [1952] 1 All E.R. 495.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.]

C. C. A.

1955
Feb. 28;
Mar. 7.

Lord Goddard C.J., Ormerod and Gorman JJ.

*REGINA v. BLANDFORD.

REGINA v. FREESTONE.

Criminal Law—Practice—Venue—Receiving—Offences not committed in county where tried—Appellants not resident in county—Other persons resident in county summonsed for similar offences committed there—Criminal Justice Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 86), s. 11 (1) —Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 55), s. 1 (2) (b).

The appellants, F. and B., were separately indicted and convicted at Montgomery Quarter Sessions for receiving stolen property. F. received the goods in Stafford and B. in Southampton. At the hearing of the appeal, it was stated that the appellants were tried in Montgomeryshire because other persons resident in that county were summonsed to appear before examining justices there charged with receiving in Montgomeryshire similar property stolen from the same prosecutors. On the question whether the Montgomery Quarter Sessions had jurisdiction to deal with the offences since the appellants neither resided, nor received the goods, in that county:—

Held, that the examining justices would not have had jurisdiction to issue a summons returnable before them for offences committed in Stafford and Southampton had it not been that other persons were being summonsed or brought up in custody at the same time and place for similar offences, but the fact that there was a nexus between the offences charged against the other persons and that in respect of which the appellants were summonsed brought the case within section 1 (2) (b) of the Magistrates' Courts Act,

C. C. A.

1955

Regina v. Blandford. Regina v. Freestone.

1952 [1]; accordingly, the summonses were "lawfully issued" within section 11 (1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1925,[2] and the quarter sessions had jurisdiction.

Per curiam. A justice acting under section 1 (2) (b) should bear in mind that it is not only the interests of the prosecution that are at stake, but also the interests of the defendants.

Appeals against conviction and sentence.

The appellants, Gordon Nightingale Freestone and Harold Percy Blandford, were separately indicted before the Montgomery Quarter Sessions for receiving goods in Stafford and Southampton respectively. The summonses had been issued on October 20, 1954, together with summonses against other persons charged with receiving similar stolen goods from the same owners. In two of the cases the property was received in Montgomeryshire by persons resident in the county and in one in London. The thieves involved had been convicted on September 27, 1954. Freestone and Blandford were convicted.

P. L. W. Owen for Blandford.
H. G. Talbot for Freestone.
Emlyn Hooson for the Crown.

Turf Publishers Ld. v. Davies [3] was referred to in argument.

Cur. adv. vult.

Mar. 7. Lord Goddard C.J. read the following judgment: These two appellants were separately indicted and convicted before the quarter sessions for the County of Montgomery for receiving stolen goods. Freestone was sentenced to five years' imprisonment and Blandford to 18 months, and both appealed against sentence. On the case coming before the court it did not appear, from such information as we had, how the quarter sessions of Montgomery had jurisdiction to deal with the offences as, though the property was stolen in that county, the goods the subject of the charge against Freestone were received by him in the County of Stafford and the receipt by Blandford was in the County Borough of Southampton. We accordingly directed that the appeal should be treated as an appeal against conviction as well as against sentence, and directed that the prosecution should be represented in order that we might hear on what grounds it was suggested there was jurisdiction in the quarter sessions.

[1] Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, s. 1: "(2) A justice of the peace for "a county or borough may issue a "summons or warrant under this "section—. . . (b) if it appears to the "justice necessary or expedient, with "a view to the better administration "of justice, that the person charged "should be tried jointly with, or in "the same place as, some other per- "son who is charged with an offence, "and who is in custody, or is being "or is to be proceeded against, within "the county or borough; . . ."

[2] Criminal Justice Act, 1925, s. 11: "(1) A person charged with "any indictable offence may be pro- "ceeded against, indicted, tried and "punished in any county or place in "which he was apprehended, or is in "custody on a charge for the offence, "or has appeared in answer to a "summons lawfully issued charging "the offence . . ."

[3] [1927] W.N. 190.

Before 1925 the venue in the case of receiving was governed by section 39 (3) of the Larceny Act, 1916, and that subsection enabled a receiver to be indicted, tried and punished in that part of the United Kingdom where he received the property in the same manner as if it had been originally stolen or taken in that part. The law relating to venue in indictable offences was altered and extended by section 11 (1) of the Criminal Justice Act, 1925, which provided that a person charged with any indictable offence may be proceeded against, indicted, tried and punished in any county or place in which he was apprehended, or is in custody on a charge for the offence, or has appeared in answer to a summons lawfully issued charging the offence. These two men appeared before the justices sitting as examining justices on summonses issued on October 20, 1954, the thieves concerned having been convicted at the quarter sessions on September 23. It seems, therefore, that we have to consider whether the summonses on which they appeared were lawfully issued.

On the hearing of the appeal, counsel for the prosecution informed the court that the reason why the appellants were summoned to Montgomeryshire was because other persons resident in that county were summoned to appear at the same court also charged with receiving in Montgomeryshire similar property stolen from the same prosecutors, and he contended that the provisions of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, authorized in these circumstances proceedings being taken in that county. Counsel for both appellants agreed that the facts were as stated by counsel for the prosecution, and that as both of them had full knowledge of the facts, having represented the appellants below, we did not think it necessary to call for formal evidence on the point.

We have now, therefore, to consider the provisions of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, which, as the long title shows, is a consolidation Act relating to the jurisdiction of, and the practice and procedure before, magistrates' courts. The Act, in effect, deals with the practice and procedure both where the magistrates are sitting as a court of summary jurisdiction and where they are sitting as examining magistrates under the Indictable Offences Act, 1848. By section 1 (2) (b) it is provided that a justice may issue a summons or warrant if it appears to him necessary or expedient, with a view to the better administration of justice, that the person charged should be tried jointly with, or in the same place as, some other person who is charged with an offence, and who is in custody, or is being or is to be proceeded against, within the county or borough. By section 2 (3) a magistrates' court shall have jurisdiction as examining justices over any offence committed by a person who appears or is brought before the court, whether or not the offence was committed within the county or borough. In our opinion the words " who appears " refer to a person appearing on a summons and the words " is brought before the court " refer to a person brought before the court in custody as the result of an arrest with or without a warrant. So far as this case is concerned we are dealing with a summons and in our opinion the words " who " appears " must mean " appears on a summons lawfully issued." If the person has appeared on a summons lawfully issued, then section 9 directs the magistrates, if they commit for trial, to commit him to quarter sessions or assizes as the case may be for the place where he is to be tried, and by subsection (2) it is provided that if a magistrates' court proposes to commit a person for trial before a court of assize or quarter sessions that has jurisdiction to deal with the offence by virtue only of subsection (1) of section 11 of the Criminal Justice Act, 1925, provisions are made enabling them in case of hardship to commit to another court of trial, and provision is made for appeal to the High Court if the accused considers that the magistrates' decision would cause him hardship. As the magistrates did commit under this section to the Montgomery Quarter Sessions we are thrown back again to section 11 (1) of the Act of 1925 and must consider whether the summons was lawfully issued.

C. C. A.
1955
REGINA v. BLANDFORD. REGINA v. FREESTONE.

It is quite clear that, but for the fact that other people were being summoned or being brought up in custody at the same time and place, the magistrates would not in our opinion have had jurisdiction to issue a summons returnable before them for offences committed in Staffordshire and Southampton, but the facts of which we have now been apprised appear to bring the case within section 1 (2) (b) of the Act of 1952. That section operates although the persons are not to be tried jointly. It is enough if some other person is charged with an offence and that must mean an offence connected with the offence in which the summons has been issued against the other defendant. The justice has to consider whether or not it is necessary or expedient with a view to the better administration of justice that the defendants should be summoned to what may be called a foreign jurisdiction. The fact that persons resident within that jurisdiction are being charged with offences so similar or closely connected that the witnesses for the prosecution or some of them will be the same in both cases may, we think, be a good reason for the justice exercising the discretion vested in him by the section. Further, it is a matter which can properly be considered that, where there are offences which are so similar or closely connected, uniformity in treatment of the accused persons may be desirable. The High Court could only interfere by means of prohibition or certiorari if there was no ground on which the justice could exercise his discretion, and had there been no such ground, no doubt this court could have quashed the conviction because of the lack of jurisdiction. We cannot limit the words " an offence " so that in this case it would be confined to the theft of the goods; but as we have already said, there must be some nexus between the offence charged against the other person and that in respect of which the summons under consideration was issued.

We desire, however, to emphasize that a justice acting under this subsection should bear in mind that it is not only the interests of the prosecution that are at stake but also the interests of the defendants. While it may be very convenient and economical from the point of view of the prosecution that they should be able to proceed in a particular county, it must be remembered that to bring a man, as in this case, from Hampshire to North Wales is a very serious matter. It would necessarily cause him considerable expense and might put very great difficulties in the way of the preparation and presentment of his defence and the calling of witnesses. We are not saying that any injustice or any undue hardship was caused in this case, and as the section empowered the justice to issue the summons and we find it impossible to say there were not grounds on which he could exercise his discretion, it follows that the defendants could be lawfully committed to the Montgomery sessions, and, accordingly, this appeal fails.

Appeals against convictions dismissed. Sentences varied.

Solicitors: Churchill, Clapham & Co. for Richard George & Jenkins, Newtown; Kingsford, Dorman & Co. for Argyle & Sons, Tamworth; Milwyn Jenkins & Jenkins, Newtown.

C. J. E.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* PRACTICE DIRECTION.

(GUARDIANSHIP OF INFANTS ACTS, 1886 AND 1925.)

Practice and Procedure—Infant—Guardianship—Appeals from county courts or courts of summary jurisdiction—Reasons for decision below to be lodged with application for directions—Guardianship of Infants Acts, 1886 and 1925 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 27 and 15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 45).

Order 55A, rule 6 (4) of the Rules of the Supreme Court provides that within 10 days after service of the notice of motion which originates an appeal from an order made or refused under the Act of 1886 or the Act of 1925, the appellant shall obtain an appointment for the purpose of obtaining the judge's directions as to the hearing of the appeal.

Before giving such directions and deciding (inter alia) whether the parties shall be permitted to adduce further evidence, the judge will require to see and consider the reasons upon which the county court judge, or the justices, made the order under appeal.

1955

PRACTICE DIRECTION.

The appellant's solicitors should therefore apply for a statement of the reasons for the decision complained of, and lodge it with the judge's clerk when obtaining the above-mentioned appointment.

By direction of Mr. Justice Roxburgh.

W. S. JONES,
Chief Registrar,
Chancery Division.

March 14, 1955.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1955
Feb. 15, 16.

Wynn-Parry J.

* ATID NAVIGATION CO. LD. v. FAIRPLAY TOWAGE & SHIPPING CO. LD.

[1953 A. 1727.]

Practice and Procedure—Parties—Joinder of parties—Defendants' application to add further defendants—Sole purpose to assist on counterclaim—No jurisdiction—R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 11.

The discretionary jurisdiction of the court under R.S.C., Ord. 16, r. 11, on application by the defendants to join additional defendants against the wishes of the plaintiffs does not extend to the case where the sole purpose of the defendants' application is to add additional plaintiffs in their counterclaim, and the presence of the additional parties is not necessary for the determination of the issues as pleaded between the plaintiffs and the defendants.

Dictum in Norris v. Beazley (1877) 2 C.P.D. 80 applied.

PROCEDURE SUMMONS.

The defendant company applied under Ord. 16, r. 11,[1] of the R.S.C. for an order that there should be added as defendants two limited companies, the Borchard Shipping Agency Ld. and Borchard (United Kingdom) Ld., and that the defendant company be at liberty to amend their counterclaim by adding those two additional defendants as plaintiffs to the counterclaim.

The action was started by a specially indorsed writ issued in the Queen's Bench Division on June 6, 1953, asking for an order that the defendants should pay to the plaintiffs £65,900 as money lent and interest. On an application under Ord. 14, for summary

[1] R.S.C. Ord. 16, r. 11: ". . . The "Court or a Judge may, at any stage "of the proceedings, either upon or "without the application of either "party, and on such terms as may "appear to the court or a judge to be "just, order that . . . the names of "any parties, whether plaintiffs or "defendants, who ought to have been "joined, or whose presence before the "court may be necessary in order to "enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle "all the questions involved in the "cause or matter, be added. . . ."

judgment in September, 1953, leave to defend was given, and a defence delivered in December, 1953.

In February, 1954, the action was transferred to the Chancery Division. There was also on foot another action in the Chancery Division in which all the parties, who would be parties to this action if the present application were acceded to, were parties except the present defendants. An attempt was made to consolidate that action with the present action which did not succeed.

Following that attempt, the defence in the action was struck out in its entirety and a new defence and counterclaim was delivered on December 14, 1954. That defence was of considerable length and complication, but its terms do not call for report.

F. Ashe Lincoln Q.C. and E. J. Cohn for the defendant company, Fairplay Towage & Shipping Co. Ld.

Eric Falk and Immanuel Goldsmith for the plaintiff company, Atid Navigation Co. Ld.

Cases cited in argument not referred to in the judgment: Dollfus Mieg et Compagnie S.A. v. Bank of England [2]; McCheane v. Gyles (No. 2) [3]; Montgomery v. Foy, Morgan & Co. [4]; Pender and Others v. Taddei [5]; Raleigh v. Goschen [6]; Thoresen v. Graham & Co. [7]

WYNN-PARRY J. having stated the facts continued: I approach this matter bearing in mind that the general rule is that a plaintiff who conceives that he has a cause of action against a defendant is entitled to pursue his remedy against that defendant alone, and he cannot be compelled to proceed against other persons whom he has no desire to sue. But the court is given a discretion by Ord. 16, r. 11—and it is entirely a discretionary jurisdiction—in certain circumstances to compel the plaintiff to join other parties as defendants as a condition of allowing him to proceed with his action.

It is against that general background that I must now embark on the extremely difficult task of attempting an analysis of the defence which has been delivered in this case.

[His Lordship analysed the defence and counterclaim and continued:]

That is the position in which this extremely complicated matter comes before me. It appears to me that, on a fair view of the defence in this action, it is not possible for the defendants to say that the addition of either of the two proposed new defendants is necessary for the determination of the issues raised

[2] [1951] Ch. 33; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 559; [1950] 2 All E.R. 605.
[3] [1902] 1 Ch. 911.
[4] [1895] 2 Q.B. 321; 11 T.L.R. 512.
[5] [1898] 2 Q.B. 798.
[6] [1898] 1 Ch. 73; 14 T.L.R. 36.
[7] (1887) 3 T.L.R. 373.

1955

Atid Navigation Co. Ld. v. Fairplay Towage and Shipping Co. Ld.

Wynn-Parry J.

between the plaintiff company and the defendant company by the statement of claim and defence in this action.

The real defence is a defence of set-off, or, alternatively, a right to have substituted as between the plaintiffs and the defendants a third company as the debtor of the plaintiffs. It appears to me that those two issues can perfectly well be decided in the proceedings as they are at present constituted without bringing in either of the other two proposed defendants. In my view, the defendants' application must stand or fall on their submission that they ought to be allowed to have these two further companies joined as defendants in order that they may become plaintiffs in the counterclaim.

I do not doubt, in view of the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Norbury Natzio & Co. Ld. v. Griffiths,[1] that there is jurisdiction in a proper case to make an order against the will of a plaintiff compelling a plaintiff to join other parties as defendants where one of the circumstances is that the defendants, and proposed further defendants, desire to prosecute a counterclaim against the plaintiff company. But it is to be observed that in Norbury Natzio & Co. Ld. v. Griffiths [1] the court was prepared to proceed on the basis that it was a case of a joint contract, reserving to the trial the question whether or not in fact it was a joint contract. It was, therefore, a case in which the court was persuaded to make the order for the purpose of joining the proposed interveners as defendants. The circumstance that there was a counterclaim to which they would become plaintiffs was treated as an additional ground. I know of no authority which goes so far as saying that the court would make an order, as asked in this case, merely to enable the proposed interveners to join with the existing defendants in prosecuting a counterclaim. Indeed it appears to me that there is no jurisdiction to make such an order. After all, the basis of the whole jurisdiction to add defendants is that there is a cause of action by the plaintiff against not only the existing defendant but the person who would be joined if the application were successful.

In Norris v. Beazley,[2] Lord Coleridge C.J. after referring to Ord. 16, r. 13, as it then stood, said: "It seems to me to be "correctly argued that those words plainly imply that the defen- "dant to be added must be a defendant against whom the "plaintiff has some cause of complaint, which ought to be "determined in the action, and that it was never intended to "apply where the person to be added as defendant is a person "against whom the plaintiff has no claim, and does not desire "to prosecute any."

I hold, therefore, that I have no jurisdiction to make the order asked for.

Apart, however, from the question of jurisdiction, there is also this circumstance to bear in mind. It was made quite clear

[1] [1918] 2 K.B. 369.

[2] (1877) 2 C.P.D. 80, 83, 84.

in Wilson Sons & Co. v. Balcarres Brook Steamship Co.[3] that a defendant is not entitled as of right to have another joint contractor added as a defendant, and that where the proposed further defendant is resident out of the jurisdiction, then, generally speaking, the court ought not to exercise its discretion to order such a person to be joined.

It is quite true here that the two defendants which it is sought to join are resident in the jurisdiction. But it is to be observed (and this is one of the great embarrassments I have had in considering this matter) that there has been joined as a defendant to the counterclaim Barnett Brothers and Borchard Ld., one of the Haifa companies resident out of the jurisdiction. I wish to say no more than I need say at this stage on that matter. I am not to be taken as expressing any view one way or the other as to the success or failure of a summons, if a summons be brought before the court for the purpose of obtaining leave to serve that company out of the jurisdiction.

But I would be entitled to take into account, in weighing this matter and deciding how to exercise my jurisdiction, assuming that I had any, that such a procedure must cause further delay. The matter appears to me to be complicated enough as it is and one which should not be complicated any further than is necessary, and one in which the plaintiffs should not be occasioned any further delay than is necessary. Taking those circumstances into consideration, and reading the defence as I do, I would not be prepared to make the order asked for. The defendants may start further proceedings and later ask for consolidation—that is a matter for them and their advisers to consider—alternatively on the basis that—although this case deals with a right of set-off in the defendants—the defendants may consider that having regard to all the matters pleaded in the defence there is a right of contribution from other parties, in which case third party proceedings might be appropriate.

But having given the matter the best consideration I can I do not feel that this is a case in which, even assuming that I had jurisdiction which in my view I have not, I should exercise it to make the order asked for.

In the result I propose to dismiss the summons. The costs of the plaintiffs will be their costs in any event.

Summons dismissed.

Solicitors: A. Kramer & Co.; Cardew-Smith & Ross.

I. G. R. M.

[3] [1893] 1 Q.B. 422.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1955
Mar. 3, 4, 7.

Barry J.

*CARTWRIGHT v. W. RICHARDSON & CO. LD.

[1952 C. No. 3793.]

Evidence — Evidence Act, 1938 — Admissibility — Action for personal injuries—Written statement made by witness at time of accident —Witness employed by defendants when statement made—Not in defendants' employment when statement signed — Inadmissible in re-examination to vary witness's oral evidence—"Person interested"—Evidence Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 28), s. 1 (1) and (3).

The plaintiff, a chargehand, was injured in an accident which occurred when, in the course of his employment by the defendants, he was, with other employees of the defendants, lowering a heavy tank into a pit by means of a winch. At the hearing of the plaintiff's action for damages against his employers, J., the assistant brakesman on the winch when the accident occurred, gave evidence for the defendants and, after his cross-examination, counsel for the defendants sought to put to the witness in re-examination a written statement made by him shortly after the accident happened, but which he had not signed until some years afterwards when he had left the defendants' employ. The statement differed from the account of the accident which the witness gave in evidence. The defendants claimed that the statement was admissible under section 1 (1) of the Evidence Act, 1938:—

Held, that the Evidence Act, 1938, did not over-rule the ordinary rules of procedure applicable in trials of civil cases, and that, therefore, since J. was not an adverse or hostile witness, the statement was inadmissible in re-examination.

Held, also, that the statement was inadmissible by virtue of section 1 (3) of the Act, since the witness must be regarded as an interested person having been closely associated with the accident and in the defendants' employ at the time the statement was in fact made, and it was immaterial that he had left their employment when the statement was signed.

Action.

The plaintiff, George Cartwright, was employed by the defendants, W. Richardson & Co. Ld., in a building operation, and on November 28, 1951, in the course of his duty, he was required, with other employees of the defendants, to instal a large and heavy cylindrical metal tank which was being lowered into a pit in the ground by means of a winch and wire rope. During the course of the installation the weight of the tank caused the winch to rotate rapidly in reverse and the plaintiff's hand became entangled with and twisted round the driving handle and he sustained permanent injuries. He brought an action for damages against his employers, alleging negligence and breaches of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948. The defendants denied liability.

At the hearing of the action the defendants called as a witness the assistant brakesman on the winch at the time of the accident. After he had given his account of the movements of the tank and the winch at or immediately before the moment when the accident occurred, and had been cross-examined, counsel for the defendants sought to put to the witness in re-examination, by virtue of section 1 of the Evidence Act, 1938,[1] a written statement made by the witness in 1951 shortly after the accident took place to show that he had described some portion of the accident differently at that time. When the statement was made the witness was in the defendants' employ, but he was not employed by them some four years later when he signed the statement. Counsel for the defendants submitted that the material date was the date when the statement was signed and that as the witness was not in the defendants' employ when he signed the statement he was not an interested person so as to render the statement inadmissible under section 1 (3) of the Act.

Objection was taken by counsel for the plaintiff on the grounds (1) that the material date was the date when the statement was made and not when it was signed and that, as the witness was employed by the defendants at the time when he made the statement, it was inadmissible under section 1 (3) of the Act as being made by a person interested; and (2) that having regard to section 3 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865,[2] which also applies to civil actions, the statement was inadmissible unless the witness was an adverse or hostile witness.

G. Glynn Blackledge Q.C. and J. G. Burrell for the plaintiff.
Martin Jukes Q.C. and Peter MacNair for the defendants.

The following cases were cited in argument: Barkway v. South Wales Transport Co. Ld.[3]; Bain v. Moss Hutchison Line Ld.[4]; Evon & Evon v. Noble.[5]

BARRY J. This application made by Mr. Jukes to put the statement to this witness seems to me to raise a point of considerable importance.

[1] Evidence Act, 1938, s. 1: "(1) "In any civil proceedings where "direct oral evidence of a fact would "be admissible, any statement made "by a person in a document and "tending to establish that fact shall, "on production of the original docu-"ment, be admissible as evidence of "that fact if the following conditions "are satisfied, that is to say—(i) if "the maker of the statement either—"(a) had personal knowledge of the "matters dealt with by the state-"ment; . . . and (ii) if the maker "of the statement is called as a wit-"ness in the proceedings: . . .

"(3) Nothing in this section shall "render admissible as evidence any "statement made by a person inter-"ested at a time when proceedings "were pending or anticipated involv-"ing a dispute as to any fact which "the statement might tend to "establish.

[2] Criminal Procedure Act, 1865, s. 3: "A party producing a witness "shall not be allowed to impeach his "credit by general evidence of bad "character; but he may, in case the "witness shall in the opinion of the "judge prove adverse, contradict him "by other evidence, or, by leave of "the judge, prove that he has made "at other times a statement incon-"sistent with his present testimony; ". . ."

[3] [1949] 1 K.B. 54; 64 T.L.R. 462; [1948] 2 All E.R. 460.

[4] [1949] 1 K.B. 51; 64 T.L.R. 473; [1948] 2 All E.R. 294.

[5] [1949] 1 K.B. 222; [1948] 2 All E.R. 987.

1955

Cartwright v. W. Richardson & Co. Ld.

Barry J.

The production of the statement is objected to by Mr. Blackledge on two grounds: first, that the statement was made by a person interested, and secondly, on the ground that, despite the provisions of the Evidence Act, 1938, the statement cannot be put to a witness or put in evidence in re-examination under the circumstances in which Mr. Jukes seeks to produce it in this action.

I am bound to say that, in my judgment, and with the very greatest respect to the opinion of other judges who I am told have allowed statements to be put in in circumstances similar to these, I do not think that it can be put to this witness in re-examination. [His Lordship read section 1 (1) of the Evidence Act, 1938, stated the facts, and continued:] I do not think that the Evidence Act does, or was intended to, overrule the ordinary rules of procedure applicable in the trial of civil actions. Mr. Jukes has, very rightly, not invited me to treat this witness as a hostile witness. Having seen the witness and having heard his evidence it would have been impossible for me to have acceded to any such invitation had it been made.

In these circumstances, as he is not an adverse or hostile witness, I do not think that the provisions of the Evidence Act assist Mr. Jukes in any way. The only purpose of introducing this statement is to show that on an earlier occasion some portion of the account of the accident given by the witness was differently described by him. If such evidence were admissible that might have the result of shaking the faith of the court in the evidence given by him in the witness-box. That does not seem to me to be a proper use of the provisions of the Evidence Act. Except in the case of an adverse witness, I do not think that the fact that a witness has made a previous contradictory statement is a fact which is admissible in evidence in re-examination. In these circumstances, I am not prepared to agree to the statement being used as evidence or being put in as a document as evidence of any relevant or admissible fact. Having regard to the very full description of the accident which the witness has given, his evidence could not be improved upon, but only varied, if this statement were allowed to be admitted. On those grounds primarily I feel bound to hold that the statement should not, at this stage and in these circumstances, be put in evidence.

On the authorities cited to me, it is highly probable that the witness was, in the correct interpretation of that term, a "person "interested" at the time when the statement was made. I think the material time must be the time when the statement was in fact made, and at that time the witness was employed by the defendants. It is true that he was not employed on the brake of the winch, but was merely there to assist the brakesman, but having regard to his very close association with the work being carried out, and to his interest that his employers should be successful in any litigation, I think that he ought to be regarded as a "person interested" at the time that the statement was made. The fact that he was not in the defendants' employment at the time when he merely signed the statement in order to acknowledge that it had been made by him does not, in my judgment, alter the position, which must be judged as at the time when the statement was made.

In those circumstances, on both the grounds submitted by Mr. Blackledge, this statement is inadmissible.

1955

CARTWRIGHT v. W. RICHARDSON & CO. LD.

Barry J.

Statement excluded.

Solicitors: Helder, Roberts & Co. for John A. Behn, Twyford & Reece, Liverpool; Barlow, Lyde & Gilbert.

E. M. W.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* WEST v. NATIONAL MOTOR AND ACCIDENT INSURANCE UNION LD.

C. A.

1955

March 7.

Singleton, Hodson and Romer L.JJ.

Insurance—Warranty—Breach—Rescission of policy—Repudiation of claim—Dwelling-house and contents—Proposal form basis of contract of insurance—Under-statement by assured in proposal form of value of contents — Burglary — Claim by assured — Whether insurance company, having affirmed the policy, were entitled to repudiate the claim.

Contract—Condition.

The claimant, desiring to insure his house and its contents against, inter alia, burglary, signed a proposal form supplied by the respondents, which contained the following clause: "I agree "that this proposal and declaration shall be the basis of the "contract of insurance between the company and myself, and "declare that the above amounts represent the full value of the "property to be insured." He declared the value of the house to be £1,300, and of the contents to be £500. When, some four years later, a burglary occurred and the claimant put forward a claim under the policy to be indemnified, the respondent company, whose assessors had valued the contents of the house at £2,000, repudiated the claim, but did not repudiate the policy. In reply to the court, counsel for the company stated that they did not rely on any particular condition in the policy, but merely on the general principle that they could repudiate a claim when the proposal form contained a material under-statement or a material non-disclosure of value:—

Held, that the respondent company, having affirmed the policy as a good policy, were not entitled to repudiate the claim, and the claimant therefore was entitled to be indemnified for his loss.

Decision of Lord Goddard C.J. affirmed.

APPEAL from Lord Goddard C.J.

In April, 1949, the claimant, wishing to insure his house and its contents against, inter alia, burglary, signed a proposal form

C. A.
1955
West
v.
National Motor and Accident Insurance Union Ld.

supplied by the respondents, the National Motor and Accident Insurance Union Ld., in which he declared the value of the house to be £1,300, and of the contents £500. The proposal form contained the following clause: "I agree that this proposal and "declaration shall be the basis of the contract of insurance "between the company and myself, and declare that: (1) the "above amounts represent the full value of the property to be "insured." A policy dated May 19, 1949, was granted by the respondents and it recited that the proposal form was the basis of the contract. On February 21, 1953, the claimant's house was burgled, jewellery, personal effects and cash were stolen, and he made a claim for £218 10s. 10d. The value of the jewellery, effects and cash having been valued by assessors at £2,000, the respondents, while affirming the policy, repudiated the claim on the ground that the proposal form, which formed the basis of the contract, contained a material under-statement or non-disclosure of the full value of the contents of the house.

On appeal by the claimant, by way of case stated, from the finding of an arbitrator, Lord Goddard C.J. held that the insurers, having affirmed the policy, were not entitled to repudiate the claim.

The respondents appealed.

B. H. Gerrard for the respondents.

I. D. L. Glidewell for the claimant was not called upon.

The following case was cited in argument: Heyman v. Darwins Ld.[1]

Singleton L.J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the Lord Chief Justice, which was given on November 16, 1954. Unfortunately, there was no appearance by the insurance company before the Lord Chief Justice—apparently their advisers did not know that the case was in the List—and so Lord Goddard had not before him the argument which Mr. Gerrard, on behalf of the insurance company, has placed before this court.

The claimant lived in the neighbourhood of Manchester. He was about to go into a house in Cheetham Hill Road, Manchester, in or about April, 1949, and he wished to insure his house and the contents. He was seen by an agent of the respondent company, and signed a proposal form. The premium payable on the building was 2s. 6d. per £100, and on the contents 5s. per £100. The house was valued at £1,300, the contents at £500, and the total premium payable upon those figures was £2 17s. 6d. a year.

In that part of the proposal form which covers the contents of the house there appear the words: "If the value of all gold "and silver articles, jewellery and furs included in the above

[1] [1942] A.C. 356; 58 T.L.R. 169; [1942] 1 All E.R. 337.

" sums exceeds one-third thereof, please state the value," and no value of jewellery was stated. At the foot of the proposal form there are these words: " I agree that this proposal and " declaration shall be the basis of the contract of insurance " between the company and myself, and declare that:—1. The " above amounts represent the full value of the property to be " insured." Thus the claimant, who was signing the proposal form with a view to the insurance of his house and goods in the house, agreed that the proposal and declaration should be the basis of the contract of insurance, and declared that the amounts which he had stated above represented the full value of the property to be insured.

For some years he continued to pay the premium due under the policy, and on February 21, 1953—that is, nearly four years after the date of the proposal form—the house was broken into and jewellery to the value of £530 and personal effects to the value of £26 17s. 6d. and £56 in notes were stolen. After the burglary a claim was made on behalf of the claimant. The precise amount of that claim is not very clear. The figures on the form which Mr. Gerrard passed up to me appear to have been filled in by the insurance company's assessors. Paragraph 12 of the agreed statement of facts reads: " The insured has subse- " quently to repudiation by the company limited his claim to " two hundred and eighteen pounds ten shillings and tenpence, " being one hundred and sixty-six pounds thirteen shillings and " fourpence for the jewellery, twenty-six pounds and seventeen " shillings and sixpence for the personal effects and twenty-five " pounds cash, in accordance with the limits imposed by the " said policy."

The policy, which had been issued on May 19, 1949, and under which the claim was made, began by reciting that the insured had signed a proposal and declaration which he, the insured, " hereby agrees shall be the basis of this contract and " be considered as incorporated therein." The policy granted by the company, so far as material, is in these terms: " Now the " company agrees that in consideration of the payment to the " company of the amount above designated ' First Premium,' " and subject to the terms, exceptions, conditions, and memo- " randa herein contained or endorsed or otherwise expressed " hereon, all of which are to be read as part of the policy and " shall so far as the nature of them respectively will permit be " deemed to be conditions precedent to the right of the insured " to recover hereunder in the event of any of the said contin- " gencies happening within the period from the 13th day of " April 1949 to four o'clock in the afternoon of the 13th day of " April 1950, both days inclusive, and during any subsequent " period in respect of which the insured shall have paid and " the company have accepted payment for the renewal of this " policy, the company will by payment, reinstatement or repair,

C. A.

1955

West v. National Motor and Accident Insurance Union Ld.

Singleton L.J.

"indemnify the insured against loss, damage, and liability as set "out in the schedule hereto."

The schedule, in the part which deals with contents, covers loss or damage to household goods and personal effects other than certain ones excluded under condition 2, "including cash, treasury "notes, and bank notes to an amount not exceeding £25, or 5% "(five per cent.) of the full value of the contents as herein "declared, whichever is the less," and in smaller print there are these words: "The total value of gold and silver articles, "jewellery, and furs shall be deemed not to exceed one-third of "the full value of the contents as above declared, unless specially "agreed herein." Thus the promise of the company is that, so long as the premium is paid and accepted, the company will pay for loss or damage to the household goods, and to jewellery to a certain extent. The policy covered the risk of burglary.

When the claim was made the company sent their assessors to investigate, and they found that, in their view, there was in the house at the time of the burglary jewellery to the value of just over £500, and they appear to have said that at the date of the burglary the contents of the house altogether were worth about £2,000. The claimant does not dispute that. He had put the figure of £500 in the proposal form four years earlier. It is not easy for anyone to declare with accuracy the value of the things which he has in his house, or the value of jewellery of someone else in the house whose goods are covered by the policy, maybe. However, it was accepted, according to the case, by counsel who appeared on the arbitration for the claimant, that the position was such that the insurance company might successfully have repudiated the policy.

The case stated by the arbitrator refers to the agreed statement of facts, and adds: "In addition it was admitted before "me by counsel for the claimant that the respondents, had they "so chosen, could have repudiated the policy on the ground of "misrepresentation and/or non-disclosure of a material fact by "the claimant. It was agreed by counsel for the respondents "that they had not repudiated the policy, but only repudiated "the claim, the subject matter of this arbitration." The case stated exhibits a letter dated August 19, 1953, from the manager of the insurance company, in which it is said: ". . . We confirm "our telephone conversation of today's date, when we said that "we had not repudiated the policy, as it appeared quite clear "from our letter of the 16th June last to Messrs. Arthur R. "Jones Ld., but had repudiated this particular claim . . ." and before the arbitrator that was the position taken up by the company: "We do not repudiate the policy; we might have "done so; we have not done so; we recognize the policy as a "policy in force, but we decline to pay a claim under that policy."

In this court Mr. Gerrard submitted that the company were entitled to repudiate the claim because the proposal was the basis of the contract, and there was a material under-statement in the proposal form. That submission led Romer L.J. to ask him: "Are you relying on any particular condition in the policy?" and Mr. Gerrard said "No! I merely rely upon the general "principle that I can repudiate a claim made when the proposal "form contains a material under-statement or a material non-"disclosure." In other words, there is nothing in the conditions in this policy at which we ought to look; but the submission made on behalf of the insurance company is that though the policy appears to give an indemnity to the assured, and though the policy is recognized as good, the insurance company need not pay a claim under that policy.

There may, of course, arise a case in which an insurance company could refuse to pay a particular claim if the household goods or the jewellery in the house did not belong to a person whose goods were covered by this policy, but nothing of that sort arises. Their case is: "This proposal form contained an "under-statement of the value of the goods; it is the basis of "the contract, and therefore we, the insurance company, are "entitled to say we will not pay a claim." In my judgment, they are not entitled to adopt that attitude if they recognize the policy as a good policy and in force at the material time.

They might, as the Lord Chief Justice said, have repudiated the policy. I do not know whether they would have succeeded, though there is a considerable difference in the amounts. At the same time, property and goods have changed greatly in value in the last few years, and though, as I have said, it appears that the insurance company might have repudiated the policy, they did not endeavour so to do, and the policy remained in force. I do not know or understand the reason for the course they have adopted. It may be that this insurance company does not wish it to be said that they repudiated the policy because of an under-statement of the value of the goods in the house; but if they do not like that to be said about them and so accept the policy as good, they cannot be heard to say that the claim made under the agreement contained in the policy is bad for a reason which would have enabled them to repudiate the policy.

The Lord Chief Justice had before him only the argument on one side. His judgment upon this point seems to me to cover the whole case, and I am content to say that I agree with it, and that the appeal should be dismissed.

Hodson L.J. I also agree with the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice. The claim falls within the clear terms of the policy, and the insurance company cannot repudiate the claim without repudiating the policy. It is quite true the basis of the contract of insurance was the proposal made by the claimant, and that proposal contained a considerable under-valuation of the contents of the house. It was agreed between the parties that, in view of that under-valuation, it was open to the insurers to repudiate the contract altogether. That they did not do; they did not take advantage of the fact that the contract had lost its basis, but proceeded on the footing that the basis remained, and in those circumstances, in my judgment, they cannot resist this claim.

C. A.
1955
West v. National Motor and Accident Insurance Union Ld.

Romer L.J. I agree, and I would only add that I share the distaste with which the Lord Chief Justice regarded policies of this kind, which entitle an insurance company to repudiate all obligation under the policy if it turns out that the assured has under-valued, which he might very well do by mistake, the property which is the subject of the cover.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Hewitt, Woollacott & Chown, for Shaw, Smith & Co., Manchester; Robbins, Olivey & Lake.

A. W. G.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1955
March 2.

Lord Goddard C.J., Ormerod and Gorman JJ.

* REGINA v. PADDINGTON (SOUTH) RENT TRIBUNAL. Ex parte MILLARD.

Landlord and Tenant—Rent tribunal—Furnished premises—Security of tenure—Application for extension of security of tenure made before expiry of previous extension—Application heard by tribunal after expiry of notice to quit and extension of time—Jurisdiction of tribunal—Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949 (12 & 13 Geo. 6, c. 40), s. 11.

A rent tribunal, on an application for an extension of security of tenure under section 11 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, directed that a notice to quit should not have effect until November 30, 1953. On a second application by the tenant made before November 30 the tribunal extended the date until March 10, 1954, on which day a third application by the tenant came before the tribunal for hearing and was adjourned until after the determination of proceedings for possession brought by the landlord in the county court. The landlord's claim for possession was dismissed and the tribunal heard the adjourned application on October 25, 1954, when they held that they had no jurisdiction to determine the application since the notice to quit and extension of time had expired. On an application by the tenant for an order of mandamus:—

Held, that the effect of an application under section 11 (2) (a) of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, was to "freeze" the period at the end of which the notice to quit took effect so that time did not run under the notice to quit until after the tribunal had made their determination, and that, therefore, an extension awarded by a tribunal was in addition to the period of time, if any, which still remained to run under the notice to quit. Accordingly the tribunal had jurisdiction and the tenant would be entitled, if the tribunal thought proper, to a further period of three months in addition to that portion of the extended period which was unexpired when the application was adjourned.

APPLICATION for an order of mandamus.

In October, 1950, the applicant became the tenant of a furnished basement room at No. 48, Leinster Gardens at the weekly rent of £1 1s. under an oral contract of tenancy. On October 9, 1952, on a reference by the applicant under section 2 (1) of the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, the rent tribunal reduced the rent to 10s. a week. On August 21, 1953, the landlord served notice to quit the premises on the applicant who on the same day applied to the tribunal for an extension of security of tenure under section 11 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949.[1] On August 30, 1953, the tribunal directed that the notice to quit should not have effect until November 30, 1953. On November 12 the applicant made a second application under the same section for an extension of security of tenure and the tribunal extended the notice until March 10, 1954. On February 25, 1954, the applicant made a third application to the tribunal for an extension of security of tenure; the application came before the tribunal on March 10, when the landlord applied for an adjournment of the hearing on the ground that proceedings for possession had been commenced in the county court, and the tribunal adjourned the application to a date to be fixed after the determination of the county court proceedings. The landlord had issued a writ for possession in the county court on March 9, and on October 11, 1954, the county court judge dismissed the landlord's claim on the ground that the notice to quit had not expired. On October 12, 1954, the applicant notified the tribunal that the county court proceedings had been determined and on October 25, 1954, the adjourned application of February 25 came before the tribunal for hearing. At the hearing the tribunal raised the question of jurisdiction and after hearing some argument came to the conclusion that they had no jurisdiction because the notice to quit had expired and they declined to determine the application.

[1] Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, s. 11: "(1) Where "a contract to which the Act of 1946 "applies has been referred to a tribunal under that Act, and the "reference has not been withdrawn, "the lessee may, at any time when a "notice to quit has been served and "the period at the end of which the "notice takes effect (whether by virtue of the contract, of the Act of "1946 or of this section) has not "expired, apply to the tribunal for "the extension of that period:

"(2) On an application being made "under this section—(a) the notice to "quit to which the application relates "shall not, unless the application is "withdrawn, have effect before the "determination of the application; "(b) the tribunal, after making such "enquiry as they think fit, and "giving to each party an opportunity "of being heard . . . may direct that "the notice to quit shall not have "effect until the end of such period, "not exceeding three months from "the date at which the notice to quit "would have effect apart from the "direction, as may be specified in the "direction."

1955

Regina v. Paddington (South) Rent Tribunal. Ex parte Millard.

The applicant applied for an order of mandamus directing the tribunal to hear and determine her application on the ground that the tribunal were wrong in law in holding that they had no jurisdiction.

Miss S. Norwood for the applicant.
Rodger Winn for the tribunal.

Ormerod J. stated the facts as set out above, referred to section 11 of the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, and continued: The tribunal formed the opinion that, as the original time for extension of the notice had expired before the county court proceedings were heard and before these proceedings were heard, they had no option but to refuse the application on the ground that the longest period of extension which they could give was a period of three months, which was bound to run from the expiry of the original period of three months, which, of course, had expired long before the last hearing before the tribunal. That, I think, is quite the wrong view to take of the section. The true position is that under subsection (2) (a) the period is, as it were, frozen until the tribunal have come to their determination. There is still a period, or may well still be a period to run either of the original period of notice or of an extended period of notice. Under subsection (2) (b), the maximum amount which the tribunal are entitled to award in addition to whatever period remains is a period of three months, and in those circumstances, the applicant in this case would be entitled, if the tribunal thought it proper, to a further period of three months on anything that remained of the extended period which was still available to her when her application was adjourned. There must, therefore, be an order of mandamus for the tribunal to consider the matter on that basis.

Lord Goddard C.J. I agree.

Gorman J. I agree.

Order of mandamus.

Solicitors: Peter Kingshill; Solicitor, Ministry of Health.

J. F. L.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

*PARISH v. BIRCH BROS. (DOVER) LD.

C. A.

1955
Mar. 15.

Evershed M.R., Jenkins and Morris L.JJ.

PRACTICE NOTE.

[1955 P. No. 51.]

Court of Appeal—Notice of appeal—Form—Discretion of registrar—Rule of convenience—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), s. 68 (2)—R.S.C., Ord. 58, r. 8.

APPEAL from Wynn-Parry J.

In this case Wynn-Parry J. having granted an injunction until judgment in the action, the defendants appealed to the Court of Appeal. On the setting down of the appeal a question arose as to the proper length of notice to be given under rule 3 of R.S.C., Ord. 58. At the hearing of the appeal no point was taken as to this, but, after referring to section 68 (2) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925,[1] and to R.S.C., Ord. 58, r. 8, which requires "the proper officer of the Court of Appeal" to set down appeals in "the proper list of appeals," EVERSHED M.R. said: "In the hope that it will be useful to practitioners, "I take this opportunity of repeating what was in effect said by "my predecessor [Sir Wilfrid Greene M.R.] in Walton v. Rikof.[2] "There is no form specified by statute or in the rules for giving "notice of appeal to this court. For the convenience of the court "and also of litigants it has long been the practice, and is the "practice, of the court to give the chief registrar a wide measure "of discretion as regards form in accepting notices of appeal as "proper or sufficient. Where it appears that points of substance "arise the chief registrar will always consult the president of the "appropriate division of the court. The purpose of these arrange-"ments is to avoid unnecessary costs by way of applications to "the court itself."

M. J. Albery (Arnold Carter & Co. for Dunn & Baker, Exeter) for the defendants; G. M. Parbury (Martineau & Reid for Campion Symons & Co., Exeter) for the plaintiffs.

E. D.

[1] Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 68 (2): "Any doubt which may arise as to "what orders or judgments are final, "and what are interlocutory, shall be "determined by the Court of Appeal."

[2] [1937] W.N. 360.

[HOUSE OF LORDS.]

H. L. (Sc.)† 1955 Jan. 11, 12; Mar. 4.

* HAROLD HOLDSWORTH & CO. (WAKEFIELD) LD. . . . . Appellants;

AND

CADDIES . . . . . Respondent.

Company — Director — Managing director — Terms of appointment — Subsequent restriction of duties—No breach of contract—Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 38), Sch. I, Table A, paras. 107, 109.

By an agreement made in 1949 between the appellant company and the respondent it was provided by clause 1 that, for a term of five years, he was appointed "a managing director of the "company and as such managing director he shall perform the "duties and exercise the powers in relation to the business of the "company and the businesses . . . of its existing subsidiary "companies . . . which may from time to time be assigned to or "vested in him by the board of directors of the company." In 1950 the board resolved that he should "confine his attentions to "[one of these subsidiaries] only." The respondent brought an action for damages for breach of contract:—

Held (per Viscount Kilmuir L.C., Earl Jowitt, Lord Morton of Henryton and Lord Reid) that nothing in the Companies Act, 1948, prevented his managerial duties being limited to such activities as the board might select; that the first part of clause 1 did not limit the powers of the board under the remainder of the clause and that therefore the resolution did not amount to a breach of contract. The action should accordingly be dismissed.

Per Lord Keith of Avonholm dissenting. The appellant company was not entitled to force a new master on the respondent and, since the subsidiary was a separate legal entity, the action should not be dismissed in the absence of evidence of the actions and intentions of the parties and the surrounding circumstances showing what was meant by the resolution.

Decision of the First Division of the Court of Session reversed.

Appeal from the First Division of the Court of Session.

This was an appeal against interlocutors of the Lord Ordinary (Lord Strachan) and of the First Division of the Court of Session in an action of damages for alleged breach of contract in which the appellants, William Holdsworth & Co. (Wakefield) Ld., were defenders and the respondent, Robert Fyvie Caddies, was pursuer. The appellants tabled a plea to the relevancy of the respondent's averments and on November 28, 1952, the Lord Ordinary allowed parties a proof before answer of their averments.

The facts are set out in the opinions of their Lordships.

C. W. G. Guest Q.C. (of the English Bar, Q.C. of the Scottish Bar), John Megaw Q.C. (of the English Bar) and C. E. Jauncey (of the Scottish Bar) for the appellant company.

I. H. Shearer Q.C. and R. S. Johnston (both of the Scottish Bar) for the respondent.

Their Lordships took time for consideration.

† Present: Viscount Kilmuir L.C., Earl Jowitt, Lord Morton of Henryton, Lord Reid and Lord Keith of Avonholm.

March 4. VISCOUNT KILMUIR L.C. My Lords, in this action the respondent seeks damages against the appellants for breach of contract. In the summons he concludes for payment of £25,000 and in the condescendence he makes averments purporting to support his claim for payment of that sum. The appellants plead that the action is irrelevant and contended before the Lord Ordinary (Lord Strachan) and before the First Division of the Court of Session that it should be dismissed without inquiry. The First Division adhered to the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary allowing a proof before answer. It is against that allowance of proof that the defenders appealed to your Lordships' House.

The relevant facts as presented by the pursuer are as follows. The pursuer is a worsted spinner and manufacturer of wool goods. He was formerly managing director of the British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld. (which I shall call "the textile company") and the beneficial owner of all the shares. In November, 1947, the appellant company, which carries on business as worsted spinners at Balne Mills, Wakefield, purchased from the respondent the whole share capital of the textile company. In terms of the agreement dated November 3, 1947, by which the purchase was effected, the appellant company was bound to procure that the respondent be appointed to the board of the appellant company and be appointed managing director of the textile company upon terms set out in the second schedule to the said agreement. The terms of the said agreement were duly implemented and the respondent was appointed managing director of the textile company on November 3, 1947. The appointment was for a period of five years and thereafter until terminated by written notice to be given by either party. The business of the textile company was in Irvine in Ayrshire, and was the manufacturing of knitted articles of wool clothing. By an agreement dated April 1, 1949, but to operate as from October 1, 1948, the respondent was appointed a managing director of the appellant company. Such appointment was for a period of five years and thereafter until terminated by written notice by either party. It was provided in the second agreement, in words which I shall examine more closely in a moment, that the respondent as such managing director should perform the duties and exercise the powers in relation to the business of the appellant company and the businesses of its existing subsidiary companies at the date thereof which might from time to time be assigned to or vested in him by the board of directors of the appellant company. At that time the appellant company controlled the textile company, Whalley & Appleyard Ld. and David Allan (Knitwear) Ld. The respondent's remuneration under the second agreement was to be a fixed salary of £2,500 per annum with, in addition, an annual commission on the combined net profits of the company and all its then existing subsidiaries. At all times the respondent was the sole managing director of the appellant company, and he avers (though it is denied by the company) that he was entrusted

H. L. (Sc.)
1955
HAROLD HOLDSWORTH & Co. (WAKEFIELD) LD. v. CADDIES.
Viscount Kilmuir L.C.

with the whole executive management of that company. The effect of the second agreement upon the first was not argued before us, but in fact the respondent continued to carry out certain duties in relation to the textile company. His actions and proposals occasioned opposition from certain members of the board of directors of the appellant company who, he avers, attempted to persuade him under threat of removal to relinquish his appointment as managing director of the company. Ultimately, at a meeting of the board of directors of the company, held on May 10, 1950, the board resolved that the respondent should confine his attentions to the textile company only and that permanent arrangements for the management at Balne Mills would be made later. The respondent regarded the said decision as a breach of the second agreement between himself and the company and intimated to the company on June 19, 1950, that as the company had repudiated the second agreement he was no longer bound to give, and would not give, his services to the company. On October 10, 1950, he commenced this action.

My Lords, when the case was heard in the procedure roll on the appellants' plea to the relevancy of the respondent's averments, the Lord Ordinary held that the question whether the resolution of May 10, 1950, constituted a breach of the agreement could not be decided without an inquiry into the facts. Lord Strachan took the view that the agreement and resolution should be construed in the light of the whole surrounding facts and circumstances, and that regard should be had not only to the terms of these documents but also to the effect which the resolution in fact had upon the possibility of the respondent continuing to carry out the duties of a managing director of the appellants. The Lord Ordinary also rejected an argument for the company that, even on the assumption that there had been a breach of contract, the breach was not sufficiently material to justify repudiation of the second agreement by the respondent.

When the appellants' motion for review came before the First Division on February 24, 1953, the court took the view upon a construction of the agreement and resolution that there had been no breach of the agreement. The Lord President, who gave the leading opinion, was of opinion that the respondent had made no clear and specific averments of surrounding facts and circumstances competent and relevant to be taken into account in determining whether a breach of the agreement had taken place. During the course of the hearing the respondent moved for leave to amend, and the case was continued in order that the respondent might be given an opportunity of considering an amendment. The Lord President said: "If Mr. Shaw had not "made the motion with which he concluded his argument, I "should have been for recalling the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor, "sustaining the first plea-in-law for the defenders and dismissing "the action." The respondents subsequently lodged a minute of amendment which was duly answered by the appellants.

The case was again put out for hearing by the First Division, and on June 25, 1953, the court pronounced an interlocutor affirming the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary. I cannot help noting that on this second occasion the Lord President said: "The averments, new as well as old, descriptive of 'surrounding "'facts and circumstances' bearing upon this question afford "unexpectedly little aid on the point of construction, and disclose "little, if any, material difference between the parties," and later stated: "I am fully conscious that in expressing the above "conclusions I am departing from the provisional views which "I formed at the previous debate. But the fuller argument "which we have heard and a closer examination of the documents "and certain of the decisions have led me to change my mind." In his second view the Lord President was of opinion that the very foundation of the agreement was the appointment of the respondent to a specific office, namely, the office of managing director, and that he was not appointed to perform such duties, if any, as the appellants' board of directors might assign to him. Lord Cooper considered that although the appellants were free to vary the powers and duties of the respondent within reasonable limits, they were not entitled to deprive him of the right to act as "a managing director of the company" while leaving him with the name. Lord Carmont, on the other hand, took the view that under the agreement the functions to be exercised by the respondent were incapable of being viewed as a post or office and that he could claim nothing exclusive or paramount in control or even anything definite in its character. Lord Carmont, nevertheless, was of the opinion that under the agreement some duties of a managerial kind had to be assigned to the respondent and that the resolution evinced an intention by the appellants no longer to be bound by the contract. Lord Russell concurred with the opinion of the Lord President.

The most important clause in the second agreement is clause 1 and I therefore set it out in full: "Mr. Caddies shall be and he "is hereby appointed a managing director of the company and "as such managing director he shall perform the duties and "exercise the powers in relation to the business of the company "and the businesses (howsoever carried on) of its existing "subsidiary companies at the date hereof which may from time "to time be assigned to or vested in him by the board of directors "of the company." Clause 2 sets out the period of engagement. Clause 3 states that Mr. Caddies shall devote his whole time, attention and abilities to his duties under the contract, shall obey the orders and directions of the board, shall well and faithfully serve the company and shall not be engaged in any other occupation or business whatsoever, with a saving for investments and also for being a director of, or shareholder in, any of the company's subsidiary or associated companies. Clause 4 deals with salary. Clause 5 deals with the commission payable to Mr. Caddies and fixes a minimum of £1,500 a year. Clause 6 deals with secrecy.

H. L. (Sc.)
1955
HAROLD HOLDSWORTH & CO. (WAKEFIELD) LD. v. CADDIES.
Viscount Kilmuir L.C.

Clause 7 gives the company a power of determination in the event of incapacity, misconduct, breach of obligations or refusal or neglect to comply with any lawful orders or directions given to the respondent by the board of directors of the appellant company. I do not think it is necessary to refer to the provisions of clauses 8, 9 and 10.

I return to clause 1 and endeavour to analyse its provisions. First, the respondent is appointed a managing director. If one then asks what are the duties which he shall perform and what are the powers he shall exercise, the answer, from the words of the clause, is, the powers and duties which may from time to time be assigned to or vested in him by the board of directors. If one then asks how shall he perform and exercise them, the answer is, in relation to the business of the company and the businesses (howsoever carried on) of its existing subsidiary companies at the date of the contract. The Lord President bases his second view on the initial words. He says: "On the other "hand, if the agreement is to be given ordinary business efficacy, "I have come to the conclusion that weight must be given to "the plain fact that the appointment of the pursuer was an "appointment as 'a managing director of the company'—a well "recognized title in company administration, carrying responsi- "bilities of a familiar nature and involving sundry obligations "and liabilities under the Companies Act. The pursuer was not "appointed to perform such duties, if any, as the board might "assign to him. To borrow the language of Asquith J. (as he "then was) in Collier v. Sunday Referee Publishing Co. Ld.,[1] "'the very foundation of the contract was the appointment of "'the plaintiff, during the contract period, to a specific office.'" Later the Lord President says: "The defenders were, in my "view, disabled from depriving the pursuer of the right to act "as 'a managing director of the company.' They could not "leave him with the name and withdraw the substance of his "office." I confess that this conception of a stratification of a position as managing director has puzzled me. Neither side relied on any provision in the articles of the appellant company, and they were not included in the record. By way of illustration, however, I refer to the relevant provisions of Table A in Schedule I to the Companies Act, 1948. Paragraph 107, the first dealing with a managing director, is as follows: "The "directors may from time to time appoint one or more of their "body to the office of managing director for such period and on "such terms as they think fit, and, subject to the terms of any "agreement entered into in any particular case, may revoke such "appointment. A director so appointed shall not, whilst holding "that office, be subject to retirement by rotation or be taken "into account in determining the rotation of retirement of "directors, but his appointment shall be automatically deter- "mined if he cease from any cause to be a director." That paragraph states specifically that the board can fix such terms as they think fit, while the director so appointed gets the advantage of not being subject to retirement by rotation. Paragraph 108 gives the directors the right to determine remuneration. Paragraph 109 gives the directors a complete discretion to entrust to and confer upon a managing director any of their own powers. I cite with approval the summary in Halsbury's Laws of England (3rd ed.), vol. VI, p. 297, where it is stated: "A managing "director may either be merely a director with additional "functions and additional remuneration, or else he may be a "person holding two distinct positions, that of a director and "that of a manager." I cannot find, either in the statute or in the cases in which the matter has been considered, anything to prevent a board of directors appointing a managing director and limiting his duties according to their own wishes. In other words, the first part of clause 1 does not, in my view, limit the powers of the board under the remainder of the clause.

[1] [1940] 2 K.B. 647, 651; 57 T.L.R. 2; [1940] 4 All E.R. 234.

I now come to consideration of the view of Lord Carmont, and I make two quotations from his judgment: (1) "Although "this is not an appointment to a post, I have come to be of "opinion that it is a contract whereby some duties must be "assigned to the pursuer of a managerial kind." (2) "I do "not think that the pursuer's averments further his case much "beyond the statement which is not in dispute that he was "withdrawn from any managerial participation at Balne Mills. "If the board so acted under the impression that they were "entitled totally to withdraw the pursuer from management "there, provided they allowed the pursuer to continue to manage "something elsewhere, then I think they were misinterpreting "their contract with the pursuer. The board may have been "misled into the course they followed by the wrong view of the "legal relations existing between the parent company and its "subsidiaries, but none the less the pursuer was deprived of all "managerial functions at Balne Mills, and in my opinion that "deprivation could not be operated without a repudiation of the "contract with the pursuer. Such relegation to complete inaction "from management so far as Balne Mills was concerned evinced "an intention no longer to be bound by the contract."

With all respect to this reasoning, I cannot spell it out of clause 1 of the contract. As I have stated, that clause lays down that the pursuer as such managing director shall perform the duties and exercise the powers assigned to or vested in him by the board "in relation to the business of the company and the "businesses (howsoever carried on) of its existing subsidiary "companies." I find it difficult not to read these words distributively and to treat them as giving a right to assign duties in relation to a subsidiary, but even if one reads them collectively, then the result of so doing is to give the power to the board to

H. L. (Sc.)
1955
HAROLD HOLDSWORTH & Co. (WAKEFIELD) LD. v. CADDIES.
Viscount Kilmuir L.C.

assign duties with regard to the activities of a group of companies viewed as a whole. This cannot, in my mind, mean that the managerial duties must cover the appellant company and every subsidiary. They can be limited to such activities as the board may select.

I have tried to give full weight to Lord Carmont's words that the board must have been misled by a wrong view of the legal relations existing between the parent company and its subsidiaries. I regret that I cannot understand how this raises difficulties in relation to the textile company. On the pursuer's own averments, the pursuer was still managing director of that company and acting as such pending the appointment of a successor. There was no personal or mechanical difficulty in his exercising managerial functions in regard to that company. Further, the appellant company owned all the shares and therefore could, if any difficulty arose, ensure that the desires of its board with regard to the management of the textile company could be enforced.

Equally, the fact that the pursuer was obligated to devote all his time to his duties under the second agreement does not seem to me to present any difficulty if managerial functions were assigned in relation to a particular subsidiary.

On the view of the contract which I have taken and tried to explain, I am therefore of opinion that the resolution of May 10, 1950, did not constitute a breach of the contract. It is therefore unnecessary for me to consider Mr. Guest's second and third points, namely, that under the contract it was unnecessary for the appellants to assign any duties and alternatively that, even if there was a breach, such breach did not go to the root of the contract. I therefore am of opinion that the appeal should be allowed, that the interlocutors of the First Division and of the Lord Ordinary should be recalled, that the first plea-in-law of the defenders, the present appellants, should be sustained and the action should be dismissed.

I should further say that the respondents pay the appellants their costs here and in the courts below.

Earl Jowitt. My Lords, the appellants are a limited company carrying on business as worsted yarn spinners at Balne Mills, Wakefield, Yorkshire. In 1947 the appellants had purchased from the respondent the entire share capital of a company known as the British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld. whom I refer to as "the textile company." The business of the textile company, which was carried on at Irvine, Ayrshire, was the manufacture of knitted articles of wool clothing. The appellants thus became and remained at all material times the beneficial owners of all the shares in the textile company. They were also beneficial owners of all the shares in two other limited companies.

By an agreement between the textile company and the respondent concluded in 1947 the respondent had become the managing director of the textile company at a salary of £2,200 a year together with a commission on profits. He was obliged under such agreement to devote the whole of his time to the business of the textile company and to obey the instructions of the directors of that company. By an agreement between the appellants and the respondent dated April 1, 1949, which was to operate as from October 1, 1948, the respondent was appointed managing director of the appellants; no reference was made in this agreement to the earlier agreement of 1947.

It is unnecessary to express any opinion as to the impact of the later agreement upon the earlier agreement and I can confine myself to a consideration of the terms of the agreement of 1949. Clause 1 of that agreement was in the following terms: [His Lordship read the clause and continued:] Other clauses in that agreement provided that the respondent was to hold the said office for five years; that he was to devote his whole time and attention to his duties under the agreement and in all respects to conform to and comply with the directions and regulations of the board; and that he was to receive a salary of £2,500 per annum together with a commission on profits. By clause 7 of the agreement the appellants were given the right to determine the agreement forthwith by notice in writing if the respondent refused or failed to comply with any lawful orders or directions given him by the board.

Differences of opinion arose between the respondent and his fellow directors of the appellants and culminated in the passing of a resolution by the appellants' board in the following terms: "Management at Balne Mills: The board decided that the "managing director confine his attentions to British Textile "Manufacturing Co. Ld. only. Permanent arrangements for "management at Balne Mills will be made later. Meanwhile "the board requested Mr. R. P. Pitcher to assume respon- "sibility for local supervision. The managing director wished it "recorded that as a director he did not agree with the decision." The respondent regarded this resolution as a repudiation of the agreement and by letter of June 19, 1950, intimated to the appellants that as they had so repudiated the agreement he regarded himself as no longer bound to give, and intimated that he would not give, his services to the appellants.

The respondent, as pursuer, brought his action against the appellants, as defenders: the record set out the relevant terms of the 1949 agreement and claimed that the passing of the resolution constituted a breach thereof. The defenders, the present appellants, stated a preliminary plea that the averments of the pursuer were irrelevant. The action came before Lord Strachan in procedure roll discussion. He decided on November 28, 1952, that there should be a proof before answer. The

H. L. (Sc.)
1955
HAROLD HOLDSWORTH & Co. (WAKEFIELD) LD. v. CADDIES.
Earl Jowitt.

matter first came before the First Division of the Court of Session on February 24, 1953: during the argument counsel for the pursuer indicated that he desired an opportunity of considering whether it would be possible for him by way of amendment to add averments of surrounding facts and circumstances. The court were willing to allow this opportunity and accordingly the case was continued for a limited period, but the court unanimously expressed the view that save for this application they would have recalled the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor and dismissed the action. The case came on again before the same judges of the First Division in June, 1953, when additional averments as to surrounding facts and circumstances had been inserted. On this occasion the judges took a view differing from that which they had taken in February. They accordingly affirmed the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary but granted leave to appeal to your Lordships' House.

The first question raised before us was therefore whether in the light of the averments as to surrounding circumstances, which must be taken pro veritate, the passing of the resolution constituted a breach of the contract. It was further contended that even if the passing of such resolution did constitute a breach, it was not a breach of such a nature and quality as to entitle the respondent to accept it as a repudiation of the entire contract. A further contention was advanced concerning the measure of damages if it was decided that a breach had been committed.

My Lords, in the view which I take it is unnecessary to express any opinion on these two latter contentions since I am clearly of the opinion that the resolution did not constitute any breach of the agreement. I think that upon the true construction of clause 1 of the agreement of 1949 the respondent was to perform such duties and exercise such powers in relation to the business of the appellants and to perform such duties and exercise such powers in relation to the business of the textile company and the other subsidiaries as might from time to time be vested in him by the appellants' board. In directing the respondent on May 10, 1950, to confine his attention to the textile company the board of the appellants were, in my opinion, merely exercising the right given to them by the agreement.

The Lord President took a different view because he considered that the appointment of managing director was "a well "recognised title in company administration, carrying respon- "sibilities of a familiar nature and involving sundry obligations "and liabilities under the Companies Act. The pursuer was not "appointed to perform such duties, if any, as the board might "assign to him." The Lord President, having formed this view, no doubt considered that the resolution which called upon the respondent to devote his whole time to the affairs of the textile company prevented him from carrying out those responsibilities, obligations and liabilities which on this view he had the right to perform for the appellants by virtue of his office as their managing director.

My Lords, with the greatest respect for the Lord President, I do not think that the respondent by the mere fact that he was appointed managing director of the appellants had any responsibilities, obligations or liabilities which would prevent the appellants ordering him to devote his full time to a subsidiary: and I am of the opinion that the appellants had by clause 1 of the agreement expressly preserved their right to call upon the respondent to devote his time to the affairs of the textile company if they judged this course desirable.

Being of the opinion that there was no relevant breach of contract averred, I think the action should have been dismissed without proof, and accordingly I would allow the appeal.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON. My Lords, the events leading up to this appeal have already been stated, and I shall only repeat them so far as may be necessary to enable me to express my opinion.

The first question arising for your Lordships' decision is whether the averments of the pursuer (the respondent to this appeal) in his condescendence, accepting for this purpose that his averments of fact are accurate, establish a breach of contract by the defenders, the present appellants.

The only breach of contract alleged is that the directors of the defenders passed a resolution at a meeting of directors on May 10, 1950, in the following terms: [His Lordship read the resolution and continued:]

The pursuer alleges that he had rights under an agreement of April 1, 1949, whereby he was appointed to be "a managing "director" of the defenders, which were infringed by the resolution in question. That agreement has already been read, and it must, of course, be construed as a whole, with due regard to the surrounding circumstances at the date of its execution.

The events leading up to the 1949 agreement are set out in the pursuer's condescendence, and the history begins with the agreement of sale of November 3, 1947, whereby the defenders bought from the pursuer the whole of the issued share capital of the British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld. (hereafter called "British Textile") and of David Allan (Knitwear) Ld. By that agreement it was provided (inter alia) as follows, the "company" referred to being British Textile:—"4. (c) If so "required by Holdsworth Mr. Caddies shall procure all directors "of the company and Knitwear (other than Mr. Caddies) to "resign and waive any claims against the company in respect "of their directorships or other offices and procure the appoint-"ment of nominees of Holdsworth as directors of the company "and Knitwear in his or their stead . . . (e) Holdsworth shall

H. L. (Sc.)
1955
HAROLD HOLDSWORTH & Co. (WAKEFIELD) LD. v. CADDIES.
Lord Morton of Henryton.

" procure Mr. Caddies to be appointed to the board of directors " of Holdsworth and also as managing director of the company " upon the terms of the agreement set out in the second " schedule hereto in place of any other office under the company " held by him."

The agreement set out in the second schedule provided for the appointment of the pursuer as " a managing director " of British Textile for a period of five years, and clause 3 thereof was as follows:—" Mr. Caddies shall (unless prevented by ill- " health) throughout the period of this agreement devote the " whole of his time attention and abilities to his duties hereunder " and shall obey the orders from time to time of the board of " directors of the company and in all respects conform to and " comply with the directions and regulations made by such Board " and shall well and faithfully serve the company and use his " utmost endeavours to promote the interests thereof. Mr. " Caddies shall not during the continuance of this agreement " (without the previous consent in writing of the company " which the company shall be under no obligation to give) be " engaged concerned or interested either directly or indirectly " and whether solely or jointly with others in any other occupa- " tion or business whatsoever provided that nothing herein con- " tained shall prohibit Mr. Caddies from holding shares securities " or obligations of any other company by way of bona fide " investment only or from being a director of or shareholder in " Harold Holdsworth & Co. (Wakefield) Ld. or any of its " subsidiaries."

Under the agreement of April 1, 1949, already mentioned, the pursuer's appointment as a managing director of the defenders was to date from October 1, 1948, and in his condescendence 4 the pursuer says: " From October 1, 1948, to May 10, " 1950, the pursuer normally spent from early afternoon on " Monday to about noon on Friday each week at Wakefield and " visited Irvine at weekends to supervise the conduct of the " British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld.'s business there, pend- " ing the appointment of a managing director to succeed him " there." From this sentence it would appear likely that the parties regarded the pursuer's appointment as managing director of the defenders by the agreement of 1949 as superseding his appointment as managing director of British Textile by the agreement of 1947, but it seems to me unnecessary, for the present purpose, to form a concluded view whether, on the true construction of the two documents, one superseded the other.

With these facts in mind I turn to consider the terms of the agreement of 1949 and in particular the terms of clause 1. This clause has already been read. It contains both the appointment of the pursuer as a managing director—not, be it observed, as the managing director—of the defenders, and the definition of the duties and powers which he is to perform and exercise " as such " managing director," namely the duties and powers " in relation " to the business of the company and the businesses (howsoever " carried on) of its existing subsidiary companies at the date " hereof which may from time to time be assigned to or vested " in him by the board of directors of the company."

My Lords, this clause refers to a group of companies consisting of the defenders and their existing subsidiary companies. I cannot read the clause as compelling the board to assign duties to the pursuer in relation to the business of every company in the group. Nor can I read it as compelling the board to assign him duties in relation to the business of the defenders. That business is not treated as being on a different footing from the business of British Textile or of another subsidiary of the defenders, Whalley & Appleyard Ld., which is mentioned in the pursuer's condescendence 3. As I read the clause, it leaves the board of the defenders free to assign to the pursuer duties in relation to the business of one only, or two only or all of the companies in the group, and to vary the assignment and the duties from time to time. Further, I think the clause leaves the board free to appoint another person to be " a managing " director " and to divide the duties and powers referred to in the clause between the pursuer and the other managing director in such manner as they think fit.

It is true that each company in the group is in law a separate entity, the business whereof is to be carried on by its own directors and managing director, if any; but there is no doubt that the defenders, by taking any necessary formal steps, could make any arrangements they pleased in regard to the management of the business of (for instance) British Textile. They owned all the issued capital and the directors were their nominees.

I turn now to the resolution of May 10, 1950. I am prepared to assume in favour of the pursuer that this resolution was intended to exclude him permanently from any share of the management at Balne Mills, whence, as the pursuer avers, " the " whole business of the pursuers was administered," although it would of course have been open to the board at any time to rescind the resolution. Even on the assumption just mentioned, I fail to see that the defenders committed any breach of the 1949 agreement by deciding that the pursuer should " confine his " attentions " to British Textile only. If the resolution were carried out, the pursuer would go to Irvine as a managing director of the defenders, and would there perform such duties and exercise such powers in relation to the business of British Textile as the board of the defenders might from time to time assign to or vest in him. He was already a director of British Textile, and if his appointment as a managing director thereof in 1947 should be regarded as having been superseded by the agreement of 1949, the defenders could easily procure his reappointment thereto by the exercise of their controlling interest in British Textile. The resolution of May 10, 1950, did

H. L. (Sc.)
1955
HAROLD HOLDSWORTH & Co. (WAKEFIELD) LD. v. CADDIES.
Lord Morton of Henryton.

not purport to remove the pursuer from his position as a managing director of the defenders. In that capacity he would presumably go from Irvine to Wakefield from time to time, to attend meetings of the defenders' board and to report upon progress at Irvine.

If the pursuer had accepted the resolution as binding on him, he would have retained all his rights under the agreement of 1949 and would have been entitled to receive all the remuneration, by way of salary and commission, provided for by that agreement. I can quite appreciate that the pursuer bitterly resented being told to confine his attentions to British Textile, and he no doubt thought that his management at Balne Mills would have increased the profits of the group of companies and would consequently have increased the amount of his yearly commission. In my opinion, however, he was bound by his contract to comply with the resolution.

I have not overlooked the averments which were inserted in the pursuer's condescendence by amendment, but in my opinion neither these averments nor the original averments, if they were all proved, would establish that the board of the defenders committed a breach of contract by passing the resolution in question. As no other breach is alleged, it follows that no proof is necessary.

In my view the defenders' first plea in law should have been sustained, and the action should have been dismissed. I would allow the appeal.

Lord Reid. My Lords, the respondent was in 1947 the owner and he acted as the managing director of British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld. In that year he sold the whole share capital of the company to the appellants, who are worsted spinners, carrying on their business at Balne Mills, Wakefield. On April 1, 1949, the respondent and the appellants made an agreement whereby it was provided that the respondent "is hereby appointed "a managing director of the company" (the appellants) "and "as such managing director he shall perform the duties and "exercise the powers in relation to the business of the company "and the businesses (howsoever carried on) of its existing sub-"sidiary companies at the date hereof which may from time to "time be assigned to or vested in him by the board of directors "of the company." This appointment was for the term of five years from October 1, 1948, and there were two existing subsidiary companies, the British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld. and Whalley & Appleyard Ld. Under this agreement the respondent was paid a salary of £2,500 per annum and an annual commission dependent on the combined net profits of the appellants and the subsidiary companies, the minimum commission payable in any year being £1,500, so that the respondent obtained a minimum remuneration of £4,000 per annum.

The respondent thereafter appears to have acted both as managing director of the appellants and as managing director of British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld.: but disagreements arose and on May 10, 1950, the following resolution was passed at a meeting of the directors of the appellant company: [His Lordship read the resolution and continued:] The respondent regarded this resolution as a breach of the terms of his agreement with the appellants and as a repudiation of it, and on June 19, 1950, he intimated to them that as they had repudiated the agreement he was no longer bound to give and would not give his services to them. Thereafter he took no part in the executive management of the appellants' business, but he continued to act as a director until October 25, 1950, when he resigned, as he says at the request of his co-directors. It was admitted that after the resolution of May 10, 1950, the appellants were willing to continue to pay remuneration to the respondent in terms of the 1949 agreement but after the intimation made by the respondent on June 19, 1950, they ceased paying him any remuneration.

On October 10, 1950, the respondent raised the present action concluding for payment of £25,000 damages. The appellants pleaded inter alia that the respondent's averments were irrelevant. On November 28, 1952, Lord Strachan, after hearing counsel in the procedure roll, allowed proof before answer. On February 24, 1953, the First Division heard counsel on a reclaiming motion and on the respondent's motion allowed amendments to be tendered. Finally, on June 25, 1953, the First Division pronounced an interlocutor allowing the record to be amended, refusing the motion for review of Lord Strachan's interlocutor, and remitting the cause back to the Lord Ordinary to take the proof. The respondent then presented a petition for leave to appeal to this House, and on November 12, 1953, the First Division granted leave as craved.

The points which are now before the House are no doubt difficult, but they are short and they can be simply stated. In the first place, were the appellants in breach of contract in requiring the respondent to confine his attention to their subsidiary company, British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld.? And secondly, if they were, was the respondent justified in treating that breach as a repudiation of the contract?

Admittedly the respondent cannot succeed in his action unless on a true construction of the agreement of 1949 and of the resolution of the appellants' board of directors of May 10, 1950, this resolution involved a breach of contract. Of course, each of these documents must be construed in light of all relevant circumstances at its date, and if there were any such circumstances which could influence its construction and which are averred by the respondent but not admitted by the appellants, then a proof would be necessary before the true meaning of these documents could be determined. But I cannot find any averments of this

H. L. (Sc.)
1955
HAROLD HOLDSWORTH & CO. (WAKEFIELD) LD. v. CADDIES.
Lord Reid.

kind in the respondent's condescendence. As regards the agreement, counsel could not even suggest any, but as regards the resolution he founded on the averments in the earlier part of condescendence 4. These are detailed averments of disagreements between the respondent and his co-directors, of attempts by them to induce him to resign and of a deliberate policy on their part to prevent him from carrying out any executive or managerial functions of the appellant company. In reply the appellants admit differences of opinion but otherwise deny these averments. For reasons which I shall explain later, I am of opinion that it can make no difference to the decision of this case whether these averments of the respondent are true or not.

It follows that the agreement can be construed now just as well as it could be after a proof and if, on the construction of the resolution most favourable to the respondent's case, it discloses no breach of contract then proof is unnecessary and the respondent's action fails. I shall therefore proceed to consider the construction of the agreement of 1949. This agreement must be construed in light of the admitted agreement of November 3, 1947, by which the respondent sold to the appellants the whole share capital of his company, British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld. I need only notice those provisions in it which appear to me to be relevant. The respondent undertook if so required to procure the appointment of nominees of the appellants as directors, and the appellants undertook to appoint the respondent managing director for five years. The agreement provided that he should devote his whole time to his duties as managing director of that company provided that these should not prevent him from being a director of the appellant company, and it provided that his remuneration should be £2,200 per annum together with a commission based on the profits of British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld.

The agreement of 1949 appears to have superseded the 1947 agreement in so far as it provided for the respondent's remuneration and it plainly superseded this agreement in so far as it required the respondent to devote his whole time to the affairs of British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld. for the 1949 agreement provided by clause 3 that he should devote his whole time to his duties under this agreement and obey the orders of the appellants' board of directors provided that nothing should prohibit him from being a director of the appellants' subsidiary companies, which were British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld. and Whalley & Appleyard Ld. There is nothing to indicate and no averment to the effect that the respondent's appointment as managing director of British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld. was terminated or that he ceased to act in that capacity.

Clause 1 of the agreement of 1949 appoints the respondent a managing director (not the managing director) of the appellant company. The law does not specify the duties of a managing director and there is no averment that they were specified in the articles of association. But clause 1 proceeds to deal with this matter: it provides that as such managing director he shall perform the duties and exercise the powers in relation to the business of the appellant company and the businesses of its subsidiary companies which may from time to time be assigned to or vested in him by the appellants' board of directors.

On this clause two questions arise. First, what was the nature of the duties in relation to the subsidiary companies which could be assigned to the respondent; and, secondly, were the appellants entitled to require him to devote his whole time to duties in relation to the business of the subsidiary companies and to assign to him no duties of a managerial character in relation to the business of the appellant company?

It was common ground that it would have been a breach of contract to assign to the respondent duties of a wholly subordinate character in relation either to the appellants' business or to the businesses of the subsidiary companies and that the contract contemplated that any duties assigned must be of a managerial character. But there is no averment that there was any breach of contract of this kind. The respondent's contention on this question was that the only duties in relation to the businesses of subsidiary companies which could be assigned to him under the 1949 agreement were duties which would come directly within the ordinary scope of duties of a managing director of the appellant company—duties such as co-ordinating its business with the businesses of the subsidiary companies or making an investigation of the affairs of the subsidiary companies for the information of the appellants' board of directors. It was argued that the subsidiary companies were separate legal entities each under the control of its own board of directors, that in law the board of the appellant company could not assign any duties to anyone in relation to the management of the subsidiary companies and that therefore the agreement cannot be construed as entitling them to assign any such duties to the respondent.

My Lords, in my judgment this is too technical an argument. This is an agreement in re mercatoria and it must be construed in light of the facts and realities of the situation. The appellant company owned the whole share capital of British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld. and under the agreement of 1947 the directors of this company were to be the nominees of the appellants. So, in fact, the appellants could control the internal management of their subsidiary companies, and, in the unlikely event of there being any difficulty, it was only necessary to go through formal procedure in order to make the decision of the appellants' board fully effective. Moreover, before the 1949 agreement the respondent was under obligation to act as managing director of British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld. and he avers that after the making of that agreement he continued to supervise the conduct of that business. It is true that he qualifies this by averring that this was pending the appointment

H. L. (Sc.)
1955
HAROLD HOLDSWORTH & CO. (WAKEFIELD) LD. v. CADDIES.
Lord Reid.

of a managing director to succeed him there, but there is no averment that the appellants had undertaken to relieve him of his duties as managing director of the subsidiary company and I cannot infer from the 1949 agreement that the appellants were under any obligation to do that. On the contrary I read clause 1 of this agreement as entitling the appellants to assign to him as duties under that agreement any duties in relation to British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld. which were of a managerial and not of a subordinate character. But it was argued that any duties assigned to the respondent must be duties which he could perform as a managing director of the appellant company and that he could not perform internal duties of management of a subsidiary company in that capacity. I think that this argument is not only technical but unsound. As I have already said, the law does not prescribe the duties of a managing director, the parties are left to define his duties, and I can see nothing inconsistent in an agreement that a person shall be a managing director of a company but shall devote his attention to managing subsidiary companies. I am therefore of opinion that the agreement of 1949 entitled the appellants to require the respondent to devote his time to managing the businesses of the subsidiary companies.

But then it was argued that even if that be so and if the agreement entitled the appellants to assign to him extensive duties in relation to the business of the subsidiary company, it did not entitle them to require him to devote his whole time throughout the agreement to such business, but required them to assign to him at least some duties of a managerial nature in relation to the business of the appellant company. I cannot agree with this argument. To begin with it is extremely vague. It was admitted that as the respondent was only appointed a managing director, the appellants would have been within their rights in appointing a second managing director and assigning to him at least the greater part of the managerial functions of their company. And it was not disputed that duties in relation to subsidiary companies which might be assigned to the respondent might occupy his whole time and attention for a period. But the contention was, I think, that he must have sufficient duties in relation to the affairs of the appellant company to make his position as a managing director of that company a reality.

The respondent supported this contention by a further argument. His remuneration depended on the profits of the appellant company and its subsidiary companies; and the minimum commission of £1,500 was in fact exceeded during the first year and would, he avers, have become still greater in subsequent years if he had been allowed to exercise the functions of management. Therefore he says that he had a right to exercise those functions. But, in my opinion, the short answer to that argument is that he was only appointed a managing director and admittedly the greater part of those functions could have been taken from him. Even if he were right in saying that some managerial functions in the appellant company must be assigned to him, it does not follow that the exercise of a comparatively small part of the management would have any appreciable influence on the profits of the company. And, further, the respondent's commission depended on both the profits of the appellant company and the profits of the subsidiary company and the success of his work in managing this company would therefore be reflected in the amount of his remuneration. I am therefore unable to agree with the respondent's arguments on the construction of the agreement, and I pass to consider the resolution of May 10, 1950.

It was argued that there must be a proof of the averments in condescendence 4, to which I have already referred, because if proved they would show that the resolution of May 10, 1950, was in effect a dismissal of the respondent from his position of managing director of the appellant company. At this stage, when dealing with the case on relevancy, I must of course assume that all these averments would be fully established by proof, but, if I am right in my interpretation of the agreement, I cannot see how proof of these averments would assist the respondent's case. The resolution is not capable of meaning that the respondent was dismissed, but it is I think capable of having the meaning that the arrangement set out in it was to be permanent and that the respondent was not at any time to take any further part in the management of the appellant company's business but was to confine his attention in future to the business of British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld. It may be that the facts averred would show that that was its meaning. I am not sure that that is so, but I shall assume that it is. But that is not, in my opinion, a breach of the agreement of 1949. The parties in that agreement provided what the duties of the respondent should be: he was to perform the duties from time to time assigned to him in relation to the business of the appellants and the businesses of the subsidiary companies. This cannot mean that all duties assigned to him must be in relation to all the businesses: some duties might relate solely to one and some solely to another. It was not disputed that all the duties assigned to him might have related to the appellant company's business so that he had nothing to do with managing the subsidiary businesses. And similarly, in my opinion, the agreement authorised the appellants to require him to devote his whole attention to the business of one or both of the subsidiary companies so that he had no share in the management of the appellant company's own business. I have already said that, in my opinion, that is not inconsistent with his position of managing director as defined in the agreement. He would, of course, have remained a director of the appellant company with all his rights as a director, but his managerial duties would have been solely in relation to the subsidiary company. I do not think that the resolution is capable of a construction more favourable to the respondent's case than that, and that, in my opinion, involves no breach of contract. I am therefore of opinion that this appeal should be allowed with the result that the appellants' first plea in law must be sustained and the respondent's action dismissed.

H. L. (Sc.)
1955
HAROLD HOLDSWORTH & Co. (WAKEFIELD) LD. v. CADDIES.

LORD KEITH OF AVONHOLM. My Lords, the view which commends itself to your Lordships in this case is one with which I regret I am unable to agree. I shall express my difficulty briefly.

The appellants and the respondent entered into an agreement dated November 3, 1947, by which, inter alia, the appellants purchased from the respondent the whole share capitals of the British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld. and of David Allan (Knitwear) Ld. The latter company need not be further noticed. As part of the agreement the appellants undertook to have the respondent appointed a director of their board and also managing director of British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld. (which I shall call " the textile company ") upon terms scheduled to the agreement which included appointment as managing director for a term of five years from the date of the agreement and thereafter until the agreement was determined by not less than three months' notice in writing by either party. It is admitted that the respondent became managing director of the textile company.

On April 1, 1949, a second agreement was made between the appellants and the respondent by which the respondent was appointed a managing director of the appellant company on certain terms and conditions. This agreement operated as from October 1, 1948, and was to last for five years from that date and, if not then determined by three months' notice in writing by either party, was to continue thereafter till determined by such a notice.

It is to be observed that both under this agreement and under the agreement of 1947 the respondent was taken bound to devote the whole of his time and attention and abilities to his duties under the respective agreements and to obey the orders from time to time of the boards of directors of the respective companies. It would seem obvious that this was an impossible situation. A man cannot serve two masters, not at least so as to give full time to each.

The only conclusion I can come to is that, as the appellant company controlled the textile company as a subsidiary company of which it owned all the shares, the agreement of 1947 was regarded by all parties as superseded so far as the appointment of a managing director was concerned. Were it otherwise the respondent would be drawing salary and commission under each agreement and there is no suggestion that this was the case. That this seems also to have been the respondent's view would appear from his averment that: " From October 1, 1948, " to May 10, 1950, the pursuer normally spent from early "afternoon on Monday to about noon on Friday each week "at Wakefield and visited Irvine at weekends to supervise the "conduct of the British Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld.'s busi- "ness there, pending the appointment of a managing director "to succeed him there."

I assume then that from October 1, 1948, or at least from April 1, 1949, the respondent had ceased to be managing director of the textile company and that he was a whole-time managing director of the appellant company, and in fact the sole managing director of the latter company. If this does not represent the true position then it is material, in my opinion, to ascertain the true facts by proof.

In this situation the appellants' board passed the resolution of May 10, 1950. It records, inter alia: "The board decided "that the managing director confine his attentions to British "Textile Manufacturing Co. Ld. only." What does this mean? It is not clear to me, and in the course of the hearing I was unable to get from the appellants' counsel any clear indication of what it meant. But it seems to me to be at least capable of meaning that the respondent should become again managing director of the textile company, albeit with the remuneration agreed to be paid to him as a managing director of the appellant company.

The averments of the respondent are relevant to cover this point. In article 4 of the condescendence it is averred: "The "other members of the defenders' board were opposed to these "proposals and thereafter attempted to induce the pursuer to "relinquish his appointment as managing director and to return "to Irvine to act as managing director of the British Textile "Manufacturing Co. Ld. only, on the basis of the defenders "continuing to pay the pursuer the remuneration provided in "the agreement of April 1, 1949." And later: "The pursuer "believes and avers that the said resolution was passed in "implement of the deliberate policy of the other directors on "the defenders' board to prevent the pursuer taking any further "part in the executive control and practical management of "the defenders' business. The resolution was intended to have "and did in fact have the result that the pursuer was prevented "from carrying out any executive or managerial functions of the "company," i.e., the appellant company.

In my opinion, it is relevant and material to know what was meant by that part of the resolution which I have quoted, unless it can be said that it was no breach of agreement to insist on the respondent serving as managing director of the textile company.

It is said that the agreement covers this case. I quote the words relied on: ". . . as such managing director he shall perform "the duties and exercise the powers in relation to the business "of the company and the businesses (howsoever carried on) of "its existing subsidiary companies at the date hereof which

H. L. (Sc.)
1955
HAROLD HOLDSWORTH & Co. (WAKEFIELD) LD. v. CADDIES.
Lord Keith of Avonholm.

"may from time to time be assigned to or vested in him by "the board of directors of the company." But I cannot read these words as empowering the directors to force another master on the respondent. Ex hypothesi he had ceased to be managing director of the textile company. It is no answer to say that the textile company is a subsidiary of the appellant company, controlled entirely as regards policy and personnel of its board by the latter company.

In law the companies are separate persons and it has been held in a number of cases that a breach of contract is committed when a servant, under a contract of employment for a fixed term, finds that his employer during that term has effected a change of partnership or transformed a personal business into that of a private or public limited company.

It is, in my opinion, fundamental to know what the appellant company's board meant by their resolution. It is not a resolution that speaks for itself. What the parties said and thought and did, the way they understood it was to be enforced, the way they acted, or proposed to act on it, the whole surrounding facts and circumstances, must be assessed before the question of breach can be properly decided, and this cannot be done without a proof. Until this has taken place it is premature, in my opinion, to consider some of the other questions of law that have been argued.

I would dismiss the appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Slaughter & May for Dundas & Wilson W.S., Edinburgh, and Maclay, Murray & Spens, Glasgow; Allen & Overy for J. & R. A. Robertson W.S., Edinburgh, and McGrigor Donald & Co. Glasgow.

F. C.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1955
Mar. 10.

*TRICKERS (CONFECTIONERS) LD. v. BARNES.

Lord Goddard C.J., Ormerod and Gorman JJ.

Food and Drugs—Bread—Deficiency in weight—Deficiency due to action of some person over whom retailers had no control—Not necessary for retailer to show due diligence used or reasonable precautions taken—Considerable variation in weight—Information correctly laid in respect of individual loaves—Wrapped sliced loaves—Weight of wrapper to be included in the weight of bread—Bread Order, 1953 (S.I. 1953, No. 1283), arts. 1, 3—Sale of Food (Weights and Measures) Act, 1926 (16 & 17 Geo. 5, c. 63), s. 6.

The defendants sold by retail bread which was delivered to them daily by bakers and over the baking of which they had no control. An inspector of weights and measures entered their shop and weighed 24 (18 of them wrapped and sliced) out of the 14 oz. loaves then in the shop for the purpose of sale, and found all the loaves weighed to be deficient in weight to some extent. Seven informations were preferred against the defendants, each alleging that they had in their possession for sale a certain loaf of bread or roll its weight not being 14 oz. or a multiple of 14 oz., namely, 10 drams (or in some cases 8 or 9 drams) deficient of 14 oz., contrary to article 3 (1) of the Bread Order, 1953. On appeal by the defendants against conviction on each information:—

Held, (1) that the magistrate was entitled to convict on an information in respect of a deficiency in such a single loaf, for under article 3 (2) (a) of the Bread Order, 1953, it was only where the variation in the weight of a single loaf was inconsiderable that regard should be had to the average weight of a reasonable number of loaves;

(2) but that the wording of article 3 (2) (b) was disjunctive and, therefore, although in cases where a deficiency was due to a bona fide mistake or accident or to causes beyond his control a retailer had to show that he had taken all reasonable precautions and had used due diligence, where the deficiency was due to the action of some person over whom the retailer had no control he did not have to show those things and the court did not have to consider the question of his diligence and precaution; and that, accordingly, the defendants were entitled to be discharged from the prosecution.

M'Intyre v. Laird, 1943 S.C.(J.) 96 followed.

Held, further, that, in view of the definition of "loaf" in article 1 as including "wrapped sliced bread," the weight of the wrapper must be included in the weight of a wrapped sliced loaf.

CASE STATED by the Cardiff stipendiary magistrate.

On August 30, 1954, an information was preferred by the chief inspector of weights and measures for the city of Cardiff against the defendants, Trickers (Confectioners) Ld., that on July 28, 1954, they had in their possession for sale at their shop at 33 Bridge Street, Cardiff, a certain loaf or roll of bread its weight not being 14 oz. or a multiple of 14 oz., to wit, 10 drams deficient of 14 oz., contrary to article 3 (1) of the Bread Order, 1953,[1] made under the Supplies and Services (Transitional

[1] Bread Order, 1953, art. 2: "In "this Order . . . 'loaf' includes "wrapped sliced bread."

Art. 3: "(1) No person shall sell "or have in his possession for sale "any loaf or roll of bread (including "any bap) unless its weight is 14 "ounces or a multiple of 14 ounces "or is 10 ounces or less.

"(2) Where in any proceedings a "person is charged with a contravention of this article in respect of the "weight of any bread—(a) the court "shall disregard any inconsiderable "variation in the weight of a single "loaf or roll of bread, and shall have "regard to the average weight of a "reasonable number of loaves or rolls "of the same kind (if any) sold by "the person so charged, or in his "possession for the purpose of sale, "on the same occasion, and generally "to all the circumstances of the case; "and (b) if the person so charged "proves to the satisfaction of the "court that such deficiency was due "to a bona fide mistake or accident, "or to other causes beyond his control, and that it occurred in spite "of all reasonable precautions being "taken and all due diligence being "exercised by him to prevent its "occurrence, or that it was due to "the action of some person over whom "he had no control, the person so "charged shall be discharged from "the prosecution.

"(4) During the continuance in "force of this Order, paragraphs (2) "and (3) of section 6 of the Sale of "Food (Weights and Measures) Act, "1926, shall not have effect."

Sale of Food (Weights and Measures) Act, 1926, s. 1: "A per- "son shall not, in selling any article "of food by weight . . . deliver or

1955

Trickers (Confectioners) Ld. v. Barnes.

Powers) Act, 1945, as extended by the Supplies and Services (Defence Purposes) Act, 1951, and continued in force by the Supplies and Services (Continuance) Order, 1953. On the same day, six further informations in similar terms were also preferred, of which two alleged that two other 14 oz. loaves were each 10 drams deficient, one alleged that another 14 oz. loaf was 9 drams deficient and three alleged that three other 14 oz. loaves were each 8 drams deficient, each alleged offence being contrary to the Bread Order, 1953.

The following facts were found by the magistrate: The defendants were the occupiers of a retail shop at No. 33 Bridge Street, Cardiff, where they sold bread, cakes and confectionery. At 7.30 a.m. on July 28, 1954, a bakery called The Welsh Country Maid Ld. delivered 228 loaves, of which 102 purported to be 14 oz. loaves, at the defendants' shop. At 8.45 a.m. on the same day the defendants' manageress opened the shop and, in accordance with the usual routine, the loaves were put into the shop window by the shop assistants. It was the custom of the manageress to weigh some of the loaves picked at random from the daily delivery so that she might find out if there were any deficient and, if so, to put all deficient loaves on one side, but on the day in question, on account of the rush of customers, she did not carry out her usual routine of weighing a number of specimen loaves.

At 11.15 a.m. the inspector of weights and measures for the city of Cardiff entered the shop in the course of his duty, with a duly appointed and qualified assistant, and weighed twenty-four of the 14 oz. loaves which were then in the shop for the purpose of sale. Of the twenty-four loaves weighed, six were wholemeal, eleven were wrapped and sliced wholemeal of the brand known as "Honeywheat," and seven were wrapped and sliced white of the brand known as "Sunbeam"; and all were found to be deficient in weight to some extent. The total deficiency in weight of the first six wholemeal loaves amounted to 4 oz. 7 drams, which was an average deficiency of 12 drams per loaf. Of these six loaves, two were each 14 drams deficient, another three were each 11 drams deficient, and one was 10 drams deficient. The total deficiency in the weight of the eleven "Honeywheat" loaves amounted to 5 oz. 2 drams, which was an average deficiency of $7\frac{1}{2}$ drams per loaf. Of these loaves two were each 12 drams deficient, two were each 11 drams deficient, one was 9 drams deficient, one was 7 drams deficient, two were each 6 drams deficient, one was 4 drams deficient and two were each 2 drams deficient. The weight of one wrapper was $3\frac{1}{2}$ drams, and was not included in the weight of the bread. The total deficiency of the weight of the seven "Sunbeam" loaves amounted to 4 oz. 13 drams, which was an average deficiency of 11 drams per loaf. Of these loaves, one was 1 oz. 3 drams deficient, one was 14 drams deficient, two were each 10 drams deficient, and three were each 8 drams deficient. The weight of one wrapper was 4 drams, and was not included in the weight of the bread. The defendants had no control over the baking of the bread.

"cause to be delivered to the purchaser a less weight . . . than is purported to be sold."

S. 6: "(1) A person shall not sell or offer for sale any bread otherwise than by net weight. (2) A person shall not sell or have in his possession for sale . . . any loaf of bread unless its net weight is one pound or an integral number of pounds: . . ."

It was contended by the appellants that: (1) article 3 of the Order did not apply to a deficiency in weight of a single loaf of bread, but that it provided for the standardisation of an integral weight for bread, and if proceedings were to be taken under the article a number of loaves should be weighed and an average taken and a single summons issued; that the order in effect replaced section 6 (2) of the Sale of Food (Weights and Measures) Act, 1926, except that the integral weight was now 14 oz. and not 1 lb., and proceedings for sale of a single loaf deficient in weight could and should be taken under section 1 of that Act, and that that contention was confirmed by article 3 (2) (a) of the order which directed the court to disregard any inconsiderable variations in weight. (2) Even if article 3 of the order were applicable to the proceedings, the seven informations should be dismissed having regard to the provisions of paragraph (2) (a) of article 3 as the variations in the present case were not considerable. (3) Having regard to article 3 (3) (b) of the order, the defendants were entitled to be discharged from the prosecution as the deficiencies were due to the action of some person over whom they had no control, namely, the bakers; and that it would be unreasonable and impracticable to expect retailers to weigh all bread received by them from bakers and if retailers had to do so it would cause them to cease to sell bread as it would not be worth the trouble involved. Further, in admitting that he would only expect retailers to weigh one loaf in every six or eight, the prosecutor was admitting that article 3 did not apply to single loaves, as a check of one in eight might well disclose one loaf of correct weight and seven deficient, or vice versa, and such weighing was not necessary on the true construction of article 3 (2) (b) if the deficiency was proved to be due to the action of some person over whom the defendants had no control and had occurred in spite of all reasonable precautions being taken and all due diligence exercised by the defendants.

It was contended by the prosecutor that (1) The seven informations were laid against the defendants in respect of seven loaves, on the ground that each of these loaves was short of 14 oz. in weight contrary to the provisions of article 3 (1) of the order; that the order of 1953 replaced section 6 of the Sale of Food (Weights and Measures) Act, 1926, and a distinction could be drawn between the provisions of section 6 and section 1 of that Act in that under section 1 the bread had to be sold, whereas under section 6 it was sufficient for the bread to be in the possession of the retailer for sale, and that if section 1 were the only method by which the weights and measures inspectors could verify the weight of bread and prosecute offenders, the Act would become unworkable in that the inspectors would be forced to buy a large number of loaves in order to get a fair average, whereas under section 6 of the Act, and under the order which replaced it, the inspectors had the right to enter a shop and weigh loaves of bread at random without buying them. (2) Section 6 related to deficiencies in the weight of bread and therefore the order which had now been substituted for section 6 also related to deficiencies and did not merely prescribe an integral weight for the size of the loaves; that the deficiencies found showed considerable variations amongst the loaves weighed and the retailer had had ample time between 7.30 a.m. when the loaves were delivered and the inspection at 11.15 a.m. to have weighed some of the loaves. (3) The defence had not endeavoured to prove to the satisfaction of the court, in accordance with article 3 (2) (b) of the order, that the deficiency was due to a bona fide mistake or accident, or to other causes beyond their control, and, in the absence of such evidence, the defence could not rely on due diligence having been exercised.

1955

Trickers (Confectioners) Ld. v. Barnes.

The magistrate was of opinion that: (a) the effect of the Bread Order, 1953, was not limited to prescribing integral weights for loaves generally, but that an information in respect of an alleged deficiency of weight in a single loaf might properly be laid thereunder, since article 3 (2) (b) of the order expressly referred only to such deficiency, in contrast with article 3 (2) (a) which referred to a variation, presumably to include a surplus. (b) He had to interpret article 3 (1) of the order in the light of the authorities relating to the interpretation and effect of section 6 of the Sale of Food (Weights and Measures) Act, 1926, since the order suspended the operation of section 6 (2) and (3) of the Act and substituted the provisions of article 3 of the order, and accordingly he was not permitted to follow or apply the reasoning of the High Court of Justiciary in M'Intyre v. Laird.[2] (3) Seven of the deficiencies proved corresponded to the deficiencies alleged in the seven informations, and as it was not possible to disregard any of those deficiencies as an inconsiderable variation of a single loaf, no question arose regarding the average weight of a reasonable number of other loaves. The weight of the wrapper should be excluded in weighing a wrapped loaf. (4) There was no evidence of a bona fide mistake or accident and, in so far as any such deficiency was due to other causes beyond the defendants' control, they had not proved to his satisfaction either that they had taken all reasonable precautions or that they had exercised all due diligence. (5) The defendants had not proved to his satisfaction that any such deficiency was due to the action of some person over whom they had no control, as the presence of some deficiencies could and should have been detected by their manageress, thereby giving her warning and enabling her to put all deficient loaves on one side had she carried out the routine which she admitted was her usual practice.

Accordingly he convicted the defendants on each of the seven informations, fining them ten shillings on each.

The defendants appealed.

The questions set out in the case stated upon which the opinion of the court was desired by the magistrate were whether, upon the above statement of facts, he came to a correct determination and decision in point of law generally in convicting the appellants, and in particular whether he was right (a) to convict them on an information in respect of a deficiency in a single loaf, and (b) to hold the appellants liable as retailers for deficiency in weight of bread over the baking of which they had not had any control.

S. M. Noakes for the defendants.

A. P. Roberts for the prosecutor.

The following cases were cited in argument: M'Intyre v. Laird [2]; Whittaker v. Collings [3]; Cave v. Dudley Co-operative Society Ltd. [4] and Marshall v. Matthews. [5]

LORD GODDARD C.J. This is a case stated by the stipendiary magistrate for Cardiff, before whom the defendants, who are bakers and confectioners, in the sense that they sell bread and cakes but do not bake themselves, were charged with offences under the Bread Order, 1953, which was made in pursuance of various powers under the Supplies and Services Orders and deals also with the Sale of Food (Weights and Measures) Act, 1926.

[His Lordship read article 3 (1) and (2) (a), and continued:] The first point which arises is this: The magistrate asks whether he was right in convicting with regard to individual single loaves of bread. The answer, in my opinion, is "Yes," because it was found that the particular loaf of bread, the subject of the first information, was deficient by 10 drams. Ten drams is over half an ounce, and the magistrate has held, and if it was a matter for this court I should agree with him, that he cannot regard that as an inconsiderable variation, and it is only if there is an inconsiderable variation in regard to a loaf of bread which can be disregarded that the court shall have regard to the average weight of a reasonable number of loaves. In other words, if you find a loaf which has some small variation, say two or three drams, then you weigh several other loaves and see whether they all vary or whether it was just what I may call the luck of the draw that that loaf, which was a very small part of the whole, was picked on. I think that the magistrate in this case was entitled,

[2] 1943 S.C.(J.) 96.
[3] (1938) unreported.
[4] (1934) 103 L.J.K.B. 569.
[5] [1939] 1 All E.R. 156.

1955

Trickers (Confectioners) Ld. v. Barnes.

Lord Goddard C.J.

subject to what I am going to say with regard to another point, to convict on individual loaves.

Another point has arisen in this case, upon which I think that we ought to express an opinion. In considering whether or not there was an inconsiderable variation, the magistrate had to consider wrapped sliced loaves, that is to say, loaves which have been cut into slices and wrapped in paper, and in considering whether there was a deficiency in weight in those loaves he ignored the wrapping. I think that that is wrong, because in the order which now takes the place of paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 6 of the Act of 1926, the word "net" weight no longer appears. "Net," of course, would rule out any question of wrapping and the definition of "loaf" in the Bread Order includes wrapped sliced bread, and therefore the words "no person shall have in his "possession for sale any loaf unless its weight is 14 ounces" must be read as "no person shall sell or have in his possession "any wrapped sliced bread unless its weight is 14 ounces." Wrapped sliced bread is, of course, sold in that way to avoid handling, and I have no doubt that the authorities in this matter would like to encourage the wrapping of bread because it tends to eliminate the chances of infection, and so forth, if it is wrapped and not unwrapped till it gets to the consumer. If either the inspector when he comes or the retailer when he receives it from his wholesaler unwraps the bread, then the whole object of wrapped sliced bread goes by the board. I think that is recognized by the department which is entrusted with legislating on this matter by Statutory Rule and Order because they have omitted in this Order the word "net." Therefore, if we had taken a different view on the third point, to which I am coming, we should have had to send the case back to the magistrate for him to reconsider those cases where the informations referred to wrapped sliced bread.

But there is another point taken by Mr. Noakes which seems to me to be unanswerable, though at first I thought that it was. Article 3 (b) of the order states: "if the person so charged proves "to the satisfaction of the court that such deficiency was due to a "bona fide mistake or accident, or to other causes beyond his "control, and that it occurred in spite of all reasonable pre-"cautions being taken and all due diligence being exercised by "him to prevent its occurrence, or that it was due to the action "of some person over whom he had no control, the person so "charged shall be discharged from the prosecution."

It seems to me clear when you read that and recognize that it is concerned with the deficiency, that the word "or" and the sentence "or that it was due to the action of some person over "whom he had no control," are entirely disjunctive, so that one does not have to consider whether the deficiency is due to the action of some person over whom the retailer had no control, and at the same time consider whether due diligence was being exercised by the retailer. If the deficiency is due to a bona fide mistake or to other causes beyond his control, then the retailer has to show that he took all reasonable precautions and used due diligence, but if it is due to the action of some person over whom he has no control, he does not have to show those things. That was the view taken by the High Court of Justiciary in M'Intyre & Son v. Laird,[1] and there seems to be an unreported case in England, Whittaker v. Collings,[2] on which their Lordships of the Justiciary relied, although we have only the case and the endorsement on it of the result. But, in any case, if there is a decision of the High Court of Justiciary concerning these matters on the other side of the border, we always try in this court to decide in the same way; it would be very undesirable if bakers on one side of the border could do one thing and bakers on the other side of the border could not. It seems to me that the decision in M'Intyre's case[3] is precisely in point. The Lord Justice Clerk, Lord Cooper, said: "Further, in view of the "finding that the appellants had no connexion with the manufac- "turers of the loaves except as purchasers from them, and that "they had no control over the actions of these manufacturers in "the baking of the loaves, I am unable to understand the later "finding that the appellants did not exercise due diligence to "prevent the occurrence of the deficiency in weight, or the "further finding that the deficiency in weight was not due to a "cause beyond the control of the appellants. Indeed, the case "of Whittaker v. Collings,[4] shows that, if the present case were "to be disposed of on the basis adopted by the English courts, "the conviction could not stand, for it was held in that case that "section 12 (2) was satisfied by a finding that the retailer had no "control over the baking of bread." It seems to me that their Lordships had the advantage of a fuller report of the case of Whittaker v. Collings[4] than we have; at any rate, there is the decision, and I think we ought to decide in the same way so as to keep the decisions in line. That ground alone would be enough to upset the conviction, and the consequence is that the appeal must be allowed and the conviction quashed.

ORMEROD J. I agree, for the reasons given by my Lord.

GORMAN J. I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Rhys Roberts & Co. for Hornby, Baker, Jones & Wood, Newport (Mon.); Theodore Goddard & Co. for Town Clerk, Cardiff.

J. F. L.

[1] 1943 S.C.(J.) 96.
[2] (1938) unreported.
[3] 1943 S.C.(J.) 96, 104.
[4] (1938) unreported.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1955
Mar. 4.

Hodson and Parker L.JJ.

* SMITH v. EAST ELLOE RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL AND OTHERS.

[1954 S. No. 3024.]

Compulsory Purchase — Compulsory purchase order — Validity — Writ alleging order made in bad faith—Whether court has jurisdiction— Acquisition of Land (Authorisation Procedure) Act, 1946 (9 & 10 Geo. 6, c. 49), Sch. I, Pt. IV, para. 16.

Paragraph 16 of Part IV of the First Schedule to the Acquisition of Land (Authorisation Procedure) Act, 1946,[1] applies to compulsory purchase orders in general and is not confined to compulsory purchase orders in respect of land which forms the subject of the special procedure laid down in Part III of the First Schedule.

INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL from an order of Havers J.

In 1940 the plaintiff's residence, "Hall Hill House," Hallgate, Holbeach, Lincoln, was requisitioned for housing purposes by the East Elloe Rural District Council. In April, 1947, the premises were vacated and thereafter not used for the purpose for which they were requisitioned, but were left unoccupied. On August 27, 1948, a compulsory purchase order was served in respect of the house and surrounding land and buildings, all of which were the property of the plaintiff. On November 29, 1948, the order was confirmed by the Minister of Health and in December, 1948, an order to treat and a notice of entry were served. On January 12, 1951, the premises were derequisitioned and the defendant council entered upon the land. On October 17, 1952, the plaintiff obtained a judgment against the defendant council in the Queen's Bench Division for £850 for damages for trespass.

On July 6, 1954, the plaintiff issued a writ against four defendants, the East Elloe Rural District Council, the Ministry of Health, J. C. Pywell, and the Ministry of Housing and Local Government. Against the first defendants she claimed damages for trespass, an injunction to restrain further trespass and a declaration that the compulsory purchase order dated August 27, 1948, was wrongfully made and in bad faith; against the second defendants a declaration that the order was wrongfully confirmed and in bad faith; against the third defendant that he knowingly acted wrongfully and in bad faith in procuring the order and the

[Reported by G. D. BLACK, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

[1] Acquisition of Land (Authorisation Procedure) Act, 1946, Sch. I, Part IV, para. 16: "Subject to the "provisions of the last foregoing "paragraph a compulsory purchase "order or a certificate under Part III "of this Schedule shall not, either "before or after it has been con- "firmed, made or given, be questioned "in any legal proceedings whatso- "ever."

confirmation thereof; and against the fourth defendants as having taken over the functions of the second defendants, a declaration that the order and confirmation were in bad faith.

On July 27, 1954, each of the defendants applied by summons for the writ to be set aside on the grounds that it was "invalid "for lack of jurisdiction, it being provided by paragraph 16 of "Part IV of the First Schedule to the Acquisition of Land "(Authorisation Procedure) Act, 1946, that save by the procedure "specified in the said Schedule, a compulsory purchase order "confirmed in accordance with the provisions of the said Act "(as was here the case) shall not, either before or after it "has been confirmed, be questioned in any legal proceedings "whatsoever. By reason whereof this Honourable Court has "no jurisdiction to grant the relief sought against the said "defendants."

On August 4, 1954, Master Clayton ordered that the writ should be set aside as against all four defendants. On October 4, 1954, Havers J. dismissed an appeal from this order, but gave leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal. The plaintiff appealed, contending that pargraph 16 was limited to compulsory acquisition of land under Part III of the First Schedule which did not include the land in question.

F. H. Collier for the plaintiff.

W. L. Roots for the East Elloe Rural District Council.

Rodger Winn and Neil McKinnon for the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Housing and Local Government.

No cases were cited in argument.

HODSON L.J. I will ask Parker L.J. to deliver the judgment of the court.

PARKER L.J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from an order of Havers J. dismissing two appeals from Master Clayton, the order being that the writ in the proceedings be set aside and the action stayed as against all four defendants on the ground, in effect, that it disclosed no cause of action. The actual summonses were not in the ordinary general form under R.S.C. Ord. 25, r. 4, but the defendants specifically stated the ground, namely, that as affects all the defendants, the writ of summons in the action is invalid for lack of jurisdiction for the reason that the court had no jurisdiction because of a provision in the Acquisition of Land (Authorisation Procedure) Act, 1946.

The court has not had to go into the facts of the case, but it is quite clear that the plaintiff in her claim against these defendants is seeking to allege that a compulsory purchase order made in respect of her land is invalid by reason of the fact that it was made in bad faith. The provision in the Act which was relied upon before the master and before the judge is paragraph 16 of

C. A.
1955
SMITH
v.
EAST ELLOE RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL.

Part IV of the First Schedule which provides that: "Subject to "the provisions of the last foregoing paragraph, a compulsory "purchase order or a certificate under Part III of this Schedule "shall not, either before or after it has been confirmed, made "or given, be questioned in any legal proceedings whatsoever. " . . . ."

Mr. Collier has urged on behalf of the plaintiff before us that that provision in paragraph 16 is limited to a case of the compulsory acquisition of land of the type dealt with under Part III of the Schedule. It is necessary to explain a little the scheme of this Act. By section 1 (1) authorization is provided for the compulsory purchase of certain lands by means of the well-known process of compulsory purchase orders. That is quite general. Subsection (2) provides: "The purchase, in a case falling within "the last foregoing section of land (a) which is the property of "a local authority" or land which forms a common or open space or an ancient monument, is to be subject not only to compulsory purchase orders, but to the special procedure laid down in Part III of the First Schedule. Amongst other things Part III of the First Schedule provides that there shall be no compulsory purchase order unless the Minister is satisfied as to certain matters, and certifies accordingly. Mr. Collier argues that this bar against questioning compulsory purchase orders provided for by paragraph 16 applies only in the case where the land being purchased is land of the character dealt with under Part III of the Schedule, and it is quite clear that the land in this case was not such land. Accordingly, Mr. Collier says that that being the sole ground, as appearing in the summonses, and that being the sole matter argued before the master and the judge, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed.

The point is a short one. I am perfectly clear that in paragraph 16 the reference to a compulsory purchase order is to all compulsory purchase orders and is not limited to a compulsory purchase order in respect of land which forms the subject of the special procedure laid down in Part III. It would be an absurd result if compulsory purchase orders generally could be challenged, but that a particular compulsory purchase order which had a special procedure attached to it, and provision for a certificate, could not be challenged. It seems to me that it is necessary to go back to the preceding paragraph (paragraph 15) which lays down the procedure (and an analogous procedure has been laid down in a number of other Acts for some time) whereby provision is made for compulsory purchase orders being challenged, and for their being quashed. That paragraph provides: "If any person aggrieved by a compulsory purchase order desires "to question the validity thereof, or of any provision contained "therein, on the ground that the authorisation of a compulsory "purchase thereby granted is not empowered to be granted "under this Act or any such enactment as is mentioned in "subsection (1) of section 1 of this Act,"—pausing there, that is dealing with a case where a compulsory purchase order is said not to have been authorised. The paragraph goes on: "or if "any person aggrieved by a compulsory purchase order or a "certificate under Part III of this Schedule desires to question "the validity thereof on the ground that any requirement of "this Act or of any regulation made thereunder has not been "complied with," he may take certain action within six weeks.

That second part of paragraph 15 is dealing with the well-known case where some requirement of the Act has not been complied with—such as that the owner has not been served, or some notice has not been published in the local newspaper, and matters of that sort. That applies to all compulsory purchase orders whether they are of land which forms the subject of the procedure in Part III or not. On the other hand, the certificate under Part III naturally comes in there because there is no question of challenging a certificate because authorisation is not empowered; the certificate can only be challenged because some procedure relating to a public local inquiry has not been complied with.

Mr. Roots points out what is perfectly true, and what I think is conclusive—that in fact you do not get any authorisation for a compulsory purchase order under Part III. Of course, compulsory purchase orders have to be made in respect of land the subject of the special procedure set out in Part III, but you do not get authorization for a compulsory purchase order under Part III. Accordingly in my view the reference to compulsory purchase order in paragraph 16 is to compulsory purchase orders generally, whether in respect of land which forms the subject of the procedure in Part III or not.

Mr. Collier did faintly suggest that, even if he were wrong, by reason of the allegation of fraud in this case it would be open to the plaintiff to challenge the compulsory purchase order at any time. In my view, once paragraph 16 is construed in the sense against him, there is no room for challenging the compulsory purchase order thereafter on any ground, whether that of fraud or not. In my view, therefore, this appeal fails.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Lucien Fior, for A. E. Hamlin, Sheringham; Lees & Co. for Mossop & Bowser, Holbeach (for East Elloe R.D.C.); B. O'Brien (for Ministry of Health and Ministry of Housing and Local Government).

[PROBATE, ETC. DIVISION.]

1955
Jan. 28;
Feb. 2.

Lord Merriman P. and Collingwood J.

* HARTLEY v. HARTLEY.

Husband and Wife—Justices—Desertion—Defence of belief in deserted spouse's adultery—Husband's misconduct in promoting or bringing about the state of affairs inducing belief a defence.

Per curiam. A spouse cannot rely upon his belief in the other spouse's adultery as a defence to a charge of desertion or wilful neglect to maintain if he has actively promoted or brought about the state of affairs alleged to have induced that belief.

Glenister v. Glenister [1945] P. 30; [1945] 1 All E.R. 513 and Chilton v. Chilton [1952] P. 196; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1316; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1322 applied.

Appeal by a wife against a decision of the justices of the Aylesbury petty sessional division of Buckinghamshire on November 9, 1954, dismissing her complaint that her husband had wilfully neglected to provide reasonable maintenance for her and for her infant child.

In 1946 the husband went abroad for two years. Whilst overseas he heard that a man called Palmer, whose name rumour had linked with his wife as early as 1942, had become a lodger of the wife's mother at a boarding-house which she owned next door to the matrimonial home. Whenever the husband had previously taxed his wife with her association with Palmer, a married man living apart from his wife, she had protested her innocence; and the wife's mother, to whom he wrote on hearing that Palmer had become her lodger, answered in the same strain.

Shortly after the husband's return home in 1948 the wife began to ignore the husband and cultivate the company of Palmer, with whom she spent her evenings either in the sitting room of the matrimonial home or out in his car. On more than one occasion the husband had found Palmer and the wife in the matrimonial home in the early hours of the morning, but there was no conclusive evidence of adultery. Marital intercourse ceased in 1951.

One evening in February, 1954, the husband, when about to enter the matrimonial home, looked through the curtains of the front room, which was unlighted save by the light from the hall, and saw his wife and Palmer kissing and embracing. He did nothing until a week later when he told his wife that she had better go and ask Palmer for money when she asked for some, and taxed her, in her mother's presence, with what he had seen, which she denied.

In late September or early October, 1954, the husband arrived home one evening to find a violent quarrel in progress between Mrs. Palmer, Palmer and his wife. In answer to a question from Mrs. Palmer, the husband said that he was aware of the association between his wife and Palmer. This was the signal for an outburst of abuse by the wife against Mrs. Palmer, but she remained silent when Palmer said that he preferred her to his wife.

Shortly afterwards the husband ceased to pay any money to the wife and on November 2, 1954, after consulting his solicitor, he left the matrimonial home.

The wife issued a summons on the ground of the husband's wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for her and for the infant child, which was dismissed on November 9, 1954. The justices accepted the evidence of the husband and held that he had a reasonable belief that his wife had committed adultery with Palmer, that he bona fide held that belief when he withdrew from cohabitation and that he was, therefore, justified in so withdrawing.

John Hazel for the wife.
D. R. Ellison for the husband.

The following cases were cited in argument, in addition to those referred to in the judgments: Manning v. Manning *; Forbes v. Forbes †; Mudge v. Mudge and Honeysett ‡; Robinson v. Robinson and Dearden §; Marris v. Marris and Burke ‖; Lloyd v. Lloyd and Leggeri ¶; Timmings v. Timmings.

LORD MERRIMAN P. The husband's defence to the complaint was based upon the decision of this court in Glenister v. Glenister,[1] which was followed and applied in Chilton v. Chilton,[2] the headnote of which reads as follows:—"If the conduct of a "wife has been such as to create in the mind of her husband a "reasonable belief that she has been guilty of adultery, so long "as that reasonable belief, so induced, lasts the husband has a "sufficient defence to proceedings taken by her whether based "on desertion or a wilful neglect to provide reasonable main-"tenance." The decision in Glenister v. Glenister[3] related to the charge of desertion. The case of Baker v. Baker,[4] more recent than Chilton v. Chilton,[5] applied the same principle the other way round, and decided that a wife who could allege that she was driven to leave home because her husband had so conducted himself as to induce the same sort of belief, could base a charge of desertion thereon. But the husband's case is directly based upon the authority of this court in Chilton v. Chilton.[6]

The justices held that the husband established that defence, and for that reason dismissed the wife's summons. In their

* [1950] 1 All E.R. 602.
† [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1526; [1954] 3 All E.R. 461.
‡ [1951] P. 173; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 631; [1950] 1 All E.R. 607.
§ [1903] P. 155.
‖ (1862) 2 Sw. & Tr. 530.
¶ [1938] P. 174; 54 T.L.R. 735; [1938] 2 All E.R. 480.
 (1792) 3 Hag.Ecc. 76.

[1] [1945] P. 30; [1945] 1 All E.R. 513.
[2] [1952] P. 196; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 1316; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1322.
[3] [1945] P. 30.
[4] [1954] P. 33; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 857; [1953] 2 All E.R. 1199.
[5] [1952] P. 196.
[6] Ibid.

1955

HARTLEY v. HARTLEY.

Lord Merriman P.

reasons they do not expressly find that it was the conduct of the wife which induced the husband's belief, but Mr. Hazel for the wife admitted, very frankly and rightly, that the evidence showed that if the defence was appropriate at all—if the husband could rely on a reasonable belief—it was the wife's conduct which induced it. His contention on behalf of the wife is that the husband ought not to be heard to assert that he had a reasonable belief that his wife had committed adultery, because his conduct was such that, if there had been a substantive charge or a substantive defence that she had actually committed adultery, he ought to be held either to have connived at it or, at least, to have been guilty of misconduct which conduced to such supposed adultery. From that he argued, by analogy to one or other of those bars to setting up a positive charge of adultery, that by parity of reasoning the husband ought not to be permitted to assert that he believed that his wife had committed adultery, and still less that it was her conduct which induced him to believe it. The point is an interesting one but I do not think that I need to spend very much time on it, because in substance there has been no dispute about the principle. It may, however, be as well to see how it is sought to apply it, and for that purpose to take the simplest possible illustration of the principle laid down in Glenister v. Glenister [7] as it has been applied and approved in subsequent cases. That principle operates as a defence to a complaint by the wife of desertion or of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance. The reason is that if the wife has induced that belief in her husband's mind and he leaves the matrimonial home to avoid the suggestion that by staying he is condoning the past adultery, or even, it may be, conniving at or conducing to any future repetition of the adultery, it could not be right to hold that the wife is entitled to complain of his departure as desertion. I need not go over the classes of case in which that has been dealt with, but it is important to remember that as a defence it may, and frequently does, run in double harness, so to speak, with a substantive charge of the adultery the belief in which, the husband says, induced him to leave the matrimonial home. It may be alternative or ancillary to a positive complaint on his part of the same adultery, with a view to obtaining, as he is now entitled to obtain from the justices, a separation order. The point is illustrated by taking the simple example, which has been used more than once in connexion with the Glenister v. Glenister [8] type of case—that of a wife who, with every circumstantial detail, has set out to convince her husband of her guilt—and by supposing, also, that this is the culmination of a relationship between the husband and the wife of which it could be said, and said with truth, that the husband's own misconduct had conduced to the very thing which the wife was persuading him to believe, or even,

[7] [1945] P. 30.

[8] [1945] P. 30.

perhaps, that he himself had promoted the very occasion on which he charges the offence as having occurred. By section 6 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, "No "orders shall be made under this Act on the application of a "married woman if it shall be proved that such married woman "has committed an act of adultery: Provided"—(and I omit deliberately any reference to condonation, which does not come in question here)—"that the husband has not connived at, or "by his wilful neglect or misconduct conduced to such act of "adultery." Manifestly, if either of those two provisos were found to be proved, the husband would neither be entitled to succeed in his complaint in respect of that adultery nor would he be entitled to resist the jurisdiction of the court to make the order on the ground of that adultery. It is argued that those facts having been determined with regard to the substantive charge, by analogy it must be impossible for him to assert, of the same set of circumstances, that he was driven from home by a reasonable belief, induced by his wife's conduct, that she had committed adultery.

As a proposition, Mr. Ellison accepted that this is the law, and I think that in such circumstances, when the wife's conduct on which the husband relies as creating the alleged belief in her adultery has actually been brought about or actively promoted by himself, it would be impossible for any court to allow him to rely on that so-called belief. It does not matter whether that result is arrived at by analogy to the defences of connivance or misconduct conducing set out in section 6, or, more directly and simply, as an illustration of the maxim volenti non fit injuria, for, in the circumstances supposed he is in the main, if not entirely, the author of the alleged wrong, in respect of which he affects to believe himself to have a real grievance.

That point need not be pursued further, because the argument has proceeded upon the basis that the law is as has been stated. Mr. Ellison has, however, said with very great force, that first of all one looks in vain to see that any such point was ever raised in this case as a substantive issue at all; and, secondly, even if it was, that there is no evidence to support anything which could remotely be said to resemble either connivance or misconduct conducing, and, therefore, that there is no reason for interfering with the decision of the justices.

[His Lordship then considered the evidence relating to the marriage and to the association with Palmer and referring to the finding of the justices said:] The justices came to the conclusion that they preferred the evidence of the husband on the question whether or not he had reasonable grounds for believing that his wife had committed adultery with Palmer; that there had been a friendship between them (and emphasized the fact that Palmer was a married man separated from his wife) over a number of years, as was admitted by the wife; that there had clearly been ample opportunities for adultery to have been committed; that the husband had himself seen acts of affection between his wife and Palmer; and that not only had there been opportunity for adultery, but that the probability was that adultery had been committed. The justices found that the couple had been together in the house in the early hours of the morning and that it was obvious that Palmer had supplanted the husband in the wife's affections. Finally, as corroboration, they relied upon the interview which occurred in August or September, pointing out that the husband had not been cross-examined on the accuracy of his evidence on this point. Having heard all the evidence, they retired and directed their minds to the question whether the husband had a reasonable belief that his wife had committed adultery with Palmer. They found that he had such a belief, and that it was bona fide held at the time that he withdrew from cohabitation, that he was therefore justified in so withdrawing, and they accordingly dismissed the wife's complaint.

1955

HARTLEY v. HARTLEY.

Lord Merriman P.

From this statement it is quite plain that the justices never directed their minds to any question such as the one with which I began this judgment, namely, whether it was open to the husband to put forward this reasonable belief if he had so demeaned himself as, in effect, to have been the author of his own wrongs. Mr. Hazel has told us, upon instructions, that in the reply the wife's solicitor did raise the point, and I am prepared to assume that it was so mentioned. I do not think that that is enough. That sort of answer if put forward should be put forward specifically and unmistakably, and evidence should be directed to the point. It is quite true, as Mr. Hazel has pointed out, that there were occasions in the course of this long history when the husband took no active steps. It is true that at one time, on one of his returns from abroad, he consulted solicitors, but nothing came of it. It is true that he might have gone to see his solicitors after the incident in February, 1954, but such comment as is made on his failure to do so is plainly discounted to some extent by the fact that it was after the incident at the end of September, 1954, that he went to see his solicitors, and was by them advised that the time had come for him to leave the matrimonial home. Then, it is said, he did not leave because he believed in his wife's adultery, but because he was advised to do so by his solicitors. There is a certain difficulty in reconciling those two arguments; but let that pass. At the end of it all I am quite satisfied that the husband was never really challenged on the basis that he had promoted the situation in which he affected to believe.

On the assumption that the point was raised and was not dealt with actually by the justices, we are entitled, indeed bound, to express our own opinion about it, and to draw any inference that ought to have been drawn. Accepting the husband's evidence, as the justices have done, and accepting as they have that it was the wife who, by her conduct throughout, culminating in the incident of September, 1954, induced the belief, which the husband expressed in court that the wife had committed adultery though he could not prove it, I cannot see that there is anything in his conduct which any court ought to hold gets anywhere near connivance at that in which he affected to believe, or to misconduct conducing thereto. Whether, as I have said, one approaches the matter by analogy to connivance at, or misconduct conducing to, the actual offence of adultery or simply on the basis that the husband was the author of the very thing of which he affected to complain, I decline to draw any such inference, and I do not think that any court ought to draw it in the absence of something much more definite in the way of acquiescence, wilfulness, or wilful blindness than is here attributable to the husband. In my opinion the appeal fails.

COLLINGWOOD J. The justices' decision involves a finding of belief on the part of the husband, reasonably held and induced by the wife's own conduct, that she had committed adultery. That is the basis of the decision in Glenister v. Glenister,[9] to which Lord Merriman P. has referred. There is no express finding in the justices' reasons that the belief was induced by the wife's conduct, but it was conceded in limine by counsel for the wife that if the finding of the existence of the belief could be supported, then that belief was brought about by the conduct of the wife. On the basis that the husband's evidence was rightly accepted by the justices, however, it was submitted that they were not justified in finding that the husband did reasonably hold such a belief. That was the first submission put forward on behalf of the wife, and the basis of that submission was that the husband's actions throughout were wholly inconsistent with his believing in his wife's adultery. It was urged that the evidence showed that he took none of the steps which a man labouring under that belief would naturally take; whatever her conduct might be, he sat down under it all; and that when at last he did take action, on November 2, 1954, when he left the house, that was not because of any suspicion of adultery which he entertained but because he had had a summons served on him calling upon him to answer his wife's complaint of wilful neglect to maintain her and her child. That, as I say, was the first submission, and that would appear to be the one envisaged in the first ground of appeal in the notice of appeal in this case.

A second line of argument was put forward, namely, that this husband had throughout passively acquiesced in his wife's conduct over a very long period, and that it was a case, on his part, of voluntary blindness to what had been going on for years past, and it was submitted that just as he could not now be heard to complain of adultery by his wife at which he had connived or to which his misconduct had conduced, so also he cannot now rely on a mere belief in such adultery brought about in the same circumstances.

[9] [1945] P. 30.

1955

Hartley v. Hartley.

Collingwood J.

That proposition was acceded to by Mr. Ellison, on the part of the husband, and I agree that it would be illogical, indeed absurd, to hold that a husband who failed in his defence of adultery on the ground that he had connived at it could at the same time succeed on the ground of a belief in that adultery at which he had connived.

What is involved in connivance has been the subject of a number of cases, to which our attention has been directed. I do not propose to go through them in any detail, because I think that all of those that were quoted to us were considered in great detail, particularly Gipps v. Gipps and Hume,[10] by the Court of Appeal in Churchman v. Churchman.[11] In that case Lord Merriman P. delivered the judgment of the Court of Appeal, and I propose to read a short passage from his judgment, where he says [12]: "... much of the difficulty in dealing with the question "of connivance arises from the fact that in the past judges have "gone beyond the facts of the particular case in an attempt to "lay down general principles of wider application. In our opinion "it is of the utmost importance to bear in mind that the issue "is whether, on the facts of the particular case, the husband "was or was not guilty of the corrupt intention of promoting "or encouraging either the initiation or the continuance of the "wife's adultery." That decision was considered and applied in Douglas v. Douglas.[13] That, therefore, is the criterion to be applied in regard to this submission of connivance on the part of this husband. The first observation I make with regard to that submission is this, that it clearly must involve that the husband did believe in his wife's adultery. Indeed, the argument was that he had been believing in it for years past, and that he sat down and accepted the position, and had ceased to care.

With regard to that submission, in the first place the husband's evidence shows that throughout the whole of the material time the wife had consistently protested her innocence. He taxed her with her association with Palmer on a number of occasions, and on each occasion she protested that there was nothing in it. While he was away on his second visit abroad the wife's mother wrote to him in the same strain because he had written a letter based upon information which he had received from somebody while he was abroad.

The second point is this: he had no proof whatever. He had seen incidents of which he did not approve, which gave him cause for some doubt; but he had no proof of actual adultery.

[His Lordship considered the evidence and concluded:] On those facts it is, of course, impossible to deny that this husband might have taken a much firmer stand than he did, and that he might have taken it long before; but mere negligence on his part,

[10] (1863) 32 L.J.P.M. & A. 179.
[11] [1945] P. 44; 61 T.L.R. 464; [1945] 2 All E.R. 190.
[12] [1945] P. 52.
[13] [1951] P. 85; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 2) 531; [1950] 2 All E.R. 748.

1955

HARTLEY v. HARTLEY.

Collingwood J.

mere inactivity, weakness, or a failure to take such steps as perhaps a more strong-minded man might have taken fall far short of the requirements of connivance.

One complaint that has been made against him is that he ought to have kept observation on them, or, if he could not do it himself, to have enlisted the services of some inquiry agent. Be that as it may. In my opinion nothing that he did or failed to do comes anywhere near justifying a court in finding that he was, to quote the passage in Churchman v. Churchman,[14] " guilty " of the corrupt intention of promoting or encouraging either the " initiation or the continuance of the wife's adultery." There was no evidence of knowledge or privity to any adultery by his wife, and there was evidence which justified the justices in reaching the conclusion that the husband honestly drew the inference, induced by the conduct of his wife, that she had committed adultery.

I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Lowe & Co.; Cree, Godfrey & Wood, for Leather & Stevenson, Aylesbury.

E. J.

[14] [1945] P. 44, 52.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1955
Mar. 7, 16.

Denning L.J.

* LAMDON TRUST LD. v. HURRELL AND ANOTHER.

[1954 L. 602.]

Hire-Purchase—Hire-purchase agreement—Motor-car—Hirer in arrears with payment of instalments — Breach of agreement — Agreement terminated by owners—Car returned to owners—Claim by owners under depreciation clause for sum equal to three-quarters of purchase price—Penalty.

Contract—Penalty.

The defendant, having entered into a hire-purchase agreement with the plaintiffs in respect of a motor-car, the purchase price of which was £558 8s., including hiring charge, and having paid a deposit and four instalments amounting in all to £302 16s., failed to pay the fifth instalment. The plaintiffs terminated the agreement, retook possession of the car and resold it for £270. They then claimed from the defendant £122 4s. under a clause of the agreement which required the hirer, if the owners terminated the hiring, to pay a sum sufficient to bring up his total payments to £425 by way of compensation for depreciation:—

Held, that the figure of £425, which was approximately three-quarters of the purchase price, could not be regarded as a genuine pre-estimate of damage, but was an extravagant and extortionate sum held in terrorem over the head of the hirer; it was a penalty and as such was not recoverable in law.

Cooden Engineering Co. Ld. v. Stanford [1953] 1 Q.B. 86; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 822; [1952] 2 All E.R. 915 applied.

1955

LAMDON TRUST LD. v. HURRELL.

ACTION.

The plaintiffs, Lamdon Trust Ld., entered into a hire-purchase agreement, dated August 28, 1953, in respect of a motor-car, the purchase price of which was £525, plus £33 8s. hiring charge, with the first defendant, William Hurrell, a partner in the firm of Hurrell & Partners, as hirer, and the second defendant, Muriel Patricia Hope, as guarantor. Under the agreement the first defendant agreed by clause 1 to pay £175 cash down, and by clause 2, monthly instalments of £31 9s. until the total sum of £558 8s. was paid. The hirer agreed by clause 3: "To keep the "motor in good order, repair, and working condition . . ." and by clause 6: "To pay, should he return the motor under clause 15 "(a) hereof or should the owners give notice terminating the "hire of the motor and/or retake the motor under clause 8 hereof "before the expiration of nine months from the date hereof, such "further sum (in addition to any sum payable under clause 8 "hereof) as, with the total amount previously paid under clauses "1 and 2 hereof, will equal the sum of £425 by way of compensa-"tion for depreciation of the said motor." It was provided by clause 8 that if the hirer fell into arrears or committed any breach of the agreement, the owners could terminate the hiring and retake possession of the car, and such termination and/or retaking of possession should not prejudice the owners' right to recover "rent . . . and/or other moneys payable under this agreement, "including damages for breach thereof." By clause 15 (a) the owners agreed that "The hirer may terminate the hiring at any "time by returning the motor to the owners . . . but the hirer "shall remain liable for rent up to the date of such return . . . "and damages, if any, for any breach of this agreement, compen-"sation, if any, under clause 6 hereof, and also any other moneys "payable under this agreement."

The first defendant paid £175 and four instalments. He failed to pay the instalment due on January 28, 1954, and on February 10 the plaintiffs gave notice terminating the hire of the car and took possession of it. They resold it for £270.

The plaintiffs claimed against Hurrell, as principal, and Hope, as guarantor, £122 4s., as the balance due under clause 6 of the agreement as compensation for depreciation, which sum was the difference between the payments made to the company and £425 stipulated in the clause.

The defendants denied that £122 4s. was owing to the plaintiffs, and by their defence stated that they would contend that the sum was a penalty and irrecoverable.

Bernard Finlay appeared for the plaintiffs.

The first defendant appeared in person.

The second defendant was not represented and did not appear.

The cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

1955

LAMDON TRUST LD. v. HURRELL.

March 16. DENNING L.J. read the following judgment: In August, 1953, Hurrell & Partners wished to get a second-hand car for use in their business. They found one they liked, an Armstrong Siddeley, at a price of £525, but they had not the money to pay for it cash down; so they arranged to acquire it on hire-purchase terms. A finance company called Landom Trust Ld. bought the car for £525 and let it to William Hurrell on instalment terms payable over 12 months. The instalments were £175 cash down and £31 19s. a month until a total of £558 8s. was paid. This total of £558 8s. was made up of £525 purchase price and £33 8s. financing charge.

Hurrell signed the agreement as hirer and Mrs. Hope as guarantor. The agreement was dated August 28, 1953. The £175 was paid that day and the instalments of £31 19s. were payable on the 28th of each succeeding month. The first four instalments were paid, but not with punctuality, down to and including December 28, 1953. The instalment due on January 28, 1954, was, however, not paid. On February 10, 1954, the finance company gave notice terminating the hire of the car and took possession of it. It was then in a dirty condition, but they resold it for £270. This meant that they had received by that time a total sum of £572 16s., made up of the original cash of £175, four instalments of £31 19s., making £127 16s., and proceeds of resale, £270. They were, therefore, already better off than if the hire-purchase agreement had been fulfilled, for then they would only have got £558 8s., whereas they in fact received £572 16s., a profit of £14 8s. They are not content, however, with this profit, but they have brought this action to recover another £122 4s. as compensation for depreciation.

They say that they are entitled to this sum by reason of clause 6 of the agreement, which says that, if the owners terminate the hiring or retake the motor, the hirer will pay a sum sufficient to bring up his total payments to £425 by way of compensation for depreciation. Now, the hirer had already paid £175 plus £127 16s., making £302 16s. That left £122 4s. to make up the £425 which they claim. In short, they have got the car back and also claim £425 in cash.

I was told by the secretary of the plaintiff company that it is the usual practice of hire-purchase finance companies to stipulate for compensation for depreciation at the rate of 75 per cent. of the price. This means, therefore, that, if the hirer should fail to pay the first instalment or any later instalment, the owners can not only retake the car and resell it for their own benefit, but also compel the hirer to pay three-quarters of the price. This seems to me to be altogether exorbitant. The facts of this case show how unfair it is; and, as the first defendant was not represented, I asked counsel for the finance company to justify the clause if he could.

At one time it was thought that the courts of this country were powerless to interfere with clauses such as this, but I am glad to say that in Cooden Engineering Co. Ld. v. Stanford [1] the Court of Appeal held that if the clause imposes a penalty (as opposed to liquidated damages) it is invalid and unenforceable. The sole question for me is, therefore, whether this clause is a penalty clause. I reserved my decision on this question because of the large number of cases which will be affected by it. In considering this question, I take into account these circumstances: (1) The £425 is three-quarters of the total price. It is inserted by the hire-purchase companies by rule of thumb without regard to the make of car, its age, the market conditions or anything of the kind. It is the same for all. (2) The £425 payment for compensation for depreciation is payable on the footing that the car, when it is retaken, is in good order, repair and condition. If it is in bad condition, the owners can recover damages for breach of agreement under clauses 3 and 8 and 15 (a), and these damages are payable in addition to the £425. (3) Assume that the car is kept in good condition, and at the end of the first month the hirer makes default and the owners retake the car. Can anyone suppose that in that time the value of it will have dropped by three-quarters so that it will be worth only one-quarter of what it was worth a month before? It is an altogether extravagant thing to imagine. (4) Next assume that the car is kept in good condition and at the end of six months the hirer makes default and the owners retake the car. One can understand that it might have dropped to one-half its value, but not as much as three-quarters. Indeed, when the matter was put to the test, the drop was only one-half. (5) Lastly, suppose that the car was let on a simple hiring (without a purchase clause) and the hiring was for one month, or even for six months. The hiring charge would be quite modest—nowhere near £425—and yet it would have to cover depreciation.

1955

LAMDON TRUST LD. v. HURRELL.

Denning L.J.

In these circumstances, I cannot regard the figure of three-quarters as a genuine pre-estimate of damage. If the parties had genuinely tried to estimate the depreciation of this particular car at this particular time, the figure would have been much less.

I was referred to two previous cases in the courts where owners have recovered three-quarters for depreciation. In 1926, in Elsey & Co. Ld. v. Hyde,[2] a new tricycle was let on hire-purchase for £30 4s. The owners retook the machine and also recovered £25 as compensation for depreciation. In 1941 in In re Apex Supply Co. Ld.,[3] some second-hand factory machinery was let on hire-purchase for £1,360 16s. The owners retook the goods and also recovered £1,020 12s. as compensation for depreciation. Each of those cases was decided, however, on the ground that no question of penalty arose, which has since been held to be wrong. The

[1] [1953] 1 Q.B. 86; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 822; [1952] 2 All E.R. 915.

[2] (1926) Jones & Proudfoot's Notes on Hire Purchase Law, 2nd ed., at p. 107.

[3] [1942] Ch. 108; [1941] 3 All E.R. 473.

1955

LAMDON TRUST LD. v. HURRELL.

Denning L.J.

judges also expressed the view that the sum for depreciation was a genuine pre-estimate of damage; but, if this was so, it must have been because of the absence of any market at that time for goods of that type. The cases cannot be regarded as establishing that three-quarters is reasonable for all goods at all times.

I was also referred to a motor-car case in 1927 in the Court of Appeal, where a sum of £100 payable for depreciation on a car was held to be a genuine pre-estimate of damage (Roadways Transport Development Ld. v. Browne & Gray [4]), but it is not very helpful, because no details are given. I do notice, however, that Atkin L.J. said [5] that in that particular case the car did depreciate by more than £100; so that the sum was shown ex post facto to be reasonable. That is not the case here. Chester & Cole Ld. v. Wright [6] in 1930 is also unhelpful, because not sufficient details are given.

In the present year, 1955, I must, I think, approach the matter afresh in the light of the different circumstances which now exist from the time at which those earlier decisions were given. Looking at this agreement and the conditions under which it was made, I am of opinion that the sum of £425 was not a genuine pre-estimate of damage but was an extravagant and extortionate sum held in terrorem over the head of the hirer. It is a penalty and, as such, it is not recoverable in these courts. There will be judgment, therefore, for the defendant.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors: Darling & Taylor.

C. J. E.

[4] (1927) Jones & Proudfoot, at p. 118.
[5] Ibid. 123.
[6] (1930) Jones & Proudfoot, at p. 124.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

*YOUNG v. YOUNG AND KOHLER.

1955
Feb. 18.

Wallington J.

Legal Aid—Costs—Taxation—Barrister—Brief fee—Case heard out of London—Appropriate fee—Undefended divorce case—Assize town—Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949 (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, c. 51), 3rd Sch. Barrister—Fees.

On the taxation of the costs of an undefended divorce suit heard at Reading, in which the petitioner was an assisted person, the taxing registrar taxed off the sum of £2 2s. from the charge of £7 12s. for counsel's fee on brief of £7 7s. and the clerk's fee both from the party and party costs and from the solicitor and client costs. (No question arose concerning the conference fee.)

Objection was taken on the grounds that counsel had to travel

1955

YOUNG v. YOUNG AND KOHLER.

to Reading, and that there was no local Bar, and reliance was placed in the objections to the decision in Self v. Self [1954] P. 480; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 119; [1954] 2 All E.R. 550.

The registrar in reply said that that decision was to be distinguished, for Reading was an assize town as well as a divorce town, and that there was no limitation placed on the petitioner in his choice of counsel from the circuit:—

Held, that the registrar had acted on wrong principles, and that the sum of £2 2s. should be reinstated in the costs allowed both as between solicitor and client and party and party.

Self v. Self (supra) applied.

SUMMONS (adjourned into court for judgment).

The petitioner, who was an assisted person, filed a petition for divorce in the Oxford district registry in March, 1954, on the ground of his wife's adultery with a named co-respondent. Both the wife and co-respondent were served with the petition, which included a prayer for costs against the co-respondent; but neither of them filed an answer nor took any part in the hearing on June 24, 1954, when Mr. Commissioner Gallop Q.C., sitting at Reading, granted a decree nisi and ordered the co-respondent to pay the costs. The order for costs included in the decree was in the terms ". . . and condemn the co-respondent in the costs incurred " on behalf of the petitioner in the cause and such further costs " to be incurred on behalf of the petitioner as the court shall " direct to be costs in the cause, such costs incurred and to be " incurred to be taxed between party and party." The decree also ordered that " the costs of the petitioner be taxed as between " solicitor and client in accordance with the provisions of the " Third Schedule to the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949."

The decree nisi was made absolute on August 9, 1954, and in due course the petitioner's solicitors carried in their bill of costs for taxation. The form of the bill provided for particulars of the charges, with their dates, between red ink lines in the centre of the sheet. On the right-hand side of the space for particulars of charges there were four money columns, two of them headed " solicitor and client " and the other two " party and party." One of those two columns under each heading was for the insertion of payments, and the other of charges. On the left-hand side of the centre of the sheet there were four similar money columns which were prepared to receive separate indications of any amounts for payments or charges which might be disallowed on taxation in respect of either solicitor and client or party and party items.

Mr. Registrar Eldridge, the Oxford district registrar, when taxing the bill, inserted in the party and party payments column on the left-hand side of the sheet "£2 2s." opposite the charge for " paid his fee and clerk "—in the party and party payments column—" £7 12s." At the end of the bill of costs the registrar left blank and struck out the form of certificate in which provision was made for the insertion of (a) the amount of the party and party taxation and (b) the amount of the solicitor and client taxation. Following this, and on the same page, was a typewritten form of certificate which had been completed by the registrar as follows:—" I certify that the costs in this cause have " been taxed as between solicitor and client and account as " follows:—Disbursements £14 18s. 4d. Counsel's fee £12 6s. " Profit costs £48 16s. 9d.:—Total £76 1s. 1d." These amounts were all " after certificate," indicating that they included taxation and allocatur and order fees, and the taxation fee.

Objection was taken by the petitioner to the taxation by the Oxford district registrar of the bill of costs, " in respect of the " disallowance of £2 2s. for counsel's fee and clerk in respect of " the brief," and gave the following reasons:—

" (1) That counsel had to travel to Reading from London to " deal with the case which was in the list at Reading;

" (2) That there is no local Bar at Reading;

" (3) That the case of Self v. Self[1] lays down the principle " that in cases where the above conditions exist counsel is, in " an undefended divorce suit, entitled to charge and be allowed " on taxation a fee of £7 7s. plus clerk's fee."

The answer of the registrar to these objections was contained in a letter from him dated December 13, 1954, to the petitioner's solicitors in the following terms:—

" Dear Sirs,

" George Henry Young v. Evelyn Constance Young—Divorce

" In reply to the objections in this case, it may be more convenient if I put my answers in the form of a letter.

" In the first place, I am satisfied that on the merits of this " particular case, which was a short undefended case, a fee of " £5 5s. and £2 7s. is adequate, and I understand that there is " no contention to the contrary, the objection to the reduction I " have made being based entirely on the decision in Self v. Self.[1] " With all due deference, I submit that a distinction can be " drawn between the circumstances in this case and those in " Self v. Self.[1] One of the grounds on which Sachs J. based " his decision was that owing to the limited number of counsel " practising at Brighton, a litigant was deprived of his right of " choice of counsel from the panel. Brighton is a divorce town, " not an assize town, Reading is both, and I submit that this " being so the petitioner was not limited to a choice of three " counsel, but had the right to make his choice from any one " of the counsel on the Oxford Circuit who are on the panel of " those willing to undertake legal aid divorce cases. As Sachs " J. points out, the reference to the local Bar is irrelevant, the " action being tried in the High Court. If there is substance in " my suggestion that a counsel accepting a brief in a divorce " case tried at an assize town does so as a member of the " circuit which comprises that town, I submit it is relevant to " enquire, in the interest of uniformity, what is the practice on

[1] [1954] P. 480; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 119; [1954] 2 All E.R. 550.

1955

YOUNG v. YOUNG AND KOHLER.

"circuit as to the assessment of fees by Clerks of Assize and "Clerks of the Peace. Is the distance from London travelled "by counsel taken into consideration? For instance, is a "counsel a member of a circuit who travels from London "allowed a bigger fee at, say Gloucester or Hereford than he is "at Reading or Oxford on the ground of the extra expense of "travel from London, and is it contended that a counsel on the "Oxford Circuit who undertakes an undefended divorce case at "Shrewsbury is entitled to more than £7 7s. because of the "greater distance from London? I submit that these are "matters to be taken into consideration in order that a uniform "scale of fees may be arrived at. It is right to add that since "the decision in Self v. Self[1] I have had several bills of costs "brought in for taxation in which a fee of no more than £5 5s. "and £2 7s. on the brief has been asked for. I shall welcome a "ruling, not only for the sake of uniformity but so that I may, "on taxation, allow adequate remuneration for counsel while not "laying an undue burden on those who have to pay the costs, "wholly or in part, in a great many instances the general public, "who are not interested parties to the proceedings. I am much "obliged to you for the loan of your papers and the report of "Self v. Self,[1] which I return herewith.

"Yours faithfully,

"J. M. Eldridge, registrar."

A review of the taxation was sought and the following summons issued: "Let the co-respondent or his solicitor attend "one of the judges of the Division at his chambers . . . on the "hearing of an application by the petitioner for an order that the "taxation of costs herein by Mr. Registrar Eldridge be reviewed "and that the objections made by the petitioner to the dis-"allowance of the several items [sic] specified in the said "objections be allowed and the said items allowed and the "costs of and occasioned by the application be paid by the "co-respondent." This summons was duly served on the co-respondent, who took no part in the hearing of the summons.

R. J. A. Temple Q.C. and T. G. Guest appeared for the petitioner.

Argument was in chambers, and the matter was adjourned into court for judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

Wallington J., reading his judgment, stated the facts and, after referring to the nature of the bill of costs and the taxation in the terms set out above, continued: I suppose that this taxation on its face is intended by the registrar to be treated both as between solicitor and client and between party and party; in fact the order contained in the decree nisi provides for the taxation of costs both as between party and party and solicitor and client, and in my view it has not been complied with, in that the taxation is certified as being between solicitor and client.

[1] [1954] P. 480.

The co-respondent did not appear before me on the hearing of the summons, but proof of personal service of the summons upon him was before me on affidavit. His name was called outside the court, but he did not attend. I therefore proceeded to hear the summons in his absence.

Mr. Temple Q.C., with his junior, Mr. Guest, argued the matter, and relied upon the three following submissions:

(1) That the registrar failed to tax counsel's fee on the brief on the basis of a solicitor and client taxation, but restricted himself to a party and party basis, which, he argued, is wrong in principle.

(2) That the registrar failed to recognize and give effect to the general and proper practice of including in counsel's fee in a country case something for time and expense.

(3) That the registrar attempted to draw a distinction between counsel attending at a divorce town and counsel attending at an assize town. For this distinction, he argued, there is no warrant in practice or principle.

[His Lordship read the reasons given in the objection to the taxation, and the letter from the district registrar at Oxford, and continued:] It follows from what I have said that upon this taxation the registrar has made no distinction between the two forms of taxation, namely, that for the purpose of the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, as between solicitor and client, and party and party taxation. In my opinion the difference between a solicitor and client taxation and one between party and party is well established. In my view Mr. Temple was amply justified in relying upon the decision of Roxburgh J. in Read v. Gray.[2] I doubt whether the registrar in an ordinary case (that is to say, one in which there is no legal aid) would dissent from the proposition which I accept, that, shortly and broadly put, a "solicitor and client taxation is substantially a party and party "taxation on a more generous scale."

Mr. Temple also relied upon the judgment of Sachs J. in Self v. Self.[3] My learned brother in that case dealt with a similar question of counsel's fees in relation to a divorce case tried at Brighton by a special commissioner in divorce. In that case, as in this, the petitioner in the suit was represented by counsel whose chambers are in London. Strangely enough, the reduction in that case was from seven guineas to five guineas, and the registrar in that case made it on the ground that there were counsel with chambers in Brighton willing to accept briefs on

[2] [1952] Ch. 337; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 114; [1952] 1 All E.R. 241.

[3] [1954] P. 480.

1955

YOUNG v. YOUNG AND KOHLER.

Wallington J.

undefended petitions, and that it would be wrong to allow a higher fee because counsel came from London.

With great respect to the registrar, my opinion is that he has misunderstood the effect of the judgment of Sachs J. in the case to which I have just referred.

I have reached the clear conclusion that the registrar in taxing off the two guineas to which I have already referred in this case has acted on a wrong principle, and I am, therefore, bound to undertake a review of the taxation. Having done so, I reinstate the sum of two guineas in the bill of costs as between solicitor and client. I respectfully identify myself entirely with the judgment of my learned brother, Sachs J., and fully agree with all the reasons upon which his decision is based.

Moreover, I conceive it to be my duty to review the taxation from the party and party standpoint, having regard to the order for party and party costs contained in the decree nisi, and accordingly I reinstate the sum of two guineas which the registrar has taxed off the party and party bill of costs.

I direct that the costs incurred in and about this application be "costs in the cause," which means that the co-respondent must pay them. The case is fit for counsel for the petitioner.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Burton, Yeates & Hart for Andrew Walsh, Lightfoot & Co., Oxford.

J. B. G.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

1955
Jan. 31;
Feb. 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8.

Barnard J.

*GALLER v. GALLER.

Husband and Wife—Divorce—Evidence—Admissibility of signed statement of witness overseas—"Person interested"—Husband alleged to have lain on bed with nursemaid with trousers undone—No allegation of adultery—Nurse not "interested"—Evidence Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6, c. 28), s. 1.

Evidence—Evidence Act, 1938.

A wife in a contested divorce suit based a charge of constructive desertion upon the husband's alleged impropriety with a nursemaid who had since returned to her home in Denmark. No allegation of adultery was founded on the incident. On a submission that the woman's signed answers to a questionnaire sent to her by the husband's solicitors were admissible under section 1 of the Evidence Act, 1938:—

Held, that she was not a "person interested" within the meaning of section 1 (3) of the Evidence Act, 1938, and that the questionnaire was, therefore, admissible.

1955

GALLER v. GALLER.

DEFENDED divorce suit.

On March 25, 1952, the husband presented a petition for divorce on the ground of desertion in 1948, when the wife had left the matrimonial home. The wife by her answer denied the allegation and cross-prayed for a divorce on the grounds of (constructive) desertion, cruelty, and adultery. The matter originally came before a divorce commissioner in October, 1953, when the issue of adultery with one Gladys Florence Thompson was by consent tried first. The evidence of adultery (which was denied) rested upon the uncorroborated evidence of the woman concerned; her evidence was accepted by the commissioner and a decree nisi was accordingly pronounced. That decree was set aside by the Court of Appeal on February 4, 1954, and a new trial was ordered.[1]

The wife's charge of desertion was based upon the alleged impropriety of the husband with a Danish nursemaid who had since returned to Denmark and got married, and by paragraph 6 of her answer she alleged: "That on a Sunday evening at about "the end of the month of October, 1948, at [the matrimonial "home] the [wife] discovered [the husband] in bed with the "children's nurse whose name the [wife] believed to be K— "W—." Further and better particulars of that paragraph stated that the couple were discovered lying together "on [sic] the "nurse's single bed." No allegation was made of adultery with K— W—.

The husband's solicitors had written to K— W—, sending her a questionnaire concerning the alleged misconduct; she had replied to that questionnaire in her own handwriting and had signed the document. During the hearing counsel for the husband sought to put the document in evidence under section 1 of the Evidence Act, 1938.[2] The allegations and answers contained in the questionnaire were as follows:

[1] [1954] P. 252; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 395; [1954] 1 All E.R. 536.

[2] Evidence Act, 1938, s. 1 (1): "In any civil proceedings where direct "oral evidence of a fact would be "admissible, any statement made by a "person in a document and tending to "establish that fact shall, on production of the original document, be "admissible as evidence of that fact "if the following conditions are satisfied, that is to say—(i) if the maker "of the statement either—(a) had "personal knowledge of the matters "dealt with by the statement; or "(b) where the document in question "is or forms part of a record purporting to be a continuous record . . . "and (ii) if the maker of the statement is called as a witness in the "proceedings: Provided that the condition that the maker of the statement shall be called as a witness "need not be satisfied if he is dead, "or unfit by reason of his bodily or "mental condition to attend as a "witness, or if he is beyond the seas "and it is not reasonably practicable "to secure his attendance, or if all "reasonable efforts to find him have "been made without success . . . "(3) Nothing in this section shall "render admissible as evidence any "statement made by a person interested at a time when proceedings "were pending or anticipated involving "a dispute as to any fact which the "statement might tend to establish." S. 2 (1): "In estimating the weight, "if any, to be attached to a statement "rendered admissible as evidence by "this Act, regard shall be had to "all the circumstances . . . to the "question whether or not the maker "of the statement had any incentive "to conceal or misrepresent facts."

1955

GALLER v. GALLER.

"1. Q. That Mrs. Galler was suspicious of her husband's "behaviour with K— W— and that on many occasions he asked "Mrs. Galler to stay in bed and that he would bring her breakfast "in bed, so that he could have a chance to be alone with K— W—.

"A. I cannot possibly remember if Mr. Galler ever brought "Mrs. Galler breakfast in bed.

"2. Q. That there were signs of affection between Mr. Galler "and K— W—.

"A. Never the slightest affection.

"3. Q. That Mr. Galler gave K— W— a mackintosh worth "about £10 and bought her a pair of shoes.

"A. On a rainy day Mrs. Galler lent me an old mackintosh "of Mr. Galler's (military brown-yellow colour). A few days "later on Mrs. Galler asked her husband if I could have it, so it "was given to me. About a week after I arrived to Mr. Galler's "house—having received my first weekly salary—I bought a pair "of shoes myself. Mr. Galler has never bought me shoes.

"4. Q. That Mr. Galler used to walk about the house with "his dressing gown open and his privates showing. That Mr. "Galler was a very vulgar person in the house.

"A. I only saw Mr. Galler fully dressed (but when shaving "Mr. Galler did not wear his shirt). Mr. Galler did not seem "to be vulgar.

"5. Q. That Mr. Galler would drink with K— W— on many "occasions.

"A. Mrs. Galler very often offered me a drink when we were "alone, but I cannot possibly remember Mr. Galler ever did.

"6. Q. That on a Sunday evening in October, 1948, Mrs. "Galler went to K—'s room and opened the door and found "Mr. Galler and K— in bed together. That Mr. Galler had his "shirt open and his trousers undone and that K—'s blue coat "was undone.

"A. This is absolutely wrong and I deny having seen Mr. "Galler in the above-mentioned situation, and I also deny that "I have ever been in bed together with Mr. Galler.

"7. Q. That Mr. Galler was so cross and annoyed when Mrs. "Galler came into the room that he went over to her and tore "her jumper and slapped her in the face.

"A. This is wrong too. I have never seen Mr. Galler neither "using violence to Mrs. Galler nor seen Mr. Galler tearing his "wife's clothes.

"8. Q. That Mr. Galler called Mrs. Galler filthy names, threw "open the bedroom door and said 'Get out of here.'

"A. I have never noticed anything about these allegations.

"9. Q. That on the following day Mrs. Galler decided it was "impossible to live with Mr. Galler any longer and that she left.

"A. From the very first day when I was alone with Mrs. "Galler she confided to me that she had decided to go. So it "was a sort of every day occurance [sic] to hear about it, until "she really did go from her family."

The document was signed by the nurse. Counsel for the wife objected on the ground that the nursemaid K— W— was "a "person interested" within the meaning of section 1 (3) of the Evidence Act, 1938.[2]

The case is reported upon the issue of the admissibility of the document in evidence.

J. E. S. Simon Q.C. and Philip Panto for the husband.
David Karmel Q.C. and Guy Willett for the wife.

Simon Q.C. The nurse is in Denmark and it was felt that a request to take her evidence on commission was not justified; but it is submitted that all the prerequisites of admissibility under the Evidence Act, 1938, have been satisfied. The weight to be attached to the evidence must of course be a matter for the court, and it would have been of greater assistance if she could have been cross-examined.

Karmel Q.C. I object to the admission of the document on the ground that the nurse is a "person interested." It is appreciated that she is not charged with adultery, but it is submitted that where a woman is said to have been found in the circumstances alleged, those circumstances would make her an interested party within the meaning of the proviso to the subsection. Holton v. Holton[3] is to be distinguished, for the alleged interest in that case was the natural interest of the petitioner's deceased mother. A charge of this nature against a young woman would give her an interest such as would exclude the statement: her interest is a material one. If she is to deny the allegations she should do so in the witness-box.

She is charged with misconducting herself with a married man, and it is submitted that that should suffice to make her materially interested so as to exclude her evidence. The legislature had in mind when making the proviso that persons who have reason for bias, that is, a material interest, should not be allowed to express themselves through a document ex parte, thus excluding the possibility of cross-examination. This is not a case as in Holton v. Holton,[3] where the person has merely a sentimental interest: the nurse is charged with impropriety. If she had been charged with adultery she would have had a material interest, and it is submitted that her statement would not have been admissible; and [2] See p. 401.

[3] [1946] W.N. 208; 62 T.L.R. 683; [1946] 2 All E.R. 534. "The "mother of a petitioner in a divorce "suit wrote and signed a state- "ment at a time when the pro- "ceedings were contemplated. The "mother died before the hearing of "the suit. On a submission that the "statement was admissible in evi- "dence by virtue of section 1 of the "Evidence Act, 1938, it was objected "that the statement was made by "'a person interested' and was "inadmissible. Held, that the peti- "tioner's mother was not 'a person "'interested' within the meaning of "the section; that the statement was "accordingly admissible, but that the "court must consider what weight it "would attach to the statement when "it saw what it contained": 62 T.L.R. 683.

1955

Galler v. Galler.

it is submitted that a statement is similarly inadmissible if made by a woman named in a petition not as an adulteress, but as a person who has misconducted herself by lying on a bed in circumstances from which adultery might be inferred. The Act was not intended to apply to a person who was almost a party to the proceedings, but rather to deal with matters such as medical reports where calling a doctor or commanding officer to produce a record might be avoided.

Simon Q.C. The Act is not concerned solely with such matters. In the present case the nurse is neither charged with adultery nor is it alleged that her conduct was such as to give rise to a reasonable suspicion of adultery. It is stated in Phipson on Evidence [4]: "It will not be sufficient to exclude the statement to show merely that he had a bias in favour of one party "rather than another. Section 2 (1) makes it quite clear that "an 'incentive to conceal or misrepresent facts' goes to the "weight of the evidence only." While the nurse may have had a bias—"an incentive to conceal or misrepresent the facts"—that is a matter which goes merely to the weight which the court will place upon the document if it is admitted.

Barnard J. The document should be admitted subject to proof of signature.

The signature was proved, and the document read. His Lordship subsequently granted a decree nisi to the husband on the ground of desertion, and dismissed the cross-prayer of the answer, holding that the evidence of Gladys Florence Thompson, upon which the wife again rested her case of adultery, was not to be accepted, and rejecting the allegations of cruelty and constructive desertion. His Lordship referred in his judgment to the statement which had been admitted, and said that as the nurse had not been available for cross-examination a great deal of importance could not be attached to it, but that there was no reason to doubt the indignant denial of the husband that any incident such as that alleged had occurred.

Solicitors: Bernard Oberman & Co.; Walmsbury & Stansbury for E. W. Marshall Harvey & Dalton, Bournemouth.

J. B. G.

[4] p. 287.

[PRIVY COUNCIL.]

*RAJASOORIA . . . . . APPELLANT; J. C.†

AND

DISCIPLINARY COMMITTEE . . . . RESPONDENT. 1955 March 16.

ON APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF THE FEDERATION OF MALAYA.

Malaya—Solicitor—Discipline—"Grossly improper conduct"—Intention to deceive—Requisition for company meeting—Signatures from original document pasted on to new amended document—Some signatories no longer shareholders—No intention to deceive—Advocates and Solicitors Ordinance, No. 4 of 1947, ss. 26, 27.
Solicitor.

The appellant, an advocate and solicitor practising in the Federation of Malaya, was instructed to act for certain shareholders in a company incorporated in Malaya who, being dissatisfied with the conduct of an annual general meeting of the company, desired to call an extraordinary general meeting of the company with a view to removing the directors and secretaries and replacing them by their own nominees. For that purpose a requisition was prepared, consisting of three documents in identical terms, which were signed by 24, 29 and 37 shareholders respectively, totalling 90, and handed to the appellant. It appeared that pursuant to section 115 of the Malayan Companies Ordinance, 1940, the requisition should have stated the names of the dissatisfied shareholders' nominees for appointment as directors and secretaries, and a new requisition was prepared, again in three sheets in identical terms, to effect that amendment. The appellant cut off the signatures from the original requisition and attached them by pasting them on to the sheets of the new amended requisition, and signed his name across the joint of each of the three composite documents. At the date of the later purported requisition certain of the alleged 90 signatories were in fact, and contrary to the appellant's belief, no longer members of the company.

The Disciplinary Committee appointed under section 27 of the Advocates and Solicitors Ordinance, 1947, were of opinion that the appellant had been guilty of grossly improper conduct within the meaning of section 26 (2) (b) of the Ordinance, but that he did not act with intention to deceive. That finding was accepted by the Supreme Court, who suspended the appellant from practising for a period of six months. On appeal:—

Held, dismissing the appeal, that for an advocate and solicitor knowingly and deliberately to submit a false document intending it to be acted upon was grossly improper conduct as being, in the words of Lord Esher in In re Cooke (1889) 5 T.L.R. 407, dishonourable both to himself and to his profession. The submission of such a document with such intention in itself involved an element of "deceit." There could not be read into Lord Esher's words in In re Cooke a statement that a finding that intention to deceive was always an essential element in grossly improper conduct.

Had the Board felt any hesitation in the matter, they would have required a very strong case before they substituted their own † Present: LORD TUCKER, LORD COHEN, LORD SOMERVELL OF HARROW and MR. L. M. D. DE SILVA.

J. C.

1955

Rajasooria v. Disciplinary Committee.

opinion of what was professional misconduct in the Federation of Malaya for the conclusion reached by the Disciplinary Committee and the Supreme Court: In re A Solicitor, Ex parte Law Society [1912] 1 K.B. 302, 312; 28 T.L.R. 50.

Order of the Supreme Court of the Federation of Malaya affirmed.

Appeal (No. 5 of 1954) from an order of the Supreme Court of the Federation of Malaya (August 27, 1953) suspending the appellant from practice as an advocate and solicitor for a period of six months in respect of each of two charges brought against him.

The facts appear fully from the judgment of the Judicial Committee, and the question was whether on those facts the appellant had been guilty of grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty so as to render him liable to suspension under section 26 (1) of the Advocates and Solicitors Ordinance, 1947.

1955. Feb. 21, 22. Bernard B. Gillis Q.C. and Colin Duncan for the appellant.

D. A. Grant for the respondent.

In addition to the cases cited in the judgment, the following case was referred to: In re Iles, a Solicitor.[1]

Mar. 16. The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Lord Cohen: The appellant is an advocate and solicitor practising in the Federation of Malaya. He appeals against an order of the Supreme Court of the Federation dated August 27, 1953, suspending him from practice for a period of six months in respect of each of two charges brought against him, but directing that in each case the period of suspension was to commence from the date of the order.

The order was made under section 26 of the Advocates and Solicitors Ordinance, 1947 (No. 4 of 1947). It is, so far as material, in the following terms: "Section 26.—(1) Every advocate and solicitor shall be subject to the control of the Court "and shall be liable on due cause shown to have his admission "revoked and to be struck off the roll of the court or to be "suspended from practice for any period not exceeding two "years or to be censured. (2) Such due cause may be shown "by proof that such advocate and solicitor— . . . (b) has been "guilty of fraudulent or grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty. . . ."

The question at issue is as to the meaning to be placed on the words "grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his "professional duty." It is unnecessary to set out in full the other provisions of the Ordinance. Suffice it to say that under section 27 any complaint of the conduct of an advocate and solicitor in his professional capacity must be made in the first place to the appropriate Local Bar Committee who, if they consider that a full investigation of the complaint is necessary, have to apply in writing to the Chief Justice to appoint a Disciplinary Committee to hear and investigate the complaint.

[1] (1922) 66 S.J. 297.

Under section 29 the Disciplinary Committee have to record their findings as to the facts of the case and their opinion as to the conduct of the advocate and solicitor and as to whether the facts of the case constitute due cause for disciplinary action under section 26. They draw up their findings in the form of a report, a copy of which is forwarded to the Chief Justice and to the Bar Council. The advocate and solicitor concerned and the person who made the complaint are entitled to a copy of the report on application.

By section 31 it is provided that an application for an order under section 26 should be made by originating motion ex parte for an order calling upon the advocate and solicitor to show cause why an order should not be made under the section. The order is served on the practitioner concerned and the application is then heard by a court of three judges, of whom the Chief Justice must be one. From the decision of that court there is no appeal to any court in the Malayan Union, but it is provided that for the purposes of an appeal to this Board an order made under the subsection is to be deemed an order of the Court of Appeal.

The complaint in the present case arose out of the affairs of the Foh Hup Omnibus Company, a company incorporated under the Malayan Companies Ordinance, 1940 (No. 49 of 1940). On June 2, 1952, there were held the annual general meeting and an extraordinary general meeting of the company at which a number of shareholders expressed dissatisfaction with the conduct of its affairs.

Between June 2 and June 10 three undated documents in identical terms were prepared calling for an extraordinary general meeting of the company to enable the signatories of the documents "to protest against the unconstitutional manner in which "the general meeting on June 2 was held and to pass a vote of "no confidence on the secretaries, Messrs. Lim Tam Chong & "Company, and the directors holding office at present and hold "a general meeting constitutionally for election of office "bearers." The three documents were signed by 24, 29 and 37 shareholders respectively. A copy of the three documents was produced before the Disciplinary Committee, the original not being available, and is referred to in its report as exhibit A.

On or about June 10, 1952, fifteen of the said signatories brought the three documents to the appellant's office. The appellant, who according to his evidence before the Disciplinary Committee had no previous experience with company work, went to the office of the Registrar of Companies in Kuala Lumpur accompanied by three of his clients and taking with him the said three documents. According to the appellant the Registrar or

J. C.
1955 RAJASOORIA
v.
DISCIPLINARY
COMMITTEE.

someone in his office called the appellant's attention to section 115 of the Companies Ordinance and advised him to tell his clients to decide among themselves who were to be the new directors and secretaries. Neither the Registrar nor anyone from his office gave evidence at the hearing by the Disciplinary Committee.

It is convenient here to mention that section 115 imposes on the directors of a company the obligation, on the requisition of members of the company holding at the date of the deposit of the requisition of not less than one-tenth of such of the paid-up capital of the company as at the date of the deposit carries the right of voting at general meetings of the company, to proceed duly to convene an extraordinary general meeting. Subsection (2) of the section provides that the requisition must state the objects of the meeting and must be signed by the requisitionists and must be deposited at the registered office of the company, but adds that it may consist of several documents in like form, each signed by one or more requisitionists.

Having received this advice from the Registrar, the appellant asked the three requisitionists who had accompanied him to get for him the names of the proposed new office holders. They in due course handed to him documents containing this information.

On June 16 the appellant wrote to the secretaries of the company stating the instructions he said he had received from the dissatisfied shareholders and asking, among other things, for a copy of the minutes of the meetings held on June 2. He concluded by saying that he would forward the requisitions signed by 90 shareholders on receiving such minutes. His letter appears to have been handed to the company's solicitors, Messrs. Shearn, Delamore & Co., who on June 17 wrote confirming that on receiving proper documents the directors would comply with their obligations under section 115.

In view of the advice that, according to the appellant, he had received from the Registrar, the appellant then prepared a revised requisition (exhibit C (4) of the documents before the Disciplinary Committee). This set out four resolutions, (1) to remove the then board of directors; (2) to appoint a new board consisting of the persons named to him as mentioned above; (3) to appoint a sub-committee to inquire into and investigate certain irregularities; and (4) to remove the then secretaries and replace them by the proposed new secretaries. This document was unsigned, but there was inserted at the bottom the following "(Sgd.) Kong Sin Kee and 89 other shareholders, Foh Hup "Omnibus Co., Ld., (owning between them share i.e. not less "than one-tenth of the issued capital of the company)."

On August 5 the appellant wrote to the then secretaries of the company stating that he had been instructed by ninety shareholders to forward a copy of the signed requisition for an extraordinary general meeting of the company and adding that the secretaries might have inspection of the requisition at the Registrar of Companies to whom he was forwarding the original list. The letter contained at the bottom a statement "Copy to "Registrar of Companies, Kuala Lumpur." It is not clear exactly what documents were sent to the secretaries and the Registrar respectively, but this much is, their Lordships think, established—namely, that the appellant sent to the company a copy of C (4) and to the Registrar the original of the documents comprised in exhibit A, i.e., the original documents signed by the requisitionists. Whether or not he also sent to the Registrar a copy of C (4) is not clear.

On August 8 the Registrar returned the requisition, i.e., the original of exhibit A and requested the appellant to deposit it at the registered office of the company, once more calling his attention to section 115 of the Companies Ordinance. On August 11 the appellant sent the original requisition to the secretaries of the company, who again handed the correspondence to the company's solicitors.

On August 20 the solicitors wrote to the appellant pointing out that document C (4) did not comply with section 115 as it was only a copy of the alleged requisition and that the documents enclosed in the appellant's letter of August 11 in no way made good the omission since they bore no relation to the copy requisition C (4).

On August 22 the appellant wrote to the company's solicitors stating that it was never intended that the extraordinary general meeting should be called on the resolutions set out in the original documents signed by the requisitionists. His letter continued as follows: "I sent a copy of the resolution in prescribed form to "the registered office of the company concerned but overlooked "enclosing the original signatures and forwarded them to the "Registrar of Companies for reasons which are no doubt obvious "to you. The motive for so doing were doubts in my clients' "minds but not in mine. The resolutions in my letter of the "5th instant is to be the basis of the resolution and not what is "contained in the documents containing the signatures. If this "explanation and clarification is not sufficient may I request "the return of all the documents and I shall get the signatures "anew. This you will no doubt agree will be prolonging the "'agony' for all parties concerned."

On August 25 the company's solicitors returned to the appellant the original documents signed by the requisitionists and stated: "The present position is therefore that no valid requisi-"tion is outstanding but if a valid requisition is served in the "future it will be complied with."

Their Lordships consider that reading this answer in the light of his letter of August 22, the appellant must have understood that the solicitors were calling upon him to get the signatures of the requisitionists to document C (4) and relodge it if he wished the directors of the company to act on it.

J. C.
1955
RAJASOORIA v. DISCIPLINARY COMMITTEE.

On August 27 the appellant wrote to the company's secretaries as follows: "I am forwarding herewith a signed requisition "for an extraordinary general meeting of Foh Hup Omnibus Co., "Ld., by 90 shareholders for favour of necessary action." What was enclosed were three documents the wording of each of which above the signatures was identical with that in C (4) save that the date instead of "July, 1952" was the "27th August, 1952." Each of these documents was made to appear to be signed by some of the ninety shareholders. This was effected by cutting from the original documents of requisition the signatures affixed thereto and pasting one of them on to each of the new documents. The appellant himself signed his name across the joint of each of the three composite documents.

The appellant stated that before depositing the said documents he obtained the assurance from five shareholders that all the ninety signatories were still shareholders of the company.

It was these composite documents which formed the basis of the complaint against appellant.

On September 13 the company sent out a notice of an extraordinary general meeting to consider the resolutions set forth in the documents of August 27.

On September 26 the company's solicitors wrote to the appellant calling attention to the fact that the portion of the document which bore the signatures of the shareholders who were supposed to have signed the requisition had been pasted on to the sheets on which the requisition was typed. This, they said, made it appear that the portions on which the signatures appeared had been cut off some other document. For this reason they asked the appellant to confirm that all the persons who signed the piece of paper which had been pasted on to the requisition signed the paper only after it was pasted on to the sheet which contained the requisitions. They added that this was a serious matter because investigation showed that on the date of the requisition, August 27, 1952, certain of the signatories were not members of the company. The last paragraph of their letter was in the following terms: "We cannot imagine that you would "paste signatures on to a document and we are sure that you "will confirm that the signatures were definitely fixed to the "requisition after it had been typed, this supposition is "strengthened by the fact that Mr. Rajasooria himself has "signed across the place where the pieces of paper containing "the signatures are joined on to the requisition."

The appellant replied to that letter on September 29, 1952. The material portion of his reply is as follows: "Reference your "letter of the 26th the signatures on the requisition were "obtained after I was instructed to act and call for an extra-"ordinary meeting. I saw the Registrar of Companies and "showed him the original requisition. It was on his advice that "the amended form of requisition was typed and attached to "the original documents. I am satisfied that each and every " signature appearing on the documents was affixed with the sole " purpose of requisitioning an extraordinary meeting."

On October 1, 1952, the company's solicitors wrote to the appellant stating that they read the first paragraph of the appellant's letter of September 29 as meaning, (1) that a requisition convening an extraordinary general meeting was prepared and signed; (2) that it was decided to amend this requisition whereupon a new form was prepared and the signatures to the old form were detached from the old and attached to the new form; (3) that this was done on the advice of the Registrar of Companies.

Their Lordships think that this construction was the only reasonable construction that could be placed on the first paragraph of the appellant's letter of September 29. No answer was received by the company's solicitors to their letter of October 1. Accordingly on October 27 they wrote to the Registrar of Companies enclosing copies of the letters of September 26 and 29 and October 1 and asking the Registrar if he was in a position to confirm that it was on his advice that the amended form of the requisition was typed and attached to the original documents. To this letter the Registrar replied on October 29 stating that so far as he could trace his department had nothing to do with the second requisition, i.e., the requisition of August 27.

On November 4 the secretaries of the company wrote to the secretary of the Bar Committee of Selangor and Negri Sembilan lodging a complaint against the appellant. The substance of the complaint was the formation of the composite documents and the statement which the complainant said the appellant had made in his letter of September 29 that his action in pasting the signatures to the new requisition had been taken on the advice of the Registrar, a statement which was denied by the Registrar. The Bar Committee notified the appellant of this complaint, and on December 11 the appellant wrote answering the charge. Their Lordships do not find it necessary to refer to the details of that answer. The Bar Committee, after completing its investigation, applied to the Chief Justice to appoint a Disciplinary Committee under section 27 of the Advocates and Solicitors Ordinance, and on March 12, 1953, the Chief Justice appointed a Disciplinary Committee. On May 7, 1953, the Disciplinary Committee held a hearing into the complaint. The appellant was present and gave evidence. During the opening statement by counsel for the complainants, the appellant admitted that the composite documents were made by cutting out the signatures at the bottom of the original requisitions and affixing copies of C (4) to each of the portions thus obtained. He also admitted that this was not done on the Registrar's advice, but in his opening statement he said that it was done bona fide and after obtaining the assurance of five shareholders who acted as spokesmen of the whole ninety signatories that everyone of the signatories was still a shareholder on August 27. He added on

J. C.
1955 Rajasooria
v.
Disciplinary
Committee.

oath that four of the five shareholders who gave him this assurance were actually present and witnessed the excision and pasting.

He was cross-examined as to his failure to answer the company's solicitors' letter of October 1. His evidence on this point is not quite clear, but it would appear that his explanation was (a) that he did not feel any obligation to defend himself against a firm of solicitors who chose to be insulting and to accuse him of unprofessional conduct, and (b) that his instructions were withdrawn and given to Lovelace and Hastings on October 1 or 2. Their Lordships pause here to observe that at the hearing before this Board an application was made for leave to adduce further evidence directed to establishing that the letter in question, though dated October 1, was not delivered at the appellant's office until October 4, that on that date the appellant was away from Kuala Lumpur on other business and did not return until October 7, before which date the file containing all the papers had been handed to Messrs. Lovelace and Hastings.

On June 11, 1953, the Disciplinary Committee made their report and forwarded a copy to the Chief Justice and to the Bar Committee in accordance with section 29 of the Advocates and Solicitors Ordinance. They pointed out that the complaint was really a double one, (a) that the appellant cut off the signatures from the original requisitions and later attached them by pasting on to the new or amended requisitions (complaint No. 1); and (b) that he informed the company's solicitors that he had done this on the advice of the Registrar of Companies who, on inquiry being made from him, denied having given any such advice (complaint No. 2). After setting out the material facts and recording the appellant's evidence as to the cutting off of the signatures and pasting them below the new wording, and his statement that he had done so in the bona fide belief that nothing unprofessional was being done and that was why he signed across the joint in the documents, the Disciplinary Committee expressed their conclusions as follows: (1) in relation to the matters alleged in complaint No. 1 the appellant was guilty of grossly improper conduct as an advocate and solicitor, but he did not act with intention to deceive; and (2) with regard to complaint No. 2, that the letter was written with the intention of justifying the action the subject of complaint No. 1, and that it was definitely intended to mislead. The Disciplinary Committee therefore found that the appellant's conduct in writing it and further in not replying to the letter of October 1 from the company's solicitors amounted to grossly improper conduct and that he had given no satisfactory explanation thereof. They concluded by expressing the opinion that the facts proved or admitted constituted due cause for disciplinary action under section 26.

An originating motion was duly issued pursuant to section 31 and on July 20, 1953, an order was made summoning the appellant to appear before a court of three judges on August 10, 1953, to show cause why an order should not be made against him under section 26 (1) of the Advocates and Solicitors Ordinance, 1947. The case was heard before Pretheroe, Ag. C.J. of the Federation of Malaya, Murray-Aynsley, C.J. of Singapore and Briggs J. On August 27, 1953, they gave judgment accepting the findings of the Disciplinary Committee and suspending the appellant from practising for a period of six months on each charge as stated in the order to which reference has already been made.

Pretheroe C.J. first considered the meaning of the expression "grossly improper conduct" in section 26 and accepted as the test the definition that it means conduct which is dishonourable to the appellant as a man and dishonourable in his profession. He took this test from the judgment of Lord Esher M.R. in In re Cooke,[1] and added that it seemed to him perfectly clear that for an advocate and solicitor knowingly and deliberately to submit a false document, and intend it to be acted upon, was both dishonourable to himself and to his profession. Dealing with the first complaint, he accepted the finding of the Disciplinary Committee that the appellant did not act with the intention to deceive when sending to the secretary of the company on August 22 the composite documents to which their Lordships have already referred, but said that it seemed to him probable that the appellant adopted this course in order to avoid the labour necessarily required to obtain the signatures of between eighty and ninety persons living in different parts of two States. The judge, however, added: "But even if there was "no intention to deceive the plain fact remains that the docu- "ment was a false document and might have deceived both the "Registrar of Companies and the company itself if the signatures "of three persons, who had recently ceased to be shareholders, "had not been observed." On complaint No. 2 Pretheroe C.J. expressed his agreement with the Disciplinary Committee that the statement in the letter of September 29 was definitely intended to mislead. He says: "Having carefully considered "the whole of the correspondence exhibited in this case I regret "to say that I have reached the same conclusion. Even when "the matter was put to the respondent with complete clarity in "the letter addressed to him by Messrs. Shearn, Delamore & "Co. on the 1st of October, 1952, he did not even answer the "letter."

Murray-Aynsley C.J. agreed. As regards the first complaint he says: "As regards the first charge, I do not think that it is "possible to deny the seriousness of the matter. The document "sent in on August 27 was one intended to have legal conse- "quences and it was a false document. Though the matter was "done with a complete lack of contrivance and was obvious to "anyone examining the document, and the Committee have

[1] (1889) 5 T.L.R. 407, 408.

J. C.
1955 Rajasooria
v.
Disciplinary
Committee.

" found that there was not an intention to deceive, I agree with " the finding of the Committee that it constituted grossly " improper conduct on the part of an advocate and solicitor and " that it brings the respondent within section 26 (2) of Cap. 41 " (Ordinance No. 4 of 1947)."

As regards the second charge, it is to be observed that he does not place any reliance on the failure to reply to the letter of October 1. He says: " I do not think that any reasonable " person reading the letter of September 29 could have construed " it as meaning anything but that the Registrar of Companies " had advised the pasting together of the two pieces of paper " and I think it is impossible to resist the inference that it was " intended to convey that impression."

Briggs J. also accepts the findings of the Disciplinary Committee. As regards the first complaint, he says that to cut a signature from one document and affix it to another might in very special circumstances be permissible, but no such circumstances existed in this case. On the other hand, he says that the appellant must have been aware that in the interval of two months some at least of the original signatories might have changed their minds and not wish to sign the new requisition. He considered that the precautions taken in this respect by the appellant were wholly insufficient and that it was grossly improper conduct in his behalf to transfer the signatures unless each and every one of the signatories had expressly authorized him to do so. As regards the second charge, he places a benevolent construction on the appellant's letter of September 29, saying that it was not literally untrue but was likely to mislead the solicitors for the company, and he bases his agreement with the Disciplinary Committee on the failure of the appellant to correct the misapprehension after receiving the letter of October 1, 1952.

It is from this order of August 27, 1953, that the appellant appeals to this Board. While the appeal to this Board was being prepared it was discovered that the letter dated October 1, 1952, had not in fact been delivered to the appellant's office until October 4, 1952. In view particularly of the judgment of Briggs J., who bases his judgment on complaint No. 2 entirely on the failure to answer this letter, the appellant's counsel applied for leave to adduce further evidence to establish the facts to which their Lordships have already referred. Those facts, if established, would necessarily involve that the appellant had never seen the letter in question and could not therefore be blamed for failure to deal with it. Before their Lordships could admit this evidence they would require to be satisfied on two points: (1) that it could not with reasonable diligence have been made available either before the Disciplinary Committee or before the Supreme Court, and (2) that it would have formed a determining factor in, or had an important influence on, the result. Their Lordships do not find it necessary to consider whether the first of these conditions is complied with, since they are satisfied that the evidence, if produced, would not have affected the result either before the Disciplinary Committee or in the Supreme Court. Their Lordships are unable to place on the letter of September 29 the benevolent construction adopted by Briggs J. They agree with Murray-Aynsley C.J. that no reasonable person reading that letter could have construed it as meaning anything but that the Registrar of Companies had advised the pasting together of the two pieces of paper, and they agree with him that it is impossible to resist the inference that it was intended to convey that impression. Mr. Gillis suggested that the evidence might have affected the sentence even if it did not affect the finding of grossly improper conduct, but their Lordships are satisfied, for the reason they have stated, that this is not a case where they should admit fresh evidence and they see nothing to lead them to the conclusion that the sentence imposed was unduly severe.

Their Lordships turn therefore to complaint No. 1. Mr. Gillis argued with force that once the Disciplinary Committee had found that there was no intention to deceive it necessarily followed that the Supreme Court could not properly find that there was grossly improper conduct. He relied on the passage already cited from the judgment of Lord Esher in In re Cooke.[2] He suggested that the appellant could not be said to have done anything dishonourable to him as a man if he did what he did without any intention to deceive. Their Lordships, however, agree with Pretheroe C.J. that for an advocate and solicitor knowingly and deliberately to submit a false document intending it to be acted upon, is dishonourable both to himself and to his profession. This in itself involves an element of "deceit." The Committee no doubt meant that the appellant believed his clients would have signed the new requisition if given the opportunity. Their Lordships do not read into Lord Esher's words a statement that a finding that intention to deceive is always an essential element in grossly improper conduct. It is to be observed that in Allinson v. General Council of Medical Education and Registration,[3] dealing with the case of a medical man, Lord Esher approved the test suggested by Lopes L.J. as follows: "'If it is shown that a medical man, in the pursuit of "'his profession, has done something with regard to it which "'would be reasonably regarded as disgraceful or dishonourable "'by his professional brethren of good repute and competency' "then it is open to the General Medical Council to say that he "has been guilty of 'infamous conduct in a professional "'respect'."

For the reasons they have stated their Lordships find themselves in complete agreement with the Supreme Court, but they would add that had they felt any hesitation in the matter they would require a very strong case before they substituted

[2] 5 T.L.R. 407, 408.

[3] [1894] 1 Q.B. 750, 760.

J. C.
1955
Rajasooria v. Disciplinary Committee.

their own opinion of what is professional misconduct in the Federation for the conclusion reached by the Disciplinary Committee and the Supreme Court. As Darling J. said in relation to England in In re A Solicitor, Ex parte Law Society[4]: "The Law Society are very good judges of what is professional "misconduct as a solicitor, just as the General Medical Council "are very good judges of what is misconduct as a medical man."

For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeal be dismissed. The appellant must pay the costs of the appeal.

Solicitors: Hy. S. L. Polak & Co.; Charles Russell & Co.

C. C.

[4] [1912] 1 K.B. 302, 312; 28 T.L.R. 50.

[LIVERPOOL ASSIZES.]

1955
Feb. 4, 7, 8.
Ashworth J.

*HUGHES v. McGOFF & VICKERS LD.

[1953 H. No. 4841.]

Building—Safety regulations—Application—"Building"—Installation of electrical apparatus in workshop in course of construction—Whether "construction . . . of a building"—Scaffold—Breach of statutory duty by employer—Consequent shifting of onus of proof—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1145), regs. 2, 22, 24.

The defendants were engaged under subcontract to instal electrical apparatus in a large workshop which was in the course of construction. The electrical installation involved the fixing of conduit pipes to the steelwork of the workshop by means of saddles and required the use of scaffolding which was used also by joiners who were engaged in putting insulating boards on the roof. An electrician employed by the defendants received fatal injuries when he was struck by a length of conduit pipe which fell on him from the lowest tier of the scaffolding, some 30 ft. above the floor level. The pipe had been placed lengthwise on a platform of the scaffolding, which was not provided with toe-boards, by another of the defendants' servants. The manner in which it came to fall from the platform was wholly unexplained and the cause of its fall was a mystery:—

Held, (1) that the installation of electric lighting in the workshop was an operation which formed part of the construction of a building and the regulations applied.

[Reported by E. Somerset Jones, Esq., Barrister-at-Law]

Principle in Elms v. Foster Wheeler Ld. [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1071; [1954] 2 All E.R. 714 applied.

(2) That the defendants were in breach of regulation 24 which breach could have been the cause of the electrician's death, and, in the absence of any other explanation, it must be concluded that such breach was the cause of his death.

Vyner v. Waldenberg Bros. Ld. [1946] K.B. 50; 61 T.L.R. 545; [1945] 2 All E.R. 547 applied.

ACTION.

The plaintiff brought this action under the provisions of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, on behalf of the estate of Owen Hughes who on March 23, 1953, received fatal injuries in the course of his employment by the defendants as an electrician. The defendants, a firm of electrical contractors, were at the material time engaged under subcontract in installing electrical apparatus in a large workshop which was not, at the time the deceased received his injuries, complete, there being certain work remaining to be done to the roof. The work to be done by the defendants consisted of the fitting of electric lighting, power and light switches, laying out of cables and the installation of distribution boards, and involved the installation of conduit pipes which were to be fixed to the steelwork of the workshop by means of saddles. This work required the use of scaffolding which was moved as and when the work required and, on March 23, 1953, was also being used by joiners engaged in putting insulating boards on the roof.

The actual cause of the deceased's death was that he was struck by a length of conduit pipe which fell from the lowest tier of the scaffolding, a height of some 30 ft. above floor level. The pipe, which was made of steel, was slightly over 1 inch in diameter and about 12 feet long and had been placed on the scaffolding by one Collict, another of the defendants' servants, about one hour before it fell. He had placed the pipe lengthwise on the lowest tier of the scaffolding which consisted of a platform between 5 feet and 6 feet wide, formed by boards supported at intervals of between 3 feet 6 inches and 4 feet by horizontal cross pieces of scaffolding. The platform inclined inward rather than outward and on its outer side there were vertical scaffold tubes at horizontal intervals of about 4 feet. Although there was no direct evidence of there being any gap in the part of the platform where the pipe was laid, the boards forming the platform were not laid uniformly flush, there being gaps in places varying from 1 inch to 3 inches. The sides of the platform were not provided with toe-boards. At a height of 3 feet above the platform there was another platform forming the second tier of the scaffolding and it had been the practice of Collict over a period of at least 3 months prior to the accident to place a pipe in a similar position without mishap. The manner in which the pipe came to fall from the platform was wholly unexplained and the cause of its fall remained a mystery.

1955

Hughes v. McGoff & Vickers Ld.

The plaintiff's case was that the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations of 1948 [1] applied and that the defendants had committed a breach, inter alia, of regulations 22 (a) and 24 (1). The defendants, whilst conceding at the hearing that they had not complied with the regulations, denied that the regulations applied and further contended that if the regulations did apply their breach of statutory duty had not caused the fatal injuries sustained by the deceased. The plaintiff failed to establish his allegations that the defendants and/or their servants were guilty of negligence at common law and the case is reported only on the claim based upon breach by the defendants of their statutory duty.

A. L. Petch for the plaintiff.
Andrew Rankin for the defendants.

The following cases in addition to those referred to in the judgment were cited in argument: Aylward v. Matthews [2]; Street v. British Electricity Authority [3]; Hutchison v. Cocksedge & Co. Ld. [4]; R. & H. Green and Silley Weir [5]; Knight v. Demolition and Construction Co. Ld. [6]; Potts (or Riddell) v. Reid. [7]

Ashworth J., after stating the facts and stating that the cause of the pipe's fall remained a mystery, reviewed the evidence, and stated that he was compelled to draw the conclusion that the pipe fell from the inner side of the platform, having rolled down the very slight incline to that side and, in some way which remained wholly unexplained, had succeeded in penetrating through a gap between the edge of the boards and whatever may have supported the platform on the inner side and so descended to the ground. He continued: The claim

[1] Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, reg. 2: "(1) These regulations shall apply "to the following operations where "undertaken by way of trade or business or for the purpose of any industrial or commercial undertaking, or "by or on behalf of the Crown or "any municipal or other public "authority, namely, the construction, "structural alteration, repair or maintenance of a building. . . ."

Reg. 4: "It shall be the duty of "every contractor and employer of "workmen who is undertaking any of "the operations to which these regulations apply (i) to comply with such "of the requirements of regulations "5–30 . . . as affect any workman "employed by him. . . ."

Reg. 22: "Every working platform from which a person is liable "to fall more than 6ft. 6ins. shall "be (a) closely boarded, planked, or "plated."

Reg. 24: "(1) . . . every side "of a working platform or working "place, being a side thereof from "which a person is liable to fall a "distance of more than 6ft. 6ins., "shall be provided with . . . toe-"boards up to a sufficient height "being in no case less than 8ins. and "so placed as to prevent so far as "possible the fall of persons, mate-"rials and tools from such platform "or place."

[2] [1905] 1 K.B. 343; 21 T.L.R. 196.

[3] [1952] 2 Q.B. 399, 402; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 799; [1952] 1 All E.R. 679.

[4] [1952] 1 All E.R. 696n.

[5] [1954] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 315.

[6] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 981; [1953] 2 All E.R. 508.

[7] [1943] A.C. 1; 58 T.L.R. 335; [1942] 2 All E.R. 161.

under the building regulations gives rise to three separate questions: (a) Do they apply? (b) Was there a breach? and (c) Was the breach a cause? The answer to the first of these questions involves a consideration of regulation 2 (1), the material part of which provides: "These regulations shall apply to the "following operations where undertaken by way of trade or "business or for the purpose of any industrial or commercial "undertaking, . . . namely, the construction, structural altera- "tion, repair or maintenance of a building. . . ." When one approaches the problem of construing that paragraph, it is important to keep in mind the fact that the regulations apply not to persons nor to premises but to operations. The question amounts to this: what was the nature of the operations which were being carried out at the proper time? Did such operations fall within the words "construction of a building"? The building was one of considerable height, of a very large size, and it was one which required electrical installations. For reasons which I will give in a moment, it is obviously desirable that, in a problem of this sort, one should not be tempted to stray outside the particular facts of particular cases, and the Court of Appeal have so laid it down in Elms v. Foster Wheeler Ld.[1] I would only say that, while I consider that the installation of electric lighting in this particular building formed part of the construction of the building it may well be that some form of lighting, for example the installation of special lighting in a film studio, might not form part of the construction of a building. In the present case I have come to the conclusion without hesitation that the work on which the defendants were engaged was an integral part of the construction of that building.

In Elms v. Foster Wheeler Ld.[1] it is perhaps pertinent to note that what were being installed were four large steam generating plants consisting of boilers which, when assembled, reached the height of something over 100 feet. It was not a case of the defendants carrying out what I have described as an integral part of the building, although, as the case shows, the work involved was the completion of the very task for which the building was originally designed. In other words, the present case is a stronger case of the applicability of the regulation than Foster Wheeler[1] is. Somervell L.J. there[2] quoted Ormerod J. as follows: "The judge put it in this way, 'I have to decide on "'the facts of this case whether it is right to say here that "'the defendants were engaged on the construction of a building "'or whether they were merely putting something into a "'building which had been, or was in the process of being, con- "'structed.' He decided, on the model which he saw and on "the evidence, that the defendants were engaged on the con- "struction of a building and the regulations therefore applied.

[1] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1071; [1954] 2 All E.R. 714.

[2] Ibid. 1074.

1955

Hughes v. McGoff & Vickers Ld.

Ashworth J.

"I agree with that." Those words show that the test applied by Ormerod J. was whether the defendants were engaged on the construction of a building or whether they were merely putting something into a building. Romer L.J. appears to have taken the matter somewhat further. Having agreed with the other Lords Justices that it was quite impossible to say in a general way that the building regulations apply on the one hand and do not apply on the other to work which includes the installation of plant, because it must depend on the circumstances of each particular case whether such an operation includes the regulations or not, Romer L.J. went on to state the manner in which, in his view, the question might be posed[3]: "I think that in the "present case the kind of way the question may be posed is "whether at the time of the accident a building was being "constructed and whether the defendants were contributing to "its construction. I say 'contributing' because it is quite "plain that the words in regulation 2, 'the construction of a "'building,'' should be read 'the construction of a building or "'any part thereof.' . . . The question then arises, did the work "which the defendants undertook form part of that operation? "The evidence showed, and I think the judge found, that what "the defendants or their sub-contractors did was a contribution "to the construction of the power station, inasmuch as they were "installing the essential apparatus which it was the object of the "outer walls and roof to house and shelter and which was indeed "united to those walls and to the outer walls as well as to the "foundations of the structure."

Whether one applies the broader test indicated by Romer L.J. or the somewhat narrower test adopted by Somervell L.J., approving Ormerod J., this case falls within the regulations. The building was not complete; the construction was not complete; joiners were still engaged on the roof; and it is quite impossible to say that the defendants' task in this case was merely putting something into a building which had been or was in the process of being constructed as opposed to being engaged on the construction of a building. I therefore hold that the building regulations applied to the work on which the defendants were engaged, relying for that purpose on regulation 4 when read with regulation 2.

Assuming, therefore, that the regulations apply, was there a breach? Mr. Andrew Rankin conceded that if the regulations were applicable the evidence did disclose a breach or breaches. [His lordship referred to the requirements of regulations 22 (a) and 24 (1), stating that the platform was not closely boarded, and that there were no toe-boards at the material place, and continued:] It is clearly established that the defendants were in breach of the regulations. That does not decide the matter, because Mr. Rankin went on to contend that, assuming the breach, it was not shown that the breach was in any sense a cause of the fatal injury to Mr. Hughes. So far as the breach of regulation 22 is concerned, namely the failure to provide close boarding, I accept his submission. On the findings which I have made it is quite clear that that breach was not the cause of the accident, because I have found that the pipe did not descend between the planks.

[3] Ibid. 1077.

There remains, however, the breach of regulation 24. It is said that nobody saw this pipe roll, or that the absence of toe-boards played no effective part in the unhappy event, but on that issue I was referred to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Vyner v. Waldenberg Bros. Ld.[4] The written judgment of the court was delivered by Scott L.J., who said[5]: "The judge at "the trial found that there had been a number of breaches by "the defendants with regard to both the riving knife and the "guard of this circular saw, and he indicated that had the case "stopped there it would have meant judgment for the plaintiff. "We agree with him, but we go further. If there is a definite "breach of a safety provision imposed on the occupier of a "factory, and a workman is injured in a way which could result "from the breach, the onus of proof shifts on to the employer "to show that the breach was not the cause. We think that "that principle lies at the very basis of statutory rules of abso-"lute duty. As Lord Goddard said in the Court of Appeal in "Lee v. Nursery Furnishings Ld.[6]: 'The only point that has "'given me some hesitation in this case is whether or not the "'evidence was sufficient for us to say that it was due to this "'gap or breach of the regulation that the accident happened. "'I have already said that one difficulty in the case is the "'evidence which the young lady gave herself, in which on "'certain points obviously she was mistaken. In the first place "'I think one may say this, that where you find there has been "'a breach of one of these safety regulations and where you find "'that the accident complained of is the very class of accident "'that the regulations are designed to prevent, a court should "'certainly not be astute to find that the breach of the regula-"'tion was not connected with the accident, was not the cause "'of the accident.'" After describing the evidence Scott L.J. continued[7]: "We therefore assume that in this case something "unexpected did happen, and that it was that which caused the "plaintiff's left hand suddenly to go forward and come into touch "with the descending teeth. But that is just the sort of case "where Parliament has intended the employer to bear the risk, "and it is obviously one which, as Parliament realised, by the "practice of insurance is distributed over the cost of the articles "supplied and thus enters into the consumer's price."

[4] [1946] K.B. 50; 61 T.L.R. 545; [1945] 2 All E.R 547.

[5] Ibid. 54.

[6] (1945) 61 T.L.R. 263; [1945] 1 All E.R. 387.

[7] [1946] K.B. 50, 55.

1955

Hughes v. McGoff & Vickers Ld.

Ashworth J.

Applying the principle laid down in those two cases, it seems to me that not only is it open to me to find that the breach of regulation 24 was a cause of this accident, but that I am driven to that conclusion in the absence of any other explanation. I therefore hold that the answer to the third question is that the breach was a cause of this accident, and that if there had been toe-boards at the material spot the probability is that this pipe would never have fallen. The claim therefore succeeds.

[His Lordship awarded the plaintiff damages of £350 which, with agreed funeral expenses amounted to a total of £392 6s. 6d. It was then disclosed that this was the exact sum paid into court.]

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors: Rowley, Ashworth & Co., Manchester; Geoffrey Warhurst & Co., Liverpool.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

1955
Feb. 21, 22, 23.

Barnard J.

* CARR v. CARR.

Husband and Wife—Divorce—Conflict of jurisdiction—Foreign decree based on domicile at time of desertion—Similar English jurisdiction—Validity—Declaration—Matrimonial Causes Act (Northern Ireland), 1939 (2 & 3 Geo. 6 (N.I.), c. 13), s. 26—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6, c. 25), s. 18 (1) (a).

A wife was granted a decree nisi of divorce on the ground of desertion by the High Court of Justice in Northern Ireland in February, 1954, which was made absolute in November, 1954. At the date of the petition, which had been filed in 1948, the husband had acquired a domicile of choice in England; but the Northern Irish court assumed jurisdiction under section 26 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1939, on the basis that the parties had been domiciled in Northern Ireland when the husband deserted the wife in 1942:—

Held, that the Northern Irish court had jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage under section 26 of the Act of 1939, and that the marriage had accordingly been validly dissolved.

The English courts will respect the validity of a foreign decree of divorce granted on the basis of a jurisdiction which is similar to that claimed for the English courts by section 18 (1) (a) of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950.

Travers v. Holley [1953] P. 246; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 507; [1953] 2 All E.R. 794 applied.

Husband's petition for divorce.

Wife's petition for a declaration.

The parties were born and spent the early part of their lives in Northern Ireland. In March, 1936, the husband joined the Royal Navy for a period of three years' service on the termination of which he obtained work at the dockyard at Portsmouth. In June, 1939, the parties were married, the wife coming from Northern Ireland to set up home near Portsmouth, in a house rented and furnished by the husband. In April, 1940, the husband rejoined the Royal Navy and about that time it was agreed that the wife, who was pregnant, should return to her parents.

In February, 1941, the husband, who had been discharged from the Royal Navy as medically unfit, rejoined the wife in Northern Ireland. The home near Portsmouth had been destroyed by bombing and they set up a new home in a cottage at the village where the wife's parents lived. In September, 1941, the husband obtained work at Preston in England and in November, 1941, the wife, who was again pregnant, gave up the cottage and returned to live with her parents. The husband returned to Northern Ireland in March, 1942, to spend a fortnight's holiday with the wife and again in May, 1942, when his work at Preston ceased. In October, 1942, he left Northern Ireland to join a government training scheme in England and did not return to Ireland again. In March, 1945, the wife received a letter from solicitors acting on behalf of the husband seeking a formal arrangement for a separation; but she refused to accede to this request.

Some time in 1945 the husband set up a home in Devonport in which, it was alleged, he had asked the wife to join him. This was denied by the wife. In that year the husband also met and started to live with the woman in respect of whom he asked in his petition filed in the present proceedings for the exercise of the court's discretion.

On December 15, 1948, the wife presented a petition to the High Court of Justice in Northern Ireland for the dissolution of her marriage on the ground that the husband had deserted her in March, 1942. An acknowledgment of service was signed on January 15, 1949. On November 26, 1953, the husband was personally served with notice that the wife intended to proceed with her petition and on February 18, 1954, in an uncontested suit, the High Court of Justice in Northern Ireland granted a decree nisi of divorce. The court accepted jurisdiction under the provisions of section 26 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1939, of Northern Ireland.[1]

On September 7, 1953, the husband had presented a petition in England for the dissolution of his marriage on the ground of [1] Matrimonial Causes Act, 1939, of Northern Ireland, s. 26: "Where "a wife has been deserted by her "husband . . . and the husband was "immediately before the desertion ". . . domiciled in Northern Ireland, "the court shall have jurisdiction for "the purpose of any proceedings "taken by the wife in a matrimonial "cause or matter, notwithstanding "that the husband has changed his "domicile since the desertion. . . ."

Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, s. 18: "(1) . . . the court shall by "virtue of this section have jurisdiction to entertain proceedings by a "wife in any of the following cases, "notwithstanding that the husband "is not domiciled in England, that "is to say:—(a) . . . if the wife has "been deserted by her husband . . . "and the husband was immediately "before the desertion . . . domiciled "in England."

1955

Carr v. Carr.

the wife's desertion since 1941. The wife, by her answer of May 14, 1954, denied that the husband was domiciled in England at the date of his petition and denied that she had deserted him. She further alleged that the husband was domiciled in Northern Ireland at the commencement of his desertion as had been established by the decree of the High Court of Justice in Northern Ireland of February 18, 1954, and that he was estopped by that decree from making the allegations contained in his petition. She alleged in the alternative that, if the court had jurisdiction to hear the petition, the husband had deserted her.

On November 15, 1954, the decree of the High Court of Justice in Northern Ireland was made absolute and the wife, on January 15, 1955, presented a petition for a declaration that the decree thus obtained was a valid decree.

The petitions were consolidated by an order of February 10, 1955.

James Stirling for the husband.

John Mortimer and Elaine Jones for the wife.

All cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgment.

Barnard J. referred to the pleadings and the nature of the Northern Ireland decree and continued: It is clear that there are various issues raised between the parties, but the issue of domicile, which lies at the threshold of the dispute, must be considered first. The relevant part of the Matrimonial Causes Act of 1939 of Northern Ireland, s. 26, reads as follows: [His Lordship read the section.] There was a similar section in our Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937—section 13—which has been re-embodied in the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, in section 18 (1) (a). Although it was always considered by the courts of this country that we would only respect a decree which was granted in a foreign court where the parties were domiciled in the country of that court at the institution of the proceedings, it is now quite clear, and only seems to me to be common sense, that, by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Travers v. Holley,[2] the courts of this country will respect a foreign decree based on the section which I have just read by reason of the fact that we ourselves will grant a decree in those circumstances.

There is no dispute here that the husband's domicile of origin was in Northern Ireland. It is equally clear that the husband is alleging a change of domicile and, therefore, the burden of proof in satisfying this court that he has changed his domicile is on him. I do not think that I can do better than refer to a few very short passages from the judgment of Jenkins L.J. in the Court of Appeal in Travers v. Holley.[3] Jenkins L.J. says: "It is

[2] [1953] P. 246; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 507; [1953] 2 All E.R. 794.

[3] [1953] P. 251.

"further not in dispute that the onus of proving the abandonment of a domicile of origin in favour of a domicile of choice is upon the person alleging the change of domicile; and that to discharge such onus it must be clearly shown that the individual whose domicile is in question removed from the country in which he had his domicile of origin to the country alleged to have become his chosen place of domicile with a definite and fixed intention . . . then or subsequently formed of making the latter his permanent home in substitution for and to the exclusion of the former." Jenkins L.J. in that passage interpolates a reference to what Lord Westbury said in Bell v. Kennedy,[4] and what Lord Halsbury said in Winans v. Attorney-General.[5]

Jenkins L.J. continues[6]: "Change of domicile, particularly where the change is from the domicile of origin to a domicile of choice (as distinct from a change from one domicile of choice to another) has always been regarded as a serious step which is only to be imputed to a person upon clear and unequivocal evidence," and as authority for that exposition of the law Jenkins L.J. again quotes Winans v. Attorney-General[7] and Bell v. Kennedy.[8] It is true that Jenkins L.J.'s judgment in the Court of Appeal was a dissenting judgment, but nobody can possibly quarrel with that very clear exposition of the law, and Jenkins L.J. dissented from the other two Lords Justices only because he did not consider the evidence sufficient to warrant an abandonment of the domicile of origin and the acquisition of a domicile of choice.

[His Lordship then considered the facts relevant to the issue of domicile and held that the husband had been domiciled in Northern Ireland until October, 1942, and that at a subsequent date, which was probably 1945, he had acquired a domicile of choice in England, and continued:] I do not think that there can be any doubt that the decree pronounced in the court of Northern Ireland was a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction and, therefore, a decree which will be regarded as a good decree in this country. That being so, and that decree having been made absolute in November, 1954, the marriage was already dissolved before the case came before me and there is not any marriage left for me to dissolve. I, therefore, declare that the decree pronounced in the Court in Northern Ireland on February 18, 1954, was a valid decree.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Ward, Bowie & Co; Law Society (G. E. C. Dougherty).

E. J.

[4] (1868) L.R. 1 Sc. & Div. 307, 320, 321.

[5] [1904] A.C. 287, 288; 20 T.L.R. 510.

[6] [1953] P. 246, 252.

[7] [1904] A.C. 287.

[8] (1868) L.R. 1 Sc. & Div. 307.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

1955
Mar. 14.

Singleton and Romer L.JJ.

* In re BRIXHAM URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.
In re TOTNES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

PRACTICE NOTE.

Rates and Rating—Practice—Appeal—Appeal by valuation officer to valuation court — Rating authority in agreement with valuation officer's proposal—No steps taken by rating authority in reliance on valuation officer's proposal—Withdrawal of appeal by valuation officer—Rating authority's claim to be heard refused—Application for order of mandamus — Local Government Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6, c. 26), s. 48.

APPLICATION ex parte for leave to appeal by Brixham and Totnes Urban District Councils from the refusal by the Divisional Court (Hilbery, Lynskey and Parker JJ.) of leave to apply for orders of mandamus to Plymouth and South Devon Valuation Court.[1]

Harold Williams Q.C., who appeared with G. D. Squibb for the councils, said that his initial difficulty was that the application to the Court of Appeal should have been made within four days. The delay was due to negotiations with the county council and the Ministry of Housing and Local Government, and to the indecision of the Salcombe Urban District Council (a party to the first application) whether to take part in the appeal. The matter was of importance and had been the subject of prolonged consideration. Under the Act which nationalized the electricity industry in 1947 a contribution was made by the undertakings instead of rates, but when gas undertakings were nationalized in the following year they continued to be rated. The valuation officer made proposals for putting the South Devon gas undertakings into the valuation list for the years 1951 to 1953. The rating authorities were satisfied with the proposals. They had a right to appear and be heard before the valuation court when the proposals were considered, but as a result of negotiations, to which the applicants were not parties, the valuation officer had withdrawn his proposals shortly before they were due to be considered. The applicants attended the valuation court, but were refused leave to be heard because the valuation officer had withdrawn his appeals. They asked for an order of mandamus to the valuation court to hear and determine. Brixham Council, who otherwise would not get rates for the years 1951 to 1953, would lose over £5,000.

SINGLETON L.J. We both think that the application is made too late, but speaking for myself alone I think it would have been better, in the ordinary course, if the councils had been heard. I think that that which took place was a hearing at which they were entitled to be heard, but as they have taken so long about it we do not think that we should accede to the application.

[1] [1955] 1 W.L.R. 5; [1954] 3 All E.R. 561.

1955

BRIXHAM U.D.C., In re. TOTNES U.D.C., In re.

Application refused.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. for T. Owen Davies, Brixham.

A. W. G.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* PRACTICE DIRECTION.

1955 Mar. 28.

(POWERS OF MASTERS UNDER R.S.C., ORD. 55, R. 15.)

Practice and Procedure—Chancery Division—Master—Powers—Amendment of R.S.C., Ord. 55, r. 15.

The following is published by permission of the judges of the Chancery Division for the information of the profession.

The Rules of the Supreme Court (Chancery Division), 1954, introduce a number of changes and, in particular, substitute a new rule 15 for rules 15 and 15A of Order 55, with the result that the masters of the Chancery Division have now all the powers of a judge in chambers except such as the judges of the Division may direct, or as are prescribed by rule, to be dealt with by a judge in person.

The judges of the Division do not propose at present to give any directions under that rule limiting the powers thereby conferred upon masters, but issue the following memorandum for their guidance in exercising their powers.

1. Before the new rules came into force the masters were, by virtue of Ord. 55, rr. 15, 15A and 35A, unable to make the following orders:—

(a) for service of process out of the jurisdiction;

(b) for appointment of a new trustee (except a judicial trustee);

(c) vesting property or appointing a person to convey land or to make or join in making a transfer of stock or a share in a ship;

(d) for general administration (except in a creditor's action where there was evidence of insolvency) or for execution of a trust;

(e) for accounts and inquiries concerning the property of a deceased person;

1955

PRACTICE DIRECTION (POWERS OF MASTERS UNDER R.S.C., ORD. 55, R. 15).

(f) to bind persons on whom service of a notice of judgment or order for accounts and inquiries has been dispensed with.

2. The power of the masters as deputies for the judge in chambers to make orders in matters other than those falling within paragraph 1 has long been limited by a well-settled practice: that practice is to be maintained. For example, a master should not sanction any compromise, arrangement or transaction.

3. In cases falling within paragraph 1 the masters should not make orders:—

(a) for service out of the jurisdiction except in clear cases;

(b) for the appointment of a trustee except (1) a judicial trustee, (2) in the case of incapacity, or (3) where the fund is small;

(c) for the administration of the estate or execution of the trusts in a beneficiary's action;

(d) vesting property (save on incapacity or in consequence of an appointment of a trustee or a previous order of the court) or directing some person to assign or convey (save where the transaction has been previously approved or directed by a judge);

(e) for inquiries relating to the next-of-kin of an intestate.

Before exercising his extended powers a master should consider in every case whether it is one in which it would be more appropriate that the judge should make the order.

4. Order 14A in its new form gives to the plaintiff an extended right to apply for summary judgment in a specific performance action. Masters should not make such orders (except by consent) unless the following conditions are satisfied:—

(i) the agreement sued upon is a formal written contract, and

(ii) the defendant is in default of appearance or does not appear at the hearing of the summons or there is clearly no defence.

5. Order 55, r. 2, as amended by the new rules, provides that applications for payment or transfer out of court of any amount of cash or securities may be made in chambers. Masters should not make orders where the value of the fund exceeds £2,000 at the date of the issue of the summons.

M. G. WILLMOTT,
Chief Master,
Chancery Division.

March 30, 1955.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1955
Mar. 17.

Evershed M.R., Jenkins and Romer L.JJ.

* In re FOLLETT, DECD.
BARCLAYS BANK LD. v. DOVELL AND ANOTHER.

[1953 F. No. 1829.]

Will — Construction — Omission — Clause ungrammatical and illogical unless words supplied from precedent — Judicial notice that precedent available.

A testatrix bequeathed her residuary estate, subject to two life interests, on trust as to the income thereof to B.E. for life and directed that on B.E.'s death "my trustees shall hold my residuary "trust fund and the future income thereof in trust for all or such "one or more exclusively or others of her child or children or "remoter issue or any other person or persons as she should by deed "or deeds revocable or irrevocable or by will or codicil without "transgressing the rules against perpetuities appoint and in default "of or subject to any such appointment in trust for her next-of-"kin."

The testatrix died in 1932. In 1953, the two prior life interests having determined, B.E., who had no children, purported to appoint by deed the whole of the residuary trust fund to herself absolutely.

On the hearing of a summons taken out to ascertain whether the power conferred had been properly exercised, Roxburgh J. read into the clause words which had the effect of making the power conferred on B.E. a special power to appoint to her children or remoter issue only, on the ground that these words were to be found in a precedent form, which in his opinion had clearly been used in framing the relevant clause, and that the court was compelled to the conviction that they had been inadvertently omitted:—

Held, (1) that there were clearly omissions in the clause, but (2) that the nature and wording of what had been left out was not sufficiently certain to enable the court to supply words, and still less to transform what, accordingly to the letter of the clause, was a general power of appointment into a special power; (3) that, accordingly, the clause must be taken as conferring a general power of appointment on the donee.

In re Smith [1948] Ch. 49; 63 T.L.R. 608; [1947] 2 All E.R. 708 applied.

Decision of Roxburgh J. [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1430; [1954] 3 All E.R. 478 reversed.

APPEAL from Roxburgh J.[1]

Georgina Sarah Follett made her will on August 31, 1923, and the codicil thereto on March 14, 1924. After creating two life interests in her residuary estate in favour of two nieces, she provided in clause 5: "(c) Upon the death of both my said two "nieces I direct my trustees to pay the total income from my "residuary trust fund . . . to . . . Beryl Edmonds [the first "defendant, now Mrs. Dovell] during her life . . . (d) On and "after the death of the said Beryl Edmonds my trustees shall "hold my residuary trust fund and the future income thereof in

[1] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1430; [1954] 3 All E.R. 478.

C. A.
1955
Follett, decd., In re. Barclays Bank Ld. v. Dovell.

" trust for all or such one or more exclusively or others of her " child or children or remoter issue or any other person or persons " as she should by deed or deeds revocable or irrevocable or by " will or codicil without transgressing the rules against per- " petuities appoint and in default of or subject to any such " appointment in trust for her next-of-kin."

By the codicil she made the following disposition: " Whereas " I have made no provision in my said will in the event of " Beryl Edmonds dying before she becomes entitled to her share " of my estate now therefore in the event of the said Beryl " Edmonds dying before she becomes entitled to any share in my " estate I give devise and bequeath the share or interest to which " had she lived she would have been entitled to my two nephews " Cecil Biddell Follett and Wilfred Howell Follett in equal shares " absolutely. . . ."

The testatrix died on July 21, 1932. The two nieces died in 1950 and 1951 respectively, and the first defendant, who had no children, thereafter received the income from the residuary estate. In purported exercise of the power of appointment conferred by the will she appointed by deed dated January 16, 1953, the whole of the residuary trust fund to herself absolutely. A summons was taken out by the trustees to determine whether on the true construction of the will and codicil, and in the events which had happened, the power of appointment conferred on the first defendant in clause 5 of the will was: (1) a general power of appointment enabling her to appoint the fund to herself absolutely, or (2) a special power enabling her to appoint the fund in favour of her children or remoter issue, and in default thereof in favour of any persons (i) including herself, or (ii) not including herself. Roxburgh J. declared that the will conferred on the first defendant a special power of appointment enabling her to appoint the fund in favour of her children or remoter issue only.

That construction of the will involved reading into clause 5 words found in the following conveyancing precedent in Key and Elphinstone's Precedents in Conveyancing, 11th ed. (which was published in 1923 and was, therefore, current at the time when the will was made), vol. 2, pp. 901–2; and the words so read into the clause of the will are for the purpose of this report indicated by italics: " [After the death of my wife] my trustees " shall stand possessed of the capital and future income of the " trust fund in trust for all or such one or more exclusively of the " others or other of my children or remoter issue, at such age or " time, or respective ages or times, if more than one in such " shares, and with such trusts for their respective benefit and " such provisions for their respective advancement (either during " the life of my wife or after her death) and maintenance and " education at the discretion of my trustees or any other person " or persons, as my wife shall from time to time by any deed " or deeds revocable or irrevocable or by will or codicil without " transgressing the rule against perpetuities appoint, and in " default of and subject to any such appointment as aforesaid, " etc."

The first defendant appealed.

I. J. Lindner Q.C. and G. H. Crispin (C. D. Lush with them) for the first defendant, Beryl Dovell.

Mark Cockle for the trustees, Barclays Bank Ld.

J. L. Arnold for the second defendant, who was interested in default of appointment.

In addition to the cases referred to in the judgments the following were cited in argument: Coryton v. Helyar *; In re Ridge's Trusts.†

EVERSHED M.R. In this rather curious case I have come to a different conclusion from that of Roxburgh J., though I confess to a feeling of sympathy with him in the attempt which he made to remedy what I think may fairly be called a manifest error by what has to be found to be a no less manifest corrigendum. In that sentence, I think, lies the difficulty. I will follow Vaisey J. in In re Smith,[1] in citing as the proper principle in cases of this character a passage which the judge took from Jarman on Wills, 7th ed., vol. 1, p. 556: " Where it is clear on the face of a will " that the testator has not accurately or completely expressed his " meaning by the words he has used, and it is also clear what " are the words which he has omitted, those words may be " supplied in order to effectuate the intention, as collected from " the context."

As I ventured to observe during the argument, there is, perhaps, some analogy, and, if so, a natural analogy, to the jurisdiction of the equity courts in rectifying instruments, a jurisdiction exercised when it is established not only that the instrument as it has been executed does not accord with the intention of the parties to it, but when it is also shown what exactly their true intention was.

I must, however, first lay a foundation for my conclusion by a reference to the facts, though the reference is not of any length. We are concerned with the will dated in August, 1923, of one Georgina Sarah Follett. She made elaborate provisions to benefit various collateral relations, including two nieces, for she was herself a spinster. One of the nieces was a Mrs. Ella Edmonds. In clause 5 (c) she provided that the first defendant, Beryl Dovell, being the daughter of the niece whom I have last mentioned, Mrs. Edmonds, should have a protected life interest after the deaths of the two nieces; and then, in sub-clause (d) of the same clause, she made the disposition which has caused the present difficulty: " On and after the death of the said Beryl Edmonds [now Beryl

* (1745) 2 Cox 340.
† (1872) 7 Ch.App. 665.
[1] [1948] Ch. 49; 63 T.L.R. 608; [1947] 2 All E.R. 708.

C. A.

1955

Follett, decd., In re. Barclays Bank Ld. v. Dovell.

Evershed M.R.

" Dovell, the first defendant] my trustees shall hold my residuary " trust fund and the future income thereof in trust for all or such " one or more exclusively or others of her child or children or " remoter issue or any other person or persons as she "—that is, Beryl Dovell—" should by deed or deeds revocable or irrevocable " or by will or codicil without transgressing the rules against " perpetuities appoint and in default of or subject to any such " appointment in trust for her next-of-kin."

That paragraph shows at its beginning and at its end strong marks of affinity to the elaborate formulae which form part of the stock-in-trade of the conveyancer; but in the middle it falls far short of any such elegance. Indeed, as I have already indicated, it is obviously wrong in two respects. In the first place, the words " or others " immediately after " such one or more " exclusively " which I emphasized in reading, are obviously there by mistake for something else. Secondly (though this error is not quite of the same quality), it seems equally plain that, with regard to the words which next ensue, " of her child or children or " remoter issue or any other person or persons as she should by " deed or deeds revocable or irrevocable," etc., something has also gone amiss; either some provisions have been accidentally omitted in copying; or in the course of the actual building up of the final form of this will something originally in it has been struck out, and the strikings out have not been properly carried out or sufficiently extensive.

Roxburgh J. came to the conclusion (and he called it a compelling conviction) that he was not only able to discern the errors but also to discern exactly what it was that had gone wrong and what were the words which should have been and were intended to have been incorporated; and my brother was correct in saying that only upon the basis that he could entertain such a compelling conviction could he do the work, in effect, of remodelling this disposition. Otherwise, as he would be the first to agree, he would plainly be going beyond the permitted limits of judicial interpretation, however tempting it may sometimes be for a judge to improve upon the performance of testators.

The solution which the judge accepted was this. He said that these words " or others " were a plain slip for the well-known formula " of the other or others." He was referred to the form which is to be found in Key and Elphinstone's Precedents in Conveyancing, 11th ed., vol. 2, pp. 901–2. It seemed to him that at its beginning and at its end this clause so clearly followed the precedent in that book, and the one error which I have already mentioned was so plainly caused by a slip, an accidental omission of some of the words to be found in that precedent, that he was able to go on to what he felt to be not only the compelling but also the logical conclusion that this sub-clause (d) was intended to be a reproduction (with only the essential changes, having regard to the personality of the donee of the power of appointment) of the precedent clause which I have mentioned. When he had reached that stage in the argument, all else followed; he was able to read in words which entirely transformed this subclause (d) and resulted in the power of appointment given to the first defendant being a strictly limited power to appoint among children or issue.

In the absence of some such emendation, it seemed to the judge (and I agree with him, and, indeed, Mr. Arnold has not contended to the contrary in this court) that the words as they stand, and if they must be construed without further additions, can only mean that the first defendant has a general power of appointment. In that event, of course, the reference to the "children or remoter issue" was quite unnecessary and otiose. And as Jenkins L.J. pointed out during the course of the argument, if this was really intended to confer a general power of appointment, then, indeed, it was a slavish following of an inappropriate precedent to include the caution against transgressing the rule against perpetuities; for the real necessity to put in that caution is, of course, referable to a special power of appointment which must take effect, for the purposes of the perpetuity rule, as though the appointee's directions were written into the instrument conferring the power. But, after all, that again, as I think, is merely to say in other words what I have already more than once said, namely, that something clearly has gone wrong.

I must now examine whether it is really a case in which the necessary compelling conviction emerges from the material which is before the court. I confess that I am not so convinced myself.

In the first place, I feel some doubt about the reference to Key and Elphinstone. We have not been referred to the numerous alternative precedents which can be found in the books. Conveyancers of experience will have in mind the general shape of powers of appointment of this kind. But, as Mr. Lindner pointed out in the course of his argument, if this clause is put alongside the passages from pp. 901 and 902 of Key and Elphinstone, it will be found that there is no precise verbal correspondence; and in the absence of precise verbal correspondence I am not satisfied that it is right to assume that it was this textbook which the testator, or those who were doing this testamentary work for her, had by their elbows.

I do not propose to take time by pointing out the verbal differences, save in the one important instance of the first error, namely, the words "or others." It is not the fact that this precedent states "exclusively of the other or others"; it puts it in fact the other way round, "exclusively of the others or other." The point is, of course, a small one; but it suffices to show that this defect cannot be remedied by the expedient of a mere writing-in, and no more, of words which are omitted. It seems to me that it would be perfectly legitimate to treat the error here as being no more than the error of transcribing or typing "o–r" for "o–f," and that what should have been said was "such one or

C. A.

1955

Follett, decd., In re. Barclays Bank Ld. v. Dovell.

Evershed M.R.

"more exclusively of others." Unless the words used are so firmly tied, so to speak, to this particular precedent, it seems to me that the most compelling reason for treating the rest of this clause as an erroneous and accidental transcription of this precedent is absent.

I observe, further, that the words which, according to the judge's view, have been omitted are not few. According to the argument, the omitted words which the court must supply are: "at such age or time, or respective ages or times if more than "one in such shares, and with such trusts for their respective "benefit, and such provisions for their respective advancement "(either during the life of" [the first defendant] "or after her "death) and maintenance and education at the discretion of "my trustees"; and then one has got back on to the permanent way, so to speak, of the clause in the will. That is a very considerable and very elaborate addition. Putting the matter interrogatively, can the court be absolutely sure that those precisely were the words which were somehow omitted? Might there not have been at some stage, for example, the introduction of a further general power? In that connexion emphasis was rightly put by Mr. Lindner upon the final trust in default of appointment; for it is a trust in default for the next-of-kin of the donee of the power and not of the testatrix. Though I have followed the argument of Mr. Arnold that in actual practice there would perhaps be nothing so very startling about it, since, if the first defendant did have issue and omitted to appoint, those issue would prima facie be the next-of-kin, it is nevertheless a very surprising thing that a testatrix who starts by limiting the scope of the benefit which she is conferring to a particular person and her issue only, if that is the apparent limit of her testamentary wish for that family, should then, in default of appointment, let the property go to persons who might be far more remotely connected with the person in question.

These arguments, however, are really only by way of showing that to my mind the necessary assurance, both as to the nature and wording of what has been left out, as well as to the fact of there having been an error or omission, are not really to be found in the present case.

We have not been referred to all the cases, and I do not myself think that cases are of much assistance, except to express or enshrine a principle; and for that reason I have already made sufficient reference to In re Smith [2]; but I venture to add one other point. In In re Smith [2] what had plainly gone wrong was that there had been a total omission of a disposition. It was a case in which a lady who was, as the judge observed, living on terms of normal affection with her husband and who was making, as regards particular items of her property, gifts to her husband and her husband's relations, made a provision for the disposition of her estate in the event of her husband dying within a month of her own death or predeceasing her, but omitted to make any disposition at all in favour of anybody in the event of the husband surviving her by more than a month. What, therefore, the court did in that case (and it could do it in very few words) was to fill a striking and obvious gap.

[2] [1948] Ch. 49.

In the present case, if the argument of Mr. Arnold were to prevail, the court would not be filling an obvious gap; it would be so remoulding a particular clause as entirely to transform the effect of the clause which, as it stands, gives a general power of appointment. I asked Mr. Arnold whether he had found any case in which the court had felt so convinced of the error that had been made that it had transformed and produced an effect wholly contrary to, a provision which was, upon its fair construction, effective according to the will as it stood; and Mr. Arnold told me that he was not aware of any such case. I do not say that, if the error is obvious enough and if it also appears precisely what it is that has gone wrong, there might not be such a case; but, in my judgment, it would need a very much stronger case than the present to justify the court in taking a step as bold as that.

I have already given sufficient reasons for showing that, however one may suspect the nature of the error (and I am putting it rather higher than I feel is quite justified), there still seems to me to be far too much to be said on the other side to make that first suspicion free from reasonable doubt. The cases referred to in In re Smith,[3] included the case [4] in which Bacon V.-C. made his well-known allusion to the error of the blundering attorney's clerk. In fact, the full quotation as appears from the report, is "clerk or law stationer"; and it may indeed be that the Vice-Chancellor really meant the attorney's blundering clerk. It may be that someone here has blundered; but, to borrow from the happy phrase of Knight Bruce L.J. in Key v. Key,[5] I am not here satisfied that the spirit has been made clear enough to justify the court in overcoming, and, indeed, in entirely transposing the letter.

The matter is, in the end, a short one; but such is my regard for Roxburgh J. in a matter of this kind that I have thought it appropriate that I should give at a little length the reasons why I have not felt able to follow his opinion. It may be that I am a little less bold; but I think that I have, perhaps, approached the problem somewhat differently. If I had felt the same assurance that he did, then I think the court would have been entitled and bound to have given effect to the conviction; but the suggestions to which I have referred and which do not, I think, find a place in the judgment of Roxburgh J., are, in my opinion, such

[3] Ibid.
[4] In re Redfern (1877) 6 Ch.D. 133, 138.
[5] (1853) 4 De G.M. & G. 73.

C. A.

1955

Follett, decd., In re. Barclays Bank Ld. v. Dovell.

as to make it really impossible, consistently within the well-established limits of the judicial interpretation of documents, to do other than say that this will must take effect according to its terms; that is to say, as Roxburgh J. himself observed, to hold that clause 5 (d) of this will conferred upon the first defendant a general power of appointment and not one limited to a particular class. I would, therefore, allow the appeal.

Jenkins L.J. I agree. It is possible to give effect to clause 5 (d) of the will as it stands as a clause conferring upon the first defendant a general power of appointment. On the other hand, the clause undoubtedly contains language which would be suitable to the creation of a special power of appointment amongst her children or remoter issue, and which is not appropriate to a general power. These indications suffice to satisfy me that something has gone wrong with the drafting of clause 5 (d). Nevertheless the clause, unusual as its form is, must be construed and given effect to as it stands unless the court can be satisfied, as the Master of the Rolls has said, not only that something has gone wrong, but also what are the words which have been inadvertently omitted.

The theory which commended itself with compelling conviction to Roxburgh J. was to the effect that when the draftsman reached clause 5 (d) of the will he set about providing, in accordance with instructions which he presumably had obtained, a special power of appointment for the first defendant amongst her children or remoter issue; and with that object in view the draftsman was either copying from, or making use of his recollection of, the precedent in Key and Elphinstone, 11th ed., vol. 2, p. 901; and that in the process of copying out, or writing out from memory, that precedent, he reached without mishap the words "children or remoter issue," and then, for some unexplained reason, omitted the passage which my Lord has read in extenso beginning "at such age or time" and ending "at the "discretion of my trustees," and went straight on, after writing "children or remoter issue," with the words "or any other "person or persons," thus turning the persons who in the precedent were persons to whom the various discretionary powers of maintenance, education and so forth might be delegated, into objects of the power of appointment. By that process, it is said, the draftsman inadvertently converted what was intended for a special power of appointment amongst children and remoter issue into a power of appointment amongst that class together with any other person or persons, thus inadvertently converting it, in effect, into a general power of appointment.

I confess that I find that theory attractive, and it provides an interesting exercise in textual criticism; but I find it impossible to be satisfied that this theoretical explanation is the right one, that is to say that the words to which I have referred in the precedent which find no place in clause 5 (d) of the will were, in truth, words intended to be inserted (with certain admittedly necessary modifications) in this part of the will, and inadvertently omitted. It seems to me, with all respect to the judge, that this theory, attractive though it may be, is no more than speculation.

It is possible to suggest other reasons for the draftsman's departure from the form which he very possibly had in mind. It might have been intended to insert a general power in default of objects of, or of appointment under, a preceding special power. It might have been intended to insert a trust in default of appointment for the primary objects of the special power, namely, the child or children of the first defendant. It might be, as I think my Lord suggested, that the form of this clause had been a matter of discussion between the testatrix and the draftsman, and that the first intention was to make it a special power, but that in the end it was thought better to make it a general power, and words were struck out with that object in view, but inadvertently the reference to children or remoter issue was left in the draft and thus found its way into the will. There are far too many possible explanations of the curious form of clause 5 (d) to make it possible for us, in construing this will, to alter its effect by adding the very considerable number of words, and the somewhat elaborate provisions which the judge found able to incorporate in it, on the ground that the testatrix must have intended their inclusion.

I agree, therefore, that the clause must be construed as it stands, and that there is no sufficient justification for incorporating the words which Roxburgh J. found it possible to incorporate in it. Accordingly, I agree with my Lord that this appeal should be allowed.

ROMER L.J. I also agree. I only wish to add a very few words for myself, as we are arriving at a different conclusion from that which commended itself to Roxburgh J.

The principle which is applicable to cases of this kind was accepted by Vaisey J. in In re Smith[6] as being accurately formulated in Jarman on Wills, 7th ed., vol. 1, p. 556, in the following terms: "Where it is clear on the face of a will that "the testator has not accurately or completely expressed his "meaning by the words he has used, and it is also clear what "are the words which he has omitted, those words may be "supplied in order to effectuate the intention, as collected from "the context."

The rule as so expressed has two limbs. The first is that the court must be satisfied that there has been an inaccurate expression by the testator of his intention, and the second is that it must be clear what words the testator had in mind at the time when he made the apparent error which appears in the will. It is the second part of the rule that, I think, presents the greatest

[6] [1948] Ch. 49.

C. A.
1955
Follett, decd., In re. Barclays Bank Ld. v. Dovell.
Romer L.J.

obstacle to the respondents in this case. Unless one can be reasonably certain from the context of the will itself what are the words which have been omitted, then one cannot apply the principle at all, and one has to take the language as one finds it. Roxburgh J. found that the difficulty was capable of solution in this way. He found that the words "exclusively or others" were obviously the result of a mistake. He was then referred to the edition of Key and Elphinstone which was current at the time when the testatrix made her will, in which the words appeared "exclusively of the others or other." He then regarded that as a sufficient guide to the conclusion at which he arrived that this will was being drawn by a draftsman who was using Key and Elphinstone as a precedent, and that the draftsman, through inadvertency or mistake, departed from the text of that work. Therefore, having satisfied himself that that was the position, he was able to find with precision what the words were which the testatrix had subsequently omitted, namely, the words in the relevant form in Key and Elphinstone.

It is primarily with that view that I find myself unable to agree with the judge. It appears to me, in the first place, from the internal evidence of the document itself, that the form in Key and Elphinstone was not in fact the form of precedent which was being used. There are differences, to which the Master of the Rolls has referred, in phraseology between the form in Key and Elphinstone and the phraseology here, apart altogether from the words which were suggested as being omitted. I do not repeat them; Mr. Lindner drew our attention to them in detail. Further, the words "exclusively of the others or other" are to be found, I imagine, in dispositions of this character in every precedent book that has ever been published, and they are not the monopoly of Key and Elphinstone. Therefore, I think that the starting point from which the judge began is open to considerable question and I am not convinced that Key and Elphinstone's form was that which the draftsman of the will was using. Therefore, in my opinion, one is deprived of the certainty as to what the words were which had been omitted. It may well be that most of the well-known books of precedent follow in substance the same or similar dispositions as appear in the form in Key and Elphinstone. On the other hand, it is at least possible that this firm of solicitors had precedents drawn up by themselves, containing other or different dispositions. Again, it is possible that, even if the draftsman was using a form like Key and Elphinstone's, he desired to depart from it in some ways, but there is no certainty about the precise manner in which he did intend to depart from it. All kinds of difficulties follow upon this uncertainty to which the Master of the Rolls and Jenkins L.J. have drawn attention, with the result, as I think, that one cannot say that the second requirement of this rule or principle as stated in Jarman has been satisfied in the present case. Effect can be given to this language as it stands, although one may suspect that it does in some way or other depart from what was intended. But what we are asked to do, notwithstanding this want of certainty in the matter, is to cut down a power which, on the face of it, is a general power, to a limited or special power; and, in my judgment, there is no warrant for doing so in the present case.

I agree, for these reasons, that the appeal must be allowed.

C. A.
1955
FOLLETT, DECD., In re. BARCLAYS BANK LD. v. DOVELL.

Appeal allowed (cost of parties, as between solicitor and client, to be paid out of residue).

Solicitors: Moon, Gilks & Moon for Campion, Symons & Co., Exeter; Terence O'Shea, Lake & Co.

E. D.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

* In re WEST FERRY ROAD, POPLAR.
In re PADWICK'S ESTATE.

1955
Mar. 24, 25.
Harman J.

Solicitor—Costs—Taxation—Compulsory purchase—Registered land—Vendors' costs payable by purchasers — Scale fee allowed — Lands Clauses (Consolidation) Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), ss. 81, 82, 83 — Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1883 † (S.R. & O., 1882) — Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1953 (S.I. 1953, No. 117/*L.*1)— Solicitors' Remuneration (Registered Land) Orders, 1925, 1944 and 1953 (S.R. & O., 1926, No. 2/*L.*2; S.R. & O., 1944, No. 204/*L.*6; S.I. 1953, No. 118/*L.*2).

The costs of the vendors' solicitors payable by the purchasers on a compulsory purchase of registered land are (in default of agreement between the parties) where the Lands Clauses (Consolidation) Act, 1845, applies, taxable according to the Land Registry Scale Fee under the Solicitors' Remuneration (Registered Land) Order, 1925, as amended by the Orders of 1944 and 1953.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

The London County Council in the year 1954 bought certain properties in Poplar from the trustees of an estate known as Padwick's Estate under the County of London (West Ferry Road, Poplar) Compulsory Purchase Order, made under the Town and Country Planning Acts, 1944–1947.

The validity of the title of the London County Council depended on section 81 of the Lands Clauses (Consolidation) Act, † Note: This order which is printed in the Statutory Rules and Orders of 1882 and is referred to in Brickdale and Stewart-Wallace on the Land Registration Act, 1925 (4th ed., p. 503), as of 1882 came into force on January 1, 1883 and is referred to in the Annual Practice (1955, p. 3076) as the Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1883.

1955

West Ferry Road, Poplar, In re. Padwick's Estate, In re.

1845,[1] the costs of the sale being payable in accordance with section 82 of the Act. Application was made in due course by the vendors to the London County Council for payment of the bill which had been delivered to them (the vendors) by their solicitors on September 10, 1954. This was a bill without items, drawn on the footing that the solicitors were entitled as against their clients, the vendors, to payment of the scale fee which was described as being in accordance with the authorized Land Registry Scale.

The London County Council objected to paying the bill, and the costs, therefore, became taxable under section 83 of the Lands Clauses (Consolidation) Act, 1845; and, on a petition under that section, an order was made on October 7, 1954, for the taxation of the bill. The order recited that the petitioners were the owners of certain lands for which the purchase-money had been paid and the deed of transfer executed. It further recited that by section 82 of the Act the London County Council were liable to pay the vendors' costs of the conveyance of the lands, including all charges and expenses specified in the section, and that the London County Council did not agree the amount of the bill delivered on September 10, 1954, and were desirous of having the bill taxed under section 83 of the Act, "and the "Solicitors' Remuneration (Registered Land) Orders, 1925 and "1953." The taxing master allowed the bill as presented.

The London County Council, on January 17, 1955, entered the following objections to the taxation:

[1] Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 81: "Conveyances of "lands to be purchased under the "provisions of this . . . Act . . . may "be according to the forms in the "schedules (A.) and (B.) respectively "to this Act annexed, or as near "thereto as the circumstances of the "case will admit, or by deed in any "other form which the promoters of "the undertaking may think fit; and "all [such] conveyances . . . shall be "effectual to vest the lands thereby "conveyed in the promoters of the "undertaking. . . ."

S. 82: "The costs of all such con-"veyances shall be borne by the pro-"moters of the undertaking; and such "costs shall include all charges and "expenses incurred, on the part as "well of the seller as of the purchaser, "of all conveyances and assurances of "any such lands, and of any outstand-"ing terms or interests therein, and "of deducing, evidencing, and verify-"ing the title to such lands, terms, "or interests, and of making out and "furnishing such abstracts and at-"tested copies as the promoters of the "undertaking may require, and all "other reasonable expenses incident "to the investigation, deduction and "verification of such title."

S. 83: "If the promoters of the "undertaking and the party entitled "to any such costs shall not agree as "to the amount thereof, such costs "shall be taxed by one of the taxing "masters of the Court of Chancery, ". . . upon an order of the same "court, to be obtained upon petition "in a summary way by either of the "parties; and the promoters of the "undertaking shall pay what the said "master shall certify to be due in "respect of such costs to the party "entitled thereto . . . and the expense "of taxing such costs shall be borne "by the promoters of the undertaking, "unless upon such taxation one sixth "part of the amount of such costs "shall be disallowed, in which case "the costs of such taxation shall be "borne by the party whose costs shall "be so taxed, and the amount thereof "shall be ascertained by the said "master, and deducted by him accord-"ingly in his certificate of such "taxation."

"(1) Because this taxation (being the taxation of vendors' costs arising out of a sale to which the Lands Clauses (Consolidation) Act, 1845, applied) is governed by section 83 of that Act, under which the taxing master had an unfettered discretion to certify the amount to be paid by the respondents [the London County Council] to the petitioners [the vendors] in respect of their costs.

"(2) Because the Solicitors' Remuneration (Registered Land) Orders, 1925, 1944 and 1953, do not apply to a taxation as between the vendors and the promoters under section 83 of the Lands Clauses (Consolidation) Act, 1845, but apply only on the taxation of a solicitor's bill as between him and his client.

"(3) Because the Solicitors' Remuneration (Registered Land) Order, 1925, is expressed to apply to the remuneration of solicitors in conveyancing and other non-contentious business under the Land Registration Act, 1925, whereas the business between the petitioners and the respondents arose under the Town and Country Planning Acts, 1944–1947, and the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts, 1845, 1860 and 1869, as well as the Land Registration Act, 1925.

"(4) Because in exercising his said discretion the taxing master ought to allow only such costs as are in all the circumstances fair and reasonable, using as a guide (but not as fettering his discretion) the Schedule II remuneration prescribed by the Solicitors' Remuneration Orders.

"(5) Because, if and so far as the Solicitors' Remuneration Orders are relevant, there is no reason in principle for distinguishing between unregistered land and registered land in regard to the taxation of a vendor's costs arising out of sales to which the Lands Clauses (Consolidation) Act, 1845, applies, and that since the Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1882, expressly excludes the scale in the case of sales of unregistered land a similar exclusion ought to be implied in the Solicitors' Remuneration Orders relating to registered land."

The master delivered on February 7, 1955, the following answers, overruling the objections of the London County Council: "Schedule I, Part I, of the Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1883 (as amended by the Order of 1953), lays down a scale of charges on sales, purchases and mortgages of land other than 'registered land' which varies according to the amount of the consideration involved in the transaction. Rule 11 of the Rules applicable to that scale provides that 'in cases of sale under the Lands Clauses (Consolidation) Act . . . under which the vendor's charges are paid by the purchaser, the scale shall not apply.' It would seem that it must have been in the contemplation of the framers of that rule that, but for the exception contained in the wording of the rule itself, the scale would have applied to such transactions.

"A scale of remuneration is provided under the Solicitors'

1955

West Ferry Road, Poplar, In re. Padwick's Estate, In re.

" Remuneration (Registered Land) Orders, 1925 to 1953, govern" ing, according to the amount of consideration involved, the " charges which solicitors are entitled to make for 'transfers on " ' sale . . .' where the land concerned is 'registered land.'

" There is nothing in the Solicitors' Remuneration (Regis" tered Land) Order, 1925 (as amended by the Order of 1953),
" corresponding to the exception of the Lands Clauses (Consolida" tion) Act and similar cases contained in rule 11. . . . I
" therefore conclude that such cases were not intended to be " excluded from the operation of the scale when the land is " registered land, and it would appear that the appropriate scale
" does apply to the bill of costs referred to me for taxation in " this case. The Registered Land Scale is chargeable in full
" whether a contract of sale is entered into between the parties
" or not, as is shown by paragraph 1 (b) of the 1925 Order."

The London County Council took out the present summons on February 10, 1955, asking the court to review the taxation and allow the objections presented by them.

H. E. Francis for the London County Council.
John Brunyate for the vendors.

Case cited in argument not referred to in the judgment: In re County of Middlesex Light Railways Order, 1903.[2]

Harman J., having stated the facts: The references in the petition of course (and repeated in the summons) to the Solicitors' Remuneration (Registered Land) Orders, 1925 and 1953, are, in my judgment, inappropriate to the Lands Clauses (Consolidation) Acts, 1860 and 1869, which have nothing to do with this matter. It was a petition and order of course under the Act of 1845 and nothing else, and the summons should be amended accordingly.

The first objection raised is an unexceptionable statement, in so far as it insists that the master must tax under section 83. That section directs the taxing of the costs mentioned in section 82, including " all charges and expenses," and those are the widest possible words. He has, therefore, to tax the costs, charges and expenses of the vendors, and if what was presented to the master were those proper costs, charges and expenses, which is a matter for his decision, then the vendors should undoubtedly receive them. They have after all been compelled to sell their land and there is no reason why they should not have their costs. What they did was to hand in the scale fee bill, and the master allowed that as being the proper costs for which the London County Council were liable.

If that be right there is no question that the vendors can recover those costs, and the real question here is whether, as between the solicitors and the vendors, that was the right bill to deliver. If this was the fee properly payable to the vendors' solicitors, I cannot conceive that the master could do other than say: "These are proper costs, charges and expenses under "section 83 and you shall have them." The question is, therefore: Do the Solicitors' Remuneration Orders apply to a taxation as between solicitor and client on a compulsory purchase order relating to registered land?

[2] [1903] W.N. 167.

The second objection taken by the purchasers is that the Solicitors' Remuneration Orders do not apply to a taxation as between vendors and the promoters—the London County Council —under section 83. That is also true, but it misses the point which is whether this bill as delivered was a proper bill as between solicitor and client. The same is true of the third objection. It is clear that the Solicitors' Remuneration Order would apply had the vendors been dissatisfied with the bill delivered to them by their solicitors and had asked for a taxation.

The Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1883, has been amended many times and is now cited as the Solicitors' Remuneration Orders, 1883–1953. By virtue of paragraph 2, the costs would be taxed according to the scale prescribed by Schedule I, but under paragraph 1 this schedule does not apply in the case of registered land. Moreover, by virtue of rule 11 applicable to this schedule the scale is excluded in cases of sales under the Lands Clauses (Consolidation) Act, 1845; it would follow that if this were unregistered land Schedule II would apply, this being business "not hereinbefore provided for," and that schedule gives the taxing master a wide discretion as to the amount which he shall allow, which is such sum as may appear reasonable having regard to all the circumstances of the case.

If, therefore, this were unregistered land these costs would be taxable under Schedule II and not on scale at all.

It is said that there ought to be no difference between registered and unregistered land in this respect, and I think that that is a very reasonable submission. But this is registered land so that Schedule I is excluded by paragraph 1, but that does not have the effect, curiously enough, of bringing in Schedule II where the land is registered.

There have been separate orders for registered land for many years, and the Lord Chancellor had power under section 131 of the Land Registry Act, 1862, to make such orders, and those costs are now governed by the Solicitors' Remuneration (Registered Land) Order, 1925, as amended by the orders of 1944 and 1953. Paragraph 1 of the order provides: "The remuneration "of solicitors in conveyancing and other non-contentious business "under the Land Registration Act, 1925, shall be regulated as "follows. . . ." The word "under" is an imperfect expression, but I think it must be treated as meaning remuneration in conveyancing in connexion with registered land. It is true that the conveyancing is not done under the Land Registration Act, 1925, and the form of words is inept; but I feel that is what it must mean, because the Solicitors' Remuneration Order correctly phrases it—that Schedule I shall not apply to transactions respecting real property of which the title has been registered under the Land Registration Acts.

1955

West Ferry Road, Poplar, In re. Padwick's Estate, In re.

Harman J.

Paragraph 1 (D) of the Order of 1925, as amended by the two orders of 1944 and 1953 provides that for every completed transfer on the sale of registered land, "(i) Where the land is registered with absolute or good leasehold title"—it is absolute title here—"the remuneration shall be that prescribed in the "Schedule hereto."

The schedule provides a sliding scale of remuneration which is the one followed by the solicitors in the present case. There have been certain percentage additions to that scale with which I am not concerned. I am of opinion that the solicitors were entitled to charge their clients on that scale. It is odd that there is no rule in this order excepting compulsory purchases as there is for non-registered land; and I do not see why there should be this difference, but there it is, and the result is that this scale applies to compulsory purchases as well as to others. That being so, the taxing master was right. I have not given quite the reasons which he gave because a view has prevailed that he was taxing under the Solicitors' Remuneration Order, which he was not. Nevertheless, his adjudication must be measured by the words "costs," "charges and expenses" under the statute of 1845. No order, therefore, is needed from me except to dismiss the summons, which I do.

Summons dismissed.

Solicitors: J. G. Barr; Coward, Chance & Co.

I. G. R. M.

[Queen's Bench Division.]

[Caernarvon Winter Assizes.]

1955
Jan. 24, 25, 26.

Barry J.

* JONES v. RICHARDS and Others.

Agriculture—Threshing machine — Fencing — Statutory duty to fence "during the working thereof"—Machine to be kept "sufficiently "and securely fenced so far as is reasonably practicable and con- "sistent with the due and efficient working thereof"—Liability of owner of machine and employer of injured workman — Liability of farmer for whose "service or benefit" machine used—Whether farmer "permitted" use—Threshing Machines Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 12), s. 1.

By the Threshing Machines Act, 1878, s. 1, "The drum and "feeding mouth of every threshing machine . . . shall at all times "during the working thereof be kept sufficiently and securely

[Reported by H. Eifion Roberts, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

" fenced so far as is reasonably practicable and consistent with the " due and efficient working thereof. If any person permits any " threshing machine belonging to him or used for his service or " benefit to be worked without its being fenced as aforesaid " he shall be guilty of a criminal offence.

The first and second defendants were the owners of a threshing machine and a baling machine which they hired out to the third defendant for the purpose of threshing on his farm. The plaintiff had been engaged by the first and second defendants (who operated the threshing machine themselves) to feed the corn into the machine. This work necessitated his standing in a feeding box on the top of the machine and spreading the crop over an adjustable feeding board from which it dropped into the drum through an aperture called the feeding mouth which was six inches wide and about two and a half feet long. The feeding mouth was guarded by a protective door which could be opened or closed by operating a spring and cam. It was essential that the door should be open while the machine was being fed. In the closed postion it covered the aperture substantially although the amount of covering varied with the adjustment of the feeding board.

Owing to a breakdown of the baling machine the threshing machine was slowed down (but the drums continued to revolve) and the plaintiff was told to stop feeding the drum. Whilst the baling machine was being put right the plaintiff stepped out of the feeding box but failed to close the protective door although he knew that it was his duty so to do. He remained on the threshing platform. On his way back to the feeding box he took an incautious step or stepped slightly out of his path with the result that his right leg entered the drum through the feeding mouth and he sustained severe injuries.

The plaintiff claimed damages against all three defendants for breach of the statutory duty under the Threshing Machines Act, 1878, s. 1, and against the first and second defendants for negligence at common law:—

Held, (1) that since it was being supplied with motive power at the time of the accident and the drums were still revolving the threshing machine was " working " within section 1 of the Act notwithstanding that it was not then being fed and was not actually threshing corn;

(2) that the words " kept sufficiently and securely fenced " in section 1 of the Act necessitated (a) the provision of sufficient and secure fencing, and (b) the maintenance of that fencing in a sufficient and secure state whilst the machine was " working "; that there was no fencing at the time of the accident in that the feeding mouth was not then fenced by the protective door; that since the fence had to be placed in position by a man engaged on other work and the operation of the machine was such that the fence had to be out of position for a very long period of the day, it was not a sufficient and secure fence; and that accordingly the first and second defendants were in breach of their duty under section 1 of the Act and were also guilty of negligence at common law;

(3) that the threshing machine was being used for the service or benefit of the third defendant whose conduct had to be judged as though he had been aware of the provisions of the Act; that permission involved an element of knowledge or connivance or carelessness; and that, since the means of obtaining the requisite knowledge as to the fencing of the machine were available to the third defendant but he had not availed himself of those means, he

1955

Jones
v.
Richards.

was in breach of duty under section 1 of the Act; but that he should receive complete indemnity from the first and second defendants under the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, s. 6;

(4) that the plaintiff, in failing to use the guard which he knew ought to have been used, was guilty of contributory negligence and should be deemed responsible for one-third of the total damage which he suffered.

Action.

The infant plaintiff, John Gwilym Jones, suing through his father, sought to recover damages against the three defendants in respect of personal injuries which he suffered as a result of an accident with a threshing machine.

The facts appear from the judgment.

W. L. Mars-Jones and R. G. Waterhouse for the plaintiff.

Geraint Rees for the first and second defendants.

Elwyn Jones Q.C. and E. B. B. Richards for the third defendant.

The following cases were cited in argument: James & Son Ld. v. Smee; Green v. Burnett [1]; Lovelace v. Director of Public Prosecutions [2]; McLeod (or Houston) v. Buchanan [3]; Monk v. Warbey. [4]

Barry J. In many respects this is an anxious and difficult case. The plaintiff, Mr. John Gwilym Jones, is an infant, now 20 years of age, and he brings this action against the three defendants, Mr. William Richards, Mr. Owen Thomas Morris and Mr. John Owen, to recover damages for very serious injuries which he sustained as a result of an accident which took place on February 25, 1953. At that date the plaintiff was 18 years old, and since leaving school at the age of 15 he had worked on his father's farm in Merionethshire. He was not earning wages in the ordinary sense. He lived at home; his father maintained him, provided money for his clothes and other expenses, and also provided him with spending money as and when required. It is common ground that at the date of the accident the agricultural wage appropriate to a man of his age would have been £6 a week. When he was 16 years old, that is to say, some two years before his accident, he had worked for a period of about six weeks with the Merionethshire War Agricultural Committee (or whatever was its proper title at that date), and during that period he did spend a number of days, some 15 to 20 in all, working on a threshing machine and feeding corn and other grain crops into the machine.

The first and second defendants, Mr. Richards and Mr. Morris, are the joint owners of a threshing machine and a baling machine,

[1] [1955] 1 Q.B. 78; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 631; [1954] 3 All E.R. 273.

[2] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1468; [1954] 3 All E.R. 481.

[3] [1940] 2 All E.R. 179.

[4] [1935] 1 K.B. 75; 51 T.L.R. 194.

together with two tractors, which, no doubt, draw those machines to their places of work and subsequently provide them with motive power. Mr. Morris is a farmer on his own account, but Mr. Richards' principal means of livelihood, is, I understand, the hiring out of these machines to farmers in the vicinity. He has a large number of farmers who are clients of his, and of Mr. Morris, and for several years before this accident Mr. Richards and Mr. Morris hired these machines to 40 or more farmers in their neighbourhood, in many cases twice each year. The first and second defendants were, of course, in sole control of these machines. They were responsible for their operation and adjustment, but labour for carrying the sheaves of corn and other crops to the machines and for carrying away the grain and straw after the threshing and baling had been completed was normally provided by the farmer who hired the machines on any particular date. The first and second defendants normally operated the machines themselves, and in particular fed the crops into the threshing machine, but owing to his other duties as a farmer on his own account it was not always possible for Mr. Morris to accompany the machines when they were hired out to farmers, and whenever he was unable to accompany the machines he hired a man to assist the first defendant, Mr. Richards, to carry out the work which he, Mr. Morris, otherwise would have done.

Before the accident the plaintiff had been engaged by Mr. Morris on some four or five occasions when he accompanied Mr. Richards and assisted in the operation of the machines and, in particular, with the feeding of the threshing machine, and, as he says, he was paid at the rate of 15s. per day. On February 25, 1953, the plaintiff was engaged to carry out this work for the two defendants at a farm belonging to the third defendant, Mr. John Owen. On that date Mr. John Owen had arranged to hire the threshing machine and baler belonging to the first two defendants, and when the plaintiff arrived at Mr. Owen's farm at about 8.15 in the morning the threshing machine and the baler were in position.

The corn which Mr. Owen required to be threshed on that day was stacked in a barn on his farm. For convenience the threshing machine had been pulled into the barn and had been placed in position. The barn had two doors facing each other which provided the only light for the interior of the barn with the exception of narrow ventilating slits. The threshing machine was driven by a tractor which was placed outside the large door, power being transmitted from the tractor to the threshing machine by means of pulleys and a belt. After threshing the grain emerges from the rear of the machine, and it is there collected into sacks and carried away by the men supplied by Mr. Owen to assist in the threshing operations. The baler was placed just outside the small door and opposite the front end of the threshing machine from which the straw ultimately emerges. The baler was driven by another tractor

1955

Jones
v.
Richards.

Barry J.

and the straw, after emerging from the front of the threshing machine, was carried to the baler and baled by that machine.

After the plaintiff's arrival on the morning of February 25, Mr. Richards, the first defendant, set the belts upon their appropriate pulleys and started the machines. Threshing proceeded throughout the whole of the morning, and during that time the plaintiff and Mr. Richards worked in alternate shifts in feeding the crop into the threshing machine. While feeding the machine the plaintiff, or Mr. Richards when he was carrying out this part of the work, stood in what was known as a feeding box or feeding pit at the top of the threshing machine, on what has been described as the threshing floor. This pit is some 12 inches deep and it is situated at the rear of the platform on top of the threshing machine. When working in this pit the plaintiff, or Mr. Richards, was assisted by two other men. One man moved sheaves of corn from the rick in the barn to the threshing platform on top of the threshing machine, and another man handed these sheaves to the plaintiff, having first cut their twine. The plaintiff's duty was to feed these sheaves into the machine and he did so by spreading the straw as evenly as possible over what is described as a feeding board, from which the corn dropped into the drum of the machine. It dropped in fact through a comparatively narrow aperture, about 6 inches wide, which was situated about the same distance above the threshing drum, or, more accurately, above the eight beaters which are attached to that drum. During threshing operations the drum and beaters revolve, and ultimately the grain is separated and emerges from one end of the machine, while the straw emerges from the other.

This feeding board is a sloping board which slopes down towards the mouth of the drum and is covered with metal. Beyond this feeding board and the aperture above the drum, which is 6 inches wide, and further towards the front of the machine, there is a protective door, or a guard. This door is controlled by a spring and cam which hold it either in the open or the closed position. When it is closed it is pulled down to floor level and the door, in this position, substantially covers the feeding mouth. This statement does, however, require certain qualification, because in fact the feeding board is adjustable and can be moved over a range of about 3 inches forward towards the feeding mouth or backwards away from it. When this feeding board is adjusted to the fully forward position, that is to say, when it has its forward end as near as possible to the feeding mouth, there is only a gap or aperture of $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches between the end of the protective door or guard and the front of the feeding board. In its backward position, that is to say, when it is adjusted to a point furthest from the feeding mouth, that aperture or gap is increased to $3\frac{3}{4}$ inches.

Threshing operations proceeded without any untoward incident throughout the whole morning. The work of feeding the straw into the feeding mouth, though not particularly skilled, is, I believe, somewhat arduous. As a result, the plaintiff and Mr. Richards changed shifts fairly frequently, the change being made at approximately half-hourly or three-quarter-hourly intervals. Work stopped for dinner at about mid-day. After dinner the machinery was restarted and there is some conflict of evidence about the order in which the plaintiff and Mr. Richards took up their positions in the feeding box and proceeded to feed the machine, but both agree that at the very beginning of the work after the mid-day break the plaintiff began feeding. His case is, that he continued to feed the machine until his accident occurred a little later in the afternoon. On the other hand, Mr. Richards says that after he had seen that everything was in order and the machines were properly restarted, he took over from the plaintiff in the feeding box and completed a shift himself before changing again with the plaintiff. Although this is a matter of very little moment I am bound to say that I prefer Mr. Richards' recollection of that incident to that of the plaintiff. I therefore hold that Mr. Richards did take over from the plaintiff that work for a shift before this accident happened, and that the plaintiff then changed places with Mr. Richards and started to feed the machine from the feeding box. Soon after the plaintiff had restarted to feed the machine there was some trouble with the baler, which became choked. The plaintiff was told by someone to stop feeding the machine with corn. This, of course, was a necessary precaution, because, so long as the baler was out of working order, those responsible—and particularly Mr. Richards—did not want large quantities of straw to accumulate at the front of the machine. When he was told to stop feeding corn the plaintiff did so. It was not anticipated that this trouble with the baler would take long to put right, and, in consequence, the mechanism of the threshing machine was not stopped, but was merely slowed down. It is possible to take the drum of the threshing machine out of gear altogether, but that was not done. Someone slowed down the tractor and that resulted in the drums of the threshing machine continuing to revolve but at a slower speed than during normal work. After he had stopped feeding, the plaintiff decided to go to the front of the machine—still, of course, on the threshing platform—in order to see when the baler was put right.

His evidence is that before he left the feeding box and stepped up from it on to the threshing floor, he closed down the door or guard and so covered the feeding mouth, or at least substantially covered it, leaving only a gap of at least $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches, or, at the most, $3\frac{3}{4}$ inches, according to the adjusment of the feeding board at that particular time. The plaintiff told me that it was his habit, whenever he left the feeding box to do some other work or on account of any breakdown in the machinery, to close the guard, and he fully understood that it was his duty to do so. [His Lordship referred to the evidence, and continued:] Although it is a matter of very little moment in the present case, I think that the usual practice for a man who left the box on a change of shift was to close the guard, and for that guard to be reopened by the man who took over from him when he in turn entered the pit and was about to start feeding the machine. One thing, of course, is quite certain. While the machine was being fed it was essential for the door or guard to be in the open position, otherwise the corn could not slip down the feeding board and into the drum mouth.

1955

Jones v. Richards.

Barry J.

Having, as he says, closed the guard, the plaintiff left the feeding box and proceeded to the front of the machine. He stood at a point somewhere near to the left-hand bottom corner of the threshing floor. After an interval of a few minutes, while the men had been working on the baler, the plaintiff received a signal from someone to the effect that the baler was now all right and that the threshing could recommence. His case is, that he then turned round to go back to the feeding pit, and he says that as he turned he slipped and found his right leg in the drum, it having slipped down through the feeding mouth. He says that as he turned to regain the feeding pit he heard the speed of the drum increasing. He says he has no idea of what caused him to slip, but he says, and indeed there is little dispute about this, that there is always a certain amount of corn, chaff and straw on the top of the threshing machine and that this to some extent made it slippery. He also says that when the speed of the drum increased, immediately before this accident, there was an increase in the quantity of dust which made it more difficult for him to see.

The results of this accident were unfortunately disastrous. The plaintiff's right leg went right down into the drum and was grossly injured. It was found necessary for the lower part of the limb to be amputated, and ultimately an amputation took place below the right knee. The plaintiff is left with a sufficient—indeed, some of the doctors consider a more than sufficient—stump on which an artificial ankle and foot can be fitted. An artificial limb has in fact been fitted and the plaintiff now has recovered to as great an extent as he ever can recover having regard to the permanent loss of the lower part of his right leg. [His Lordship referred to the evidence, and continued:]

There are a number of issues of fact which I have to determine before considering the law applicable to this case. The first and most important of these issues is whether or not the plaintiff closed the guard before he left the box to go to the front of the machine to watch the progress of the work upon the baler. After giving the matter very anxious care and thought I have come to the conclusion that it is impossible for me to accept the plaintiff's evidence that he did in fact close that guard. I will not repeat Mr. Richards' evidence in detail. It is sufficient for me to say that I accept it. Having accepted it, it immediately becomes apparent that during working hours the feeding board was always adjusted to its forward position. Even if there had been some carelessness with regard to the adjustment of the board I am satisfied that anyone operating the machine would have noticed that the board was back long before the afternoon of this particular day. In its backward position the board protruded into the feeding box. It would certainly inconvenience the man engaged in feeding the machine and the pressure of the man's legs against the board, and to some extent, the force of gravity would tend to force the board towards its fully forward position. I feel bound to take the view that during working hours and in particular on the afternoon of February 25, 1953, the board was in that forward position. Having taken that view it inevitably follows that the plaintiff cannot have properly closed the guard.

Whatever criticism there can be made about the minimum gap of 1½ inches between the end of the guard and the forward end of the feeding board no one has suggested that a man's foot or any part of his leg could make its way through a gap of that kind. It was suggested by the plaintiff that although he closed the door before he left the box the door may not have closed properly owing to some obstruction which kept it in a partially open position. I am not entitled to speculate in matters of this kind and there is not one shred of evidence which indicates that there was any obstruction which would have prevented the door from fully closing. The one person who would have seen such an obstruction was the plaintiff himself. It is inconceivable that the door could have been obstructed by a sheaf of corn unless that sheaf had been seen by the plaintiff. No sheaf was there when the man came up to rescue the plaintiff after this most unfortunate accident and I cannot guess that a sheaf might have been there. There is nothing in the whole of the evidence to indicate that it was. If there had been any other object obstructing the closing of the door one would have thought that some of these men would have found it and that I should have heard of its existence. In these circumstances I feel bound to conclude that the plaintiff inadvertently failed to close the guard before he left the box on this particular afternoon.

I am also bound to say that I am not satisfied that the plaintiff ever slipped at all. On balance of probability I think that what happened here is that the plaintiff took an incautious step (that is one of the easiest things it is possible to do) on his attempted return to the box and, thinking that he had reached the box, or stepping slightly out of the path by which he had chosen to return to the box, his foot was placed by him either right into the mouth leading to the drum, or, perhaps, on the sloping board from whence it slid into the mouth and became caught by the beaters in the drum below.

On these facts I have to consider the legal position of the three defendants. As against the first two defendants the plaintiff principally relies upon the provisions of the Threshing Machines Act, 1878. He also alleges that the first and second defendants, as his employers on the date of the accident, were negligent in that they failed to provide him with proper machinery and a safe place of work. As against the third defendant, Mr. Owen, the plaintiff's case is based solely upon the provisions of the Act of Parliament to which I have referred, an Act which, no doubt, was wholly unknown to either Mr. Richards or Mr. Morris, and still more so to Mr. Owen on the date when this accident happened. The Act is, however, part of the law of this country and I am bound to administer it and to give it, if I can, its correct interpretation.

1955

Jones v. Richards.

Barry J.

The Act is described as, "An Act for the prevention of "accidents by threshing machines." The preamble reads:— "Whereas by certain Acts of Parliament provision is made for "the fencing of dangerous machinery in factories and mines, and "it is expedient that similar provision should be made with "respect to threshing machines": By section 1: "The drum "and feeding mouth of every threshing machine as defined by "this Act shall at all times during the working thereof be kept "sufficiently and securely fenced so far as is reasonably practic- "able and consistent with the due and efficient working thereof. "If any person permits any threshing machine belonging to him "or used for his service or benefit to be worked without its being "fenced as aforesaid:

"Or, if any foreman, engineer, or other person in charge of "any threshing machine, works it or permits it to be worked "without its being fenced as aforesaid," . . . then such persons shall be guilty of a criminal offence and shall be liable to prosecution.

The plaintiff's case is that contrary to the provisions of that Act the feeding mouth of the threshing machine in question was not kept sufficiently and securely fenced in accordance with the terms of the Act, and that the persons responsible for the failure to comply with those provisions are the first two defendants who were the persons to whom the machine belonged and the third defendant in whose service or for whose benefit the machine was being worked.

The first and fundamental question is whether this machine was sufficiently and securely fenced. Before considering that question it is also necessary to consider perhaps an even more fundamental one, namely, was the machine working at the time when the accident happened? It is contended on behalf of the defendants that because the machine was not actually threshing corn at the moment when the accident happened it was, therefore, not working, and that the provisions of the section cease to have any application. It is also suggested by counsel for the first and second defendants that the provisions with regard to fencing were only designed to protect men who were actually working in the threshing process, and when they ceased to work on that process the protection was no longer available for them.

I think that it is much too narrow a view to hold that this machine was not working at the time of the accident merely because there had been what is often described as a technical hitch in the operation of another machine and corn was not actually being fed into the threshing machine at the very moment when the plaintiff sustained his injury. The machine was working, as I find, because it was being turned by a tractor which was supplying its motive power; the engine had never been stopped, the drum had never ceased to revolve, and in a reasonable sense of the term I am quite satisfied that this machine was working even though for a very short period it was not in fact threshing corn.

Having decided, as I do, without any hesitation, that the machine was working, I must then turn to the major and more difficult question whether or not it was kept sufficiently and securely fenced, bearing in mind the qualifications provided in the Act, namely, that the fencing should only be sufficient and secure in so far as is "reasonably practicable and consistent with the due and efficient working thereof." I am quite satisfied that this Act is intended to protect all persons who may be in the vicinity of all these dangerous parts of a threshing machine, namely, the drum and the feeding mouth. I am satisfied that the plaintiff can rely upon the protection of the Act as can any other workman so long as the machine is working, whether they be at their normal place of work or moving about the threshing floor for any lawful purpose connected with their work or for the purpose of leaving or returning to their place of employment.

As regards the words, "kept sufficiently and securely fenced," I think one is bound to accept the view submitted to me by counsel for the plaintiff that those words necessitate (a) the provision of sufficient and secure fencing, and (b) the maintenance of that fencing in a sufficient and secure state throughout the whole period during which the machine is in fact working. I regret to say that my intelligence cannot follow the view put to me with great force on behalf of the first two defendants that the word "sufficiently" in some way cuts down the meaning of the word "securely," and that a machine can be sufficiently and securely fenced without being securely fenced. I think this Act means that secure fencing must be provided and maintained in position at all times throughout the working periods of the machine, subject to the qualification that the fencing need only be as secure as is reasonably practicable and consistent with the due and efficient working thereof.

On the findings which I have made it is at once apparent beyond any possibility of argument that when this accident occurred the feeding mouth of this machine was not fenced at all. It is quite impossible to say that at that time it was sufficiently and securely fenced, because in fact the fence was not then in position and the feeding mouth was open and wholly unguarded; except perhaps to the extent that the open door might have provided some protection for someone walking straight towards the mouth from the front portion of the threshing floor. Such a person, if he stumbled against the open door, might have closed it and so to some extent at least obviated danger to himself.

1955

Jones
v.
Richards.

Barry J.

Over each side there was no sort of guard protecting the feeding mouth and the entrance to this highly dangerous drum. It is said, of course, that the absence of fencing at the crucial moment when this accident occurred was due not to any breach of statutory duty on the part of any of the defendants but to the action of the plaintiff himself in failing to place in position the guard which had been provided for his use. There is no evidence here of delegation in the sense in which the courts now construe that word. Even if that were the case it would not necessarily mean that the defendants were not guilty of a breach of this statute. If, on the other hand, the true position were that the plaintiff was entirely responsible owing to his own conduct for this unfortunate accident then that might place very great difficulties in his path when seeking to recover damages from the defendants.

As I find the facts, however, no sufficient and secure fencing was ever provided for the feeding mouth and I have also come to the view that there is no practical difficulty in providing reasonably secure fencing and that the provision of such fencing would have no effect upon the due and efficient working of the machine. It was obviously impracticable, as I have already indicated, to keep the guard provided, namely, the opening and shutting gate, in the downward position protecting the feeding mouth when threshing operations were in progress. When the gate was in the open position the man actually engaged in feeding the machine, was, I am satisfied, in a position of at least relative safety, and that the criticisms of the gate or guard—in so far as they are concerned with the position of a man in the feeding box—have not been sustained to my satisfaction.

The position, however, is quite different with regard to other people who might quite properly be on the threshing floor. The man responsible for cutting the twine which held the sheaves together was moving, it is true, perhaps only a few inches, but he had to reach for a sheaf, cut the twine and hand it to the plaintiff. In his normal place of work he would therefore be several feet from the feeding mouth; but some incident in connexion with the work might always make it necessary for him to move perhaps a yard or two in one direction or another upon the roof of the threshing machine, and if he did so and inadvertently approached the ends of the feeding mouth while the machine was in operation and being fed there was nothing to prevent his feet from being trapped. Even on the very best view of the matter there were, during feeding operations, two ends of this highly dangerous area entirely exposed and unguarded; not guarded with sufficient and secure fencing. The feeding mouth has two sides and two ends and whatever protection was provided for the two sides, the two ends—in which a foot or any other limb could enter that danger area with equal ease—were without protection of any kind. More than that, I am satisfied that a fence which for its efficacy entirely depends upon the memory and concentration of a single workman is not in truth a sufficient and secure fence. Whether that be so on the true construction of the statute is perhaps more open to doubt than upon a consideration of this matter at common law.

However, I have come to the conclusion that the owners of a threshing machine do not comply with the requirements of this Act merely by providing a fence which has to be placed in position by a man engaged on other work, when, as part of the necessary operation of the machine, the fence is out of position and wholly inoperative during a very long period of each day. I do not think that I am setting an unduly high standard in reaching this conclusion. One must always guard against making industry impossible and against slowing down production by setting unduly high standards or by placing wholly unreasonable requirements on the makers and owners of machinery of this kind. However, when the evidence of the plaintiff's expert is considered it seems to me that in the year 1955 it is not unreasonable to hold that in order to comply with the requirements of this Act there should at the very least have been two substantial end boards or side boards protecting the two open ends of the feeding mouth. It seems to me that anyone who directed his attention to the guarding of this mouth would at once see that it was necessary to protect the ends, and to protect them against just the sort of happening which resulted in this disaster to the plaintiff: a false, inadvertent step, leading to his foot going into the beater and being almost inevitably destroyed. I am quite satisfied that if 12-inch boards had been fitted to guard the two ends of this feeding mouth this accident would never have happened. I am very much inclined to think that if boards of considerably less height had been fitted the accident would still have beeen prevented. If the plaintiff had had to lift his foot to any appreciable extent in order to get it into this feeding mouth I do not think he ever would have got it in. He did get it in, because by one ordinary step—not lifting his foot more than was necessary to carry it forward—he was able, perhaps thinking that he was stepping into his feeding box, to step into this very dangerous trap. In those circumstances I am bound to find that the requirements of this Act have not been complied with.

As regards the first two defendants I think it is clear that they are the persons responsible for keeping the fencing of this machine sufficient and secure and on that finding of a breach of statutory obligation there can be no doubt that they must be liable in damages to the plaintiff. Without pursuing the matter further, I think I should say that I would, if necessary, hold that the first two defendants are also in breach of their common law duty to the plaintiff, and that irrespective of the provisions of this statute they would have been liable to him in damages.

The position of the third defendant has caused me very much greater doubt. I think it is a very serious, and I am bound to say a very distasteful, task to construe this Act in such a manner as to make Mr. John Owen liable in any way for this unfortunate accident. I am satisfied that he knew nothing about the provisions of this Act, and, being ignorant of it, it is impossible to see that any act or omission on his part was in any way reprehensible. He had no reason to think that Mr. Richards and Mr. Morris were anything other than perfectly competent contractors, as indeed I think they were except for their unfortunate omission to comply with the requirements of the Act in this one respect.

1955

Jones v. Richards.

Barry J.

Mr. Owen had engaged them and hired their machines for many years and there had never been a mishap. I do not think that Mr. Owen, apart from the provisions of this Act, had any reason to do anything other or more than he did. However, my duty is to construe the Act, and with the greatest reluctance I feel compelled to agree with counsel for the plaintiff that one is bound to look at the penal provision of this Act in order to ascertain upon whom the obligation to comply with the requirements of the Act is imposed. It is clearly imposed upon the persons owning the machine, and there can be no doubt that in every true sense of the word Mr. Richards and Mr. Morris did permit this machine to be used unguarded or insufficiently guarded.

However, the Act also provides that not only shall the owners of the machine be liable if they permit the machine to be used when improperly fenced, but also any person for whose services or benefit the machine is worked. There can be no doubt that this machine was being worked at the time when this accident happened for the service or benefit of Mr. Owen. The only question is, did he permit the machine to be used without its being fenced in accordance with the provisions of the Act? I have very carefully considered the authorities on this question. Counsel for the plaintiff concedes that permission does involve an element of knowledge or connivance or carelessness. I feel bound, very reluctantly, to take the view that Mr. Owen's conduct must be judged as though he had been aware of the provisions of the Threshing Machines Act, 1878. That leads to a somewhat curious result, but none the less he must be assumed to know the law of this country. Assuming he did know the law, I am bound to find that he permitted this machine to be used in an unfenced condition or insufficiently fenced to comply with the requirements of the Act. In circumstances of this kind, when the whole of the means of knowledge were available to Mr. Owen, when, knowing that he was under a duty in the matter—as I am bound to assume he did—it was easy for him to see how the machine was guarded and to see whether it was properly guarded, I do not think that I can say he did not permit the machine to be used merely because of an actual lack of knowledge of a particular defect. If I did it would be placing a premium upon carelessness. Had Mr. Owen realized that he was under a duty in connexion with this machine I am quite satisfied that he could very easily have acquired the requisite knowledge regarding its guarding or fencing arrangements and, that knowledge being available to him, it seems to me that it avails him not to say: "I did not take advantage of the opportunity which "was open to me."

I do not propose to analyze the cases cited, but bearing in mind the purport of the various decisions which have been brought to my notice I feel I am to hold here that Mr. Owen did permit this machine to be used contrary to the provisions of the Threshing Machines Act. I am sorry that it should be so, and I have no doubt that this decision may well come as a very considerable shock to many members of the farming community, not only in this part of the British Isles but in other parts as well.

This does not conclude the matter. Counsel for the defendants have pressed upon me that on any view of this case the plaintiff was to a very substantial extent the author of his own misfortunes. Having held that the feeding board was in the forward position I am bound to reach the conclusion that if the plaintiff had closed the guard no accident could have happened. With equal confidence I have reached the conclusion that if, as they should have done, the first two defendants had provided an adequate side board at each end of the feeding mouth the accident would not have occurred despite the fact that the plaintiff failed to close the guard before he left the feeding box. I entirely absolve the plaintiff from any blame as regards the false step he took which resulted in his accident. I cannot, however, take a similarly charitable view with regard to his failure to utilize the guard which was there, and which, if used, would have prevented this accident. I think it would be wrong to say that a workman who fails to use a guard which he knows ought to be used, and, as a result suffers a horrible injury of this kind, is in no sense responsible for the disaster which befalls him. I think he is responsible to a very substantial degree. In the whole of the circumstances of this case I do not think it would be right to say that the plaintiff and the defendants are equally responsible for such damage as may be awarded to the plaintiff. I think that the proper view is that the loss should be borne two-thirds by the defendants and one-third by the plaintiff.

It thus remains for me to consider the proper damages which should be awarded in a case of this kind. The medical evidence, although not agreed, is not now in any real dispute. There is very little I need say about it. This unfortunate young man is left with the lower portion of his right leg amputated; nothing anyone can do or say will return his leg to its full use. I am sure that everything which can be done has been done to provide him with a satisfactory artificial limb, but having regard to his pre-accident occupation as a worker on a farm this is a very grievous handicap. It is true that an amputation below the knee is very much less serious than one above it, provided there is a sufficient stump below the amputation. On the other hand, an injury of this kind is particularly crippling and incapacitating to one who hoped to make his living on the land, and particularly so as the plaintiff's father's farm is situated in a hilly district. I am quite satisfied that the plaintiff is incapacitated in the way he describes, and in the way in which his doctor also describes, for very many forms of farm work. There is, of course, a great deal he can do, but he cannot do very many, if not all, of the heavier portions of the work.

1955

Jones v. Richards.

Barry J.

This is a difficult case in which to assess proper damages for this reason: The plaintiff was only earning a relatively small wage when this accident happened, but it is true, as has been put to him, that he is an intelligent young man, and that no doubt with suitable training he will be able to fit himself for many other forms of occupation in which his damaged leg will cause him little if any incapacity. Whether he can obtain these alternative occupations near his home is a matter open to very much graver doubt. To a very large extent I think he may be able to minimize and perhaps wholly reduce and eliminate any lack of earning power resulting from this accident, but he can only do so at the expense of his life ambition to become a farmer and at the expense of the future which was so bright for him with the expectation of succeeding to his father's farm and running it thereafter.

If he does succeed to his father's farm it is clear that he will not be able to do all the work himself, and will have to engage paid labour to do jobs which otherwise he could have done; but whatever view one takes of this case I think that the plaintiff, despite the fact that this is a less serious injury than an amputation above the knee, is entitled to very substantial damages. I think that he would have been entitled, had he not been partially to blame, to the sum of £4,000 in addition to the agreed special damages of £382, but, unfortunately, that total sum will have to be scaled down in the manner which I have indicated [i.e., by one-third to £2,921 6s. 8d.].

[His Lordship heard argument on the apportionment of the damage between the defendants under the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, s. 6 (1) (c) and (2), and said:] The plaintiff here is an employee of the first two defendants. It is a most artificial conception which arises, purely from the provisions of this Act, that Mr. Owen should be owing any responsibility to him at all. Whatever might have been the position if one of these other men working there had been injured, I am quite satisfied that the proper order in this case is that Mr. Owen should receive complete indemnity from the first two defendants.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors: Gwyndaf Williams & Roberts, Pwllheli; Breese Jones & Casson, Portmadoc; Porter & Co., Conway.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

In re ALDHOUS. NOBLE v. TREASURY SOLICITOR.

1955 March 24.

Danckwerts J.

[1954 A. 3274.]

Executor and Administrator—Administrator—Grant de bonis non—Bona vacantia—Partial intestacy—No claim by next-of-kin—Balance of estate transferred by executor to Treasury Solicitor—Subsequent grant of administration de bonis non to niece of testator—Claim by administratrix to balance of estate—Administratrix not able to give good discharge—Trustee Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 27.

Administration—Statutory advertisement regarding claims against estate—Form desirable—Trustee Act, 1925 (15 Geo. 5, c. 19), s. 27.

An executor, under the provisions of section 27 of the Trustee Act, 1925,[1] issued an advertisement in the usual form for "claimants against the estate" of the testatrix. Ultimately, having received no claims from any person claiming to be entitled as next-of-kin in respect of part of the estate, as to which the testatrix had died intestate, he paid the balance to the Treasury Solicitor.

Subsequently, after the death of the executor, a niece of the testatrix, having satisfied the Treasury Solicitor as to her relationship with the testatrix, obtained a grant of administration de bonis non to the estate by means of an affidavit that there were unadministered assets. The Treasury Solicitor was willing to satisfy her claim, but not without the protection of the court:—

Held, (1) that the form of advertisement used was effective to [1] Trustee Act, 1925, s. 27: "(1) With a view to the conveyance to or distribution among the persons entitled to any real or personal property, the trustees of a settlement or of a disposition on trust for sale or personal representatives, may give notice by advertisement in the Gazette, and [in a newspaper circulating in the district in which the land is situated] and such other like notices, including notices elsewhere than in England and Wales, as would, in any special case, have been directed by a court of competent jurisdiction in an action for administration of their intention to make such conveyance or distribution as aforesaid, and requiring any person interested to send to the trustees or personal representatives within the time, not being less than two months, fixed in the notice or, where more than one notice is given, in the last of the notices, particulars of his claim in respect of the property or any part thereof to which the notice relates.

"(2) At the expiration of the time fixed by the notice the trustees or personal representatives may convey or distribute the property or any part thereof to which the notice relates, to or among the persons entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims, whether formal or not, of which the trustees or personal representatives then had notice and shall not, as respects the property so conveyed or distributed, be liable to any person of whose claim the trustees or personal representatives have not had notice at the time of conveyance or distribution; but nothing in this section—(a) prejudices the right of any person to follow the property, or any property representing the same, into the hands of any person, other than a purchaser, who may have received it; or (b) frees the trustees or personal representatives from any obligation to make searches or obtain official certificates of search similar to those which an intending purchaser would be advised to make or obtain."

1955

Aldhous, In re. Noble v. Treasury Solicitor.

protect the executor against the claims not only of creditors, but of beneficiaries.

Newton v. Sherry (1876) 1 C.P.D. 246 followed.

(2) That, consequently, on the payment of the balance of the assets by the executor to the Treasury Solicitor, (i) the estate was fully administered according to law, and there remained no assets to which the grant of administration de bonis non could attach, so that (ii) the plaintiff could not give a good discharge to the Treasury Solicitor.

Harvell v. Foster [1954] 2 Q.B. 367; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 351; [1954] 2 All E.R. 736 distinguished.

An order was made, by consent, which, after reciting that the Treasury Solicitor while not admitting liability was willing to account to whoever should be shown to be the lawful next-of-kin, directed an inquiry to that end.

Per curiam: The form of advertisement used was unsuitable in form, as it would appear to persons without legal training to refer to the claims of creditors only. The form ought to be recast so as to follow more accurately the wording of section 27 (1) of the Trustee Act, 1925, and to be expressed in such a way as to indicate to normal people that it referred to the claims of beneficiaries as well as to those of creditors.

Adjourned summons.

By her will dated January 29, 1948, Charlotte Agnes Aldhous appointed Patrick Aloysius Coyne to be the executor of her will and gave to him and his wife £100 free of legacy duty. She made no other disposition and, consequently, died intestate as to the rest of her estate, which amounted to approximately £1,400. She died on February 3, 1948, and probate was on April 13, 1948, granted to the executor. The usual advertisements under section 27 of the Trustee Act, 1925, were made in the following form:—

"Charlotte Agnes Aldhous, deceased. Pursuant to the "Trustee Act, 1925. Notice is hereby given that all persons "having any claims against the estate of the above named, late "of 21 Richmond Gardens, Shepherd's Bush, in the County of "London, who died on the 3rd day of February, 1948, are "required to send particulars thereof to the undersigned solicitors "to the executor on or before the 30th day of September, 1948, "after which date the executor will distribute the estate having "regard only to the claims then notified."

The executor, having received no claims from any person claiming to be entitled to the estate of the testatrix as next-of-kin and, under the mistake of fact that no such person existed, paid to the Treasury Solicitor, as bona vacantia, on September 10, 1949, the whole of the balance of the estate, amounting to approximately £1,445.

The executor died intestate on March 2, 1953.

It appeared that Charlotte Esther Noble (a niece of the testatrix) and several other persons were entitled to share in the undisposed part of the estate of the testatrix as next-of-kin, and, the evidence of her relationship to the testatrix having been accepted by the Treasury Solicitor, she applied for a grant of administration de bonis non to the estate and it was made to her on March 11, 1954.

The Treasury Solicitor was willing to make the balance of the estate available for payment to the person entitled thereto, but contended that the administratrix could not give him a good receipt and discharge therefor without the protection of an order of the court.

She, therefore, took out a summons for "(1) a declaration "that the plaintiff has power to give a good receipt and dis- "charge to the Treasury Solicitor for the part of the estate of "the testatrix as to which she died intestate and which is now "held by the Treasury Solicitor; (2) alternatively, an inquiry as "to the persons entitled to the part of the estate of the testatrix "as to which she died intestate and directions as to the "distribution thereof."

V. M. C. Pennington for the plaintiff.
Denys Buckley for the Treasury Solicitor.

Cases referred to in argument: Attenborough v. Solomon [2]; Harvell v. Foster [3]; Newton v. Sherry.[4]

DANCKWERTS J. This is a case which raises points of some interest and importance, although the estate is a comparatively small one. Charlotte Agnes Aldhous died on February 3, 1948, having some five days earlier made a will dated January 29, 1948, by which she appointed Patrick Aloysius Coyne to be the executor of her will and gave to him and his wife the sum of £100 free of legacy duty. She made no other disposition in respect of her estate and, consequently, she died intestate as regards all the rest of her estate, which amounted altogether to something over £1,400.

Mr. Coyne obtained a grant of probate on April 13, 1948, and in July, 1948, he issued advertisements in pursuance of section 27 of the Trustee Act, 1925. These advertisements in the "London Gazette" of July 2, 1948, are in the form which permits advertisements to be made in respect of a number of estates with a common direction applying to them all in pursuance of arrangements made by the Lord Chancellor's Office as recorded in [1948] Weekly Notes, Part II, at p. 47.

The form of advertisement, which was inserted in "The Times" of July 26, 1948, and in the "West London Observer" of July 2, 1948, is as follows: [His Lordship read the form of the advertisement and continued:] It is perfectly clear that this form of advertisement is that which has been used for a long time, it having been based, as it appears to me, on the provisions

[2] [1913] A.C. 76; 29 T.L.R. 79.
[3] [1954] 2 Q.B. 367; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 351; [1954] 2 All E.R. 736.
[4] (1876) 1 C.P.D. 246.

1955

Aldhous, In re. Noble v. Treasury Solicitor.

Danckwerts J.

of the Act of 1859, generally known as Lord St. Leonards' Act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), s. 29, where, in fact, the words "claims "against the estate" of the deceased person are used.

It is clear from the decision of Brett J. in Newton v. Sherry,[1] that such a form of advertisement would be effective not only in respect of claims of creditors but in respect of the claims of next-of-kin of a deceased person or, I suppose, of persons entitled under the will of a deceased person to share in the estate of that person. It seems to me that it is unfortunately worded, if it is intended to notify persons without legal training that they are to put in their claims to share beneficially in an estate. "Claims against the estate" of a deceased person suggests to me, and I imagine to most reasonable people, much more naturally claims by creditors than by beneficiaries. In fact the wording of the advertisement does not follow the wording of the present section, which is section 27 of the Trustee Act, 1925. [His Lordship read subsection (1) and continued:]

It is perfectly plain that that section applies equally to the claims of beneficial owners as to the claims of creditors in respect of any estate or trust fund. The words "against the estate" do not appear anywhere in that subsection, and I cannot help thinking that the time has come when advertisements for creditors or for persons beneficially interested in the estate of a deceased person should be re-cast so as to follow more accurately the wording of the present operative section, which I have just read, and be expressed in such a way as to indicate to normal people that it is not merely the claims of creditors which are required to be sent in, but also those of beneficiaries. I must go on to read subsection (2) of this section. [His Lordship read the subsection and continued:]

As I have said, those advertisements which I have mentioned were issued by the executor in the present case. It appears that he dealt with all creditors who put in any claims and that no claims whatever came in from any next-of-kin. Accordingly, on September 10, 1949, he paid over a sum of £1,445 to the Treasury Solicitor on the footing that the deceased had left no lawful next-of-kin and that the Treasury Solicitor on behalf of the Crown had become entitled to all the remaining assets.

On March 3, 1953, the executor died intestate and no representation to his estate has been obtained, but on March 11, 1954, the plaintiff, Charlotte Esther Noble, a married woman, who claims to be a lawful niece of the whole blood of the deceased and one of the persons entitled to the undisposed estate of the testatrix, obtained a grant of administration de bonis non in the Probate Division.

The grant states that an affidavit for Inland Revenue had been delivered, wherein it was shown that the gross value of the said unadministered estate in Great Britain (exclusive of what the said deceased may have been possessed of or entitled to as trustee and not beneficially) amounts to £1,400.

[1] 1 C.P.D. 246.

The present summons has been taken out by Mrs. Noble against the Treasury Solicitor as a result of his refusal to recognise her title to give a full receipt in discharge of the moneys paid over to him, which amounted, as I have said, to £1,445.

It appears that, in addition to the claim of the plaintiff, there are claims of other next-of-kin which may or may not be correct, and the Treasury Solicitor, whether or not he is under any lawful obligation so to do, is prepared to account for and pay over the moneys which he has received to any persons who establish their lawful claim as the next-of-kin.

The relief asked for by the plaintiff is: "A declaration that "the plaintiff has power to give a good receipt and discharge to "the Treasury Solicitor for the part of the estate of the testatrix "as to which she died intestate and which is now held by the "Treasury Solicitor" or "alternatively an inquiry as to the "persons entitled to the part of the estate of the testatrix as "to which she died intestate and directions as to the distribution "thereof."

It is contended on behalf of the Treasury Solicitor that there is, in fact, no unadministered estate left, and that, therefore, the grant which was obtained by the plaintiff was in fact nugatory. It is pointed out that the advertisements which have been issued in accordance with the provisions of section 27 of the Trustee Act, 1925, have the result of protecting the executor in respect of the payment which he made over to the Treasury Solicitor, so that it is plain, I think, that no proceedings could be brought against the executor or his estate for what he did, because he administered the estate in accordance with law.

On the other hand, it is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that an estate is never fully administered in the complete sense, because, at any time, assets of the estate may arise or be discovered, and it may, therefore, be the function of the personal representative of the deceased to recover those assets.

In support of that proposition I have been referred to Attenborough v. Solomon,[2] and in particular to the observations of Lord Haldane. The facts of that case were that, 14 years after the death of the deceased, one of the two executors attempted to pledge some of the assets of the estate. It was held by the House of Lords that the claim of the pledgee was ineffective against the other executor and a new trustee, because, after that time, the executors must be presumed to have assented to the trusts of the will and to have become trustees; and that they could no longer, therefore, exercise the power of a personal representative to raise money by pledge for the purpose of satisfying, for instance, creditors of the estate.

[2] [1913] A.C. 76, 85.

1955

Aldhous, In re. Noble v. Treasury Solicitor.

Danckwerts J.

Therefore, the decision seems to me to give no assistance whatever to the plaintiff's contentions; and, although the observations of Lord Haldane do suggest that there may be some functions still existing in the case of a personal representative after the debts had been fully paid or ought to have been fully paid, I do not think that that case really assists the plaintiff at all.

The other case to which I have been referred is the decision of the Court of Appeal in Harvell v. Foster.[3] In that case the testator gave all his estate to his daughter, who was the plaintiff, and appointed her his sole executrix. When he died in 1948, the plaintiff, his daughter, was under 21 years of age. Accordingly administration with the will annexed was granted to her husband during her minority. The husband and two solicitors as sureties gave to the Principal Probate Registrar a joint and several administration bond that the husband would "well and truly "administer the estate" according to law, and, further, that he would "make or cause to be made a just and true account of "the administration of the said estate." What happened was that the husband having got in the assets amounting to £950 did not account for them as he should have done to the plaintiff. He paid her only £300, and misappropriated the rest. He disappeared with them and he never accounted at all. The action was one against the sureties on the ground that the husband had not properly administered the estate.

Lord Goddard C.J. thought that the claim failed because, the debts and liabilities having been fully discharged, on the authority of Sargant J.'s decision in In re Ponder[4] the husband had become a trustee for his wife and the administration had been fully completed, but the Court of Appeal decided otherwise. They thought that the administration could not be fully completed until the administrator had accounted to the persons properly entitled to the assets. Obviously that had not been done in that case because the administrator had misappropriated the assets. That case does not, as it seems to me, apply to the present case because there is no suggestion that any proceedings could have been brought against Coyne when it is found that he acted in accordance with the law by issuing the advertisements which section 27 of the Trustee Act, 1925, allowed him to issue and that he distributed the assets after having complied with the provisions of the section. It is true that it turns out that he paid the assets over to the wrong person, but no complaint could be made against him, because he dealt with the claims which he had, and he was not aware and he had no notice of the claims of the true next-of-kin. That seems to me to distinguish the present case from the decision of the Court of Appeal in Harvell v. Foster.[5] Therefore, it seems to me that the executor had fully administered the estate in accordance with law and that, looking at the matter properly, there are no unadministered assets outstanding in respect of which the plaintiff's grant could take effect.

[3] [1954] 2 Q.B. 367.
[4] [1921] 2 Ch. 59.
[5] [1954] 2 Q.B. 367.

It is perfectly true that the next-of-kin might have the right to follow the assets in the hands of somebody who had acquired them without a proper title to them, but that is a relief which is given to them by the statute and by law in their capacity as beneficiaries. It seems to me that it is of no assistance to the plaintiff in her capacity of administrator de bonis non.

It appears that although in some cases the beneficiaries might be entitled to follow the assets, in the present case the beneficiaries could not follow the assets strictly into the hands of the Treasury Solicitor because he, of course, having obtained the payment as the representative of the Crown has accounted to the Crown and the assets have gone into the Consolidated Fund. It may be that they could never be strictly recovered against anybody at all in the present case, but the Treasury Solicitor has voluntarily recognized the claims of the next-of-kin as being the persons who were really properly entitled to the assets of the estate and he is prepared to provide the money for the satisfaction of their claims. Accordingly, as it seems to me, if I had to decide the case on strictly legal principles, I should have to hold that the plaintiff could not give an effective discharge to the Treasury Solicitor, and it would be very doubtful whether she could obtain any relief on the present application at all, but with the co-operation of the Treasury Solicitor I propose to make an order in the following form.

The order will begin with the words: "The Treasury "Solicitor not admitting liability, but being willing to account "for the sums paid to him by the executor of the deceased to "whoever shall be shown to be the lawful next-of-kin of the "deceased." The order will then direct the ordinary form of inquiry as to next-of-kin with liberty to apply.

Solicitors: Rose, Johnson & Hicks; Treasury Solicitor.

J. L. D.

1955

ALDHOUS, In re. NOBLE v. TREASURY SOLICITOR.

Danckwerts J.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* In re ASTER (AN INFANT).

[1953 A. 3785.]

C. A.

1955
Mar. 23, 24.

Evershed M.R. and Jenkins L.J.

Infant — Custody — Illegitimate child — Rights of mother — Rights of putative father—Mother's wish to have child adopted.

On May 25, 1952, an illegitimate child was born and the infant's mother, who was a Roman Catholic, placed the infant with a Catholic society with a view to its being adopted. The father applied under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act,

C. A.
1955
Aster (An Infant), In re.

1949, to have the infant made a ward of court and that the custody of the infant might be given to him. Harman J. made an order directing that the infant should remain a ward of court and that, until further order, the infant should be committed to the care of the father's brother and his sister-in-law upon an undertaking by them to bring the infant up in the Roman Catholic faith:—

Held, (1) that the paramount consideration was the welfare of the infant and there was no principle of law that, unless there emerged prevailing consideration of essential importance to the child, the wishes of the mother of an illegitimate child should prevail.

(2) That the judge had duly exercised his discretion and that there had been no error in law.

Barnardo v. McHugh [1891] A.C. 388; 7 T.L.R. 726 and In re Carroll (J. M.) [1931] 1 K.B. 317; 47 T.L.R. 125 distinguished.

Appeal from Harman J.

On May 25, 1952, Bernadette Mary Aster or McNiff was born, her mother being at the date of her birth under 20 years of age, and her father, a married man, much older. The parents subsequently quarrelled and the mother, who was a Roman Catholic, handed the infant to the Incorporated Society of the Crusade of Rescue and Homes for Destitute Catholic Children with a view to its adoption under the Adoption Act, 1950. The father, who was admittedly devoted to the infant, objected to this course and applied by originating summons under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, for an order: (1) that the child might be made a ward of court; (2) that he might be appointed to be her guardian and, further, that her custody, care and control might be given to him.

On December 21, 1954, Harman J. made an order directing first, that the infant, having become a ward of court, should remain so during her minority or until further order and, secondly, that until further order she should be committed to the care of a Mr. and Mrs. Asher, who were the father's brother and sister-in-law, and he further ordered that the infant should be delivered to Mr. and Mrs. Asher. Mr. and Mrs. Asher gave an undertaking to the court to bring the infant up in the Roman Catholic faith. They were not willing legally to adopt the infant.

The mother appealed.

P. Ingress Bell Q.C. and Stanislaus Seuffert for the mother.
John Platts-Mills appeared for the father.

Eversheed M.R. This is an appeal from an order made by Harman J., which bears date December 21, 1954, in regard to the present custody and maintenance of a small girl called Bernadette Mary Aster or McNiff, a child who was born on May 25, 1952. As the judge said, the case is a difficult one, and, indeed, all these cases are necessarily anxious cases; but in this particular case the little girl's launching upon her voyage in this world was the more unfortunate in that she is the fruit of an illicit union between her mother, who was then a young girl of under 20, and the father, who was greatly her senior, and who was at the time living away from his wife. The relations between the mother and the father became somewhat embittered, and the order from which the appeal is brought was an order made upon an application by way of originating summons taken out by the father. Let me say at once that this is a case in which the natural father has never denied the paternity, and has obviously taken an interest in the child, and according to a note of what the judge said, obviously has an affection for it. The summons asks, first, that the infant may be a ward of court, and it asks for the custody, care and control.

The order appealed from directed that, the child having become a ward of court, the child should remain a ward during her minority or until further order, and that she should be committed to the care and control of a Mr. and Mrs. Asher, Mr. Asher being, in fact, the father's brother. The order then proceeded to give directions for the child to be handed over, it then being in the actual care of a well-known society known as the Incorporated Society of the Crusade of Rescue and Homes for Destitute Catholic Children; and it is of importance that an undertaking was given and signed by Mr. and Mrs. Asher that the child be brought up in the Roman Catholic faith, into which church it had already been baptized.

It is not, perhaps, surprising that this young woman should feel a certain bitterness against the man with whom she lived and from whom she has parted; and I am bound to say that I think the present appeal is to be attributed in some measure to that bitterness, and in some measure to religious zeal rather than to the single purpose of the welfare of the child. The reasons why I say that will later appear. But the notice of appeal is certainly a bold document, for it asks that the order made by Harman J. may be reversed, that the summons may be dismissed altogether, and that the costs be paid to the mother.

The judge observed that the father was greatly attached to the child, and, putting the matter quite shortly, the judge came to the conclusion that the best thing to do in the difficult circumstances of this case was to let the child go to Mr. and Mrs. Asher. It was a case—and this is fundamental to the decision—in which the mother, being a young girl, quite naturally had come to the conclusion that "she would like to start fair and fresh without "the stigma of having borne a child." It is not, therefore, a case in which the mother of the child desires to have its custody and upbringing. She desires to put the whole of this episode behind her and to have nothing more to do with the child. Indeed, as Mr. Ingress Bell has pointed out, the gist of her case is that her scheme, which the judge, according to Mr. Bell's argument, should have accepted, would have led to an adoption under the Adoption Act, 1950, and, of course, that would have meant an abandonment, an extinguishment for all practical purposes, of

C. A.
1955
Aster (An Infant),
Evershed M.R.

all her maternal rights towards the child. As my brother Jenkins observed, it is somewhat paradoxical for it to be asserted on her behalf that the mother's wishes in the interests of the child must be acceded to in the absence of some very special reason, when those wishes involve, as a necessary part of them, the total extinguishment of her maternal rights.

But this is a case which is also unusual, to judge from the authorities mentioned, in that here the putative father is very much on the scene. We were referred, for example, to Barnardo v. McHugh [1] in the House of Lords, and to In re Carroll [2] in this court. In both of those cases the putative father was not on the scene at all, if indeed he had ever been identified; and the question that the House of Lords and this court were there considering was the extent to which the wishes of the only parent who was, so to say, on the scene, ought to be acceded to.

This seems to me to be a different case. This is a case, in the first place, of the invocation of the parental duties and powers of the court as regards a ward of court, and by statute and well-established principle it is not in doubt that in every such case the paramount consideration must be the welfare of the child. Mr. Seuffert, for the mother, suggested that the judge never really considered that at all, but I entirely reject that suggestion. But, as Mr. Ingress Bell pointed out, "paramount" is not the same as "exclusive," and what really has been said for the mother here is that when the balancing considerations are looked upon, the mother's wishes must as a matter of law have prevailed, since, as a matter of law, the natural mother, even though she does not herself seek the company and custody of the child, has a right to choose who will bring it up, unless (as Mr. Ingress Bell put it) there emerged prevailing considerations of essential importance to the child. Mr. Seuffert suggested that that was so, unless the mother was shown to be in some way irresponsible or wicked.

In my judgment, those submissions are altogether too wide. I find nothing here to show that the mother's wishes were in fact disregarded. What the judge did, I think quite plainly, was to exercise his discretion by considering the alternatives presented to him on the one side and the other, and to come to a conclusion that in the interests of the child the better plan was that to which he gave effect. I can see no error of law in the matter at all.

In Barnardo's case,[3] the observations of Sir George Jessel M.R. in Regina v. Nash [4] were cited with approval by Lord Herschell [5]: "It is, however, no longer important to inquire "what are the rights of the mother in relation to an illegitimate "child at common law. All the courts are now governed by

[1] [1891] A.C. 388; 7 T.L.R. 726.
[2] [1931] 1 K.B. 317; 47 T.L.R. 125.
[3] [1891] A.C. 388.
[4] (1883) 10 Q.B.D. 454.
[5] [1891] A.C. 388, 398.

" equitable rules, and empowered to exercise equitable jurisdic" tion. As was said by Sir George Jessel M.R., in Regina v.
" Nash [6]: ' In equity regard was always had to the mother,
" ' putative father, and relations on the mother's side.' "

In the present case the real point made, I think, upon the facts—and when I say " upon the facts " I do not mean having looked into all of them, but upon the balance as presented by the statements in the judge's note—was this, that if the child goes to Mr. and Mrs. Asher, then, for reasons which are stated, it is very unlikely to be adopted, and what Mr. Ingress Bell has said is that from the point of view of the child's welfare it would be far better that it should be regularly adopted under the Adoption Act; and the mother's scheme (what the judge called the rival scheme) was that via this very reputable society the child should be, so to say, put in the way of a legal adoption under the Act.

That is, of course, a point of substance, but I have no doubt that the matter was considered by the judge, and as his judgment states, not later than—and I emphasize the words " not later " than "—the end of December, 1956, the case will be reconsidered. Against that consideration put forward on the mother's side there is the further consideration which, I think quite properly, entered into the judge's mind, the consideration expressed by the ancient proverb that " Blood is thicker than " water."

As I said a little earlier, behind all this there has undoubtedly lurked another matter, upon which I do not want to say much, but which I must briefly state. A written undertaking has been given that the child will be brought up according to the tenets of the Roman Catholic faith. It is said that in the course of cross-examination Mrs. Asher's own adherence to the doctrines of that church was shown to be somewhat lacking in sincerity, because she admitted, it was said, that of her three children none was in fact being brought up according to the tenets of that faith, and that she herself only went occasionally to church; and so Mr. Ingress Bell says that the undertaking that the child will be brought up as a member of the Roman Catholic Church was an undertaking which should not have been accepted at its face value.

Religious feeling is a matter which deserves everybody's respect, but I do not accept the view that the suggestion made is one to which we can or should accede. I see no reason why this undertaking, which was solemnly given, should not have been accepted, and I have not, I confess, altogether appreciated the somewhat veiled attack upon the position in which this child was placed because, it is said, the religious observances of Mrs. Asher are not what it is thought on the mother's side that they ought to be. I say no more about it, but I have said, I hope, enough

[6] 10 Q.B.D. 454.

C. A.
1955
Aster (An Infant), In re.

to indicate that I do not think there is any ground which would justify the court in differing from the judge, or in embarking upon a consideration of the matter with a view to exercising afresh a discretion properly vested in the judge and, as I think, properly exercised by him. I would dismiss the appeal.

Jenkins L.J. I agree, and have nothing to add.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Willes & Gladstone; O. H. Parsons.

B. A. B.

[Liverpool Assizes.]

1955
Feb. 1, 2, 24.
Glyn-Jones J.

* HURLEY v. J. SANDERS & CO. LD. and Another.

[1953 H. No. 379.]

Dock—Regulations—Shipbuilding—Dry dock—Painting ship with anti-fouling paint—"Work of repair"—Safe means of access to "all "parts of the ship"—Part of dock from which ship painted—Notional occupier—Shipbuilding Regulations, 1931 (S.R. & O. 1931, No. 133), reg. 1.

The first defendants, who employed the plaintiff as a painter, were engaged under contract with the second defendants in painting with anti-fouling paint the hull of a ship then in a public dry dock. The dock had been let by its owners to the second defendants who had contracted with the owner of the ship to execute the work being undertaken by the first defendants. The plaintiff in the course of his employment was required to paint a part of the hull of the ship amidships, and for this purpose was provided with a striker, a bamboo rod about 8 ft. long, to which was attached a brush. The painting of that part of the hull could be done only from the altar courses, a series of steps forming the upper part of the dock wall; the painter standing on one of the courses and painting so much of the ship as could be reached with his striker, down to a few feet below the level of the top of the vertical wall which bounded the bottom of the dock. The plaintiff was making his way towards the altar course from which he was to work, taking with him his bucket of paint and striker, and proceeding down the altar courses, when he fell and sustained injury. The plaintiff claimed from the second defendants damages for breach of the duty imposed upon them as the notional occupier to provide safe means of access for him to all parts of the ship to which he was required to proceed:—

Held, (1) that the painting of a ship in dry dock with anti-fouling paint constituted "work of repair" to which the Shipbuilding Regulations, 1931, applied.

[Reported by E. Somerset Jones, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Day v. Harland & Wolff Ld. [1953] 1 W.L.R. 906; [1953] 2 All E.R. 387 followed.

Taylor v. Ellerman's Wilson Line Ld. [1952] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 144 distinguished.

Per curiam: The line between maintenance and repair is a fine one and I should have thought that the two were not mutually exclusive.

(2) That the plaintiff was required to proceed to a "part of the "ship" within the meaning of regulation 1, even though the place from which he was to paint the ship was upon the dock and his means of access to it lay over part of the dock; and that the second defendants were in breach of their duty to provide safe means of access.

ACTION.

The following summary of the facts is taken from the judgment. The plaintiff, James Hurley, was employed by the first defendants as a ships painter and he brought this action claiming damages in respect of injury sustained by him on November 9, 1952, in the course of his employment. The first defendants were at that time engaged under a contract made with the second defendants, C. & H. Crichton Ld., in painting with anti-fouling paint the hull of the s.s. Arthemisia then lying in dry dock. The dock had been let by its owners to the second defendants who had contracted with the owner of the ship to execute work being done on the ship. The bottom of the dock was 60 ft. wide and was bounded on each side by a vertical wall 14 ft. high. From the top of the vertical wall the sides of the dock rose in 12 steps, 18 ins. high and 12 ins. wide, to the top of the dock. The steps, called altar courses, were rounded along their edges, the level part of each course being no more than 9 ins. wide, and they formed an angle of 60 degrees from the horizontal. The painting of the hull of the ship near its bow and stern was done from staging built on the floor of the dock or suspended from the ship; but amidships there was no room for staging to be erected between the ship and the side of the dock, because the beam of the ship was 57 ft. and the dock between the vertical walls was only 60 ft. wide. The only practicable way of painting that part of the hull where staging could not be erected was from the altar courses, and this was the universal practice of the trade. For this purpose the plaintiff was provided with a striker, a bamboo rod about 8 ft. in length with a brush attached.

The plaintiff on November 9, 1952, was making his way towards the altar course from which he would have begun his work of painting a part of the ship's hull amidships. He was an experienced ships painter accustomed to that work and he went down the side of the dock in the usual way, i.e., he stepped down the altar courses, carrying his striker and taking up and setting down his bucket of paint as he proceeded, course by course, towards the one on which he was to work. As he was proceeding in this manner he slipped and fell, sustaining injury.

1955

Hurley v. J. Sanders & Co. Ld.

The case is reported only on the plaintiff's claim against the second defendants on the ground of breach of the duty imposed upon them by Regulation 1 of the Shipbuilding Regulations, 1931.[1] The second defendants contended, inter alia, that the work which they had contracted with the ship owner to do was not work of construction or repair and that therefore the regulations did not apply.

G. Glynn Blackledge Q.C. and Robert Lambert for the plaintiff.

R. H. Forrest Q.C. and C. M. Clothier for both defendants.

The following cases in addition to those referred to in the judgment were cited in argument: Marshall v. Gotham Co. Ld.[2]; Clayton v. J. Russell & Co.[3]; Drummond v. British Building Cleaners Ld.[4]; Dredge v. Conway, Jones & Co.[5]; Moodie v. Furness Shipbuilding Co. Ld.[6]

Cur. adv. vult.

February 24. Glyn-Jones J. after stating the facts and his finding that the altar courses were dangerous as a place of work or as a means of access held that the first named defendant company was in breach of its common law duty to take reasonable care for the safety of the plaintiff, its servant, and continued:

I have now to consider whether the plaintiff has proved a breach of the Shipbuilding Regulations, 1931. The only provision of which a breach is alleged is regulation 1. Before I consider whether that regulation was broken I must first decide whether or not the regulations apply at all. The regulations apply to the repairing of ships in shipbuilding yards, and they clearly apply to a ship in a public drydock (which this was) undergoing repair. There is no evidence that any work was being done on this ship except repainting the bottom of the ship with anti-fouling composition, and the question is "Is this painting "work of repair?"

[1] Shipbuilding Regulations, 1931: ". . . the following Regulations . . . "shall apply to the construction and "repair of ships in shipbuilding "yards. . . .":

"It shall be the duty of the occu- "pier to comply with Parts I to VIII "of these Regulations. Provided that, "when a ship is being repaired in "public dry dock, the person who "contracts with the owner of the ship "or with his agent to execute the "work of repair, shall be deemed to "be the occupier for the purposes of "Parts I to VIII and it shall be his "duty to comply with the said parts "except . . ."

Reg. 1: "Safe means of access "shall be provided to all parts of the "ship to which persons employed "may be required to proceed in the "course of their employment."

[2] [1954] A.C. 360; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 812; [1954] 1 All E.R. 937.

[3] [1953] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 692.

[4] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 501, 1434; [1954] 3 All E.R. 507.

[5] [1901] 2 K.B. 42; 17 T.L.R. 355.

[6] [1951] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 600.

In London & North Eastern Railway Co. v. Berriman,[1] the House of Lords held that a railway signal fitter's labourer engaged in the routine oiling of the apparatus connecting signal boxes with signals and points was not engaged in relaying or repairing the permanent way within the meaning of the Railway Employment (Prevention of Accidents) Act, 1900. Mr. Forrest said that the object of oiling the moving parts of signal mechanism was both to improve the function and prevent corrosion, and the object of putting anti-fouling paint on a ship's bottom was precisely the same, that is to say, to protect the hull from corrosion, and by keeping the hull free of marine growth to improve, or at least to maintain, the vessel's speed by diminishing the friction between the hull and the water. I am unable to accede to this argument. Whether or not a given piece of work amounts to a repair is a question of fact depending upon the circumstances of a particular case, and I do not take the view that because the House of Lords by a majority of three to two decided that oiling the points and signal apparatus on a railway line was not repairing the permanent way within the meaning of a particular Act of Parliament, I am constrained by that decision to decide that to put a ship in drydock for the purpose of restoring or renewing the anti-fouling composition below the water line is not work of repair. The line between maintenance and repair is a fine one and I should have thought that the two were not mutually exclusive.

In Taylor v. Ellerman's Wilson Line Ld.,[2] Ormerod J. decided that certain painting work being done in a ship's hold—work which could have been done in wet dock or, I suppose, even at sea if the hold were empty—was not repair within the meaning of the Shipbuilding Regulations, although the work was being done in a drydock. In Day v. Harland & Wolff Ld.[3] Pearson J. decided that the painting of a ship in dry dock with anti-fouling composition constituted repair of the ship within the meaning of the Shipbuilding Regulations. I do not think that the two decisions are inconsistent, and having considered the cases cited to Ormerod J. and Pearson J., I find myself in agreement with the reasoning of Pearson J. in Day's case,[3] and in my opinion the work on which the plaintiff was engaged in this case was the repair of a ship.

The regulations provide that when a ship is being repaired in a public drydock the person who contracts with the owner of the ship for the purpose of repair should be deemed to be the occupier for the purpose of complying with certain parts of the regulation, including in particular regulation 1, which is the regulation in question in this case. The contractor becomes what has been called the notional occupier of the dock and assumes the duty

[1] [1946] A.C. 278; 62 T.L.R. 170; [1946] 1 All E.R. 255.

[2] [1952] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 144.

[3] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 906; [1953] 2 All E.R. 387.

1955

Hurley v. J. Sanders & Co. Ld.

Glyn-Jones J.

to comply with Part I of the regulations. The first named defendant company had not contracted with the shipowner and is not the notional occupier, for that company's contract was with the second named defendant company, and there is no evidence that the second named defendant was acting as the shipowner's agent in making that contract. Mr. Forrest submits that there is no evidence justifying the inference that the second named defendant had so contracted, or, if it had, that it was the sole contractor. He referred to the judgment of Devlin J. in Donovan v. Cammell Laird & Co.,[4] and contended that the burden was on the plaintiff to prove affirmatively that there was no other repairer who had made a contract with the owner in respect of work to be done upon this ship on the same occasion. I hope that fairly sets out Mr. Forrest's argument. I venture to express my agreement with Devlin J. that the draughtsman of the regulations appears to have assumed that whenever there is a ship being repaired in a drydock there will always be a single repairer who can be identified as the notional occupier; in the present case there is no evidence that any work was being done on the ship other than that being done by the first named defendant; but I find that the second named defendant company had contracted with the owner of the ship to get this work done, had arranged with the Dock Board for the vessel to be taken into drydock and had contracted with the first named defendant company to do the work, and accordingly I hold that the second named defendant company was the notional occupier.

It follows that the second named defendant company was under a duty to comply with regulation 1 of the regulations, which reads as follows: "Safe means of access shall be provided to "all parts of the ship to which persons employed may be "required to proceed in the course of their employment." Mr. Forrest argued that this provision did not apply in that the plaintiff was required to proceed not to a part of the ship but to a part of the drydock, namely, the altar course on which he would stand while doing his work. I do not agree with Mr. Forrest's argument, and I am of opinion that the plaintiff was required in the course of his employment to proceed to that part of the hull of the ship which he was to paint, and the fact that his route lay over a part of the dock and not over any part of the ship itself does not deprive him of his right of safe means of access under the regulations, nor does the fact that in using his brush to reach that part of the ship he would stand on the altar course, which was a part of the dock. This conclusion appears to me to be in accord with the decision of Tucker J. in Rippon v. Port of London Authority,[5] and with that of Pritchard J. in Daniels v. F. Leyland & Co. Ld.[6]

[4] [1949] 2 All E.R. 82.

[5] [1940] 1 K.B. 858; 56 T.L.R. 415; [1940] 1 All E.R. 637.

[6] [1951] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 59.

1955

HURLEY v. J. SANDERS & CO. LD.

Glyn-Jones J.

Next Mr. Forrest submitted that the means of access provided, namely, by going down the altar course, was safe within the meaning of the regulations in that the word "safe" must be construed in its context, that in relation to the parts of a drydock over which experienced ship repairers must go in order to do their work the word "safe" must be a relative term, and that to experienced ships painters or repairers the altar courses did provide a safe means of access, notwithstanding the risk of an occasional fall.

The findings of fact at which I have already arrived answer these contentions. I cannot find, while considering the employer's liability at common law, that the altar courses were a dangerous work place or means of access without arriving at the same finding of fact when considering the notional occupier's duty under the Shipbuilding Regulations, and I am driven to find that the second named defendant company was in breach of its statutory duty to provide a safe means of access for the plaintiff. What else the company could have done I do not know. It was not in its power to require the painters, over whom it had not a master's control, to wear safety belts and it is not practicable to paint the side below the water line amidships of a ship in drydock except from the altar courses; but the duty imposed by regulation 1 of the regulations is absolute, for that regulation does not contain the words "so far as is reasonably" practicable" (which qualify the duty imposed by section 26 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937).

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors: Riley, Sutcliffe & Co., Blackburn; Laces & Co., Liverpool.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* SCRACE v. WINDUST.

C. A.

1955

Mar. 22.

Evershed M.R., Jenkins and Romer L.JJ.

[Plaint No. K. 4168.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Alternative accommodation—Security of tenure—Original premises to be converted into two self-contained premises—Tenant offered part of converted premises—Converted premises decontrolled—Security of tenure not "reasonably equivalent to security afforded by the principal Acts"—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5, c. 32), s. 3 (3) (b)—Housing Repairs and Rents Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2, c. 53), s. 35 (1) (a).

The defendant was tenant of a house within the protection of the Rent Acts. The house consisted of three rooms on the ground floor and three bedrooms on the first floor, garage and garden. The landlord, having given to the tenant notice to quit, offered to the tenant as alternative accommodation the three bedrooms, one of which was to be converted into a kitchen, one downstairs room and the garage. The premises so offered were to be separated from the rest of the premises by a partition in the hall which would have the effect of making the alternative accommodation self-contained:—

C. A.

1955

Scrace v. Windust.

Held, that the landlord's proposed conversion would have the effect of producing two separate and self-contained sets of premises with complete physical division of the one from the other which, by the terms of section 35 of the Housing Repairs and Rents Act, 1954, would be excluded from the protection of the Acts and, therefore, that the alternative accommodation offered could not be regarded as satisfying the requirement of section 3 (3) (b) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, that it should "afford to the tenant security of tenure reasonably "equivalent to the security afforded by the principal Acts."

Semble: If the landlord were to offer the same alternative accommodation to the tenant, but for a term of years instead of only on a weekly tenancy, she might be able to satisfy the county court judge that the security of tenure provided by the alternative accommodation was reasonably equivalent to the security provided by the Rent Acts.

Effect of a refusal by a tenant to allow his landlord to enter for the purpose of effecting works of conversion considered.

Appeal from Judge Armstrong sitting at Bournemouth County Court.

The landlord, Miss Annie Elizabeth Scrace, claimed possession of premises known as "Goldendene," Walkford Way, Christchurch, Hampshire, which were within the protection of the Rent Acts, from the tenant, Edward William Windust.

The following statement of facts is taken from the judgment of Jenkins L.J.: The tenancy originated in an agreement dated January 8, 1941, between a predecessor in title of the landlord of the one part, and the tenant, Windust, and his brother-in-law, one Culley, whose interest had determined, of the other part. The reversion expectant upon the determination of that tenancy passed from the original landlord to a Mrs. Hayward, and she left it by her will to Miss Scrace, the landlord.

The premises consisted of two floors: A ground floor, with a hall leading, through doors on the right, to a lounge and, behind that, a dining room; at the end of the hall there was a kitchen, and opening out of it a coal cellar with a garage attached on the kitchen side of the house, but there was no access to the garage through the house; on the first floor there were three bedrooms—two moderate sized ones and one smaller one, a bathroom and a w.c.

The landlord, having given to the tenant notice to quit, started proceedings for possession solely on the ground that suitable alternative accommodation could be provided for the tenant and his family. The proposal made by the landlord was that the tenant should take the lounge on the ground floor, together with the whole of the top floor. A partition was to be made in the hall, partitioning off the stairs, so that the tenant would have separate access to the upper floor by means of the staircase, which would then be appropriated to his exclusive use. A door was to be provided by means of which he could have access to the lounge, from what would then be his own private entrance hall. A separate door was to be provided on the ground floor for the landlord, who would keep the kitchen and the dining room and also the coal cellar. Under these proposals the tenant was also to have the garage. Upstairs the smaller bedroom was to be converted into a kitchen, and water and means of heating were to be installed for use in that new upstairs kitchen.

The tenant opposed the claim for possession on a number of grounds. He said that the alternative accommodation provided was inadequate, and further that, the proposal being to give him a weekly tenancy only of the alternative accommodation and the transaction involving, as it did, the conversion of the one dwelling-house into two separate and self-contained dwelling-houses, the effect of the transaction would be to give him less security of tenure than he had in his existing dwelling-house, inasmuch as each part of the divided house would be taken out of the protection of the Rent Acts. That argument turned on section 35 of the Housing Repairs and Rents Act, 1954.[1] It was next said on behalf of the tenant that he objected to the doing on the premises of the work necessary to provide his separate self-contained alternative accommodation; and it was said that, as a statutory tenant, he was entitled to remain in the premises undisturbed and could not be compelled to allow workmen in to do the necessary work.

The county court judge held that the landlord had offered to provide suitable alternative accommodation, and he made an order for possession subject to the alternative accommodation being made available.

The tenant appealed.

The Court of Appeal refused to disturb the county court judge's decision that the premises afforded suitable alternative accommodation having regard to the size of his family, and the decision on this point does not call for report.

A. G. de Montmorency for the landlord.

D. H. Stansfield for the tenant.

The following decisions were referred to in argument: Smith v. Prime[2]; Darrell v. Whitaker[3]; Selwyn v. Hamill[4]; Capital and Provincial Property Trust Ld. v. Rice.[5]

[1] Housing Repairs and Rents Act, 1954, s. 35: "(1) The Act of 1920 "shall not apply to a dwelling-house "which consists, and consists only, "of premises falling within either of "the following paragraphs, that is to "say,—(a) separate and self-contained "premises produced by conversion, "after the commencement of this "Act, of other premises, with or "without the addition of premises "erected after the commencement of "this Act; (b) premises erected after "the commencement of this Act:"

[2] [1923] W.N. 131; 39 T.L.R. 403.

[3] [1923] W.N. 165; 39 T.L.R. 447.

[4] [1948] 1 All E.R. 70.

[5] [1952] A.C. 142; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 557; [1951] 2 All E.R. 600.

C. A. 1955

Scrace v. Windust.

Evershed M.R. I will ask my brother Jenkins to deliver the first judgment.

Jenkins L.J. This is an appeal by the defendant tenant, Edward William Windust, from an order of Judge Armstrong made in the Bournemouth County Court on December 16, 1954, whereby he ordered the tenant to give up possession of the premises known as "Goldendene," Walkford Way, Christchurch, Hampshire, subject to availability of alternative accommodation.

[His Lordship stated the facts, and after holding that there was evidence upon which the county court judge could hold that the alternative accommodation was suitable to the needs of the tenant's family, continued:] I next deal with the objection under the Housing Repairs and Rents Act, 1954. That Act received the Royal Assent on July 30, 1954, and came into operation one month later. [His Lordship read section 35 (1), and continued:] It is said for the tenant that the provision I have just read clearly applies in the present case. It is said on his behalf that the two dwelling-houses provided by the landlord's scheme are separate and self-contained premises produced by "conversion, after the "commencement of this Act, of other premises"; that is, the whole of the house "Goldendene." There is no doubt that the landlord's proposal would have the effect of producing two separate and self-contained sets of premises, with a complete physical division of one from the other, and no internal communication between them; and further, of making each of them self-contained, having all the necessary living accommodation in itself and without any sharing or anything of that sort. Even the stairs were to be partitioned off, so that the tenant's premises could be reached from his own front door without passing through any part of the landlord's premises or sharing any means of access with her.

I see no answer to this objection. It seems to me that the alterations or the conversion here proposed to be effected would, when effected, result in the production of separate and self-contained premises which, by the terms of section 35, would thereby be excluded from the protection of the Act. In my judgment, therefore, the tenant is entitled to succeed on that ground as the matter stands at present, for at present what is offered, as I understand it, consists of the premises I have described—the upper floor and the lounge and also the garage—on a weekly tenancy at a rent to be agreed. If it is the case that section 35 (1) of the Act of 1954 is to take those premises out of the protection of the Act, then the tenant would get in exchange for his existing protected tenancy of the whole house an unprotected weekly tenancy of part of it.

In my view, that could not be regarded as satisfying the requirements of section 3 of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933: but that section does not say that the alternative accommodation must necessarily consist of premises to which the principal Acts apply, because subsection (3) provides: " . . . accommodation shall be deemed to " be suitable if it consists either (a) of a dwelling-house to which " the principal Acts apply; or (b) of premises to be let as a " separate dwelling on terms which will, in the opinion of the " court, afford to the tenant security of tenure reasonably equiva- " lent to the security afforded by the principal Acts in the case of " a dwelling-house to which those Acts apply." Therefore, if in the present case the landlord were to offer the same alternative accommodation to the tenant, but for a term of years instead of only on a weekly tenancy, she might be able to satisfy the county court judge that the security of tenure provided in respect of alternative accommodation was reasonably equivalent to the security provided by the Rent Acts; but, as the matter stands at present, I cannot see that this requirement is fulfilled.

Finally, the point was taken on behalf of the tenant that he was in possession of the whole of the premises as a statutory tenant, and was entitled to remain in undisturbed possession of those premises until such time as he was ordered to give up possession by an effective order of the court. It was contended that he was under no obligation, therefore, to allow access by workmen to the premises for the purpose of effecting the conversion which was to produce the alternative accommodation offered to him. That attitude on the part of a tenant situated as this tenant is may be regarded as an unreasonable attitude; but the argument is one which it is not altogether easy to answer and I do not propose, speaking for myself, to attempt any decided answer to it for the purposes of the present case. It may be that in such a case, if the county court judge was satisfied that the necessary work could be done without any serious degree of interference to the tenant, he might properly disregard the objection and find himself satisfied that suitable alternative accommodation would be available for the tenant when the order or judgment took effect, and would be available because the plaintiff by whom and at whose expense the alteration was to be done was ready, willing and able to do it, and the only obstacle to its being done was the tenant himself. Alternatively, it might be possible for a landlord seeking possession on the ground that alternative accommodation is available, to evolve some scheme under which accommodation was temporarily provided for the tenant and his family in some other place, so as to leave the dwelling-house in question free for the proposed conversion to be effected. The attitude taken by the tenant here is in this respect so unreasonable that it seems to me probable that any court would be disposed, if it could, to evolve some method of meeting it in one or other of the ways that I have suggested, or possibly by some other method.

Be that as it may, I do not propose to express any view on this question for the present purpose; but I think that this appeal should be allowed on the ground that the effect of section 35 (1) of the Act of 1954 would be to take the alternative accommodation out of the protection of the Rent Act and that, on the footing of the weekly tenancy now proposed, there would be no security of tenure reasonably equivalent to the security afforded by those Acts. Therefore, I would allow this appeal.

C. A.
1955
Scrace v. Windust.

Evershed M.R. I am of the same opinion and, although we are differing from the county court judge, I am in so full agreement with what has fallen from my brother that I cannot add anything useful for myself.

Romer L.J. I also entirely agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Lovell, Son & Pitfield for R. E. Druitt & Allfree, Christchurch; J. W. Richardson.

B. A. B.

[COURT OF APPEAL]

C. A.
1955
Feb. 4, 5.
Denning, Hodson and Parker L.JJ.

*LLEWELLYN v. LLEWELLYN.

Husband and Wife—Divorce—Delay—Cruelty—No condonation—Unreasonable delay.

A wife petitioned for divorce on the ground of her husband's cruelty. The judge found that she had established cruelty by her husband up to July, 1951; that she continued to live with her husband from July, 1951, until January, 1953; that during this period the husband had repented, wanted a reconciliation and was not cruel to his wife; that during this period the wife did not condone her husband's previous cruelty, but that she acted in an objectionable manner towards him throughout the period. The judge held that although the wife had established cruelty she had been guilty of unreasonable delay, and in the exercise of his discretion he dismissed the petition. The wife appealed:—

Held, that the court was not to be used as a place to which people could come for redress when it suited them; if the trial judge came to the conclusion that a weapon was being held in reserve over the head of the spouse who was affected then he was entitled, in the exercise of his discretion, to refuse to accede to the prayer of the petition. The judge had not misdirected himself as to the principles upon which discretion was exercised and the appeal, therefore, failed.

Per Denning L.J. If the husband repents of his wrongdoing, as he had done here, the wife cannot stay in the house and refuse to forgive him, and all the while hold the past over his head, ready to strike with a divorce whenever it suits her. She cannot play fast and loose with the marriage in that way.

Appeal from Davies J.

The wife, Marjorie Llewellyn, petitioned for divorce on the ground of her husband's cruelty. The husband denied cruelty and cross-petitioned on the grounds of cruelty and adultery. The cross-petition was dismissed. The judge formed the opinion that the husband was a man of very violent and uncontrollable temper who frequently flew into infantile rages. He found that the husband had been guilty of cruelty to his wife and had assaulted her on occasions in 1946, 1947 and 1951, but he further found that after June, 1951, the husband had done nothing which in any way amounted to cruelty. During the period June, 1951, to January, 1953, when the parties remained living together, the wife did not condone her husband's cruelty, though he pleaded with her to forgive him, but instead acted in an exceptionally nasty and objectionable way towards him and was deliberately hostile to him.

---

[Reported by G. D. Black, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Davis J. held that in remaining with her husband during the period June, 1951, to January, 1953, and in acting in the way that she did, she was guilty of unreasonable delay and he dismissed the petition.

The wife appealed.

F. Elwyn Jones Q.C. and Phillip Wien for the wife.
H. Edmund Davies, Q.C. and Meurig Evans for the husband.

The following cases were cited in argument in addition to those referred to in the judgments: Mortimer v. Mortimer [1]; Nicholson v. Nicholson [2]; Brougham v. Brougham [3]; Hughes v. Hughes and Williams [4]; Matthews v. Matthews [5]; Moor v. Moor.[6]

DENNING L.J.: I will ask Hodson L.J. to give the first judgment.

HODSON L.J. This is an appeal from a decision of Davies J. who, on July 27, 1954, dismissed the petition of the wife presented on the ground of cruelty. The form of the order is that the petitioner had sufficiently proved the contents of the petition, namely cruelty, but that she had been guilty of unreasonable delay in bringing the petition. Accordingly, the judge dismissed the petition and against that dismissal the wife appeals.

The petition was dated October 9, 1953, and contained allegations of cruelty extending until the parting which took place on January 9, 1953, from the date of the marriage which took place in April, 1943. The last sub-paragraph of the allegations of cruelty contains this language: "As a result of the respon- "dent's bad conduct and continuous unkindness the petitioner "was obliged to leave the respondent on January 9, 1953, since "when she has been apart from him." By his answer the husband denied the cruelty and alleged that the wife had been

[1] [1820] 2 Hag.Con. 310.
[2] (1873) L.R. 3 P. & D. 53.
[3] [1895] P. 288.
[4] (1915) 32 T.L.R. 62.
[5] (1860) 3 Sw. & Tr. 161.
[6] [1954] 1 W.L.R. 927; [1954] 2 All E.R. 459.

C. A.
1955
LLEWELLYN v. LLEWELLYN.
Hodson L.J.

guilty of cruelty towards him and asked for a divorce. By amendment the husband alleged that the wife had committed adultery with two named men who were cited and those were the issues that were fought at the trial which lasted for several days.

I can deal shortly was some of the issues. The husband's cross-charge of cruelty was dismissed by the judge, not because he found that the husband was wilfully untruthful but because he found that the husband had not established conduct which comes within the definition of cruelty as causing injury to his health or likely to do so. The position is that there was not sufficient substance in the husband's charges of cruelty to found a petition for divorce. So far as the charges of adultery were concerned, they were based entirely on statements made by the wife to a witness who was called on behalf of the husband, those statements being in themselves admissions of adultery with those two men. On that part of the case there was no evidence, apart from the so-called confession, of any association between the wife and those men. The result of that was that at the conclusion of the husband's case the men were dismissed from the suit, but there remained the evidence against the wife consisting of her own confession, and the judge came to a conclusion on that part of the case on which there is no appeal that the adultery had not been proved against her. He was not satisfied with the truthfulness of the wife as will appear when I make reference to his judgment. He thought it at any rate possible that the wife may have made statements of the kind which she was supposed to have made to this witness without there being any truth in them; in other words the statements may have been merely idle boasts of amorous affairs with other men, but he was satisfied in the absence of supporting evidence and on the inherent improbabilities of the charges of adultery themselves that no adultery had been established. I think there can be no doubt that the judge arrived at the right conclusion on that.

The circumstances in which the adultery with the first man was supposed to have been committed are such that adultery is exceedingly improbable, and even more so with regard to the second man, who is a Baptist minister. Adultery is supposed to have taken place, according to the wife's statement, in the man's own home with his sister there, and it is not surprising that on that slender basis of the wife's confession the judge should come to the conclusion that if such a thing was ever said it was mere idle talk. However, the result of the case was—and this is the strength of the wife's argument—that although the wife was disbelieved to a great extent, nevertheless the judge did find that the husband had been guilty of cruelty, and that such cruelty had not been condoned. Accordingly, said Mr. Elwyn Jones on behalf of the wife, prima facie, on that finding, the charge of adultery being negatived, the wife was entitled to a decree.

The judge, as the decree shows, dismissed the petition on the ground of unreasonable delay, and the argument in this court has been directed to that question, and to the further question: If there was unreasonable delay, was the judge right in exercising discretion in the way that he did? Mr. Elwyn Jones rightly made his main attack on the question whether the delay was reasonable or unreasonable, because the judge purported to exercise his discretion and it was not possible for counsel to point to any particular in which he had misdirected himself as to the principles upon which discretion is exercised, and he recognized that this court does not readily interfere with the exercise of judicial discretion, except of course where a judge has misapprehended the facts or acted upon some wrong principle.

So far as unreasonable delay is concerned, Mr. Elwyn Jones says, amongst other things, that he was really taken by surprise because the case was not fought on the basis of whether or not there was unreasonable delay, nothing of that kind appeared in the pleadings and the question came into existence in the judge's mind without counsel having had an opportunity of addressing him upon it, having regard to the way in which he had found the facts. If I may explain what I mean, if the judge had accepted the wife's evidence that cruelty had been proved throughout the marriage from the year 1943, till the date of departure in January, 1953, there would have been no question of unreasonable delay. The petition was presented in October and the period between January and October has no bearing on this question of delay. Contrary, I suppose, to the anticipation of anyone in the case, the judge's finding of cruelty stopped short at July, 1951, and therefore before I deal further with the question of delay, I will refer a little further to the facts of this case.

The parties having married in 1943, there were two children, a girl born on March 4, 1944, and a boy born on August 13, 1945. Although the wife's charges of cruelty extended over the period of the married life, they were, in so far as they are of importance, limited to a few instances. So far as the earlier instances are concerned the wife succeeded in proving that her husband had been violent towards her. The judge was of opinion that the husband was a man of very violent and uncontrollable temper. He used these words about him: ". . . he flew into "infantile rages . . . he really is not in a position to tell me what "happened or to remember the things that happened when he "was in one of those tantrums of rage." Dealing with the wife he said: "The wife on the other hand I am equally satisfied was "very often extremely nasty to him and the defects such as they "were in his temperament should have made it all the more "incumbent upon her to treat him kindly; but I am certain "that quite frequently she was guilty not of cruelty but of "objectionable conduct." Then he gives some examples of the

C. A.
1955
LLEWELLYN v. LLEWELLYN.
Hodson L.J.

objectionable conduct of this woman towards her husband. Of course, that would not justify the husband in treating his wife with violence of such an extreme character as to constitute cruelty, and this was recognized by the judge who found against him that he had assaulted her about the year 1946 by twisting her arm and bruising it, and that in 1947 in the course of an altercation he hit her right ear with his hand very hard so that she fell to the floor; the blow caused her ear-ring to pierce her ear and she had a bad ear and had to have penicillin injections. The judge continued: "Now the husband "admits that he hit her, but denies that he struck her; it was "a sort of self-defence back-hander and he caught her on the "ear and says the damage was really due to her ear-rings and not "his blow. It was a nasty unpleasant blow." There is another incident of violence not so important when the husband threw his dinner in the general direction of his wife, but did not hit her.

The crucial incident upon which the wife relies on the judge's findings occurred in July, 1951. As to this incident the judge preferred the wife's evidence because he thought her mentality was such that when she wished to tell the truth she was more able to remember with accuracy the truth of matters than her husband, who for the reasons which the judge has described, was not thought always capable of telling the truth. I need not relate in detail the scene which took place on that occasion, July, 1951. The husband was very angry with his wife and started off by tearing a book, and when the wife pursued him with a stick he got hold of the stick and beat her heavily across the backside, so heavily that weals were visible and seen by members of her family. That is the end of the wife's case on the judge's finding, because he held that after that, from July, 1951, until the parting in January, 1953, the wife proved nothing against her husband. Indeed, the proof was the other way, because the husband established that she was exceptionally nasty to him throughout that period.

The judge concluded: "I have said that I do not think it "possible to hold that the wife condoned the husband's conduct "up to July of 1951, which was the last instance; that is the "act of cruelty, and that it is such as to cause injury to health "or apprehension of injury to health. If the wife had left soon "after July, 1951, obviously on my finding of fact she would have "had a complete case. I do not mean to say for one moment "that a wife is bound to leave when her husband has been once "or twice guilty of cruelty to her, so that she is able to say "thereafter: 'He was cruel and I want a divorce.' On the "contrary, the court looks with very great favour on any attempt "by a wife, no matter at what cost to herself and no matter what "suffering she endures, to carry on with the marriage for the "sake of the children, but one asks oneself the question here, "why did she stay on for eighteen months being nasty to him, "there being as I find, with the possible exception of this incident " that does not interest me very much "—I will refer to that in a moment—" no wrongdoing by the husband at all." The judge is there negativing the finding that this woman was patiently enduring at all costs to herself with the idea of re-establishing the marriage and taking the view, I think, that she was holding her hand until it was convenient for her to strike at her husband, having in mind the weapon that she had or thought she had, namely, the assault which she had suffered at his hand.

I said I would refer back to one incident which the judge has mentioned, that is an incident which occurred in about October, 1952, when there was a scuffle. According to his finding, that scuffle was not a matter which could be relied upon by the wife, but was merely an instance of the wife telling her husband to get out. The scuffle followed upon that, and was not in any way an incident which could be relied upon by the wife as cruelty directed against her.

There are a number of passages in the judgment which are supported by the evidence that the conduct of this woman towards her husband was exceedingly objectionable during the period when, as I have said, she may well have thought she had a case against her husband, which she could use when she thought fit. A witness was called on her behalf. The judge made no finding as to the truth of his evidence, but the effect of it was that the wife said to him that she was deliberately making her husband's life hell during the last 18 months they were together. Whether she said that or not, that is the effect, I think, of the finding as to the wife's conduct during that period; that she was being deliberately hostile to her husband. Mr. Elwyn Jones has pointed out that that is not really a complete picture of her conduct, because there are instances—and he quite rightly emphasizes the instances—when the wife was well disposed towards her husband at any rate outwardly. There were occasions when she spoke of him as being kind to her when she was ill, and she spoke in not unfavourable terms of him to a Miss Llewellyn, to whom also she complained, during this period of 18 months, of the husband's temper; so that the picture is not all one colour. Nevertheless, I think the judge was warranted in his finding that that was the attitude of the wife during those 18 months, and accordingly it follows from that, the judge having rejected her evidence almost in toto as to the last 18 months—although it is true that he accepted the views she put forward that sexual intercourse had ceased between these parties in 1951, the husband having put it at a later date—but apart from that, as far as I can see on all matters of substance, the wife's evidence was, if not rejected, at any rate not accepted by the judge, and he came to the conclusion that she, although she had a case in July, 1951, when she left her husband in January, 1953, left him not because she had a case, but because it suited her. He was fortified in that conclusion by the finding that he had made that the wife's entry into this marriage was somewhat of a commercial

C. A.
1955
LLEWELLYN v. LLEWELLYN.
Hodson L.J.

nature, having regard to her belief in the wealth of the husband's family, and further that she appeared to have become embittered as time went on because the husband was not a very successful man, and from a worldly point of view the marriage had not been much good to her. He also found as a fact—and this may or may not have influenced him in his conclusions; I think it must have done—that at the time of the parting in January, 1953, the wife had made an arrangement with a friend and neighbour for letters from another man to be sent to a neighbour's house, the neighbour's house being used as an accommodation address. Actual receipt of those letters was not proved, at any rate, no letter was proved to have arrived before the parting, but the fact that the accommodation address had been arranged was proved to the judge's satisfaction by evidence from the husband of the woman to whom the letters were arranged to be addressed. Accordingly, the judge felt himself able to say: "Although I find "that there was some cruelty culminating in an act in July, 1951, "in the exercise of my discretion, the wife not having acted "properly, I will dismiss this petition."

In my judgment this court should not interfere with the judge's finding that there was in those circumstances unreasonable delay. It is true that in cases of petitions for divorce on the grounds of cruelty there is nothing in the books to guide one, but the statutes to which we have been referred make unreasonable delay a discretionary bar to all suits for divorce, and since 1937 the same consideration has applied to suits for judicial separation. In considering unreasonable delay, which appeared as a discretionary bar in the Act of 1857, it appears, I think, from the authorities that the statutory provision merely carried on the ecclesiastical practice which existed before, so that some assistance is to be gained from looking at earlier cases in considering the principles upon which this court will act. Karminski J., in Lowe v. Lowe,[1] made a review of those cases, in which the judges have from time to time dismissed petitions on the grounds of unreasonable delay, where the purpose of the proceedings was not relief from the marriage by a spouse who was complaining of the injury inflicted upon him or her, but some other purpose. There is a divorce case where adultery was alleged, Rickard v. Rickard and Bond,[2] in which the Court of Appeal upheld the judgment of Horridge J. Horridge J. had said (and this language was approved by the Court of Appeal) that the court could not be used as a place to which people could come for redress just when it suited their monetary interests to do so. Lord Sterndale M.R. agreed, substituting, however, the words "monetary interests of their families," because that was the interest in that particular case. But the principle seems to me to be the same whatever interests are to be considered: the court is not to be used as a place to which people can come for redress just when it suits them, and if the judge who tries the case comes to the conclusion that a weapon is being held in reserve over the head of the spouse who is affected, the court is entitled, in my judgment, in the exercise of its discretion to refuse to accede to the prayer of the petition. That is, I think, the effect of the judge's conclusions in the present case, having regard to the finding of fact that from 1951 until the parting this woman made no attempt to continue the marriage, but rather made herself continually objectionable to her husband, until it suited her to leave. In that state of affairs, on those findings, I think this appeal fails.

[1] [1952] P. 376; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 505; [1952] 2 All E.R. 671.

[2] (1921) 37 T.L.R. 511.

DENNING L.J. I agree. The last act of cruelty was in July, 1951, but the wife did not leave until January, 1953, 18 months later. During that time the husband repented and sought a reconciliation with his wife, but she refused; she rejected all his overtures and she was extremely nasty to him. In addition, she corresponded secretly with another man, who sent affectionate letters to her. After 18 months she left the house without any further cause at all, taking the two children with her. The husband was very upset, very anxious for her to come back, but she refused to do so and then brought this charge of cruelty against him.

There is no previous case of cruelty in the books where delay has been found to be a reason for refusing a divorce; nevertheless, I think the judge was justified in refusing it here. If the husband repents of his wrong-doing and seeks forgiveness, as he has done here, the wife cannot stay in the house and refuse to forgive him, and all the while hold the past over his head, ready to strike with a divorce whenever it suits her. She cannot play fast and loose with the marriage in that way.

The principle in Boulting v. Boulting[3] is in point: "The "petitioner must feel and suffer under the wrong of which "complaint is made, and the court must be satisfied that the "remedy is sought as a genuine relief from the pressure of that "grievance. Such is the beaten track of the decisions. It is "impossible to tread too faithfully in footsteps so wisely placed." So here it cannot be said that the wife, when she left the house, still suffered under the grievance of 18 months before. The judge thought that she was disappointed in the marriage; disappointed because her social position was not what she had hoped for, and eventually, at long last, for different reasons altogether than cruelty, she left her husband. In these circumstances I think that the judge was entitled to find that there was unreasonable delay in staying on for these 18 months before starting proceedings for cruelty. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

[3] (1864) 3 Sw. & T. 329.

C. A.
1955

LLEWELLYN v. LLEWELLYN.

PARKER L.J. I agree with both judgments and there is nothing I can usefully add.

HODSON L.J. I should like to add with regard to Mr. Elwyn Jones's argument on not having had an opportunity of discussing with the judge this particular feature of the case upon which the decision turns, that, in my judgment, it was open to the judge to act as he did, having regard to the fact that all the material which was relevant to his decision on the question of unreasonable delay had been examined in evidence and discussed. It is quite true that the particular line which he took depended upon a particular view of the evidence, and I am prepared to agree with Mr. Elwyn Jones that it would have been better if an opportunity had been given to counsel to give the judge further assistance on that matter, but I think that the fact that he did not do so is not a sufficient reason for sending the matter back for further argument.

DENNING L.J. I agree with what my brother has just said.

PARKER L.J. I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: C. James Hardwicke & Co., Cardiff; O. Glyndwr Davies, Bridgend.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1954
Nov. 15.

McNair J.

*BUCHANAN v. MOTOR INSURERS' BUREAU.

[1952 B. No. 2753.]

Road Traffic—"Road"—Meaning—Dock road—Accident due to negligent driving of motor-lorry—Driver not insured—Claim for damages—Judgment not satisfied—Liability of Motor Insurers' Bureau—Whether dock road a road "to which the public has "access"—Road Traffic Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5, c. 43), ss. 35 (1), 121 (1).

The plaintiff, a dock worker, was awarded damages of £2,000 in an action against a lorry driver in respect of injuries sustained in December, 1949, as the result of the negligent driving of a lorry on a road within the confines of the London Dock area. The lorry driver was uninsured and failed to pay the damages. The plaintiff sought to recover the £2,000 from the defendants claiming that the lorry driver ought, under section 35 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, to have been insured and that in those circumstances the defendants, by virtue of an agreement with the Ministry of Transport, were under a liability to satisfy the judgment. The defendants contended that the lorry driver was not required to be insured as the road on which the accident occurred was not a road to which the general public had access within the meaning of section 121 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, and that they were therefore under no liability to the plaintiff.

Persons had been refused admission to the area on the ground that they could not produce the appropriate pass required of persons not actually engaged in work in the docks:—

Held, that the place where the accident occurred was not a road to which the general public had access either as a matter of legal right or by tolerance of the Port authority, and therefore the defendants were under no liability to the plaintiff.

Harrison v. Hill 1932 S.C. (J.) 13 and Bugge v. Taylor [1941] 1 K.B. 198 applied.

ACTION.

On December 1, 1949, the plaintiff, Walpert Jocelyn Buchanan, a dock worker at the London Docks, was seriously injured as the result of the negligent driving of a lorry driver, one Terence Wilcox, who was driving a lorry on a dock road within the confines of the London Dock area forming part of the premises of the Port of London Authority. The lorry was being driven without the authority, knowledge or consent of its owner and there was, accordingly, no effective policy of insurance covering the driver's liability. The plaintiff sued the driver for damages for personal injuries and final judgment was entered for the plaintiff for £2,000 and costs. The driver failed to pay the damages and the plaintiff brought these proceedings against the Motor Insurers' Bureau claiming that as the lorry-driver ought, under section 35 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930,[1] to have been insured, the bureau were under a liability to satisfy the judgment by virtue of an agreement entered into with the Ministry of Transport in 1946 whereby the bureau undertook, inter alia, to accept liability where an ineffective judgment was obtained against any person in respect of liability required to be covered by a policy of insurance under Part II of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, whether or not such person was in fact covered by insurance.

The defendants denied liability. They contended that the road on which the accident took place was not a road within the meaning of sections 35 (1) and 121 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, and that in the premises the plaintiff's injury did not create any liability required to be covered by insurance.

Rudolph Castle-Miller for the plaintiff.

E. Ryder Richardson Q.C. and Adrian Head for the defendants.

[1] Road Traffic Act, 1930, s. 35 (1): "... it shall not be lawful for any "person to use ... a motor vehicle "on a road unless there is in force in "relation to the user of the vehicle "by that person ... a policy of "insurance ... in respect of third-"party risks as complies with the "requirements of this Part of this "Act."

S. 121 (1): "'Road' means any "highway and any other road to "which the public has access, and "includes bridges over which a road "passes."

1954

BUCHANAN v. MOTOR INSURERS' BUREAU.

The following cases were cited in argument: O'Brien v. *Trafalgar Insurance Co. Ld.; Harrison v. Hill†; Bugge v. Taylor.‡

McNAIR J. stated the facts, and continued: The basis of the plaintiff's claim is that the lorry driver at the time of the accident ought, under section 35 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, to have been insured; and if the circumstances of the accident were such that the lorry driver ought to have been insured, then it is admitted that the Motor Insurers' Bureau accept liability for judgments such as this, where the judgment in fact obtained is ineffective by reason of the defendant's want of means.

The circumstance which it is said resulted in the lorry driver not being required to be insured is that the place where the accident happened, namely, a road within the confines of the London Dock, forming part of the premises of the Port of London Authority, was not a road within the meaning of the Road Traffic Act, 1930. The definition of "road" in section 121 (1) of the Act is: "'Road' means any highway and any other road to which "the public has access and includes bridges over which a road "passes." Accordingly, my decision must turn entirely on whether I take the view on the facts as proved before me that the place where this unfortunate accident happened was a road within that definition.

I have been referred to three cases where this or similar questions have been considered by the courts, but it seems to me that the case which gives me the most assistance on the matter is Harrison v. Hill,[1] a decision of the Scottish courts. That case was considered and adopted by a Divisional Court of this Division in Bugge v. Taylor.[2] In Harrison v. Hill[3] the Lord Justice General, Lord Clyde, who was considering whether in the case before him a road leading from a public highway down to a farm house was a road within the meaning of the Road Traffic Act, had occasion to interpret the definition which I have just read, and he said[4]: "It is plain, from the terms of the definition, that "the class of road intended is wider than the class of public "roads to which the public has access in virtue of a positive "right belonging to the public, and flowing either from statute "or from prescriptive user. A road may therefore be within "the definition (1) although it belongs to the class of private "roads, and (2) although all that can be said with regard to its "availability to the public is that the public 'has access' to it. "I think that, when the statute speaks of 'the public' in this "connexion, what is meant is the public generally, and not the "special class of members of the public who have occasion for "business or social purposes to go to the farmhouse or to any part

* (1945) 61 T.L.R. 225.
† 1932 S.C.(J.) 13.
‡ [1941] 1 K.B. 198.
[1] 1932 S.C.(J.) 13.
[2] [1941] 1 K.B. 198.
[3] 1932 S.C.(J.) 13.
[4] Ibid. 16.

" of the farm itself; were it otherwise, the definition might just " as well have included all private roads as well as all public " highways.

" I think also that, when the statute speaks of the public " having ' access ' to the road, what is meant is neither (at one " extreme) that the public has a positive right of its own to " access, nor (at the other extreme) that there exists no physical " obstruction, of greater or less impenetrability, against physical " access by the public; but that the public actually and physically " enjoys access to it. It is, I think, a certain state of use or " possession that is pointed to. There must be, as a matter of " fact, walking or driving by the public on the road, and such " walking or driving must be lawfully performed—that is to say, " must be permitted or allowed, either expressly or implicitly, " by the person or persons to whom the road belongs. I include " in permission or allowance the state of matters known in right " of way cases as the tolerance of a proprietor." Lord Sands used much the same language when he said [5]: " In my view, any " road may be regarded as a road to which the public have access " upon which members of the public are to be found who have " not obtained access either by overcoming a physical obstruction " or in defiance of prohibition express or implied."

Those judgments seem to me to give clear guidance on the proper way of approaching the question of fact in this case, and the evidence lies in this way. The place of the accident was undoubtedly within the London Dock area and was within the 20 feet boundary wall which surrounds that area. Access to the place of the accident can only be obtained by going through one or other of the gates which the Port of London Authority have provided for entrance to the London Dock. The main entrance is a gate which is primarily used for vehicular traffic and for pedestrians, but there are a number of other gates. On behalf of the plaintiff it is said that, whatever may be the strict legal position, in fact, any member of the public who wishes to, can and does find his way into the London Docks; and although there may be policemen there, members of the public are not in fact stopped; but it is to be observed that the witnesses who spoke in that sense were all persons who had a legitimate right to be in the dock, either as dock workers or as lorry drivers taking goods into the dock, and in one case a claims assessor going into the dock for the legitimate purpose of finding out from the injured man in the present case where the accident actually happened. On the other hand, I have had called before me the chief inspector of the Port of London Authority police, who is in charge of the division which comprises the London Dock. He tells me that that area is in fact policed by the men under him, who have instructions to stop unauthorized persons from entering, and although these rights are no doubt exercised with discretion the

[5] Ibid. 17.

1954

BUCHANAN v. MOTOR INSURERS' BUREAU.

McNair J.

policemen soon get to know the regular users of the dock, in fact three or four times a week persons are refused admission to the dock because they are unable to produce a pass from the Port of London Authority entitling them to admission, such passes being required of any person not actually engaged in work in the docks.

In face of the evidence which has been given by that responsible officer it seems to me that it is quite impossible for me to hold that the place where this accident happened was a road to which the public, by which I mean the general public, have access either as a matter of legal right or by tolerance of the Port of London Authority. It would indeed be strange to find that in any great dock such as the Port of London or the Mersey Harbour Docks it was permissible for members of the public, without permission, to wander at large within the docks; and I am completely satisfied by the evidence which I have heard from the inspector that that is not the position in the London Docks.

The odd circumstance in the present case is that apparently the Port of London (Consolidation) Act, 1920, the private Act which regulated the Port of London Authority at the time of the accident, namely, December, 1949, provided by section 457 that for certain purposes the dock premises were to be deemed to be public places. That section provided: "The quays wharves "docks and other premises of the Port Authority . . . shall be "deemed to be public places" within the meaning of section 54 of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, "for the purposes of "making liable to the penalty . . . every person committing "within the . . . premises any of the following offences but no "further or otherwise . . ." One of the offences referred to is: "Every person who shall ride or drive furiously or so as to "endanger the life or limb of any person or to the common "danger of the passengers on the premises of the Port "Authority." Apparently, if anyone drove a donkey cart in the Port of London Authority area furiously or to common danger he could be prosecuted under the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, for doing that in a public place, but not if he drove a motor-car dangerously, because section 11 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, which deals with dangerous driving, was not incorporated into the Port of London legislation until 1950, when section 21 of the Port of London Act, 1950, expressly provided that dock roads were to include, in effect, any land which is accessible to motor vehicles. It was further provided that "the Road Traffic Acts "shall have effect as if in the provisions thereof hereinafter "mentioned the expression 'road' included a dock road." Amongst the sections incorporated is section 35 of the Road Traffic Act which requires users of motor vehicles to insure against third party risks, and section 11. Accordingly, if this accident had happened, not in December, 1949, but after July 12, 1950, when the Act of 1950 came into operation, the Motor Insurers' Bureau would have been liable on their promise. But, seeing that the accident took place before the Act of 1950 came into operation, the point taken by the defendants is in law a good point. There must, accordingly, be judgment for the defendants.

1954

BUCHANAN v. MOTOR INSURERS' BUREAU.

Judgment for defendants.

Solicitors: Darracotts; Hair & Co.

E. M. W.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.]

*REGINA v. WILSON.

C. C. A.

1955 Jan. 12.

Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Sellers JJ.

Criminal Law—Assault—Aggravated assault—Conviction of common assault—Assault with intent to resist arrest—Unlawful arrest—Whether jury may convict of common assault—Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 38.

The appellant was charged under section 38 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, with assault on a gamekeeper with intent to evade lawful arrest. It appeared from the evidence at the trial that owing to a technicality the attempted arrest was unlawful. The judge directed the jury that the appellant could not be convicted under the section, but directed that he might be convicted of common assault if the jury were of the opinion that he used more force than necessary to avoid the unlawful apprehension. The jury convicted the appellant of common assault and he appealed on the ground that such conviction was not open to them:—

Held, that an assault with intent to evade arrest was simply one form of aggravated assault, requiring proof of an assault and intent to evade arrest. If the assault was proved, but the intent to evade arrest was not, the accused could be found guilty of assault, because that was an ingredient of the first offence; accordingly, the appellant was rightly convicted.

APPEAL against conviction.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment.

Peter Bruce for the appellant.

A. Ellis for the Crown.

The following cases were referred to in argument: Rex v. Hollingberry [1]; Reg. v. St. George [2]; Reg. v. Sandys.[3]

[Reported by G. D. BLACK, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

[1] (1825) 4 B. & C. 329.
[2] (1840) 9 C. & P. 483.
[3] (1844) 1 Cox C.C. 8.

C. C. A.
1955
REGINA
v.
WILSON.

LORD GODDARD C.J. The appellant appeals by certificate granted by the deputy chairman of the Nottinghamshire Quarter Sessions before whom he was convicted of common assault. He was, along with another man, found poaching by a gamekeeper and he was charged with an assault on the gamekeeper with intent to evade arrest, contrary to section 38 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861. The reason why he was thus charged was because under section 31 of the Game Act, 1831, a gamekeeper is entitled to arrest a person he finds in pursuit of conies, as this man was, but he must first ask for his full Christian name, surname and address. The gamekeeper in the present case, who gave evidence with commendable frankness, although given every opportunity of saying what he had said in the magistrates' court where he said he had asked the appellant for his full name and address, apparently before the jury said he had only asked for his name. Thus arises one of those technicalities which it would be a good thing to have abolished, because very often a gamekeeper may know perfectly well where a person lives though he does not know his name. Nevertheless the statute requires that before he arrests a person the gamekeeper must ask for the person's name and address. The deputy chairman, therefore, quite properly ruled that the appellant could not be charged with the offence of intent to prevent lawful apprehension under section 38 of the Act of 1861 because the apprehension was not lawful as his full name and address had not been asked for. But the deputy chairman directed the jury that they might find the appellant guilty of a common assault if they were of opinion that he used more force than necessary to avoid the unlawful apprehension. That again is a perfectly unimpeachable statement of the law. If a person is purporting to arrest another without lawful warrant, the person arrested may use force to avoid being arrested, but he must not use more force than necessary. In the present case, no doubt, what the court thought was the serious part of the case, and I think the jury must have done so too, was that the appellant threatened to get out knives, and called out "Get out knives," which itself would be an assault, in addition to kicking the gamekeeper. At any rate the jury came to the conclusion that he did use more force than necessary for repelling the unlawful arrest.

Mr. Bruce, although agreeing that in those circumstances the appellant could have been found guilty of common assault had he been charged with that offence, submitted that he could not, on a charge of intent to evade arrest, be found guilty of common assault. I think, with all respect to the interesting argument Mr. Bruce has put up, that the argument fails. An assault with intent to evade arrest is simply one form of aggravated assault, that is to say, it is an assault with circumstances of aggravation which allow a heavier sentence to be passed than for a simple assault. But of course it involves an assault and what has happened here is that the jury have found the man guilty of an assault without aggravation and the law has been well established over a great number of years that where a man is charged with an offence he may be found guilty of a lesser offence of the same quality. This seems, therefore, to be an a fortiori case. It was necessary to prove an assault and necessary to prove intent to evade arrest. The assault was proved, but the intent to evade arrest was not, so that part of the offence failed. Therefore, the accused can be found guilty of the offence of assault, because that is an ingredient of the offence. It simply means that the jury have found him guilty of the act complained of, but without the matter of aggravation. Therefore, in my opinion the deputy chairman was perfectly right in leaving this case to the jury. The cases cited show that, on a charge of feloniously attempting to shoot or of felonious wounding, there may be a conviction for common assault. So here, we are clearly of opinion that a verdict of common assault was justified in this case. We cannot measure the amount or weigh the actual violence; it was a common assault. An assault was necessary to prove the offence laid in the indictment, but the intent laid in the indictment failed. For these reasons the conviction is upheld.

C. C. A.

1955

REGINA v. WILSON.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Hibbert & Son, Mansfield; Registrar, Court of Criminal Appeal.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1955

Mar. 18, 21.

Evershed M.R., Jenkins and Romer L.JJ.

* WHITMORE AND ANOTHER v. LAMBERT.

[Plaint No. K. 626.]

Landlord and Tenant—Rent restriction—Death of contractual tenant—Widow named as executrix of valid will—Death of widow without proving will—Whether tenant died "intestate"—Whether on tenant's death widow remained as contractual tenant, or by virtue of statutory right—Right of adopted daughter to remain in possession—Admissibility of evidence of unproved will—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 17), s. 12 (1) (g)—Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 23), s. 5.

Executor—Position before probate. Will—Unproved will—Effect.

In 1922 the contractual tenant of a dwelling-house within the Rent Acts died, leaving a will naming his widow sole beneficiary and executrix. She did not prove the will, but remained in possession of the premises, paying the rent which was subsequently increased from time to time. In 1953 she died and an adopted daughter, who had resided with her for many years, sought to remain in possession of the premises, relying on section 12 (1) (g)

C. A.

1955

WHITMORE v. LAMBERT.

of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920:—

Held, (1) that the unproved will was admissible in evidence to prove the fact that the tenant had made a will which complied with the requirements of the Wills Act, 1837.

(2) That since the widow could have justified her entry on the premises by the will, it could not be said that her continued occupation was necessarily referable only to section 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920; that the proper inference to be drawn from the facts was that her occupancy was on a contractual basis until the increases of rent had operated to determine the contractual tenancy and to substitute therefor a statutory tenancy, or alternatively that the landlords were estopped from denying that the widow's occupancy, before the increases of rent, was on a contractual basis.

(3) That the adopted daughter could not be prevented from relying on section 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920 on the ground that the legal estate, if any, at the death of the widow, was outstanding in the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court.

Mackley v. Nutting [1949] 2 K.B. 55; 65 T.L.R. 255; [1949] 1 All E.R. 413 followed.

Quaere, whether the words "dying intestate" in section 12 (1) (g) (as unamended) meant dying without a will which had been admitted to probate or its equivalent.

APPEAL from Judge Wrangham sitting at Bedford County Court.

On March 29, 1922, one John Ingram, the contractual tenant of premises known as 14 George Street, Bedford, within the protection of the Rent Acts, died. At the time of his death John Ingram was a contractual tenant paying a rent of £1 6s. 8d. monthly. He left a will in which he appointed as sole executrix his widow, Mercy Ingram, but she never proved the will. Mrs. Ingram was living with her husband at the time of his death and continued in possession of the premises until she died on June 14, 1953, paying a rent which by the time she died had been increased to £2 5s. 7d. monthly. In 1924 Mrs. Ingram informally adopted the defendant, Mary Ann Lambert, who was then about 10 years old, assuming towards her the obligations as to maintenance and upbringing of a parent to a child. The defendant lived with Mrs. Ingram in the premises until Mrs. Ingram died. On July 21, 1953, probate of Mrs. Ingram's will was granted to the defendant as sole executrix. On June 30, 1953, the plaintiffs, as landlords, wrote to the defendant requiring her to give up possession of the premises, and on June 10, 1954, they served a notice to quit dated June 9, 1954, on the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division in respect of the tenancy of John Ingram which they alleged had vested in the President on the tenant's death intestate in 1922.

In August, 1954, the plaintiffs brought proceedings claiming possession. The county court judge held that, as the widow did not take out probate to the will she could not have derived any title to the tenancy under the will: her continued occupancy must, on that footing, have been referable to the rights arising in favour of a member of a deceased tenant's family by virtue of section 12 (1) (g) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920,* which, accordingly, could not operate a second time at her death in favour of the defendant. He held that the legal estate had vested in the President and had been duly determined by service of the notice to quit in 1954; and he, therefore, ordered the defendant to give up possession in three months.

The defendant appealed.

Anthony Goodall for the defendant.

T. H. K. Berry for the plaintiffs.

In addition to the cases referred to in the judgments the following were cited in argument: Phillips v. Welton†; Thynne v. Salmon‡; Attorney-General v. Partington,§ and Powell v. Cleland.¶

EVERSHED M.R. From time to time difficult points of an unusual character arise under the Rent Restriction legislation, perhaps because that legislation has been superimposed on and interferes with (sometimes in language which may not have been too closely thought out) the relationship naturally arising under the ordinary law. This case appears to be an example and is found to raise (though not, I think, in the end to turn on) the scope of the words "dying intestate" in section 12 (1) (g) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920. The point is not likely to recur, save very infrequently, for the words "dying intestate" have ceased for some 20 years past to be a part of the paragraph to which I refer. They were in fact excluded from it by amendment in 1935.[1] It may have been thought that the words "dying intestate" were in any case not well chosen, for the question might arise whether a person died intestate for the purpose of the paragraph if he had made a will which was duly proved but which did not mention the premises which were the subject of the claim to possession. It is, however, not necessary to consider the reason: the fact is, that the words I have mentioned are now no part of the Act of Parliament.

The relevant facts are these: one John Ingram went into occupation of the premises in question known as 14 George Street, Bedford, in or about 1920, and he paid a rent of £1 6s. 8d. per

* Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 12 (unamended): "(1) . . . (g) . . . "the expression 'tenant' includes the "widow of a tenant dying intestate "who was residing with him at the "time of his death, or, where a "tenant dying intestate leaves no "widow or is a woman, such member "of the tenant's family so residing as "aforesaid as may be decided in "default of agreement by the county "court."

† [1948] 2 All E.R. 845.

‡ [1948] 1 K.B. 482; 64 T.L.R. 63; [1948] 1 All E.R. 49.

§ (1864) 3 H. & C. 193.

¶ [1948] 1 K.B. 262; 63 T.L.R. 626; [1947] 2 All E.R. 672.

[1] See s. 1 of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1935.

C. A.
1955
WHITMORE v. LAMBERT.
Evershed M.R.

month. Mr. Ingram died on March 29, 1922, and thereupon his widow, Mrs. Ingram, continued in occupation of the premises. She so continued for over 30 years until she died on June 14, 1953. In 1924 she adopted the defendant, Miss Mary Ann Lambert, who was then a young girl aged about 10 years. I have said "adopted," but this was not a case of adoption subject to the Adoption Act, 1950. Mrs. Ingram assumed towards Miss Lambert the obligations as to maintenance and upbringing of a parent to a child. After Mrs. Ingram's death in 1953 the defendant has in turn remained in occupation of the premises and she is now over 40 years of age. The defendant is also the legal personal representative of Mrs. Ingram whose will she proved. That might well have a bearing on the conclusion of this case. Thus, if Mrs. Ingram had been found to be a contractual tenant at her death, the defendant's right would have been quâ personal representative a successor to Mrs. Ingram's contractual right. But I think (and there has been no argument to the contrary) that if Mrs. Ingram became, after her husband's death, a contractual tenant, a series of increases of rent made her a statutory tenant by the date of her death. At any rate, Mr. Goodall's argument for the defendant has rested solely upon rights which he seeks to derive for her under section 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920; and we have accordingly confined ourselves to that submission.

The present proceedings for possession were brought by the plaintiffs, who appear to have acquired the premises, subject to Mrs. Ingram's occupation, somewhere in the early nineteen-thirties. Before starting the proceedings they duly served notice to quit upon the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court. No grounds have been suggested whereby the plaintiffs could obtain an order for possession (that is, for example, under one or other of the provisions of the First Schedule to the Act of 1933) if the defendant is in truth now a tenant within the meaning of the Act. The plaintiffs say that she is not; and the question is whether they are correct in so asserting.

If then the defendant is to succeed upon the case submitted on her behalf she must bring herself within section 12 (1) (g). I have referred to it many times and it is familiar, but it would be right that I should refer to some of its language with the reminder that, although one often speaks of "claiming under "section 12 (1) (g)," it is only so by virtue of the extended definition which that paragraph gives to the word "tenant." [His Lordship read the subsection as set out above and continued:] So far as the defendant is concerned she claims under the latter part of the definition; but by the time Mrs. Ingram died the words "dying intestate" had been excluded so that such a qualification was no longer necessary in the defendant's case.

It may be taken as well settled, as regards any premises and any family, that the paragraph can only operate once, that is without the machine being, as it were, wound up for a new start by the grant or creation of a fresh contractual tenancy. Thus, if A be the tenant, whether contractual or statutory (Moodie v. Hosegood [2]), on A's death his widow may claim the benefit of the definition under paragraph (g). If she does so, on her death no member of her family can invoke the paragraph unless, as I have said, a new start has been made by the creation of a new contractual relationship with Mrs. A. It follows that the defendant has in the present case two obstacles to surmount. She has first to show that Mrs. Ingram was not a mere "section 12 "(1) (g) tenant" at the date of her death or at any other relevant time; and, second, she must show that she herself qualifies as a "member of the tenant's family so residing as aforesaid." The second point has been conceded in her favour and that obstacle is, therefore, removed.

At the trial the defendant sought on the first matter to show that Mr. Ingram was never a tenant at all. He was, it appears, a meek military musician, and Mrs. Ingram was the more dominating character, from which it was to be inferred that she herself had always been the tenant. The defendant failed on that matter of fact. It was held by the judge (and his finding cannot be disturbed) that Mr. Ingram was a contractual tenant of these premises at the date of his death. It follows, therefore, that unless a new contractual tenancy in favour of Mrs. Ingram came into existence, or something equivalent thereto, she was either a mere licensee or she owed her rights to the operation of paragraph (g). The judge's conclusion was: "Mrs. Ingram was "no more than a tenant under section 12 (1) (g)." If that is right it is, of course, an end of the defendant's case.

In this court, however, a new point has been raised on her behalf to the effect that Mrs. Ingram could not be a "section 12 "(1) (g) tenant" for the simple reason that Mr. Ingram did not in fact die intestate. It should be remembered that at the time when he died, paragraph (g) required of a widow who was claiming under that paragraph that her husband, the tenant, should have died intestate. It is not in doubt that no representation to the estate of Mr. Ingram was ever taken out, either by way of grant of letters of administration or by way of probate of a will; but evidence was given before the county court judge that Mr. Ingram had in fact made a will in accordance with the terms of the Wills Act, 1837. That evidence was objected to by Mr. Berry and he maintained his objection in this court. It does not appear that the objection was noted by the judge at the time but he said: "John Ingram made a will. In that will his widow "was named as sole beneficiary and executrix. Now if Mrs. "Ingram had taken out probate of the will she would have been "entitled, upon taking the proper steps, to succeed to her "husband's tenancy"—meaning thereby, of course, the contractual tenancy—"and would then have been a tenant within

[2] [1952] A.C. 61; [1951] 2 T.L.R. 455; [1951] 2 All E.R. 582.

C. A.
1955
WHITMORE v. LAMBERT.
Evershed M.R.

"the words of section 12 (1) (f) of the Act. But she never did. "Probate of that will has never been taken out. Mrs. Ingram "never acted as executrix. In these circumstances it seems to "me that section 5 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, "affords a complete answer to any contention that Mrs. Ingram "derived any title to the tenancy of 14 George Street under the "will of her husband; nor, as I understood him, was Mr. "Bairstow," who then appeared for the defendant, "able to "argue to the contrary."

Section 5 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (which was not in operation when Mr. Ingram died), provides: "Where a person appointed executor by a will—(i) survives the "testator but dies without having taken out probate of the will; ". . . . his rights in respect of the executorship shall wholly "cease, and the representation to the testator and the adminis- "tration of his real and personal estate shall devolve and be "committed in like manner as if that person had not been "appointed executor." Although that section was not in operation when Mr. Ingram died, it reproduces the terms of the Court of Probate Acts of 1857 and 1858.[3] The new point challenges the validity of the judge's conclusion, particularly his view that section 5 of the Administration of Estates Act, or its predecessor, afforded an answer to the point. I have said that the matter as raised by Mr. Goodall in this court is a new point, for it will be recalled that his predecessor before the county court judge was unable to argue to the contrary of the conclusion stated by the judge. This, however, is a Rent Restriction Act case and, in any event, Mr. Berry, for the plaintiffs, has conceded that Mr. Goodall ought to be entitled to submit his argument in this court, whether or not it was involved in that submitted in the county court.

Mr. Berry's argument in support of the conclusion is of a general character. He says that no evidence of any will or of its contents, when the will has not been proved, can ever be received except for purely collateral purposes. For example, it may be proved that A.B. was alive at a certain date by proof of his signature being on a document which was executed on that date. But, says, Mr. Berry, an instrument cannot be proved to be a will properly within the terms of the Wills Act unless that will has already been proved, or unless it is sought to be proved in the course of proceedings for obtaining probate or letters of administration cum testamento annexo.

Mr. Berry referred us to section 60 of the County Courts Act, 1934, and to section 150 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, and claimed that to admit the evidence here would involve the county court exercising a probate jurisdiction as a matter of procedure which it was not entitled (nor intended) in any way to do. I do not think that that broad proposition can be sustained in its wide form. It is no doubt perfectly true that the title to any property of a deceased person cannot be finally made good by virtue of his testamentary disposition unless that disposition has been admitted to probate. But, in my judgment, it is no less clear that a person appointed executor or executrix by will can do a number of things, and justify doing them, in regard to the property which was in the possession of the deceased, by virtue of the will before that will is proved: even though, because the executor or executrix dies, it never is proved, or capable of being proved by virtue of section 5 of the Administration of Estates Act.

[3] See s. 16 of the Act of 1858.

One such thing which the executor may do or justify doing is entering upon property which was in the ownership and occupation, or in the occupation only, of the deceased. In support of that reference may be usefully made to Williams on Executors, (1921), 11th ed., vol. 1, p. 213, as follows: "Upon the principles "stated in the course of the preceding section, it has been held "that the executor, before he proves the will, may do almost all "the acts which are incident to his office, except only some of "those which relate to suits. Thus he may seize and take into "his hands any of the testator's effects, and he may enter peaceably into the house of the heir, for that purpose, and to take "specialities and other securities for the debts due to the "deceased. He may pay, or take releases of, debts owing from "the estate; and he may receive or release debts which are owing "to it; and distrain for rent due to the testator. . . . So he may "sell, give away, or otherwise dispose, at his discretion, of the "goods and chattels of the testator, before probate; he may "assent to, or pay, legacies; he may enter on the testator's "terms for years." Those general propositions represented the state of the law when Mr. Ingram died and have not been qualified by the subsequent changes in the law.

We were also referred by Mr. Berry to a passage from the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the Privy Council delivered by Lord Parker in Chetty v. Chetty.[4] The facts of that case are not material for present purposes, but in the judgment Lord Parker said[5]: "It is quite clear that an executor derives his "title and authority from the will of his testator, and not from "any grant of probate. The personal property of the testator, "including all rights of action, vests in him upon the testator's "death, and the consequence is that he can institute an action in "the character of executor before he proves the will. He cannot, "it is true, obtain a decree before probate, but this is not because "his title depends on probate, but because the production of "probate is the only way in which, by the rules of the court, he "is allowed to prove his title." As regards section 5 it will be observed that in the case of a sole executor dying before he has taken out probate, the result is that that executor's personal representatives cannot take out probate of the original will so as [4] (1916) 85 L.J.P.C. 179. [5] Ibid. 181.

C. A.
1955
WHITMORE v. LAMBERT.
Evershed M.R.

to relate their title back to the death. In that event, they would have to apply for a grant of letters of administration. That, however, is not the point which is involved in the present case. I do not for my part conceive it necessary, or indeed desirable, to attempt any exhaustive statement of the purposes for which evidence may be given of an unproved will; nor do I think it necessary to express any concluded view upon the question whether the words "dying intestate" in the original paragraph (g) of section 12 (1) of the Rent Act of 1920 mean, and mean only, dying without a will which has been admitted to probate or its equivalent. I think it sufficient to say that, in my view, the facts of Mr. Ingram having made a will appointing his widow sole executrix, and having made it duly in accordance with the requirements of the Wills Act, was a fact properly admissible in evidence in this case; and I think that, having been admitted, that fact has a strong bearing on the question which the court is called upon to answer. For, whatever be the true meaning of section 12 (1) (g) of the Act, Mrs. Ingram quite clearly after her husband's death could have justified her entry upon the premises by reference to the fact that she had been appointed by her husband as his sole executrix, and she could thereafter at any time, if necessary, have proved the will.

It was suggested that Mrs. Ingram may not have known or perhaps did not know of the existence of the will. I cannot draw any such inference. Where the will came from at the trial appears to me to be somewhat of a mystery, but having regard to the facts which are known of the circumstances affecting Mr. and Mrs. Ingram's relations together as man and wife, I think it highly improbable that she did not know of the making of the will and, in the absence of something to the contrary, I should infer that she did know. It follows, therefore, that it cannot be said, in my judgment, that Mrs. Ingram's continued occupation after her husband's death could only have been referable to a statutory claim on her part under section 12 (1) (g); and once that stage is reached, what thenceforward is the proper inference to be drawn on the whole matter?

The court has been supplied with two rent books. The first begins in October, 1923, and there is inserted on the outside against the printed phrase "Tenant's name"—"Mrs. Ingram"; and it appears that rent at the contractual rate of £1 6s. 8d. went on being paid until, at any rate, March, 1928. The second rent book, which was not a printed form, but was created out of an ordinary small notebook, states on the left hand inside cover: "Mrs. Ingram, 14 George Street, tenant of F. G. Whitmore," that is, one of the plaintiffs. It is opened on the right hand side under the general heading "Rent due and paid November 1," and then the date is repeated in figures "1/11/35, F. Whitmore." On the inside cover again there is written "Two guineas per "month including rates," and below that: "From March 1, "1940, £2 3s. 4d." and "From July 1, £2 5s 7d." The book appears to show that the rents at those varying rates were paid regularly right up to the close of the entries in 1953.

I have already said that Mrs. Ingram remained in possession on the terms recorded in these books for about 30 years. There is no evidence that the landlords, either the predecessors of the present plaintiffs, or the plaintiffs, made any inquiry whether Mrs. Ingram continued in occupation by virtue of a will left by her husband or otherwise. In my judgment, therefore, the plaintiffs cannot successfully say that all that occurred during Mrs. Ingram's occupancy after her husband's death should be attributed to a right which she had by virtue of section 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920, which left to her landlords no course open other than to act as they did. In all the circumstances of the case (including, as I have said, the fact that when Mr. Ingram died Mrs. Ingram's occupation could have been referred by her to the fact of her husband's will), I think that the proper inference is that her situation as occupant of the house after her husband's death ought now to be treated as having been upon a contractual basis until the increases of rent brought into operation the effect of the Act to determine the contractual tenancy, and substitute therefor a statutory tenancy. Alternatively, I think that on these facts the plaintiffs are estopped from denying that Mrs. Ingram's early occupation, until the increases of rent, was upon a contractual and not upon a statutory basis. It follows, therefore, from those premises that, in my judgment, the defendant should have succeeded, and that section 5 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, did not provide any answer to the defendant's claim.

One final point was suggested. It was said that since no representation was taken out to the estate of Mr. Ingram, the legal estate in the tenancy had been outstanding in the President of the Probate Court, or his predecessor, from 1923 until it was determined by the notice to quit in 1954; so that, when Mrs. Ingram died it was impossible then for anything to pass on to the defendant, Mrs. Ingram having at most merely a contractual right enforceable in a court of equity. In my judgment, that objection cannot be sustained, and I think it is covered by certain observations of Cohen L.J., who delivered the leading judgment of the Court of Appeal in Mackley v. Nutting.[6] That case in many respects bears a strong resemblance on its facts to the present case. Upon this point it was similarly suggested that the defendant in the case, Miss Nutting, could not rely upon the paragraph. Cohen L.J. said[7]: "Mrs. Nutting," who corresponds for the present purpose with Mrs. Ingram, "had she "been alive could, therefore, clearly have relied on estoppel "against the landlords. Does that right pass to the defendant, "Miss Nutting", who corresponds with the present defendant,

[6] [1949] 2 K.B. 55; 65 T.L.R. 255; [1949] 1 All E.R. 413.

[7] [1949] 2 K.B. 55, 62.

C. A.
1955
WHITMORE v. LAMBERT.
Evershed M.R.

"as her legal representative? In my opinion, it does." Then the Lord Justice cited a passage from Spencer Bower on Estoppel, (1923) [p. 151]: "'Speaking generally, on the death or disability "'of the representee, the persons who in right of him or his "'estate would be entitled to enforce any contract made with "'him are the persons who can take advantage of any rule of "'evidence, and, therefore, of any estoppel, which would be "'available to the representee if alive, or free from disability.'" I think from that language, and the earlier part of the judgment which I do not read, it is clear that in the present case, as in Mackley v. Nutting,[8] the answer is that the somewhat artificial situation created by the circumstance of Mrs. Ingram's death that the legal estate, if any estate was then involved, was outstanding in the President does not prevent the defendant from alleging and relying upon section 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920.

For these reasons, which involve matters which were not, of course, before the judge, and which he did not have an opportunity of considering as we have had, I think this appeal should be allowed, and that the claim by the plaintiffs for possession should have been dismissed.

JENKINS L.J. I agree.

ROMER L.J. I also agree.

Appeal allowed without costs. Defendant's costs to be taxed as between solicitor and client under the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949.

Solicitors: Bird & Bird for J. Garrard & Allen, Bedford; Field, Roscoe & Co. for C. C. Bell & Son, Bedford.

E. D.

[8] [1949] 2 K.B. 55.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1955
Mar. 31;
Apr. 1, 4.
Evershed M.R., Jenkins and Romer L.JJ.

*CLAYTON (VALUATION OFFICER) v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION.

Rates and Rating—Assessment—Rateable value—Dock undertaking—Valuation of office premises—"Profits basis"—Rating and Valuation Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 90), s. 22.

The British Transport Commission owned and occupied certain offices as part of their dock undertaking at Hull. These offices were formerly railway hereditaments within section 1 of the Railway (Valuation for Rating) Act, 1930, and, as such, were exempted from rates. In 1952 the hereditament ceased to be used for railway purposes and became used for the dock purposes of the Commission and, accordingly, ceased to qualify for exemption from rates. On the question whether the hereditaments should be valued on the "profits basis" as part of the dock undertaking, or under section 22 (1) of the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, by reference to the rent which they would command as commercial offices if so let:—

Held (1) that under modern rating law and practice a public utility undertaking was, prima facie, rated upon the profits basis and that something of a very exceptional character would be needed to exclude the application of that method of assessment; (2) that if the profits basis were to be applied at all in a case to which it was prima facie applicable, there was no room for making material distinctions in treatment between individual hereditaments and between types of hereditaments among the totality of the undertaking's indirectly productive hereditaments; and that the adoption for the dock undertaking of the British Transport Commission as a whole of the profits basis of assessment negatived the extraction for separate assessment on a wholly different basis of individual hereditaments.

Metropolitan Water Board v. Chertsey Assessment Committee [1916] 1 A.C. 337; 32 T.L.R. 168; Kingston Union v. Metropolitan Water Board [1926] A.C. 331; 42 T.L.R. 275 and Metropolitan Water Board v. Hertford Corporation [1953] 1 W.L.R. 622; [1953] 1 All E.R. 1047 applied.

Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Birkenhead Overseers (1873) L.R. 8 Q.B. 445 not followed.

Decision of the Lands Tribunal affirmed.

APPEAL from the Lands Tribunal by case stated.

The appellant, Glanville Clayton, the valuation officer for the Kingston-upon-Hull rating area, appealed from a decision of the Lands Tribunal affirming a determination of the local valuation court as to the values at which hereditaments described as dock offices in Queen Street, Hull, occupied by the British Transport Commission through the Docks and Inland Waterways Executive should be added to the valuation list.

After the passing of the Local Government Act, 1948, the hereditaments in question being railway and canal hereditaments were omitted from the valuation list by virtue of section 89 (4). In January, 1952, the hereditaments ceased to satisfy the requirements of that Act, being occupied and used solely in connexion with the Hull Docks. The hereditaments if vacant could be readily let as commercial offices. The local valuation court gave directions that the hereditaments should be added to the valuation list with rateable values of £208, £20 and £13, on the basis that the hereditaments ought to be valued as part of the dock undertaking. It was agreed that, if the hereditaments ought to be valued on that basis, the determination of the valuation court was correct. The valuation officer appealed against that determination contending that the hereditaments ought to be valued under section 22 (1) (a) of the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, at the rent which they would command as offices. On this footing it was agreed that the rateable values would be £2,288, £288 and £234 respectively.

C. A.
1955
CLAYTON
v.
BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION.

The Lands Tribunal dismissed the appeal and affirmed the determination of the local valuation court and held that, in view of the fact that the hereditaments were occupied and used solely in connexion with the docks, they were hereditaments which fell to be valued as part of the dock undertaking on the profits basis and did not fall to be valued under section 22 (1) (a) of the Act of 1925.

The valuation officer appealed.

M. L. Lyell Q.C. and Patrick Browne for the valuation officer.

Michael Rowe Q.C. and K. D. Potter for the British Transport Commission.

Cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgments.

EVERSHED M.R. This is an appeal by the valuation officer for the Kingston-upon-Hull rating area, and relates to certain premises owned and occupied by the British Transport Commission through the Docks and Inland Waterways Executive as part of the dock undertaking of that executive. The premises consist of offices which were formerly railway hereditaments within the meaning of section 1 of the Railways (Valuation for Rating) Act, 1930, and were rated accordingly until the commencement of the Local Government Act, 1948. By section 85 of that Act railway or canal hereditaments were exempted from rates and, because the premises then answered that description, they were therefore removed from the valuation list. In January, 1952, however, the use of the premises was changed from railway purposes to dock purposes; and, since the definition of railway and canal hereditaments in section 86 of the Act of 1948 does not include hereditaments used for dock purposes, they ceased to qualify for the exemption and became liable to be restored to the valuation list. The question in the case is: at what values should they be restored?

In paragraph 8 of the case stated it is said that it was agreed between the parties for the purposes of the appeal before the Lands Tribunal that, if the valuation officer was entitled to make an independent valuation of these hereditaments by reference to the rent which they would command as commercial offices, then the figures which he had proposed would not be excessive, and also that "if the hereditaments ought to be valued as part of "the dock undertaking" the values should be those determined by the local valuation court. That agreement is in fact recorded in certain correspondence annexed to the case.

It was contended, as a preliminary point both below and in this court by Mr. Rowe, that by that agreement the appellant, who was the valuation officer, had in effect conceded himself out of the arena; for it is quite apparent from the way in which it is stated and from the contentions recited in the case that these hereditaments were and are in fact owned and occupied as part of the dock undertaking. But I feel no doubt that, although that matter of fact is not without its significance, yet it would not be right to suppose that the parties had deliberately entered into such an agreement as made the argument in this court really impossible: in other words, I think it was the intention of both parties that the question put forward on behalf of the valuation officer, which is a question of some significance and some novelty, should be adjudicated upon in this court.

The question may, I think, be put quite briefly somewhat in the manner that Mr. Browne formulated it in the course of his reply. He said that it is fundamental to all rating law that one must take any individual hereditament and value it upon the footing of what it would command to prospective tenants in the market. He said that in this case there was no doubt that the offices in question were offices which would command, in a competitive commercial market, a rent easily capable of ascertainment: in other words, as offices they could not be said to be only of value to a dock undertaking occupying them as part of such an undertaking. "Therefore," said the appellant here, "you should adopt what the statute says is the basis upon which "you should rate." I see the force of that contention, and, if this matter had come before the court half a century ago, it may well be that it would be a contention to which we should, or could, have acceded. But, in my judgment, during the course of the last half century at any rate, there has grown up a method of proceeding in regard to public utility undertakings which is sometimes referred to as the profits basis of valuation, which I think makes it impossible for this court to accept the contention put forward by the valuation officer and impossible for us to say that one can segregate these offices, rate them by application of the ordinary principles of section 22 of the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, and at the same time quoad the rest of the undertaking, or indeed quoad the undertaking as a whole, concede the propriety of the profits basis of valuation.

A number of cases has been referred to in the course of the argument, but I should like to adopt and make the premise of my judgment what was stated by my brother Jenkins in the last of the cases which came before this court, namely, Metropolitan Water Board v. Hertford Corporation.[1] Jenkins L.J. said: "But if the 'profits basis' is to be applied it follows that the "net annual values attributed to all the hereditaments (directly "or indirectly productive) must not exceed the cumulo value, "and it follows, further, that to achieve this end consistently "with a fair apportionment of the cumulo value amongst the "hereditaments in the several rating areas, and, in particular, "with the attribution of a fair proportion of it to the indirectly "productive hereditament here in question, an aggregate net "annual value must be placed on all the indirectly productive

[1] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 622, 632; [1953] 1 All E.R. 1047, 1056.

C. A.
1955
CLAYTON v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION.
Evershed M.R.

"hereditaments in the undertaking, and a fair proportion of that "net annual value must be attributed to this hereditament." It is fundamental to that proposition that you take the indirectly productive hereditaments together, arrive at a net annual value for them as a totality, and then proceed to apportion that total valuation among the individual units: in other words, if that proposition is sound, as I think myself on the authorities as I understand them it is, then it is a negation of the proposition that you can, while applying the cumulo principle, the profits basis principle, to the undertaking as a whole, segregate individual items of assets (whether they are productive or unproductive hereditaments) and proceed to value those items distinctly and without any apportionment to them of the total profits basis valuation. It need hardly be said that if such picking out, such selective segregation, were allowable, considerable practical difficulties might be encountered in the process of selection. Arithmetically it seems also fairly clear that you would certainly fail to achieve as between parish and parish a fair apportionment of the burden, if it is to be assumed that all parts of an undertaking, treated as a whole, ought to bear a proper part of the total liability to rates, particularly since many parts of an undertaking, such as a water undertaking or a dock undertaking, are of a nature which in themselves could not conceivably command any rent in a competitive market.

I shall have occasion to refer briefly hereafter to one or two of the other cases, but for the moment I will confine myself to the passage which I have read from my brother's judgment and from it proceed now to state the grounds upon which I am led to the conclusion which I have stated. The statement in Jenkins L.J.'s judgment is founded upon earlier citations from the cases which he made and is founded upon the view that, under modern rating law and practice, a public utility undertaking, such as a water board or a dock undertaking, is prima facie rated upon this profits basis. I think it hardly necessary to take time by stating what the basis is. It is sufficient to say that you get for the whole undertaking a single figure representing, in effect, its annual earnings. As Jenkins L.J. pointed out in Metropolitan Water Board v. Hertford Corporation,[1] there is no statutory sanction for that method of fixing liability for rates. It is a method whereby subject-matters, not themselves susceptible of treatment under section 22 of the Act of 1925, are nevertheless made to bear a due proportion of a just liability; and although it is said from time to time that the method, not only having no statutory sanction, is likewise not sacrosanct, so that it may be disregarded if special circumstances indicate that it should be disregarded, nevertheless it seems now well established that, prima facie, for undertakings of this character that is the proper method of assessment. Something

[1] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 622, 632.

I conceive of a very exceptional character would be needed in order to exclude the application of the method. The idea which is fundamental to the method and underlies its application is two-fold: first, that for rating purposes the sum of the various individual valuations on which individual rates will be paid to individual parishes will not in total exceed what is called the cumulo value, the single sum of earning capacity which I have mentioned; and, second, that there should be a fair apportionment among the various hereditaments in their various rating areas of the liability which, at the end of all, will be represented by a figure related to the cumulo sum. From those premises it seems to me to follow that, if the profits basis is to applied at all in a case to which it is prima facie applicable, then there is really no room for making material distinctions in treatment between individual hereditaments or between types of hereditaments among, say, the totality of indirectly productive hereditaments.

The method for which Mr. Lyell contended on behalf of the valuation officer seems to involve these stages in arriving at the result: first (and though I put it first I am not necessarily thereby saying that chronologically the process would take place first) one must find, since this is admittedly a dock undertaking, that is an undertaking admittedly on the face of the case stated appropriate for assessment on that basis, the cumulo sum, the annual value of the whole undertaking. Then, it is said, this sum—I will call it £X— is a sum arrived at before deduction therefrom of the rates for which in the end the undertaking will be liable. Next one values any indirectly productive hereditaments, which may be suitable for valuation in accordance with the principles of section 22 of the Act of 1925, as though it was an hereditament occupied otherwise than as part of the public utility undertaking—as though, for example, it was an ordinary commercially owned and occupied hereditament. One must, therefore, at this stage break away from, so to speak, or at any rate disregard, the cumulo value one has earlier conceded or arrived at. Then, having got one's valuation for the selected hereditament or hereditaments, one deducts the sums representing their annual value or values and the rates payable in respect of them from the cumulo value of £X, and the balance, if any— and I emphasize those two words " if any " because it is possible that there will be no balance— will be called £Y, which Mr. Lyell referred to as " the net cumulo." One then proceeds to treat the net cumulo by applying it and apportioning it among the remaining indirectly productive hereditaments (that is to say, those which have not lent themselves to what is called the strict method of valuation) and also among the productive hereditaments as though, first, there were no other indirectly productive hereditaments than those which were left after the first selection, and also, as I think, as though the so-called net cumulo were the original, first cumulo sum, the £X which was

C. A.
1955
CLAYTON v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION.
Evershed M.R.

arrived at on a computation of the capacity of the whole undertaking. That, as I understand it, is the inevitable consequence of accepting Mr. Lyell's submission and the result seems to me clearly liable to throw a disproportionate liability in respect of the total amount of rates payable by the undertaking on particular hereditaments in particular parishes. Since it might happen that the cumulo value, the profits basis figure, in an undertaking carrying on its affairs in a somewhat unresponsive world were either nil or a very small sum, the figure for the selected hereditament might easily swamp and exceed the cumulo and there would be merely a minus quantity for net cumulo. But in any case I am of opinion that, as this matter has developed and having regard to the sanctity this method of assessment has acquired, there is really no warrant upon the cases for applying this hybrid method of attack.

The earlier cases referred to, namely, Reg. v. Mile End Old Town Overseers [2] and Reg. v. Proprietors of the West Middlesex Waterworks,[3] were cases decided before this method of assessment for public utility undertakings had acquired its form and more or less stereotyped shape. But they were (and I think Mr. Rowe was entitled so to say) really concerned with the method of apportionment, dividing up the total figures, which had been arrived at and which had been accepted in those cases, among the component parts. More important, however, for present purposes are two cases in the House of Lords, Metropolitan Water Board v. Chertsey Assessment Committee [4] and Kingston Union v. Metropolitan Water Board.[5] They were both cases relating to the Metropolitan Water Board, but no question has arisen that what is true, as a matter of principle in rating a water undertaking, is applicable, generally speaking, no less to a dock and canal undertaking. It is, I think, possible to take sentences from the speeches in those cases and to say that they seem to contemplate not merely a consideration of the question whether one applies the profits basis wholly or not at all, but whether, applying the profits basis, one may have room within it for some variation in method. There are passages, for example, such as one I will read by way of illustration from the speech of Lord Parker in the first case, which the valuation officer thought lent some judicial support to his contention. Lord Parker said, after referring to the practice of taking the profits basis method of assessment with water undertakings [6]: "The origin of this rule is not very clear, but it may, "I think, be explained as follows: In considering what the hypo- "thetical tenant will pay by way of rent the company itself "cannot be excluded as a possible tenant. If there are possible

[2] (1847) 10 Q.B. 208.
[3] (1859) 1 E. & E. 716.
[4] [1916] 1 A.C. 337; 32 T.L.R. 168.
[5] [1926] A.C. 331; 42 T.L.R. 275.
[6] [1916] 1 A.C. 337, 360.

" tenants other than the company, the annual rent may be esti- " mated on a competitive basis, but if, as is generally the case, " the company is the only possible person who would be likely " to give any rent at all for the property, the competitive basis " is excluded." It think that that language was not directed at all to the sort of question which has been here raised; and I do not say it is not a significant and interesting question. But Lord Parker was, in my judgment, considering, and considering only, whether the profits basis should be applied where the undertaking treated as a whole for rating purposes was occupying premises for the occupation of which there would be no competition in the ordinary course.

Ten years later, in Kingston Union v. Metropolitan Water Board,[7] I think the sanctity (I will not say rigidity) of this method of assessment in the case of public utility undertakings was perhaps more emphasized, particularly in the speech of Lord Cave L.C. The language he used makes it, to my mind, tolerably clear that Lord Cave L.C. was applying himself not to individual items in the total occupied property of the whole, but to the hereditaments taken all together. That is, to my mind, clear enough, if one reads the whole passage in his opinion from pp. 337 to 340. I take one passage from which I will read enough to make clear the line of reasoning[8]: " The mains and other works in any " particular parish, taken by themselves, might conceivably " produce no rent at all, for it is almost impossible to suppose " that any person would wish to become the tenant of them; but " the same hereditaments, if looked upon as part of a great " undertaking extending over a large and populous area, might be " quite indispensable to the undertakers (who must be regarded " as possible tenants) and so might command an extortionate " rent. In these circumstances it was desirable, in order that a " fair assessment might be arrived at, to devise some formula " which, while allowing a fair value to the hereditaments in each " parish, would not compel the undertakers to pay rates on an " aggregate sum exceeding the whole yearly value of their under- " taking; and, accordingly, rating surveyors, soon after the pass- " ing of the Act of 1836, began to assess waterworks and other " like concerns, such as railways, canals, gasworks, etc., upon " the basis of the profits earned by the whole undertaking. From " the gross receipts of the undertakers for the preceding year " they deducted working expenses "—and then certain other deductions—" and treated the balance remaining (which would " presumably represent the rent which a tenant would be willing " to pay for the undertaking) as the rateable value of the entire " concern. It was then necessary to distribute this rateable value " among the various parishes into which the undertaking " extended, and this was effected by dividing the hereditaments " in each parish into indirectly productive assets (such as

[7] [1926] A.C. 331.

[8] Ibid. 338.

C. A.
1955
CLAYTON v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION.
Evershed M.R.

" intakes, filter-beds, reservoirs, pumping stations and carrying " or pumping mains) and directly productive assets (such as the " service pipes which actually carried the water to the con- " sumers), and by allowing to the parish a percentage on the " structural (or contractor's) value of property of the former class " contained in the parish, and a proportion of the remainder " based on the water revenue arising there. Thus, a series of " assessments was reached which, while giving to each individual " parish a fair proportion, based upon the hereditaments which " it contained and the revenue which it produced, of the total " rateable value, did not in the aggregate exceed the rental which " the undertakers or any other possible tenants might be expected " to pay for the whole undertaking in any year."

Although I agree, of course, that Lord Cave L.C.'s mind was not directed to the point now raised or the arguments in support of it, still it does seem to me that his formulation of the justification for the profits basis really excludes, or any rate ought to be treated as excluding, exceptions of the kind suggested by the valuation officer; whereby one would, while applying the profits basis for other purposes, first of all, in effect extract by selection certain suitable premises altogether from the undertaking. In an earlier passage in Lord Cave L.C.'s speech he made use of a phrase to which I will allude because Mr. Lyell referred to it. It was where [9] Lord Cave L.C. spoke of the origin of this rule, and said that in this class of case it was necessary for rating experts and the courts to have recourse to hypotheses of a more or less violent character. It was the argument, and an attractive argument if I may say so, for the valuation officer, that it is contrary to principle to have an hypothesis, and particularly an hypothesis of a violent character, when the facts do not call for any hypothesis at all. I follow the argument, but, as I have already said, I think for my part that once the method of assessment for something which, as is admittedly the case here, is proper to be regarded for rating purposes as a single unit and as a dock undertaking, there is no room for having the best of both possible worlds.

I conclude my references to authority first by reading another passage in the judgment of Jenkins L.J. in Metropolitan Water Board v. Hertford Corporation,[10] where, before referring to Lord Cave L.C.'s speech, my brother said [11]: " The manner of apply- " ing its general principles, no doubt, admits of variation to suit " the peculiarities of individual cases, and, no doubt, there may " be cases in which there are special circumstances sufficing to " justify its total exclusion. Nevertheless, the ' profits basis ' has " behind it the sanction of long practice and of judicial approval " over many years, and at the present time it may, I think, be " said that as a matter of law it is prima facie the right method " to apply in a case of this kind, the onus of showing special

[9] Ibid. 339.
[10] [1953] 1 W.L.R. 622.
[11] Ibid. 631.

"circumstances justifying a departure from it being on those "who advocate such departure." With that sentence I respectfully entirely agree. It was said that the first part of the first sentence in that passage clearly intimated that one might, without excluding the application of the profits basis altogether, apply it with modifications, such as the extraction for the purpose of separate assessment of particular hereditaments which were suitable for such extraction. Though my brother was properly and naturally reserving himself against the effect of a too dogmatic statement of the practice and the law, I do not think he was contemplating so much a modification of the profits basis, but an application of it at the same time as an application of a quite different method in regard to one and the same subject-matter, namely, the undertaking of a public utility undertaking. It is at that point that I think that, as the authorities stand, it is impossible for us to go with the argument of the valuation officer. It may be, as Mr. Rowe conceded, that in arriving inter se at the proper proportion of the sum to be borne for rating purposes by the indirectly productive hereditament one may, instead of taking a percentage of capital value, adopt a method of competitive tenancy or the assumed product of a competitive tenancy. That, however, is another matter. I think that the adoption for the undertaking as a whole of the profits basis negatives the extraction for separate assessment on a wholly different basis of individual hereditaments.

In the course of his reply Mr. Browne referred to Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Birkenhead Overseers,[12] a case decided in the year 1873 in the Queen's Bench Division. In that case it appears to be true that, as regards certain warehouses, the court assented to their assessment on what is now the section 22 basis, while the other assets of the harbour board appear to have been assessed according to something corresponding with the profits basis. I think, in the first place, that in the year 1873 the full weight and significance of the profits basis method of assessment had not been apprehended. I think also, from the facts, that it may well be that the circumstances relating to these warehouses, particularly the fact that they were from time to time let to other persons by the harbour board, may have justified the view that they represented an undertaking distinct in many respects from the undertaking of the docks and harbour board properly so called. At any rate, in the light of later authorities I do not think that Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Birkenhead Overseers[12] could justify this court in adopting in face of the later decisions the argument here put forward on behalf of the valuation officer. I therefore think upon this main point that the view of the tribunal was correct.

A second point was intimated on behalf of the commission which was to this effect—that since these offices had before 1948

[12] (1873) L.R. 8 Q.B.D. 445.

C. A.
1955
CLAYTON v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION.
Evershed M.R.

been on the railway list when they were railway hereditaments within the wider definition of the Act of 1930, so if they were put on any list at the present time they could be only put on with the same valuation for rating purposes as they had previously borne. Such, it was said, was the effect, not express but implicit, of section 89 (6) of the Local Government Act, 1948. In the view which I take, it is unnecessary to express a final view upon that point, but, as at present advised, I confess I am not disposed to accept it; and it would have the effect apparently, as Mr. Browne observed, that if these offices, having ceased to be railway hereditaments, had then been occupied by some commercial undertaking of an ordinary character, they would still, if put on the list at all, have been put on at their old railway figure. That does not appear to me to be either sensible or contemplated. I need say no more on that point, for, as I have already said, I think that the tribunal rightly concluded the main argument, and I would dismiss the appeal.

JENKINS L.J. I agree.

ROMER L.J. I agree.

Appeal dismissed.
Leave to appeal to the House of Lords.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue; M. H. B. Gilmour.

B. A. B.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.
1955
Mar. 29, 30.
Denning and Parker L.JJ. and Roxburgh J.

* SMITH v. PORT LINE LD.

Dock—Regulations—Crane or winch—Signaller—Crane engaged in loading barge—Scope of duty to provide signaller—Area of duty defined—Docks Regulations, 1934 (S.R. & O. 1934, No. 279), reg. 43.

There is no obligation under regulation 43 of the Docks Regulations, 1934, as modified by the proviso thereto, to employ a signaller when cargo is being loaded into or unloaded from a lighter, if the driver of the crane working the fall has a clear and unrestricted view, limited to those parts of the hold where work is actually being carried on at the time, when the set is over the hatchway.

Accordingly, where the plaintiff, a lighterman in charge of the loading of a lighter, moved forward unexpectedly along the gunwale to give orders to men working in the lighter, and was injured by the swing of the crane, but it was found that at the time the crane-driver had a clear and unrestricted view of those parts of the hold where the work of loading was being carried out:—

Held, on a claim for breach of statutory duty, that the duty to employ a signaller under regulation 43 did not arise, since the plaintiff was outside the area of danger in which the duty arose; and that as the owners of the crane had not been negligent the plaintiff's claim failed.

Decision of Devlin J. reversed.

Ashworth v. McGuirk & Co. Ltd. [1944] 1 K.B. 1; 60 T.L.R. 14; [1943] 2 All E.R. 446 distinguished.

APPEAL and cross-appeal from Devlin J.

On July 17, 1952, the plaintiff, William David Smith, a lighterman, was in charge of a lighter which was being loaded with sacks of wool in the London Docks. A mobile crane, of a modern type in general use throughout the docks, was on the quay, picking up bales and transferring them into the lighter. The after-part of the lighter had been filled and the forward part had still to be loaded. The plaintiff, who had been standing at the stern, walked forward along the gunwale of the lighter to tell men down in the lighter receiving the bales to fill up a space in the after-part. While he was talking to them, the crane slewed round and struck him, as he stood in the very arc of the swing, and he was thrown into the barge and injured.

The plaintiff brought an action against the owners of the crane, claiming, first, that their crane-driver was negligent; secondly, that the crane was not suitable for the work; and thirdly, that there had been a breach of regulation 43 of the Docks Regulations, 1934,[1] in that no signaller had been employed.

Devlin J. was satisfied, on the claim in negligence, that the crane-driver had acted with all proper care and that the real cause of the accident was the plaintiff's own fault in moving forward without notice from the back of the lighter, and held that the owners were not negligent. On the claim for breach of the regulations, he found that in the particular crane cabin the crane-driver might not have been able to see the men moving on the gunwale and on the quay, and held that it was too narrow a construction of the regulation to suppose that the area in which the duty to provide a signaller arose was confined to the very spot where work was going on, and that the reasonable meaning to give it was that the crane-driver should be able to see the place where the work was going on and yet have a sufficient area of vision round about so that he could see the movements of men at work or men coming in and out of the particular danger area of work for purposes connected with the work. His Lordship assessed the damages at £3,000 general damages and £628 special damages, and apportioned liability for the accident as to half to the plaintiff and half to the defendants.

[1] Docks Regulations, 1934, reg. 43: "When a cargo is being loaded or unloaded by a fall at a hatchway, a signaller shall be employed, and where more than one fall is being worked at a hatchway, a separate signaller shall be employed to attend to each fall. Provided—(i) That this Regulation shall not apply in cases where a barge, lighter or other similar vessel is being loaded or unloaded if the driver of the crane or winch working the fall has a clear and unrestricted view of those parts of the hold where work is being carried on."

C. A.
1955
SMITH
v.
PORT LINE LD.

The owners appealed against the decision on the breach of the regulations, and the plaintiff cross-appealed against the decision that the owners had not been negligent and that he had himself been negligent.

The case is reported solely on the construction of the regulation.

Montague Berryman Q.C. and W. G. Wingate for the owners.
C. J. A. Doughty Q.C. and I. F. Reuben for the lighterman.

The following cases were cited in the argument: Hawkins v. Thames Stevedore Co. Ld. & Union Cold Storage Co. Ld.[2]; Ashworth v. J. McGuirk & Co. Ld.[3]; Watts v. Enfield Rolling Mills (Aluminium) Ld.[4]; Jones v. Staveley Iron and Chemical Co. Ld.[5]

DENNING L.J. This case raises a question as to the proper conduct of cranes in the docks. [His Lordship stated the facts and continued:]

Devlin J. on the first issue, was very impressed by the evidence of the crane-driver, a very experienced man. He said that before he moved the load, or "the set" as he called it, he looked to the left through the window of the crane and saw that all was clear; then he looked back to the set and began to swing it round. After it had gone a foot or two he saw that the plaintiff was in the way, standing on the gunwale. He immediately stopped his crane, but there was a swing on the load by that time, and the swing carried it forward with sufficient force to throw the plaintiff into the lighter. The judge said that he was satisfied that the crane-driver acted with all proper care and that the real cause of the accident was the plaintiff's own fault, in that he moved forward without notice from the back of the lighter along the gunwale and stood in the arc of the crane at the very moment when it was coming across. The crane was doing 150 of these swings in the course of an hour, and the lighterman ought not to have got in the way of it. Mr. Doughty does not contest the finding of negligence against the lighterman, but he asks us to say that the crane-driver was negligent. He says that the crane-driver ought to have looked to the left a second time before he lifted the load to swing it. I think that would be putting too high a duty on the crane-driver. He had only looked that way a second or two before, and he could not reasonably be expected to anticipate that a man would walk forward straight into the arc of the crane in this way.

On the second issue, it is suggested that the owners of the crane were negligent in that the crane in itself was not suitable

[2] [1936] 2 All E.R. 472.
[3] [1944] 1 K.B. 1; 60 T.L.R. 14; [1943] 2 All E.R. 446.
[4] [1952] 1 T.L.R. 733; [1952] 1 All E.R. 1013.
[5] [1955] 2 W.L.R. 69; [1955] 1 All E.R. 6.

for the purpose, because the crane-driver had not a proper field of vision. I do not think that there is anything in that point at all. This was a modern crane of a type in general use throughout the docks. It was well constructed for the purpose; and I do not think that there is any ground for attributing negligence to the defendants in that regard.

The third issue raises a question of general importance. Devlin J. has held that under the Docks Regulations a signaller should have been employed, and that on that account the defendants should be held liable. If the decision of the judge is right, it means that signallers will have to be employed on nearly every occasion when barges are loaded or unloaded in the ports of this country.

It all depends on regulation 43. The operative words are these: "When cargo is being loaded or unloaded by a fall at "a hatchway, a signaller shall be employed, and where more "than one fall is being worked at a hatchway, a separate "signaller shall be employed to attend to each fall." I stop to say that the word "hatchway" is defined as meaning the whole space within the square of the hatches from the top deck to the bottom of the hold.

Subject to the proviso which I will mention in a moment, those operative words apply to all the ships, great and small, which come to the ports of this country. The object is clear. When ships are being loaded and unloaded by cranes, the load or set goes into the hold below the deck out of the sight of the crane-driver so that he cannot see what is happening. In those circumstances this regulation requires that a signaller shall be employed. There must be a man to give signals to the driver to tell him when to raise or lower, and give any other proper direction.

But there is a proviso concerning barges and lighters: "Pro- "vided that this regulation shall not apply in cases where a barge, "lighter or other similar vessel is being loaded or unloaded if "the driver of the crane or winch working the fall has a clear "and unrestricted view of those parts of the hold where work "is being carried on." The object of that exception is clear. It is this: in the case of a barge or lighter, which is little more than one large hold, there need not be a signaller if the driver has a clear and unrestricted view of those parts of the hold where work is being carried on. In other words, if he can see where the set is going within the hold, then he need not have a signaller, for the very good reason that the crane-driver himself can see what is happening and can take steps accordingly for the safety of the men. In the great majority of barges and lighters the crane-driver can see into the hold and see all that is going on, so that a signaller is not necessary. That is the reason for the proviso.

The judge has held that this proviso does not apply unless the crane-driver has a clear and unrestricted view, not only of

C. A.
1955
SMITH
v.
PORT LINE LD.
Denning L.J.

the hold itself but also of any adjoining places where people are likely to be, either approaching the danger area, or going from it, such as, for instance, the gunwale or the quay. This crane was so constructed that, when it was facing towards the lighter, taking cargo into or out of the hold, the driver could see everything in the hold quite clearly; but when it was turned round towards the quay or lengthwise along the quay, the driver could not then see everything in the hold or anyone on the gunwale because there was a pillar on the crane which obstructed the view. The judge held that this meant that the proviso did not apply and that there ought to have been a signaller.

I cannot agree with the judge's interpretation of the proviso. In my judgment all that is necessary in order to bring the proviso into play is that the crane-driver should have a clear and unrestricted view of "those parts of the hold where work "is being carried on." This means, I think, only the hold itself, and not the adjoining places like the gunwale or the quay. The effect of the proviso is that when the crane-driver brings the crane round facing the lighter, ready to raise or lower the set, he must then have a clear and unrestricted view of the square of the hold where work is being carried on, and he must keep that view for all the time that the crane is facing that way. So long as he has such a view, he can work on his own without a signaller. He must of course, in working the crane, take all reasonable care of people who may be on the gunwale or on the quay, but that is a duty imposed by the common law and not by the regulations.

On the evidence and the photographs it is quite clear that this crane-driver, whenever the rope came over the square of the hold, had a clear and unrestricted view of all the parts of the hold where work was being carried on. The proviso was therefore satisfied. There was no need for a signaller and there was no breach of the regulations.

My conclusion is that there was no fault on the part of the defendants or their driver, but the sole fault was that of the plaintiff himself. The appeal should be allowed and the cross-appeal dismissed.

PARKER L.J. I agree with all that my Lord has said, and I would only add this: The main body of regulation 43 is perfectly general in its terms—a signaller must be employed to attend to each fall at a hatchway. The proviso, however, excuses the provision of a signaller in the case, inter alia, of a barge, if, and only if, "the driver of the crane or winch working "the fall has a clear and unrestricted view of those parts of the "hold where work is being carried on."

That immediately raises two questions: First, of what must the driver have a clear and unrestricted view? And, secondly, at what point or points of time must he have such a view? Now, in regard to the first question it seems to me that the words themselves are explicit, namely, that he is to have a view of those parts of the hold where work is being carried on. No doubt this is intended to embrace not only the very spot where the set goes down on to the bottom of the hold, but a reasonable area around, where the men in the hold will be; but I find it impossible to extend the area beyond that. No doubt it could have been provided, and it might well have been reasonable to provide, that the driver should have a clear and unrestricted view, not only of the part of the hold that was being worked, but of the whole area which might form a danger area in the course of the whole operation of taking up the sets from the quay and lowering them into the hold; but the words here seem to me to confine the area, as I have said, to that part of the hold which is being worked. I also think that a consideration of the main body of the regulation is decisive of the point. A signaller is required when a fall is worked at a hatchway, not elsewhere. If the loading was on deck, or from deck, no signaller would be necessary under this regulation, but it is only when the cargo is being loaded or unloaded by a fall at a hatchway. Accordingly, when one comes to the proviso it seems to me that it would be natural to provide that a signaller is not required when the driver has a view down the hatchway. That is all that the regulation and the proviso is concerned with.

Again, as regards the second point, it seems to me that in this context the point of time at which the driver is to have a clear and unrestricted view is when the part of the hold in question is about to become, or has become, a danger area; or in other words, once the set on the sling on the fall is over the hatchway. It seems to me that to provide for the driver to have a clear and unobstructed view of the hold when he has got his back to it, and is perhaps taking up cargo from the quay, would be perfectly idle; and again, I think a reference to the wording of the main body of the regulation assists this interpretation, because the point of time and place is shown by the words: "when cargo is being loaded or unloaded by a fall at a "hatchway." In other words, I think that this proviso is considering only the safety of the men working in the hold, and not all of the men, wherever they may be, who are connected with the process of loading or unloading. If the safety of those in the hold is adequately provided for through the driver having a clear and unrestricted view, the regulation does not apply.

If that is correct, then it seems to me to be clear on the facts of this case that there has been no breach. Once the point of time is reached when the set becomes situated over the hatchway, the driver will have slewed his crane and will have a clear and unobstructed view through the front window, and not through the front window plus the side window, or plus the small slit of window which also faces towards the front. Accordingly, in my view there has been no breach of the regulation,

C. A.
1955
SMITH v. PORT LINE LD.
Parker L.J.

because the regulation itself, by reason of the proviso, does not apply.

I should mention, before leaving that part of the case, that Mr. Doughty referred us to the decision of this court in Ashworth v. McGuirk & Co. Ld.[1] In that case a docker engaged in unloading on the quay was injured when sacks from a sling were brought from a ship and lowered on to the platform where he was working, and there was no signaller there at the time. It is perfectly true that in that case it was assumed that there had been a breach of the regulation in that there was no signaller, despite the fact that cargo was not at the time being loaded or unloaded by a fall at a hatchway, but in fact on the quay. No point, however, as to this was taken in that case. As I have said, it was assumed that the regulation applied, and the argument dealt merely with the question whether the defendants had fulfilled their obligation by entering into a contract of employment with a signaller, or whether it was necessary in order that they should fulfil their obligation for them to secure that a signaller was there at all times. In my view that decision did not deal with this point and the matter was not argued.

So far as the cross-appeal is concerned I have nothing to add to what my Lord has said, and accordingly, I would allow the appeal and dismiss the cross-appeal.

ROXBURGH J. I agree.

Appeal allowed.
Cross-appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Botterell & Roche; Bryan O'Connor & Co.

M. M. H.

[1] [1944] 1 K.B. 1; 60 T.L.R. 14; [1943] 2 All E.R. 446.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

1955
Feb. 15, 16.

*MARJORAM v. MARJORAM.

Lord Merriman P. and Collingwood J.

Husband and Wife — Justices — Practice—Irregularities—Cumulative effect — Husband's letter to court giving his defence — Failure to inform wife—Failure to assist litigant in person to put case in cross-examination — Refusal of adjournment — Refusal to allow closing address to court on law—Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2, c. 55), s. 61.

Husband and Wife — Desertion — Constructive desertion — Wife's sluttishness.

A wife sought an order in a court of summary jurisdiction on the grounds of desertion and adultery. Before the hearing, at which the wife was represented and the husband was not, the husband had written to the court setting out his case and alleging that he had left the home because of his wife's sluttishness. No notice of any kind was given to the wife or her solicitor of the existence of this letter; the allegations of sluttishness were not put in cross-examination but were first made at the end of the husband's examination-in-chief when the letter was produced to him and he was asked if its contents were true. The court refused the wife an adjournment to consider the position and if desired to call witnesses, although she was allowed to return to the witness-box to deal with the allegations; and the court further refused to allow the wife's solicitor to address the court at the close of the evidence upon the law relating to just cause for leaving in such alleged circumstances.

The charge of adultery was dismissed for want of corroboration at the close of the husband's evidence-in-chief; but the court failed to remind the husband when giving his evidence to deal with admissions and conduct alleged against him:—

Held, that there must be a rehearing, in view of the unsatisfactory nature of the trial, since (1) the court had failed to give prior notice to the wife of the allegations in the letter; (2) by failing to assist the husband to present his case properly in cross-examination or examination-in-chief the court had not complied with the provisions of section 61 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952; (3) the wife ought in such circumstances to have been allowed an adjournment; (4) it was a proper case for the court in its discretion to allow the wife's solicitor to address it at the close of the evidence upon a question of law; (5) there had been misdirection upon the question of corroboration and proof of adultery.

Possible effect of Lang v. Lang [1954] 3 W.L.R. 762; [1954] 3 All E.R. 571 upon Bartholomew v. Bartholomew [1952] W.N. 535; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 934; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1035 considered.

Price v. Price [1951] P. 413; [1951] 2 All E.R. 580n.

APPEAL by wife from the dismissal by the justices for the Wallington petty sessional division of Surrey on December 10, 1954, of her complaints of adultery and desertion.

In or about September, 1954, the wife went to see her parents in Ireland, taking the two children of the marriage, a boy of about seven and a girl of about four years. Early in October, 1954, shortly after her return, she saw her husband's motor-cycle at about 11.0 to 11.30 p.m. outside a house opposite the matrimonial home in which the woman with whom adultery was alleged at the hearing was living. She went across and entered the house; but she was prevented from opening one of the doors to a room inside for a few minutes. When the door was opened she found her husband and the woman alone together. The wife asked what they were doing; the woman replied "I am not doing anything." No answer was given when they were asked why the door was not opened. The wife alleged that she was dragged back home by her husband who told her he was going to leave her. For the next week or two the husband spent every evening from 9.30 to 11.30 with the woman in her house, and on October 17, 1954, he left the matrimonial home, telling the wife that he was going to live with the woman. These allegations were not claimed in evidence. The following day the wife saw the husband; and she stated in evidence that she had asked him if he was sleeping with the woman and that he had replied "Yes, and it's lovely, "and no matter what happens we shall always be together." This was not admitted by the husband; but he did not deny it in his evidence. He admitted at the hearing that he had been living at the woman's house since October 17, 1954; that he had told the wife that he preferred the woman's company to hers; that he would not have the wife back and that he would not go back to her.

1955

MARJORAM v. MARJORAM.

Two days before the hearing the husband (who was not then represented) wrote a letter to the clerk of the court setting out the nature of his case, which was in effect that he had left home because of his wife's sluttishness. He complained about her alleged dirty habits, saying that she went to bed with her clothes on, and never took them off from one week to another; that she did not wash, that she did no mending and failed to look after the children properly. He denied desertion and, although admitting friendship with the woman concerned, denied adultery.

No information was, however, given to the wife or her solicitor about this letter, or the substance of it, until the end of the husband's evidence-in-chief, when the letter was produced to him and he said that the contents were all true; and the wife was never cross-examined about her alleged sluttishness. At the close of the husband's evidence-in-chief the justices announced after the clerk had conferred with them that the adultery had not been proved because of the absence of corroboration. Cross-examination was accordingly restricted to the issue of desertion, and two witnesses were called to support the allegation of sluttishness.

The wife's solicitor asked for an adjournment so that witnesses might be called to refute the allegations made at this late stage against the wife; his application was refused, although he was allowed to put the wife back into the box to answer questions about them. She admitted to being untidy and that she did not have frequent baths, but she denied the allegations of sluttishness. The justices further refused to allow the wife's solicitor to argue that the wife's alleged conduct was not sufficient answer to the charge of desertion, or to refer (as it was suggested on the appeal he wished to do) to Bartholomew v. Bartholomew [1]; and the justices dismissed the complaint of desertion on the ground that the husband had been justified, by reason of the wife's conduct, in leaving the matrimonial home.

Peter Dow for the wife appellant.
Miss Morgan Gibbon for the respondent husband.

The cases referred to in argument are cited in the judgment.

LORD MERRIMAN P., giving judgment, said that the trial had taken such an unsatisfactory course that it was impossible to support the decision; but that as it was plainly a matter which could not be decided in the absence of seeing and hearing the witnesses, there must be a rehearing. His Lordship outlined the evidence upon the issue of adultery and, referring to the impropriety of a litigant writing ex parte to the court to give his views upon the case, added that if the matter had been properly handled much harm need not have been done, because although the wife had been represented, the husband had not been, and in such circumstances, if any difficulty occurred in the presentation of his case, it was the duty of the justices to comply with the provisions of section 61 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, as to the examination of witnesses by the court. The clerk, moreover, might have done what would appear to be elementary, that was to say, he might have informed the wife's solicitor that he had received the letter, given it to him to read in open court or had it read out, so that the substance of it might be known, and then given consideration to an application for an adjournment which might reasonably have been made.

[1] [1952] W.N. 535; [1952] 2 T.L.R. 934; [1952] 2 All E.R. 1035.

That course had not been taken, and not one single question had been put to the wife in cross-examination about her alleged sluttishness; neither was the letter, the contents of which had clearly influenced the decision of the justices, referred to at that stage. It was also relevant to the duty of the court under section 61 to remind the husband that he had not dealt with the allegation by the wife that he had admitted sleeping with the woman concerned; that also had not been done.

Referring to the dismissal of the complaint of adultery, his Lordship said: I do not in the least retreat from or retract what this court has said many times, that if justices think there is nothing in a case when they have heard one side of it they are entitled to stop it; but I also do not retract the warning that, speaking generally, it is extremely unwise to do so until they have at least heard the whole of the evidence. In this case it is manifest, to put it at its lowest, that there is a prima facie case of adultery, and, as things stood at that moment, the question, in relation to the charge of desertion, whether the wife's "sluttishness" (a word which I use to summarize the whole contents of the husband's letter) was indeed the true and effective cause of his decision to leave the matrimonial home, or whether there was not another, and even more potent, reason. Plainly, therefore, it was extremely unwise of the clerk, who, on the information we have, appears to have taken a considerable part in the proceedings, at this moment to have suggested to the justices, in effect, that this was the time to get rid of the charge of adultery. And it was done in this way: the wife's solicitor was asked by the clerk "Are you going to call any "evidence in corroboration of the charge of adultery?" and the wife's solicitor said "No," whereupon the clerk, turning to the justices, obviously gave them some advice, and then said "The

1955

MARJORAM v. MARJORAM.

Lord Merriman P.

" justices dismiss the charge of adultery for want of corroboration." Now, " for want of corroboration " does not appear in the notes, but it is quite plainly a misdirection, because Miss Gibbon, naturally, has not suggested for a moment that even on the husband's own evidence as it stood, there was no corroboration. He says he agrees with the wife's evidence about the " association "; he did say he preferred this woman's company; then he added he was not in love with her and that they did not go out together; he agreed that his wife was unable to get in; said that they were sitting together on the settee (the wife complains that they were by this settee) and listening to the radio, it was fairly late at night (he did not specify which particular programme was still running at the time the wife did get in) and the woman was reading a book; and he denied the adultery. It is impossible on that evidence to say that the husband himself had not provided some corroboration. I repeat that he had not dealt with the wife's evidence that he had, in effect, confessed adultery to her, and I do not in the least dispute the proposition, which has been established for many many years, that apart altogether from special cases, where there is some evidence of a witness being an accomplice, and so on, it is always desirable in matrimonial cases to have corroboration of the story, if possible. There is no law that it is essential, and there is no law that it is essential with regard to adultery any more than in other cases, though here, again, courts have always been cautious about accepting alleged confessions of adultery which depend solely upon the evidence of the other spouse. To that extent, at the proper time, no doubt, some caution might have been given to the justices about this so-called confession, but at any rate the time to deal with it was not then, but when it had been seen, one way or the other, whether the husband denied or admitted having made that statement to the wife, or gave some explanation, if he did make it, for doing so. I consider that the stopping of the case as regards adultery at that moment was so manifestly wrong from the point of view of both complaints that that alone would almost oblige us to order a new trial.

It goes without saying, though I do not accept the contention that this ruling absolutely precluded the wife's advocate from cross-examining about the association with this woman in relation to the charge of desertion, that at the least, as a matter of common sense, the fact that the justices had already dismissed the charge must certainly have acted as some discouragement to pursue that line of cross-examination.

But we are told that the solicitor, up to that moment, had not the faintest idea that this charge of " sluttishness " was being made. It has been said that he ought to have known. Of course, if that means no more than that, if the charge of " sluttishness " is true, then the wife ought to have instructed him about the truth, and in that sense he would have known, well and good, but otherwise I am not sure that he should assume, or be expected to assume knowledge, that this detailed history of "sluttishness" throughout the marriage was what he ought to have come prepared to meet as the alleged justification for the withdrawal of the husband from cohabitation. At any rate, speaking for myself, I am prepared to accept the assurance that he was completely taken by surprise. Having had a hurried consultation with his client he made it known to the court that he would be in a position, given an adjournment, to call witnesses who could refute the charge. It is not necessary to say who the witnesses indicated were, because it is now clear that he did not mention the names of the witnesses to the court itself, but merely stated that he would like the opportunity to bring to the court witnesses who could refute the charge. This application was refused, and, in effect, it was intimated to him that he must be content with the privilege, which was graciously accorded, of recalling the wife, to deal with something which had never been put to her in cross-examination at all.

She was recalled. She admitted that she was untidy, and denied the allegations made by her husband specifically. [His Lordship referred to those allegations, and continued:] The justices having refused the adjournment, having given the wife no opportunity of calling witnesses to refute this charge that was sprung upon her advocate if not upon her (the justices could see, of course, whether it was sprung upon her), the wife's solicitor then wanted to argue that these allegations that were put forward as a defence to the charge of desertion were not good enough; and we are told that in particular he wished to cite Bartholomew v. Bartholomew.[1] They did not allow him to say anything. He was not allowed to cite that case, or to argue the matter as a point of law at all. Now, admitting that the complainant's advocate, who has the opportunity of addressing the court at the beginning, is not entitled to address the court on the facts again, it is common ground between counsel that, speaking generally, the practice is that if a point of law is raised the complainant's advocate has the right to address the court on the law as a matter of courtesy, a matter of discretion. It is not a matter of statutory right. It is a matter of discretion, and is the general practice, as one would naturally suppose. Miss Gibbon has very kindly made a search overnight and found that it is so stated, at any rate with regard to the criminal jurisdiction proper, in one of the older editions of "Stone."[2] It is so obviously a sensible practice that it is a great pity it was not followed in this case, particularly

[1] [1952] W.N. 535.

[2] See also r. 18 of the Magistrates' Courts Rules, 1952, whereby: "(1) "On the hearing of a complaint, "except where the court determines "under subsection (3) of section "forty-five of the Act to make the "order with the consent of the defen- "dant without hearing evidence, the "complainant shall call his evidence, "and before doing so may address the "court.

"(2) At the conclusion of the evi- "dence for the complainant the defen- "dant may address the court, whether "or not he afterwards calls evidence.

"(3) At the conclusion of the "evidence, if any, for the defence, "the complainant may call evidence "to rebut that evidence.

1955

MARJORAM v. MARJORAM.

Lord Merriman P.

having regard to the fact that the defence put forward on the charge of desertion only emerged in the way I have described, and that the justices had refused an adjournment to enable the facts about that particular defence to be fully elucidated from the wife's point of view. In other words, it seems to me that in a short space of time the clerk contrived to accumulate a considerable store of errors in the conduct of these proceedings, which, even if they were all matters of discretion, seem to me, as I said at the beginning, to make this trial so unsatisfactory that we cannot let the dismissal of these two complaints stand, and I think that there must be a rehearing.

That brings me to what I think I must say by way of supplement, so as to give the justices what little guidance we can. It must be hypothetical, for, after all, it all depends on what view they take of the facts when the case comes on again; but, as I said a moment ago, the wife's solicitor was minded to cite to the justices, in rebuttal of this justification which the husband had put forward, the case of Bartholomew v. Bartholomew,[3] which was decided by the Court of Appeal. I can very well understand why he wished to cite that case, because, without going into detail, it bears, so far as the facts are concerned, a rather striking resemblance to the alleged facts of this case. In a word, it was a case of a husband returned from active service, who found the house, as he said, in a dirty condition, and gave his wife a warning that if it was not put right within some brief time limit that would be the end; and, according to his version of the facts, which had been accepted by the commissioner who tried the case, matters had not been put right within the time limit. Accordingly he treated himself as being expelled from the matrimonial home, and, after the lapse of the statutory period, brought a petition on the ground of constructive desertion. The Court of Appeal overruled the commissioner, who had pronounced a decree nisi; but it is necessary to add this caution about the case: the two leading judgments, those of Singleton L.J. and Denning L.J., adhere to what has been called one school of thought, which, in fact, begins with Boyd v. Boyd[4] and ends with Bartholomew v. Bartholomew[5] itself. I do not propose to review that school of thought or to set out against it the rival school of thought, for both are set out in full and dealt with in detail in a recent decision of the Privy Council on an Australian appeal in Lang v. Lang.[6] At the end, the particular school of thought which is exemplified by Boyd v. Boyd[4] down to Bartholomew v. Bartholomew[5] is

" (4) At the conclusion of the " evidence, if any, for the defence, " and the evidence, if any, in rebuttal " as aforesaid, the defendant may " address the court—(a) if he has not " previously done so; or (b) with the " leave of the court, if the defendant " and any other witness have been " called on the part of the defendant.

" (5) If the defendant is allowed to " address the court twice as afore- " said, the complainant may address " the court in reply."

[3] [1952] W.N. 535.

[4] 55 T.L.R. 3; [1938] 4 All E.R. 181.

[5] [1952] W.N. 535.

[6] [1954] 3 W.L.R. 762; [1954] 3 All E.R. 571.

decisively rejected, and, indeed, if the justices want the most authentic guidance on the point of constructive desertion they cannot do better than to look at the statement of it as laid down in that latest and most authoritative case.

Having said that, it does not follow, of course, that the decision itself, though two of the judgments were apparently based on that "line of thought," may not have been right; and it is only right to point out that Hodson L.J. does not arrive at that result by that process of reasoning. Equally it is right to point out that, so far as the very careful argument on both sides has gone, and (I think I can speak for both of us) so far as the court is aware, there is no decision in which "sluttishness" alone has been held to be a sufficient ground for a charge of constructive desertion.

But I think, really, that the most helpful suggestion to the justices who retry this case will be to remind them of another principle which is very well established. In their reasons, having accepted the evidence of the husband and rejected that of the wife on this question of sluttishness, they say: "We are of "opinion that the wife's dirty habits must have been apparent "to her, and that she ought to have realized that sooner or "later it was bound to bring about discord in their relations." Now, some criticism has been directed to the use of the word "discord." Plainly, there had been discord for some time, a very long time, according to the husband's evidence; but I think they really meant to use the word in the full sense as being "bound to, or likely to, bring about a disruption of the con-"sortium," for they go on: "We therefore found from the "evidence that the husband's complaints were in our view grave "and weighty, and that the wife must be held responsible for "breaking off the relations with her husband and that the "husband was justified in taking the course he did. We there-"fore" (they end) "dismiss this complaint also."

If that statement of their reasons had been a judgment in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, to which the answer had pleaded just cause for refusing to return, coupled with a cross-charge of desertion by the wife in that she had expelled the husband from the matrimonial home, it is established by the recent decision of the Court of Appeal in Price v. Price [7] (not, incidentally, for the first time) that precisely the same principles would apply in these circumstances—I am omitting deliberately any complication introduced by the allegation of adultery one way or the other—to the answer to the restitution suit and to the cross-charge of desertion. That this is so in relation to a charge brought in the High Court of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for the wife appears quite plainly from the judgment of Hodson L.J. in Price v. Price.[8] I do not need to read the whole judgment, but after setting out the decision in Jones

[7] [1951] P. 413; [1951] 2 All E.R. 580n.

[8] [1951] P. 413, 420–421.

1955

MARJORAM v. MARJORAM.

Lord Merriman P.

v. Newtown and Llanidloes Guardians,[9] in which Lord Reading gave the leading judgment, and reading a passage,[10] which I need not repeat, Hodson L.J. says [11]: "That passage draws attention "to something which, I think, is perhaps not always clearly "remembered, namely, that the husband's obligation to main- "tain his wife is prima facie complied with by providing a home "for her. A wife has no right to separate maintenance in a "different home unless she can justify the fact that she is living "apart from her husband." Then he deals with that and with the proposition that at any moment she may not only have put herself right but may, by the same process, have made the husband into a deserter, and he refers to the decision of this court in Thomas v. Thomas,[12] to which I do not think it is necessary to refer back. He continues [13]: "I should not have mentioned "that point had not my brother Denning mentioned that pro- "ceedings for restitution of conjugal rights might differ in their "result from proceedings under this section. For my part I "think that the proceedings under section 23 of the Act of 1950 "are on the same footing as proceedings for restitution of conjugal "rights; if a wife becomes a deserter she would not be entitled "to maintenance just because she is a wife, that is to say, to "separate maintenance. The question of her right to mainten- "ance may depend on whether she is a deserter or whether she "is deserted or whether there is a contract between them. I do "not think that the law recognizes a sort of undefined condition "where parties are living apart in conditions which may be "described as of drift, or in some not very clearly defined condi- "tion in so far as rights to maintenance are concerned. It is "necessary that those conditions should be clearly defined, and "I think that they were clearly defined by Lord Reading C.J. in "Jones v. Newtown and Llanidloes Guardians.[14]" Somervell L.J., who had not dealt specifically with that proposition, though he had dealt with it by indirect reference to Thomas v. Thomas,[15] though not by name, added as a supplement to his judgment [16]: "I agree with what has been said about the cross-appeal. On "the question of the relationship between rights under this "section and the right to a restitution plea, I agree with what "has been said by Hodson L.J."

So, on the rehearing, I think that the justices will be well advised, first of all, to ask themselves this question of fact: "Was the wife's alleged 'sluttishness' the real and effective "cause of the husband leaving the matrimonial home; or was "the cause, in whole or in part, the husband's desire to continue "what the wife says was an improper association with the woman "mentioned?" In effect, was the "sluttishness," either wholly

[9] [1920] 3 K.B. 381; 36 T.L.R. 758.
[10] [1920] 3 K.B. 381.
[11] [1951] P. 413, 420.
[12] 62 T.L.R. 166; [1946] 1 All E.R. 170.
[13] [1951] P. 413, 421.
[14] [1920] 3 K.B. 384.
[15] 62 T.L.R. 166.
[16] [1951] P. 413, 422.

or partly, a pretext to enable the husband to carry on an improper association? It is, perhaps, worth calling attention to one point. Unlike the facts in Bartholomew v. Bartholomew,[17] so far as the note before us goes I see no evidence of anything in the nature of a warning given by the husband immediately before his departure. It is quite true that he says in his letter and evidence that he had been intending to go for years but had put it off until the children reached school age. Well, one of the children was well over seven, and the other, I think, was four, and it will be a question for the justices whether, if sluttishness was the real cause of his departure, the departure had not been somewhat unduly delayed, and to ask themselves whether it was a mere coincidence that it happened to occur about the time that this man had plainly formed a friendship with the woman with whom the wife charges him with committing adultery.

Of course, their answer to this question of fact may be decisive of the whole case, because, if they take the view that the sluttishness was not the effective cause of his departure, then there appears to be nothing further to discuss. On the other hand, if their view, after having heard all the evidence, is that that was the cause of his leaving home, then they will have to do their best to answer the question whether that alone, in light of what is said in Lang v. Lang,[18] and in light of the fact that the same sort of facts in Bartholomew v. Bartholomew [17] were not held to justify a charge of desertion, and that there is, as I have already said, no known case at present where sluttishness alone has been held either to be a complete answer to a plea for restitution of conjugal rights or to support a charge of desertion.

Further than that I do not think it is possible for us to go. In my opinion this appeal must be allowed and the order dismissing the wife's complaints set aside, and both complaints remitted for rehearing by a fresh panel of justices. I might perhaps add, finally, that we were told that an assistant or deputy clerk was acting on this occasion. It might be just as well if the real clerk acted on the rehearing.

COLLINGWOOD J. I agree. [His Lordship stated the facts, referred to the course taken at the hearing, and continued:] In my opinion it is quite impossible to support such a conclusion arrived at in such a way. In the first place, as to the adultery, the justices say that they found that the wife had good reason for suspicion of an adulterous association, but that as it was denied, and it must be proved beyond reasonable doubt, they were far from satisfied that it had been proved. At the time when they stopped the proceedings so far as the adultery issue was concerned they intimated, or it was intimated on their behalf, that they decided that there was no corroboration of the wife's

[17] [1952] W.N. 535.

[18] [1954] 3 W.L.R. 762.

1955

MARJORAM v. MARJORAM.

Collingwood J.

charge. Now, it is obviously impossible to say that there was no corroboration, having regard to the husband's own admission with regard to the wife's story of his association with the woman concerned. Coupled with that is the fact that he had failed to give any denial of the wife's evidence that he expressly admitted adultery with her and said how pleasant he found it. In my opinion the justices' intervention at the point at which it took place was quite unjustified. Furthermore, the husband's relationship with the woman was clearly a very relevant matter in regard to the question of his reason for leaving his wife. Was it the shortcomings of his wife that made him leave her, or was it the attractions of the other woman? And I think that the intimation by the justices at that stage was clearly embarrassing to the solicitor in his cross-examination upon that issue. As my Lord has said, it did not preclude him from pursuing that matter but it certainly made it difficult for him after the justices had intimated that so far as they were concerned they were not having anything more to do with a charge of adultery.

The second matter on which this trial is open to criticism is that no questions were put to the wife, prior to her recall to the witness-box, about the dirty habits which constituted the husband's sole defence to her charge of desertion, although the clerk to the justices had in his possession, even before the court assembled, a letter setting out in detail the charges which the husband proposed to bring against his wife. One would have thought that the first thing to be done when the case was called on would be for the clerk to hand that letter down to the representative of the wife and let him know the information which had been put into the hands of the court. But even if he did not follow that course, his obvious duty was to put to the wife seriatim the allegations which the husband had intimated he proposed to bring, and ask whether they were accepted or not by her.

The next complaint is that the first intimation of any of these charges of dirty habits was the husband's evidence—" The letter " produced is all true,"—this being his evidence in relation to the whole defence to the charge of desertion. It would be bad enough if evidence on such an issue were elicited by a series of leading questions, but to read out the witness's proof and confine his evidence on those issues to the words " That is all true " is a course which cannot possibly be supported; and the effect of that letter on the minds of the justices is obvious when one finds that their reasons, in a number of instances, are taken verbatim from the letter itself.

As if that were not enough, the justices then refused the application by the solicitor for the wife for an adjournment to enable him to call evidence to meet these charges, introduced in such a way and at such a time, and he had to content himself with putting the wife back into the witness-box and asking her to what extent she accepted the same.

1955

MARJORAM v. MARJORAM.

Collingwood J.

Finally the justices refused to hear the wife's solicitor when he wished to make a submission on a point of law. The exact point of law upon which he wished to make a submission was, I gather, as to what constituted or was capable of constituting grave and weighty matters in regard to the reason for one spouse leaving the matrimonial home. I imagine at that stage it was too late for him to make any submission on a point of law with regard to the question of what may or may not constitute corroboration of evidence of adultery. However, it is quite clear that he did wish to put before the justices Bartholomew v. Bartholomew,[19] and they refused, very unfortunately, to listen to him.

In my opinion each of these matters individually constituted a serious defect in this trial, and taken in conjunction with one another their force is quite overwhelming. They are irregularities of such a character, and there are so many of them, that it is impossible to support the justices' decision and there must be a rehearing. As to the matters for consideration by the justices who sit at that rehearing, I wish to say that I agree entirely with what Lord Merriman has said, in particular with regard to the question whether the wife's dirty habits, as deposed to by such witnesses as were called, did or did not constitute grave and weighty matter sufficient to justify the husband in leaving his wife, having regard to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Bartholomew v. Bartholomew.[19]

As I have said, I agree that this case should be sent back for a rehearing before another panel.

Solicitors: Macmillan & Mott; Copley, Singleton & Billson.

J. B. G.

[19] [1952] W.N. 535.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

*FORBES v. FORBES.

1955
April 1, 4.

Mr. Commissioner Latey Q.C.

Husband and Wife—Divorce—Cruelty—Contraceptives—Wife's deliberate refusal to have children—Insistence on contraception—Knowledge of injurious effect on husband—No fear of childbirth.

During a period of some eight years' cohabitation a wife, who on her own admission before justices had no fear of childbirth, consistently refused, with the object of avoiding conception, to allow her husband to have free intercourse, and insisted on precautions which were obnoxious to him. The husband's health was affected:—

Held, that the wife, who was well aware of the effect of her conduct upon her husband, had treated him with cruelty.

Fowler v. Fowler [1952] 2 T.L.R. 143 distinguished.

1955

FORBES v. FORBES.

UNDEFENDED PETITION for divorce by a husband.

The marriage took place on November 10, 1945, at St. Luke's Church, South Lyncombe, near Bath. The husband had served as a lieutenant-commander, R.N.V.R., during the war, and had returned to duties at the Admiralty. He and his wife had first met in 1939, and had become engaged to be married during the war. While he was away at sea she wrote him affectionate letters. She had never raised any objection to having children when they discussed the matter, and she knew that he was particularly fond of children. She was an artist of considerable talent, and had exhibited pictures in the Royal Academy.

In the events which have happened, some significance must be attached as showing her state of mind to one or two phrases in letters which she wrote to him before they were married. In a letter written on August 21, 1944, the wife had suggested separate bedrooms after the marriage; and on September 26, 1944, she wrote: "When I was younger I thought physical attraction was "the chief thing, but now I am older I find mental companionship "so much more." At that time she used to sign herself "Buttercup" in writing to him. On April 25, 1945, she wrote: "What do you mean, my sweet, by saying there is only one "thing you want more than to see me and that is a little "'Buttercup'?" Later, in this same letter, she wrote: "I'm "terrified of getting married. I suppose I will get over it eventu- "ally." On July 27, 1945, she wrote to him: "No, my sweet, "I'm not thinking of marrying anyone else! I'm the kind that "can always be contented because I can always interest myself, "especially in painting; whereas other girls (like Chris) have no "interest than can be used in a home except nursing, and I "suppose having a baby would be her natural bliss—and through "not having one she is restless. The food is too poor to have "one anyway. But painting is my baby—of course I have "always liked the company of men—but only the company!!! "except in your case! Yes, I'm lucky to be interested in "painting because it is creative, and only creative work uses up "the energy properly, or as nearly as possible."

After the marriage the parties discussed the question of having children. The wife said that the time to have a child was between the age of 35 and 40. He disagreed, and at intervals he tried to persuade her to his way of thinking. The wife maintained an evasive attitude, and gave various and inadequate excuses, especially that she did not want a baby while they continued to live at her mother's house, where they had been occupying twin beds at her instigation; but she agreed to submit to free intercourse when they should have a home of her own. She avoided discussion on the subject as far as possible. After three years he pressed the matter. She put him off sometimes with taunts such as "You only want to prove your manhood," and "'Didums' want to be a father."

Meanwhile, the husband had reluctantly acquiesced in his wife's wish for him to use contraceptives; but after she had detected him in a subterfuge which might have rendered his ordinary precaution of no avail in avoiding conception, she resorted to the use of a female contraceptive. This, in time, became repulsive to him and frustrated his sexual instincts. He reasoned with her, pointing out that this procedure was wrong, as the purpose of marriage should be procreation, or at least mutual love.

By 1950, owing to her refusal to have free intercourse, their relations had become strained. On every occasion when his natural instincts moved him the husband was faced with the same somewhat cold-blooded preparations of his wife. In that year his wife's sister give birth to a baby, and he took advantage of the occasion to try to persuade his wife how happy it would be for both of them if she followed her sister's example. She refused. He tried, successfully, to enlist her mother's persuasions on his behalf, but this only aroused the wife's resentment. They went for a holiday in Brittany together, but further persuasions he made there proved futile.

In the summer of 1950 the husband had a short affair with another woman, and in respect of which the court was asked to exercise discretion. This affair was unknown to the wife.

In August, 1952, the husband and wife had a holiday together at San Sebastien, where he was laid up for a few days, and his wife went about alone. On their return to England she seemed distraught, and when he questioned her she burst into tears and said that she had fallen in love for the first time in her life, with a man whom she had met in Spain.

In October, 1952, the husband anticipated being sent to a post at Bath, and he tried again to persuade her to become a wife in the full sense. She maintained that that must await a new home, a separate home.

In February, 1953, they stayed together for a while at a hotel or lodgings in Bath. They were there for a few weeks, and on one occasion he believed, as there had been no demonstration at all of his wife's usual preparations, that she had allowed him free intercourse. He later became convinced from the subsequent events, and the subsequent statements by the wife, that no such thing happened. On that occasion, when they were living together there, he again begged her to start a family. For the first time she definitely refused and said: "No, never, I want to "be free, to have my liberty." He was completely dumbfounded, as hitherto the main reason for her refusal had been the desire for a separate home. He told her that after all these years, years of putting him off, it was a cruel deceit on her part. He renewed his entreaties from time to time, reminded her of her marriage vows, but in vain. He was provoked into remarking to her: "I suppose you would prefer to have a baby by the man in "Spain," and she answered "Yes." He warned her that if she persisted in that course of conduct they would have to go their separate ways.

1955

FORBES v. FORBES.

After a holiday together in the Western Highlands in September, 1953, during which there was no attempt at marital intercourse, she told him that she had seen a solicitor, was going to leave him, and was looking for a flat. Meanwhile, the husband had arranged to take a flat at Atworth, and in November, 1953, he began to live there. The wife had told him that she was still in love with the man in Spain.

That was the end of the married life, and she never joined him at Atworth.

On March 27, 1954, the husband's solicitors wrote to her giving notice that the flat in which they had been living, in London, must be given up, and that her husband did not propose to accept responsibility for her maintenance. They added: "Your refusal throughout the marriage to bear children led to "the increasing unhappiness and frustration of your husband "and, on June 11, 1953, to the complete breakdown of marital "cohabitation." The wife's solicitors, in reply, said: "I am "instructed that your client's allegation contained in your letter, "that his wife has throughout the marriage refused to bear "children, is quite untrue. It is, of course, a fact that there "have been no children of this union, but that, as I am "instructed, has not been the fault of my client, who has had "medical advice, and, according to my instructions, Mrs. Forbes "has throughout the marriage done everything in her power to "make the marriage a success. I am further instructed that "your client informed his wife that he had lost affection for her "and told her that she was too old and mature for him. It "appears from my instructions that he had wilfully refrained "from cohabitation with my client and has now apparently "decided to live elsewhere and to refuse legal responsibility for "her maintenance."

The wife then took out a summons before the Bath justices on the grounds of desertion and wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance, and the hearing took place on June 22, 1954. Her summons was dismissed, the justices holding that there had been a refusal of intercourse by the wife and an eventual agreement to separate. In the course of the proceedings the wife had stated that she was always prepared to have a child and had no fear of childbirth.

James Stirling for the husband.

The wife did not appear and was not represented.

The cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgment.

MR. COMMISSIONER LATEY, Q.C. In this case the husband, who is 36 years of age, prays for a divorce on the ground of the cruelty of his wife, who is about the same age. The suit is undefended, but Mr. Stirling, with his usual integrity, made it clear at the outset that the grounds put forward for relief required careful consideration.

The main ground of the husband's case is that his wife consistently refused, with the object of avoiding conception, to allow free intercourse, and insisted on precautions which were obnoxious to him, with the result that that course of conduct on her part undermined his health.

This court always has to see that cruelty, as alleged, comes within the well-established definition—that is to say, conduct by the accused spouse of such a character as to have caused damage to life, limb or health, bodily or mental, or as to give rise to a reasonable apprehension of such danger, and the court has to be careful to watch that the range of grounds of divorce is not extended to cover mere incompatibility and such falling away from the ordinary mutual relations of husband and wife as do not come within that definition. Nor must one ignore the fact that in undefended suits the court usually hears only one side. Mr. Stirling has put before me to the utmost of his knowledge, and his client's knowledge, the case which might have been presented by the wife had she thought fit to defend the charges against her: having heard the evidence and the useful and able argument, and considered the authorities cited to me, I have come to the conclusion that the husband has established his case.

[The Commissioner stated the facts, saying of the letter of April 25, 1945, that the husband had told him that what he really wanted was a daughter, and that some significance must be attached to the passages from the letters written by the wife before marriage, as quoted above, as showing her state of mind at that time, and that from them, he (the Commissioner) was entitled to deduce that the wife was not looking forward to marriage with that full-hearted enthusiasm which might be expected from a young woman whose fiancé was soon to return from the war. She had, however, resolved her doubts and married him in November, 1945, according to the solemn vows made in the sacred ceremonial of the Church of England. The Commissioner continued:] I have already pointed out that, in a case like this, it is essential in the absence of a defence to become acquainted with all the circumstances available on both sides, and I have therefore admitted as evidence the shorthand transcript of the proceedings before the justices.

The issue before me now is not quite the same as the issues which the justices had to decide, but nevertheless the question here—the refusal of the wife to render ordinary intercourse and to make possible conception—was fully ventilated before the bench. In substance, the husband gave the same evidence on that point as he has given here. Among other things, he said that he gave his wife ample opportunity of joining him in his flat at Atworth. The wife's story, put shortly, was that she never refused free intercourse and that, in fact, it often took place.

1955

FORBES v. FORBES.

Mr. Commissioner Latey Q.C.

She maintained that her husband was under-sexed, although she was not, and that he was lacking in affection for her. She said that she was prepared to have a child and had no fear of childbirth.

The justices held that there was a refusal of intercourse by the wife, and an eventual agreement to separate, and they dismissed the summons.

The petition very clearly set out the case which has been elaborated at considerable length in evidence. It was duly served on the wife and she has not thought fit to take any action whatever.

In a case like this I do not think that there is much doubt that she could have obtained security for costs of any defence. She has not thought fit to take any action whatever about it, but, of course, that does not necessarily mean that she has not got a case. Her case was, however, fully presented before the justices, who had the advantage of seeing both parties; and it is quite obvious from their decision that they accepted the husband's story and not the wife's. I have seen the husband only, but I am quite satisfied that I can believe every word he says. I am satisfied that he has not exaggerated his case and that he has told the truth, not only about his wife's attitude but also about the reaction upon his own well-being. The husband told me that he had got into a very bad state of health, but that the tension under which he had been living gradually diminished after the final parting with his wife in the autumn of 1953. I have had corroboration of this from his sister and his landlord, who described the husband's tense and emotional state when he first went to Atworth. Mr. Arnold Crowther, the husband's solicitor, described the husband's distraught condition during the proceedings before the justices, and how he broke down and wept twice, and even then was still suffering from a tremendous strain.

Apparently the husband did not go to a doctor because, when on two occasions his wife suggested that he should see a psychologist owing to his restless condition, he retorted that it was no use as the cause of his condition was manifest to her, as it was to himself.

I am satisfied that the injury to his mental health was caused in the main by his wife's persistent refusal to be a wife to him in the full sense, (a) by her insistence on contraceptives, and (b) by refusing him the chance of a child.

Quite apart from the exhortation in the solemnization of matrimony that, firstly, Christian marriage was ordained for the procreation of children, I cannot ignore the fact that it is a natural instinct in most married men to propagate the species and to bear the responsibilities, and enjoy the comforts, of their own children. If a wife deliberately and consistently refuses to satisfy this natural and legitimate craving, and the deprivation reduces the husband to despair, and affects his mental health, I entertain no doubt that she is guilty of cruelty within the definition on which this court always acts.

Mr. Stirling has offered me a very useful review of the authorities dealing with this matter. The question of the refusal of free intercourse is considered in Baxter v. Baxter[1] on an issue of wilful refusal in nullity. There a wife insisted on the use of a contraceptive and the husband reluctantly acquiesced. When he petitioned for nullity on the ground of wilful refusal, it was held that the marriage had been consummated by the process of intercourse employed; but Lord Jowitt L.C., in his speech said[2] "the proper occasion for considering the subject "raised by this appeal is when the sexual life of the spouses, and "the responsibility of either or both for a childless home, form "the background to some other claim for relief."

In Walsham v. Walsham[3] it was held that a husband's abstention from marital intercourse for varying intervals modified by occasional acts of coitus interruptus contrary to the wife's wish adversely affected the wife's health and constituted cruelty. There were similar decisions in White (orse. Berry) v. White,[4] and Cackett (orse. Trice) v. Cackett.[5] Here, it is a wife's abstention that is in question, and Mr. Stirling has drawn my attention to an authority in the Court of Appeal, which on the face of it might seem to run counter to the general proposition which I have just stated. That was Fowler v. Fowler.[6]

The principle stated in the headnote to Fowler v. Fowler[6] is this: "Where a wife refuses to have children and refuses to have "sexual intercourse, except on the understanding that the "husband prevents conception, with a consequential injury to "the husband's health, the wife is not guilty of cruelty unless "her conduct is intended to inflict misery on her husband." Mr. Stirling has dealt with this case in detail. Personally, I do not think that that paragraph quite conveys the full effect of the judgments, with their qualifications. In that case, as in this, the wife refused intercourse except with a contraceptive, and equally it was shown in that case that the husband desired a child. In that case the wife put forward as an excuse for not having a child in the early years the unsettled conditions caused by the war; later, having had a womb operation, she urged that it was unsafe for her to conceive a child, and, still later, changed her mind and claimed that they could not afford a child. The commissioner who tried the case, held that the husband's anxiety-state could not be attributed to the wife's attitude, and the petition failed.

The Court of Appeal held that there was no cruelty unless the wife by her conduct intended to inflict misery on her husband.

[1] [1948] A.C. 274; 64 T.L.R. 8; [1947] 2 All E.R. 886.
[2] [1948] A.C. 274, 290.
[3] [1949] P. 350; [1949] 1 All E.R. 774.
[4] [1948] P. 330; 64 T.L.R. 332; [1948] 2 All E.R. 151.
[5] [1950] P. 253; 66 T.L.R. (Pt. 1) 723; [1950] 1 All E.R. 677.
[6] [1952] 2 T.L.R. 143.

1955

FORBES v. FORBES.

Mr. Commissioner Latey Q.C.

Denning L.J. held that such an intention could easily be inferred if a husband took contraceptive measures against the wife's will, but that was not necessarily so vice-versa because a wife's conduct might be attributed to fear of consequences to herself, without any intention to injure her husband.

How far intention should be considered an ingredient of cruelty has been discussed recently in a number of cases before the higher tribunals, and I do not propose to traverse this somewhat thorny path. I will content myself with the statement of principles laid down in the House of Lords in Jamieson v. Jamieson,[7] and so lucidly summarised in the more recent case of Cooper v. Cooper.[8]

The particular passages in Jamieson v. Jamieson[7] which are very relevant to the present case are from the judgment of Lord Merriman P., in which he said[9]: "In saying this, however, "I must not be taken to suggest that either in England or in "Scotland it is essential to impute to the wrongdoer a wilful "intention to injure the aggrieved spouse in order to establish a "charge of cruelty. In Mackenzie v. Mackenzie[10] Lord Watson "said: 'I do not impute to the appellant that his conduct, cruel "'and reprehensible as it was in my estimation, was dictated "'by a wilful intention to injure the respondent.' Likewise in "Kelly v. Kelly,[11] to which I shall recur later, because it is "the leading case in England on the subject of cruelty without "physical violence, Lord Penzance, in his judgment in the full "court, said: 'He says that he does not desire to injure her, "'and it has never been asserted that he does.'" And then Lord Merriman P. went on to refer to a citation by Tucker L.J. in Squire v. Squire,[12] a citation from a judgment of Shearman J. in Hadden v. Hadden,[13] in which Shearman J. said: "I do not "question . . . that he had no intention of being cruel . . . "but . . . his intentional acts amounted to cruelty."

That, to my mind, is the shortest way in which any judge has put the principle—and the clearest—that is to be acted upon.

There were other passages, by Lord Normand[14] and Lord Reid,[15] the former going particularly to support the passage I have read by Lord Merriman P.; Lord Reid perhaps in not quite such a strong way; and there is a passage by Lord Tucker which seems to me to be very much to the point. Lord Tucker said[16]: "Every such act must be judged in relation to its attendant "circumstances, and the physical or mental condition or susceptibilities of the innocent spouse, the intention of the offending "spouse, and the offender's knowledge of the actual or probable "effect of his conduct on the other's health (to borrow from the

[7] [1952] A.C. 525; [1952] 1 T.L.R. 833; [1952] 1 All E.R. 875.
[8] [1954] 3 W.L.R. 867; [1954] 3 All E.R. 415.
[9] [1952] A.C. 525, 540.
[10] [1895] A.C. 384, 409.
[11] (1870) L.R. 2 P. & M. 59, 72.
[12] [1949] P. 51, 58; 64 T.L.R. 371; [1948] 2 All E.R. 51.
[13] The Times, Dec. 5, 1919, p. 5, col. 3.
[14] [1952] A.C. 525, 534–5.
[15] Ibid. 548–9.
[16] Ibid. 550.

1955

FORBES v. FORBES.

Mr. Commissioner Latey Q.C.

" language of Lord Keith) are all matters which may be decisive " in determining on which side of the line a particular act or " course of conduct lies."

As I have stated, there have been a number of cases in which guidance has been given on the question of intention, but in this particular case I find that the wife respondent knew very well what she was doing to her husband in the course of her persisting in evasion and refusal.

In Fowler v. Fowler [17] both Hodson L.J. and Denning L.J. emphasize the wife's fear of childbirth, and it was also emphasized that the wife was never warned by the husband of the effect of her refusal on his health. The essential distinction in the present case is that the husband was constantly complaining to the wife of her course of conduct, and was using all reasonable means to persuade her to change her attitude, and that she was well aware that she was causing him extreme anxiety and misery by her persistence in refusing any opportunity of conception.

Knowing her husband's feelings, knowing that the practice she insisted upon was repulsive to him, and that his desire for fatherhood had become an obsession, a legitimate obsession, an ever-growing load on his mind, taunting him as she did, she cannot in my view be acquitted of the intention to pursue her policy of abstention, whatever the result to him. Moreover, as I have already said, she definitely stated on oath before the Bath justices that she had no fear of childbirth.

In those circumstances, I find that the wife has been guilty of cruelty to the husband, and in the exercise of my discretion I pronounce a decree nisi in his favour.

Decree nisi.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. for A. G. Smith & Son, Melksham, Wilts.

E. J.

[17] [1952] 2 T.L.R. 143.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1955
April 21.

Upjohn J.

* In re ARNOULD, DECD.
ARNOULD v. LLOYD AND OTHERS.

[1954 A. No. 3159.]

Will — Construction — Omission — Gift of income during minority — Whether gift of corpus implied—Bequest of " All other money . . . " up in trust for my four grandchildren . . . until each reaches the " age of twenty-five years "—Conflict of authorities—Ordinary rule of construction applicable—No gift of corpus. Punctuation—Nonsensical full stop—Construed as comma.

1955

ARNOULD, DECD., In re. ARNOULD v. LLOYD.

A testator by his will gave the following bequest: "All other "money belonging to me I wish to be up in trust for my four "grandchildren . . . until each reaches the age of twenty-five years." The will contained no gift of residue. On a summons to determine, inter alia, the effect of that bequest:—

Held, that having regard to the later authorities, the court should follow the ordinary rule of construction, that words should not be inserted in or read into a will unless the context required it; and applying that principle, a gift of the corpus to the grandchildren could not be implied; there was accordingly a gift of income to each grandchild until the age of 25 years and since there was no gift of residue the property was then undisposed of.

In re Hedley's Trusts (1877) 25 W.R. 529 and In re Tottenham (1946) 62 T.L.R. 245; 174 L.T. 367 applied.

Wilks v. Williams (1861) 2 J. & H. 125 not followed.

ADJOURNED SUMMONS.

By his will dated September 5, 1954, Herbert Thomas Arnould appointed his only son Thomas Norton Arnould as his executor, and directed "that all my debts and funeral expenses "shall be paid as soon as conveniently may be after my "decease." After bequeathing all his "household goods and "chattels" to his housekeeper, Mrs. Annie Maud Lloyd, and certain legacies, not here relevant, he stated: "All other money "belonging to me I wish to be up in trust for my four grand-"children:—Norton Arnould. Adrian Williams. Garry Bufton "and Cheryell Bufton. until each reaches the age of twenty-five "years."

The will contained no gift of residue, and the testator made no provision for his wife from whom he had been separated for a number of years.

The testator died on September 5, 1954, the day on which he made his will.

The question on the summons, relevant to this report, was whether on the true construction of the testator's will and of the gift therein contained of "all other money" belonging to him "to be up in trust" for his four named grandchildren each of the said grandchildren: (a) took a vested interest in the property passing under such gift; or (b) took an interest in such property contingently on attaining the age of 25 years; or (c) took an interest in the income of such property until the age of 25 years.

G. A. Grove for the plaintiff, the executor.

The first defendant, Mrs. Annie Maud Lloyd was not represented and did not appear.

J. L. Arnold for the testator's grandchildren.

H. E. Francis (F. W. Mulley with him) for the testator's widow.

UPJOHN J. The question that I have now to determine is the true meaning of the following short paragraph in the testator's will: "All other money belonging to me I wish to be up in "trust for my four grandchildren:—Norton Arnould. Adrian "Williams. Garry Bufton and Cheryell Bufton. until each "reaches the age of twenty-five years." I have already construed the meaning of the phrase "All other money," which, having regard to the peculiar definition of the word "money" to be found in the will, I have held to be a specific gift of certain assets forming part of the testator's estate and not a general residuary gift. It is also to be observed that in the will there is a stop after the name Norton Arnould, after the name Adrian Williams and after the name Cheryell Bufton; but I do not think that I can treat those stops as of any significance, because if I treated them literally as full stops it would make nonsense of the will, and I shall therefore treat them as commas.

The point which I have to determine (and it is one of some difficulty) is whether this is a gift to these four grandchildren of the income until each attains the age of 25 years and then the corpus is undisposed of, or whether it is a gift of corpus upon attaining the age of 25 years with a gift in trust in the meantime.

As a matter of the literal interpretation of the will, there is no gift of the corpus to those children unless a gift of corpus upon the attainment of 25 years is to be implied, and the question is, therefore, whether I can imply such a gift.

There is no doubt that, having regard to the earlier authorities alone, the court then felt no great difficulty in implying such a gift of corpus in these circumstances. But it is equally not in doubt that the earlier authorities have subsequently been the subject of some criticism.

I do not propose to refer to all of the authorities, for the position is sufficiently set out in Jarman on Wills, 8th ed., vol. 2, p. 682, where this is said: "In Newland v. Shephard,[1] "an absolute gift of real and personal estate to the testator's "grandchildren was implied from a direction to the trustees to "apply the 'produce' and interest for their maintenance and "benefit during minority. But the decision has been questioned. "In Atkinson v. Paice,[2] Peat v. Powell[3] and Hale v. Beck,[4] "absolute interests were implied from gifts to trustees in trust "for A until he should attain twenty-one. But these three "cases seem to be of doubtful authority. In In re Hedley's "Trusts[5] a testatrix gave her residue to a trustee upon trust "for her daughter till she should attain the age of twenty-one "or marry, and it was held by Hall, V.-C. that there was no "implied gift of the capital to her."

The first authority which I propose to examine is Wilks v. Williams,[6] which was strongly relied on by Mr. Arnold in support of his submission that there was here a gift of corpus to the grandchildren. The headnote reads as follows: "Testa- "trix, having by her will directed the trustees, who were also

[1] (1723) 2 P.Wms. 194.
[2] (1781) 1 Bro.C.C. 91.
[3] (1760) 1 Ed. 479.
[4] (1764) 2 Ed. 229.
[5] (1877) 25 W.R. 529.
[6] (1861) 2 J. & H. 125.

1955

ARNOULD, DECD., In re. ARNOULD v. LLOYD.

Upjohn J.

" the executors of her will, to invest the residue of her property " in the funds, left the interest to two nieces, to be paid to " them half-yearly, and, at their decease, ' the half-yearly " ' dividends to be continued to their children till they came to " ' the age of twenty-one years.' She then ' constituted and " ' appointed ' the said executors (nominatim) trustees for the " said nieces and their children. All the children of a deceased " niece had attained twenty-one. Held, that they were entitled " absolutely to the moiety given to her for life." Page Wood V.-C., after expressing some doubts as to the correctness of the decision in Newland v. Shephard,[7] in discussing Fonnereau v. Fonnereau,[8] said this[9]: " Here the testatrix desires her trustees " to invest the principal money, constituting the residue of her " property, in the funds. She then leaves the interest to her " nieces, Fanny Williams and Rebecca Wilks, to be paid to them " half-yearly. At their decease ' the half-yearly dividends are " ' to be continued to their children, till they come to the age " ' of twenty-one years.' And then comes this passage:—' I " ' constitute and appoint Benjamin Hill and George Dace " ' trustees for the said Fanny Williams and Rebecca Wilks and " ' their children '; and the testatrix appoints Hill and Dace " executors of her will. That is much stronger in favour of the " construction, for which the plaintiffs contend, than anything " in Newland v. Shephard.[10] In Newland v. Shephard[10] there " was a mere devise upon trust for the grandchildren until " twenty-one. But here the testatrix directs all the residue of " her property to be invested by Hill and Dace; she places " the whole of that residue in their hands, and then constitutes " and appoints the said Hill and Dace ' trustees ' (trustees, " that is, of the entire residue) ' for the said Fanny Williams " ' and Rebecca Wilks, and their children.' It is clear that, " upon these words alone, without the intermediate bequest of " the dividends until the children should attain twenty-one, " there would have been an absolute gift for the testatrix's nieces " and their children. In an independent sentence the testatrix " appoints Hill and Dace executors of her will. In the absence " of the clause constituting them trustees for the nieces and " their children it would have been their duty to pay the " dividends, as directed, until the children attained twenty-one. " The insertion of that clause, therefore, must be looked upon " as emphatic, and as indicating that, after the children " attained twenty-one, the trust for their benefit was still to " continue." So here, Mr. Arnold argues, the expression " I " wish to be up in trust " means that it was to be held in trust until the children respectively had attained the age of 25 years and then it was to be transferred to them.

[7] 2 P.Wms. 194.
[8] (1745) 3 Atk. 314, 315
[9] 2 J. & H. 129.
[10] 2 P.Wms. 194.

The next case is In re Hedley's Trusts.[11] The headnote is as follows: "A testatrix, after directing payment of debts and "legacies, gave all the residue of her estate and effects to a "trustee upon trust for her daughter till she should attain the age "of twenty-one years or marry, whichever should first happen, "and appointed the trustee sole executor of her will. Held, that "there was no implied gift of the capital to the daughter on her "attaining twenty-one or marrying." Hall V.-C. begins his judgment in this way[12]: "I do not think, in the present state of the "authorities, I can hold that there is enough to give the capital "fund beneficially to this person after attaining the age of "twenty-one years or marrying. But for authority there could "not be a doubt suggested. In the present mode of construing "wills, we must take the words as we find them, and give effect "to them; we must not guess at them or create complications. "The fund is given to the trustee, and the only way of giving "it to limit his interest to correspond with the interest of the "petitioner until attaining the age of twenty-one years, would "have been to give it until the child attained twenty-one or "married. But that would be inconsistent with the provisions "before me for paying debts and capital sums out of it, which "is a sufficient reason to account for the corpus being vested "in the trustees. That distinguishes it from anything that has "been referred to." The judge then criticized Newland v. Shephard[13] and pointed out that in the case before him it was a trust of residuary real and personal estate and he was being asked to disinherit one of the co-heiresses. He then examined the later authorities, saying[14]: "As to the subsequent "authorities there is some peculiar circumstance in every one "of them." After examining Peat v. Powell[15] and Hale v. Beck[16] he considered Wilks v. Williams[17] to which I have already referred, and after quoting the passage from the judgment of Page Wood V.-C., which I have already cited, he continued thus[18]: "Upon that I make this observation—that the "Vice-Chancellor seems to have relied for his judgment upon "that ultimate part, apparently not being willing to rely on or "considering, as far as I can see, that without that ulterior "clause he could hold a mere direction to pay income till "twenty-one as amounting to a direction to pay the income till "twenty-one upon trust, and as from that time, though not so "expressed, by implication a trust for the person after attaining "twenty-one. It seems to me that I really must give effect to "what is now well settled as a rule of construction:—not to insert "words or employ words which are not to be found, but to give "effect to the clear ordinary meaning of the terms employed.

[11] 25 W.R. 529.
[12] Ibid. 530.
[13] 2 P.Wms. 194.
[14] 25 W.R. 530.
[15] 1 Ed. 479.
[16] 2 Ed. 229.
[17] 2 J. & H. 125.
[18] 25 W.R. 530.

1955

ARNOULD, DECD., In re. ARNOULD v. LLOYD.

Upjohn J.

"So construing this will, there seems to me to be nothing in "it whatever in the shape of beneficial interest except to the "person named, and for her benefit, until attaining twenty-one."

That case was cited to Wynn-Parry J. in In re Tottenham,[19] where he said this[20]: "The matter appears to me ultimately "to be one purely of construction. Mr. Wigglesworth has "referred me to a convenient statement of the general principle "which must guide the court in such matters as this, which "appears from the judgment of Hall, V.-C., in In re Hedley's "Trusts.[21] It appears quite clearly from the Vice-Chancellor's "judgment that the court is not entitled to depart from the "strict letter of the will, unless there is some context to enable "the court to do so."

In the will before Wynn-Parry J. there was ample context which compelled him to come to the conclusion that a gift of corpus was intended although not so expressed.

In that state of the authorities, I think it is my duty to apply the ordinary rule of construction, and that I must not insert or read in words which are not there unless the context requires me to do so.

Applying that principle, it seems to me that I cannot, without doing violence to the language the testator has used, imply a gift of corpus to these four grandchildren. It is true that there are certain elements of distinction between this case and In re Hedley.[21] This was a specific gift and not a gift of residue. There is no question of disinheriting the heir but the gift will be undisposed of. But in principle, however, although I have a strong suspicion that I am not carrying out the real intentions of the testator, it seems to me that he has not used language which is appropriate to carry a gift of corpus to the grandchildren and I must declare accordingly that on the true construction of the will the grandchildren only take an interest in the income of the property until each attained the age of 25.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Ward, Bowie & Co. for Scobie & Beaumont, Hereford; T. D. Jones & Co. for D. J. Treasure & Co., Blackwood.

I. G. R. M.

[19] (1946) 62 T.L.R. 245; 174 L.T. 367.

[20] 174 L.T. 368.

[21] 25 W.R. 529.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

*ROUSOU'S (A BANKRUPT) TRUSTEE v. ROUSOU.

1955
Mar. 30.

Danckwerts J.

Practice and Procedure — Writ — Service out of jurisdiction — Quasi-contract—Transfer of assets by bankrupt two months before act of bankruptcy—Claim against transferees by trustee in bankruptcy—Claim quasi-contractual — Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59)—R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (e).
Bankruptcy—Quasi-contract.

R., a Cypriot by birth, carried on a business in England where he became domiciled in 1935. On August 10, 1951, R. committed an act of bankruptcy, and on December 5, 1951, he was adjudicated bankrupt. On June 17, 1951, R. authorized his attorney to withdraw a sum of money standing in the name of R. and his wife in a church fund in Cyprus, and to deposit this sum in the joint names of R.'s two children, who were both minors and natural born British subjects, with a co-operative society in Cyprus. R. and his children subsequently left England, and in June, 1954, the children accompanied by their father withdrew the sum in question.

R.'s trustee in bankruptcy, who had reason to believe that the children were resident or were to be found in Cyprus, applied for leave to serve a writ out of the jurisdiction upon the children to enable him to bring an action against them for the purpose of attaining payment to him of the sum in question:—

Held, that the claim of the trustee to recover from the proposed defendants moneys formerly the property of the bankrupt was based prima facie of a right of a quasi-contractual nature, so that there was authority under R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (e),[1] to grant leave for the service of the writ out of the jurisdiction.

Sinclair v. Brougham [1914] A.C. 398; 30 T.L.R. 315 and Bowling v. Cox [1926] A.C. 751 applied.

APPLICATION for leave to serve writ out of the jurisdiction.

The trustee in bankruptcy of one Punajis Kyriacou Rousou, a bankrupt, sought leave to serve a writ out of the jurisdiction upon the son and daughter of the bankrupt, both of whom were minors, in respect of the transfer to them on or about June 17, 1951, by the bankrupt of the sum of £1,107 or, alternatively, the sum of £484 7s. 6d.

The action was intended to be brought for the purpose of obtaining (a) a declaration that the transfer in question was void against the plaintiff as trustee of the bankrupt; (b) alternatively, a declaration that the children held the sum in question and the interest accrued thereon, in trust for the plaintiff as such trustee: in either event (c) an order that the children pay to the plaintiff

[1] R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1: "Service "out of the jurisdiction of a writ of "summons or notice of a writ of summons may be allowed by the court "or a judge whenever . . . (e) the "action is one brought . . . to "enforce, rescind, dissolve, annul or "otherwise affect a contract or to "recover damages or other relief for "or in respect of the breach of a "contract—(i) made within the jurisdiction, or (ii) made by or through "an agent trading or residing within "the jurisdiction on behalf of a "principal trading or residing out of "the jurisdiction, or (iii) by its terms "or by implication to be governed by "English law. . . ."

1955

ROUSOU'S TRUSTEE v. ROUSOU.

as such trustee the sum in question with the interest accrued thereon.

On August 10, 1951, the bankrupt, who carried on a catering business in this country, committed an act of bankruptcy. On September 7, 1951, the petition in bankruptcy was presented by a creditor, and on December 5, 1951, Rousou was adjudicated bankrupt.

In the affidavit in support of the application it was stated that the bankrupt was born in Cyprus but became domiciled in England in 1935, and he remained in England until August, 1952. The children were natural-born British subjects and were domiciled and resident in England at all material times and, in particular, were so domiciled and resident on June 17, 1951. Subsequently they left England.

On June 17, 1951, there was standing to the credit of the bankrupt and his wife in the bank of the church committee funds of the church of Agios Chrissosdiros, Akanthou, Cyprus, sums amounting to £1,107 1s. 6d., being as to £484 7s. 6d. in the name of the bankrupt, and as to £622 14s. in the name of the bankrupt's wife. On that date, one Sotiris Antoninas, the attorney of the bankrupt, on his instructions withdrew £1,107 1s. 6d. from the church funds and on the same day desposited a sum of £1,107 with the Akanthou Co-operative Credit Society in the joint names of the bankrupt's children. This sum, together with accrued interest, was withdrawn by the children, accompanied by their father, between June 3–6, 1954, and these withdrawals were made after an order had been made by the judge of the District Court of Famagusta, Cyprus, on the trustee's application for a private examination of the bankrupt's attorney relating to the sum in question.

At the date of this application there was reason to believe that the bankrupt's children were residing or might possibly be found at Akanthou, in Her Majesty's Colony or Dependency of Cyprus, out of the jurisdiction.

Muir Hunter for the trustee in bankruptcy.

All cases cited in argument appear in the judgment.

DANCKWERTS J. This is an application by the trustee in bankruptcy of one Punajis Kyriacou Rousou, a bankrupt, for leave to serve a writ out of the jurisdiction. The material dates are these. On August 10, 1951, an act of bankruptcy was committed by the bankrupt, who carried on a catering business in this country. On September 7, 1951, the petition in bankruptcy was presented by a creditor and Rousou was adjudicated bankrupt on December 5, 1951.

The particular transaction which the trustee desires to attack was carried out by the bankrupt through an attorney or a person in that position on June 17, 1951. The bankrupt had a sum of £1,107 1s. 6d. in a certain church fund or funds which acted like a savings bank, so it would appear. He paid that sum into a co-operative society in the name of his two children. Thereupon, the fund in question was withdrawn by the bankrupt's children and no doubt has been disposed of or taken away by them.

It is said on behalf of the trustee that that transaction being for the purpose of defrauding the creditors was an act of bankruptcy within the meaning of section 1 (1) (b) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, being " . . . a fraudulent conveyance, gift, delivery, or " transfer of his property, or of any part thereof."

Further, it is contended on behalf of the trustee in bankruptcy that, by virtue of section 37 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, the bankruptcy relates back to the earliest act of bankruptcy within three months before the petition, and therefore includes this date of June 7, 1951. Further, by section 38 (1) (a) of the Act, the property which belongs to the bankrupt includes " all such " property as may belong to or be vested in the bankrupt at the " commencement of the bankruptcy." Therefore, it is said, the £1,107 1s. 6d. was part of the property which belonged to the bankrupt and vested in his trustee upon his bankruptcy.

Alternatively, it is contended on behalf of the trustee that it was a voluntary settlement under section 42 of the Act and, therefore, void against the trustee in bankruptcy. The trustee has also a third point, that it was a fraudulent conveyance under section 172 of the Law of Property Act, 1925; that is to say, it was a conveyance of property with intent to defraud creditors, and therefore became voidable at the instance of anybody thereby prejudiced.

When the case was first put forward for leave to serve out of the jurisdiction, it was put forward principally in the affidavit as being either a case of tort or breach of trust under sub-rules (d) or (e) of rule 1 of Order 11 of the Rules of the Supreme Court. I could not see how it came within either of those descriptions, and I therefore refused leave. But Mr. Muir Hunter persisted in his request on behalf of his client for leave to serve out of the jurisdiction and, accordingly, I directed the case to be set down in court for the purposes of argument. That has resulted in a very helpful and useful argument from Mr. Muir Hunter on the law relating to this subject.

Mr. Muir Hunter puts his case under three of the sub-rules contained in R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1, namely, (d), (e) and (ee). Sub-rule (ee) provides for the case where the action is founded on a tort committed within the jurisdiction; sub-rule (d), leaving out the part which does not apply, states: " . . . or for the " execution (as to property situate within the jurisdiction) of the " trusts of any written instrument, of which the person to be " served is a trustee, which ought to be executed according to the " law of England "; sub-rule (e) is " The action is one brought " against a defendant not domiciled or ordinarily resident in " Scotland to enforce, rescind, dissolve, annul or otherwise affect

1955

ROUSOU'S TRUSTEE v. ROUSOU.

Danckwerts J.

" a contract or to recover damages or other relief for or in respect " of the breach of a contract—(i) made within the jurisdiction, or " (ii) made by or through an agent trading or residing within the " jurisdiction on behalf of a principal trading or residing out of " the jurisdiction, or (iii) by its terms or by implication to be " governed by English law . . ."

It seems to me that the claim of the trustee is one which is entirely statutory in its origin. Whichever of the three ways the trustee puts his case, it is either a claim under section 1 (1) (b) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, and the accompanying provisions of section 37 or section 38, or it is a claim under section 42 of that Act which requires a settlement to be set aside, or it is a claim under section 172 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, following and re-enacting the position as stated in the earlier statute, 13 Eliz. 1, c. 5, which gives persons who are injured by fraudulent transactions on behalf of another person the right to have the transaction set aside.

Therefore, it seemed to me at first sight, that this had very little, if anything, to do with the law of contract at all. The rights given to the trustee were in each case as it seemed to me rights arising under some statute. But Mr. Muir Hunter has satisfied me by reference to the authorities that, by reason of the nature of the transaction which was carried out, the trustee in bankruptcy became entitled and is entitled, subject to anything which may arise in the action, to have the sum of £1,107 1s. 6d. paid over to him. It is a claim which appears to be recognized by the courts as a right of a quasi-contractual nature. For that purpose, Mr. Muir Hunter referred to Bowling v. Cox,[1] and Sinclair v. Brougham.[2] It appears from those decisions that the court has evolved a right which enables a claimant to sue in an action of contract when a sum of money which ought in fact to be paid to him is in the hands of another person. Mr. Muir Hunter has quoted as an analogous case with regard to the bankruptcy law the very common case of where a payment is set aside as a fraudulent preference. Although the Bankruptcy Act merely refers to a fraudulent preference and is silent about repayment, orders for payment to the trustee of any sum so paid are frequently made.

I am satisfied, at any rate for the purposes of a prima facie case, that this case may be brought within that principle, so that there may well be a quasi-contractual right in the trustee in bankruptcy to recover the money from the persons who have acquired this sum of money from the bankrupt.

Bowling v. Cox[3] is of particular interest because that was a case where leave to serve out of the jurisdiction was given in a bankruptcy matter upon such a quasi-contract. It was said in

[1] [1926] A.C. 751.

[2] [1914] A.C. 398, 414–7, 433, 452, 454; 30 T.L.R. 315.

[3] [1926] A.C. 751.

1955

ROUSOU'S TRUSTEE v. ROUSOU.

Danckwerts J.

that case that the bankruptcy was much earlier than the transaction in question, the money having been received by the executor of the bankrupt and paid away by him. It was claimed that the creditors had not been fully satisfied, and that there had been a receipt of the money by a person outside the jurisdiction of the court which would otherwise have been concerned with the matter.

In view of that decision it seems to me that this is a case in which the trustee has brought himself within the terms of R.S.C., Ord. 11, r. 1 (e), and it is a case in which I might properly allow service out of the jurisdiction of the writ in question. An order accordingly will be made giving leave to serve out of the jurisdiction.

Order accordingly.

Solicitor: Sidney Pearlman.

J. A. G.

[CHESTER ASSIZES.]

1955
Feb. 14.

Finnemore J.

* MASON v. WILLIAMS & WILLIAMS LD. AND ANOTHER.

Negligence—Safe system of work—Plant and equipment—Latent defect—Injury to workman's eye caused by tool with latent defect—Tool supplied direct by reputable makers—Whether employers under a duty to inspect such tools—Liability of makers—Burden of proof.

A chip of metal flew off a cold chisel which the plaintiff was using at work and struck him in the eye. The head of the chisel was dangerously hard but this defect was not apparent. The plaintiff's employers had bought the chisel from reputable makers and it was a new one which had been in use for only two or three weeks before the accident. The plaintiff's employers had not examined it at any time:—

Held, (1) that an employer who buys tools from reputable makers is entitled to assume that they are such as will be proper for their intended purpose and in the absence of something which suggests a defect in them he is under no duty to inspect them either before issuing them or after they have been in use; and that, therefore, the plaintiff had failed to establish negligence on the part of his employers.

(2) That as against the makers the plaintiff had discharged his burden of proof by establishing (a) that the head of the chisel had not been made unduly hard at his employers' factory; (b) that the chisel had come direct to his employers from the makers; and (c) that the excessive hardness could have been caused by a careless or deliberate act at the makers' factory; and that, accordingly, the plaintiff was entitled to succeed in negligence against the makers.

[Reported by H. EIFION ROBERTS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

1955

MASON v. WILLIAMS & WILLIAMS LD.

ACTION.

On April 7, 1953, while the plaintiff, Albert Mason, was using a cold chisel issued to him by his employers, the first defendants, and made by Thomas Turton & Sons Ld., the second defendants, he was injured when a bit of the chisel flew off and struck him in the eye, which later had to be removed. He sought to recover damages from both defendants in respect of his injury.

David Pennant for the plaintiff.
Norman Richards for the employers, the first defendants.
W. L. Mars-Jones for the suppliers, the second defendants.

No cases were referred to in argument.

FINNEMORE J. This case has taken some considerable time and it has raised some important issues, especially questions of fact which have not been at all easy to decide. On April 7, 1953, the plaintiff, Albert Mason, using a cold chisel supplied to him by the first defendants, his employers, and made by the second defendants, was injured when a bit of the chisel flew off and struck him in the eye, which subsequently had to be removed. Nobody suggests that the plaintiff did anything wrong or was in any way negligent. Certainly there is no evidence that he was, and he was working in the ordinary way and had no reason to suppose that the chisel provided for him was other than a proper one. It was at one time suggested that he should have worn goggles, and as against that it was said that in doing that work men did not normally wear goggles. The head of this chisel was in fact dangerously hard.

There was some question at one time whether the bit which flew off was from the chisel or from the hammer, which also, of course, was hard; but that would not matter because it is the hardness of the chisel which is the unexpected and wrong thing. Hammers should be harder and even if this hammer had been harder than usual, if used on the ordinary soft headed chisel, nothing would have happened. Further, on the evidence of the witnesses, it seems quite plain that the bit which flew off was in fact from the chisel head, and evidence was given that that was seen by at least one witness immediately after the accident. The real case is whether the first defendants, the employers, or the second defendants, the suppliers of the chisel, are responsible.

I will first consider the question of examination. Mr. Mars-Jones said that it would not be obvious that there was anything wrong with the head of the chisel when it was taken into stores, but he argues that after it had been used for some time, the way in which the head lost pieces would have been obvious on inspection and would have shown that there was something wrong. I take the view that employers, if they buy reputable tools from reputable people who make them, are not bound to set up examinations, either before issuing a tool or after it has been in use for days or weeks or even months, unless there is something which calls their attention to the suggestion that there is something wrong. Employers have to act as reasonable people, they have to take reasonable care; but if they buy their tools from well-known makers, such as the second defendants are, they are entitled to assume that the tools will be proper for the purposes for which both sides intended them to be used, and not require daily, weekly or monthly inspection to see if in fact all is well. I think, therefore, that there is no point that becomes material to be laid against the first defendants that they did not in fact examine this chisel after it had been put into use, nor do I think there will be anything, therefore, in the argument which might have been made that the second defendants in putting this chisel into circulation did so with the reasonable expectation that there would be an intermediate examination. I am quite sure that they expected no such thing, and they would probably be rather affronted at the mere suggestion.

How did this chisel head get too hard? There are two theories put forward. The suppliers say that it must have happened in the first defendants' factory, that this was an old chisel which must have left their premises before some date in 1948, that it had been in use for a long time, and whether long or short it had been reconditioned in the first defendants' factory. They maintain that the state of the head was due to something that the employers did, and not to anything which the suppliers did before they sent it. The employers turn the argument round the other way and say that as they did not heat or quench the chisel they could not have affected in any way its hardness after they received it from the suppliers. That, I think, is what this case now really comes to.

[His Lordship reviewed the evidence and continued:] I am satisfied that this was a new chisel which had been taken out of stores two or three weeks before; and that it had been used by the plaintiff as it had come from the original manufacturers, and had chipped before anything at all had been done to it at the first defendants' factory.

I appreciate that I am faced with another problem, as was indicated in Donoghue v. Stevenson,[1] that res ipsa loquitur does not apply and the court has to be satisfied, and therefore the plaintiff has to prove, that there was negligence on the part of the manufacturers. Of course, that cannot normally be proved by being able to say that on such and such a date such and such a workman did this, that, or the other. I think that when one eliminates anything happening in the present case at the first defendants' factory, to which this chisel came direct from the second defendants, there remains the fact that when it came from the second defendants the head was too hard and that undue hardness could have been produced either carelessly or

[1] [1932] A.C. 562; 48 T.L.R. 494.

1955

Mason v. Williams & Williams Ld.

Finnemore J.

deliberately to make a harder and more durable head while it was being manufactured by them; and in my opinion that is really as far as any plaintiff can be expected to take his case. What the plaintiff says here is: "This is your chisel: you made "it and I used it in the condition in which you made it, in the "way you intended me to use it, and you never relied on any "intermediate examination; therefore, I have discharged the "onus of proof by showing that this trouble must have hap-"pened through some act in the manufacture of this chisel in "your factory, which was either careless or deliberate, and in "either event it was a breach of duty towards me, a person "who, you contemplated, would use this article which you "made, in the way you intended it to be used." If that is right he would be entitled to succeed against the second defendants.

I come to the question of damages. The plaintiff has lost his eye and has been somewhat troubled with watering since his artificial eye has been inserted, and while he will always be a one-eyed man there are many one-eyed men about the world who are able to do useful work. When one loses one's eye comparatively late in life it naturally takes time to get adjusted. There are, perhaps, certain fine movements to which one would never be fully accustomed; but broadly and substantially a man who has lost an eye becomes as good as a man with two eyes within a reasonable time, for all effective and normal purposes. On the other hand he has to carry with him no slight risk that if an accident does happen again it may destroy his remaining eye, and then he would become completely blind. That is a matter to which the court has to pay attention as well. Taking into account his present loss of earnings, which may continue for some time, but which I do not think is likely to be permanent, I award him £1,900 general damages and there are agreed special damages of £59.

Judgment for the plaintiff against the second defendants.

Solicitors: Rowley, Ashworth & Co., Manchester; Laces & Co., Liverpool; Neal, Scorah, Siddons & Co., Sheffield.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* DOLBEY v. GOODWIN.

C. A.

1954
Nov. 8.

[1952 D. No. 1748.]

Lord Goddard C.J., Hodson and Romer L.JJ.

Fatal Accidents Acts—Damages—Mother's claim in respect of son's death—Mother a widow—Principle of assessment of damages.

The plaintiff, a widow aged 55 years, claimed damages from the defendant under the Fatal Accidents Acts, in respect of the death by accident of her unmarried son aged 29, who was in the defendant's employment. The son was living with his mother to whom he paid £5 a week, out of which she provided him with food. At the time of his death he was not contemplating marriage and was undergoing a course of training which would have qualified him to earn higher wages. The trial judge assessed the plaintiff's damages under the Fatal Accidents Acts at £3,100. The defendant appealed on the ground that the amount was excessive:—

Held, that if the plaintiff had been the wife of the deceased, £3,100 would have been an appropriate sum to have awarded; but that the son would in all probability some day have married and was under no legal liability to support his mother, although in the future, from a sense of moral obligation he might continue to give his mother something, but probably less than he had contributed in the past; and that the sum awarded was excessive and should be reduced to £1,500.

APPEAL from Cassels J.

The plaintiff, Edith Maud Dolbey, a widow, suing as the administratrix of her son Frederick Charles Dolbey, claimed damages under the Fatal Accidents Acts from the defendant, Frederick Goodwin, in respect of the death of her son as the result of an accident while in the defendant's employment; she also claimed under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act.

Cassels J. held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages under the Fatal Accidents Acts. He assessed the amount at £3,100, and also awarded her damages under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934. The defendant appealed against the award under the Fatal Accidents Act on the ground that the amount was excessive. The facts, so far as material, are set out in the judgment of Lord Goddard C.J.

F. W. Beney Q.C. and Ronald Hopkins for the appellant (defendant).

R. Marven Everett Q.C. and Sir Shirley Worthington-Evans for the respondent (plaintiff).

The case cited in argument appears in the judgment.

LORD GODDARD C.J. This is an appeal from an award of Cassels J. who, after having found that the plaintiff, the mother

C. A.
1954
DOLBEY v. GOODWIN.
Lord Goddard C.J.

of the deceased, was entitled to recover damages under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, assessed the damages at £3,100, and gave her in addition £237 10s. under the Law Reform Act, which included £200 for loss of expectation of life and £37 10s. for funeral expenses. There is no objection to the judge's assessment of the damages under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, but it is submitted on behalf of the defendant that the award of £3,100 is so excessive that this court ought to interfere.

It has been laid down in Flint v. Lovell [1] and other cases that when a judge has not given precise reasons, or one cannot see from his judgment exactly what he took into account, so that the court does not know whether he took into account something which he ought not or omitted something which he should have taken into account, this court can only look at the total amount which has been awarded, and from that must come to a conclusion whether the sum is so excessively high or so unreasonably low that it must amount to an unreasonable estimate. The young man in question in this case seems to have been a very steady fellow, a non-smoker and a non-drinker; he always went home to his mother and he was supporting her. He was 29 years of age, and his mother seems to have been 25 years older than he was. The son appeared to be a young man who took a long view, because he gave up some work at which he was earning more money than he was earning at the time of his death in order to qualify himself to take a more responsible, and no doubt better paid, position in the future than the one he had at the time of his death. His mother paid the rent, as the other members of the family had left, and I suppose it would cost the mother at least £1 a week to keep him, although he bought his own clothes. We all know that in these days food is very expensive, and I should think that it could not have cost the mother very much less than £1, so she was getting the benefit of something like £4 or £4 5s. a week at the time of her son's death.

The plaintiff was not, of course, the boy's wife but his mother, and a matter which has to be borne in mind, and to which we give full effect, is that the moral obligation to keep his mother was very strong. There was, however, no legal obligation, because nowadays the law is different from what it used to be, and while a woman is bound to support her husband and her children if she can, children are no longer bound to support their parents. However, that is not a matter which weighs very heavily in the scale, because, no doubt, this boy had been a good son and would have remained a good son. I think that if it had been the case of a wife, the sum of £3,100 would have been a very proper sum to have given, or, at any rate, it would not have been too small a sum to have awarded. Can we support the award of £3,100 in the case of a mother? After all, although this young man had not yet married—sensible young men do not marry so early as they used—there must have been a very strong chance that he would marry, and the more prosperous he became the more probable it would be that he would do so; and, if he had married, although no doubt he would have given something to his mother, I expect it would have been very much less than he had given in the past. The court feels that Cassels J. considered the case on exactly the same footing as if he were awarding damages to a widow, and we feel that the sum awarded was excessive in the case of a mother, and is higher than one's experience shows would be awarded in the case of a parent, especially in view of the fact that the son might very soon have married, although it appears that he had not any matrimonial intentions at the time of his death.

[1] [1935] 1 K.B. 354; 50 T.L.R. 127.

This court is always reluctant to interfere in these cases, because we know the difficulty that all judges have in coming to a decision in them. I think it is about as difficult a task as could possibly be put upon a judge, and so I always feel when I am sitting at nisi prius. I have often felt that in really serious cases of this kind it is better to have a jury because the opinion of twelve people is probably more satisfactory than the opinion of one. The court has come to the conclusion that the right sum to have awarded would have been £1,500, added to the sum of £237 10s., making a total award of £1,737 10s.

HODSON L.J. I share the reluctance expressed by the Lord Chief Justice in interfering with an award of damages which has been made by a judge who obviously has considered the matter very carefully. The gross figure awarded to the mother of this young man was £3,300 under the Fatal Accidents Act, reduced by £200 which was awarded under the Law Reform Act, making the net sum awarded £3,100 plus £37 10s. for the funeral expenses. This young man was 29 years of age in April, 1952, when he was killed, and his mother was then 52 or 53 years of age. He was, as Mr. Everett emphasized (and I have no doubt that Cassels J. regarded it as a very important matter) an exceedingly good son who was likely during the rest of his life to recognize the moral obligation which he had to maintain his mother if and so far as she needed it; but the fact remains that he was her son and not her husband. The contribution that he was making to his mother at the time of his death was £5 a week, out of which she was feeding him, and it is difficult to imagine that the cost of his food can have been as little as £1 a week. The prospect of marriage was, of course, considered by Cassels J., but he seems to have discounted that prospect by reason of the fact that in the past this young man had not, according to the evidence, taken much interest in the opposite sex. However, I am bound to say that I cannot see any reason to discount the prospect of this young man's marriage at all. It seems to me exceedingly likely that he would marry, and when he married, however much the moral claims of his mother might pull upon him, yet the claims of his wife, who would be the principal person to share in his prosperity, would come first. If he had succeeded in life, as appears likely, he would, no doubt, have required money for other purposes, to invest in the future as well as for his wife's maintenance, and the mother, in those circumstances might have received less. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, I agree with what Lord Goddard C.J. has said, that the figure of £3,100 should be reduced to the sum of £1,500, and to that extent I think that this appeal must be allowed.

C. A. 1954

DOLBEY v. GOODWIN.

Hodson L.J.

ROMER L.J. I agree, and for the same reasons. It appears to me as though Cassels J. had approached this problem as if the deceased man were the husband instead of the son of the plaintiff. There is a fundamental distinction between the two. Apart from the point to which Lord Goddard C.J. has referred in relation to the legal liability to maintain, there is, of course, the very real possibility of a son marrying, and I think that Cassels J. paid a little too much attention to the fact that this son had arrived at the age of 29 without marrying, and concluded that, at the time of the accident, he had no intention of ever marrying. It seems to me, nowadays at all events, and especially in the case of an ambitious and serious minded young man, as this young man obviously was, that one can really attach very little weight to the fact that he has not married by the time he was 29 years of age. This son was going through an apprenticeship in the hope of getting a very much better job later, and it may well have been that when that time came he would have decided to marry, and it is to be observed that if this young man had in fact married instead of having died, the mother would have received nothing whatever by way of a capital sum, and the expectation of her future pecuniary benefit would, I should think, have been very much less than £4 a week. I agree with the order which has been proposed.

Appeal allowed. Damages reduced.

Solicitors: F. J. Stewart & Co.; G. Howard & Co.

P. B. D.

[HOUSE OF LORDS.]

* B. v. B. (No. 2). H. L. (E.)†

1955
April 4, 5.

PRACTICE NOTE.

House of Lords—Appeal to—Leave to appeal—Matrimonial cause—Infant—Custody—Religious upbringing—No appeal except by leave of Court of Appeal—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), s. 27 (2).
Infant—Custody—Divorce Court. "Matrimonial cause."

APPEAL from the Court of Appeal.

A wife (the appellant) petitioned successfully for a divorce and on the pronunciation of the decree nisi on July 31, 1952, an order was made that she should have custody of the two children of the marriage. On September 12, 1952, the decree was made absolute. Subsequently it became known that she wished the younger child to be brought up, not in the Roman Catholic religion, that of her former husband (the respondent), but as a member of the Church of England. On June 6, 1954, the respondent applied in the divorce proceedings for directions that the child should be brought up a Roman Catholic. On November 5, 1954, Davies J. dismissed the summons. On November 19, 1954, the Court of Appeal reversed his decision and refused leave to appeal. The Appeals Committee of the House of Lords subsequently granted leave to appeal. When the case came on for hearing before the Appellate Committee on April 4, 1955, objection was taken on behalf of the respondent that there was no jurisdiction to hear the appeal.

Charles Russell Q.C. and Roger Ormrod for the respondent. There is no jurisdiction to hear this appeal, since by section 27 (2) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925: "The decision of the Court of Appeal on any question arising "under the provisions of this Act relating to matrimonial causes "and matters . . . shall be final, except . . . on a question of law "on which the Court of Appeal gives leave to appeal." Section 193 (1) confers jurisdiction to make orders such as that in this case in relation to infants. The position was not altered by the Administration of Justice (Appeals) Act, 1934, section 1 (3) of which plainly saved section 27 (2) of the Act of 1925. The fact that the fasciculus of sections in the Act of 1925 relating to matrimonial causes was repealed and re-enacted by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, does not affect the position. The words of section 26 (1) are identical with those of section 193 (1) of the Act of 1925. By section 38 (1) of the Interpretation Act, 1889:

† Present: VISCOUNT KILMUIR L.C., LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON, LORD REID, LORD TUCKER and LORD SOMERVELL OF HARROW.

H. L. (E.)
1955
B. v. B. (No. 2).

"Where . . . any Act . . . repeals and re-enacts . . . any "provisions of a former Act, references in any other Act to "the provisions so repealed, shall, unless the contrary intention "appears, be construed as references to the provisions so "re-enacted."

J. E. S. Simon Q.C. and A. R. Ellis for the appellant. Section 27 (2) of the Act of 1925 should be narrowly construed. The phrase "matrimonial causes and matters" is not all-inclusive. Such a provision as this should be strictly construed: see Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, 10th ed., pp. 273–4, 285–6. Questions "relating to matrimonial causes and matters" would include particulars, striking out pleadings and the like. A claim for damages only would not be a matrimonial cause nor would it relate to a matrimonial cause. This proceeding is not one relating to a matrimonial cause or matter within the definition of "matrimonial cause" in section 225 of the Act of 1925, but a proceeding under the Act relating to the custody or education of children. Proceedings relating to the custody of children under this section are considered by the court in the same way that they would be considered if original proceedings had been taken in the Chancery Division. The words "any proceedings for "divorce" in section 193 (1) of the Act of 1925 are only applicable where the order is made before or by the final decree: see Pryor v. Pryor.[1] An application by a wife for maintenance after final decree is not a matrimonial cause. The words "relating to "matrimonial causes" mean "relating to the actual divorce "suit." They do not include the special statutory jurisdiction which may arise after the suit is ended or even after the death of one of the parties.

[Reference was also made to the Annual Practice (1955), p. 2326; Shelley v. London County Council[2]; Rex v. Middlesex Justices, ex parte Bond[3]; Manders v. Manders[4]; Hanbury v. Hanbury[5]; Butchart v. Butchart and Hill.[6]]

VISCOUNT KILMUIR L.C. We have considered all the points put before us and we have come to the conclusion that the case is covered by section 27 (2) of the Act of 1925.

[No order was made as to the costs of the appeal.]

April 5. The House ordered that the petition and appeal be dismissed as incompetent to be heard.

Solicitors: Theodore Goddard & Co.; Charles Russell & Co.

F. C.

[1] [1947] P. 64; 63 T.L.R. 208; [1947] 1 All E.R. 381.
[2] [1949] A.C. 56; 64 T.L.R. 600; [1948] 2 All E.R. 898.
[3] [1933] 2 K.B. 1; 49 T.L.R. 247.
[4] (1890) 63 L.T. 627; 7 T.L.R. 149.
[5] [1895] A.C. 417.
[6] [1901] A.C. 266.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* B. v. B. (No. 3).

C. A.

1955
April 5.

Jenkins and Hodson L.JJ.

House of Lords—Appeal to—Leave to appeal—Matrimonial cause—Infant—Custody—Religious upbringing—Whether question of law raised—Question of discretion—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 49), s. 27 (2).
Fact or Law—Judicial discretion. Infant—Custody—Divorce Court.

On December 14, 1954, the Court of Appeal reversed the decision of Davies J. and held that a girl, the child of a marriage which had been dissolved, should be brought up according to the wishes of her father in the Roman Catholic faith. The Court of Appeal refused to the mother leave to appeal to the House of Lords, but she obtained leave to do so from the House. When the appeal came on for hearing the father raised the point, which had been overlooked, that under section 27 (2) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, there could be no appeal in a matrimonial cause or matter of this character "except . . . on a "question of law on which the Court of Appeal gives leave to "appeal." The mother again applied to the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal to the House of Lords, notwithstanding the previous order refusing such leave:—

Held that, this being a case in which the court had reversed an order of the trial judge in the exercise of his discretion, no question of law was raised within section 27 (2) of the Act of 1925 which would justify the court in granting leave to appeal.

Quaere, whether the Court of Appeal could entertain the application, in as much as an order had been drawn up, passed and entered, on the face of which leave to appeal to the House of Lords had been refused.

APPLICATION for leave to appeal out of time to the House of Lords.

The Court of Appeal held, reversing an order of Davies J., in matrimonial proceedings, that a girl of seven years should, in accordance with the wishes of the father, be brought up as a Roman Catholic. The court refused the mother leave to appeal. Subsequently, she obtained the leave of the House of Lords to appeal.

When the appeal came on for hearing in the House of Lords [1] the father took the preliminary objection that, having regard to the provisions of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 27 (2),[2] the decision of the Court of Appeal was final, except on a question of law on which the Court of Appeal gave leave to appeal.

[1] B. v. B. (No. 2), ante, p. 557.

[2] Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 27 (2): "The decision of the Court of Appeal "on any question arising under the "provisions of this Act relating to "matrimonial causes and matters "and to declarations of legitimacy "and of validity of marriage shall "be final, except where the decision "is either on the grant or refusal of "a decree on a petition for dissolu-"tion or nullity of marriage or for "such a declaration as aforesaid, or "on a question of law on which the "Court of Appeal gives leave to "appeal."

C. A.
1955
B. v. B. (No. 3).

The mother applied to the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal notwithstanding its previous refusal to grant leave.

J. E. S. Simon Q.C. and A. R. Ellis for the mother.
Charles Russell Q.C. and Roger Ormrod for the father.

The following cases were cited in argument: Evans v. Bartlam [3] and Willoughby v. Willoughby.[4]

Jenkins L.J. This is a case concerning the religious upbringing of a girl, aged some seven years. The matter came before this court, consisting of my brothers Hodson and Vaisey and myself on December 14, 1954, and on that date we gave directions to the effect that the girl should be brought up in the Roman Catholic faith, reversing an order of Davies J. to the contrary effect. On our stating our decision on December 14, 1954, counsel for the mother applied for leave to appeal to the House of Lords. That leave was refused; but it is fair to say that at the time neither the court nor counsel appearing had in mind the special provisions of section 27 (2) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925.

[His Lordship read section 27 (2), and continued:] The mother applied to the House of Lords for, and obtained, leave to appeal to the House of Lords. On the occasion when that leave was given section 27 (2) was again overlooked. In due course the case came into the list for hearing in the House of Lords. Before it came on, the existence of section 27 (2) had been noticed by the solicitors or counsel for the father, and they advised those on the mother's side that this point would be taken on the hearing of the appeal. The point taken was that this was a matrimonial cause or matter, and, accordingly, that under section 27 (2) there was no appeal from the decision of this court except on a question of law with the leave of this court. That preliminary point was fully argued in the House of Lords and was upheld.

It then occurred to the mother's advisers that it might be possible to remove this procedural obstacle by a further application to this court for the purpose of obtaining leave of this court, notwithstanding the previous order refusing leave to appeal to the House of Lords, on the ground that there was here a question of law which would be a proper subject of leave under section 27 (2). Their Lordships, as I understand it, expressed no view one way or the other whether such a further application to this court ought to be made, or could be entertained, or, if entertained, should be acceded to; but I understand them to have intimated that in the event of such an application being made and succeeding they would be prepared to consider allowing the appeal to go forward on the existing printed documents without putting the mother to the necessity of starting all over again with a fresh appeal to the House.

[3] [1937] A.C. 473; 53 T.L.R. 689; [1937] 2 All E.R. 646.
[4] [1951] P. 184.

That is the background of the present application, which is an application on behalf of the mother for leave to appeal to the House of Lords on a question of law arising in the case. To my mind it is open to grave doubt whether this court can entertain such an application at all, inasmuch as there is here an order drawn up, passed and entered, on the face of which it appears that leave to appeal to the House of Lords was refused. Assuming that this objection can be answered, on the ground that when leave was refused in this court the court had not present to their minds section 27 (2), and regarding the matter as if it was now being raised for the first time, it remains to consider whether there is here any question of law in respect of which leave to appeal to the House of Lords could properly be given by this court.

Mr. Simon has said all that could possibly be said in support of the mother's application, but he has failed to persuade me that there was here any question of law at all of the kind contemplated by subsection (2) of section 27. He says, in effect (I hope it is not an injustice to his argument if I put it in this way) that there is here a question of law, the question being whether as a matter of law in all the circumstances of the case the Court of Appeal was justified in reversing the decision of Davies J. on a matter decided in the discretion of the judge. That is a question of law in a sense, but, in my view, it is not such a question of law as would warrant this court in giving leave having regard to the terms of section 27 (2). If this amounts to a question of law for the present purpose, then it follows that in every case within the purview of section 27 (2), in which this court reverses an order made by the judge of first instance in the exercise of his discretion there would be a question of law on the strength of which it would be proper for this court to grant leave to appeal to the House of Lords. It seems to me that this would in effect nullify the restriction imposed by section 27 (2).

Accordingly, in my view this is not a case in which it would have been right to give leave to appeal under section 27 (2), if an application under that section, or bringing that section to the notice of the court, had been made at the proper time. In refusing leave we were guided by no different considerations from those which govern the question on the footing that section 27 (2) applies, as it does—as is now recognized—apply to this case. Accordingly, in my view, this applications fails and must be dismissed.

Hodson L.J. I agree. I am not satisfied that this court can entertain this application, leave to appeal having been asked for and having been refused and the order having been drawn up. Looking at the matter as if the application could be entertained, I am of opinion that there is no question of law within the

C. A.
1955
B. v. B. (No. 3).
Hodson L.J.

meaning of section 27 (2) of the Judicature Act, 1925, which would justify this court in granting the application. I say this on the understanding that the House of Lords has in no way encouraged this application or expressed any view about whether the application to this court could be entertained at all, and also on the understanding that no concession at all has been made by the husband to this appeal as to any points, but simply that if the appeal did go forward no point would be taken on his side as to the defect in the printed record.

Application dismissed.

Solicitors: Hunters; Charles Russell & Co.

J. F. L.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1955
April 27.
Lord Goddard C.J., Hilbery and Pearce JJ.

* REGINA v. ASHFORD, KENT, JUSTICES. Ex parte RICHLEY.

PRACTICE NOTE.

Crown Practice — Certiorari — Application for extension of time — Respondent to be notified—R.S.C., Ord. 59, r. 4 (2).

APPLICATION for order of certiorari.

The applicant, Peter Blair Richley, applied for certiorari to quash an affiliation order made on December 29, 1953, by the Ashford justices whereby the applicant was ordered to pay 20s. a week to Miss Pansy Patricia Mann for the maintenance and education of her bastard child of which the applicant was adjudged to be the putative father.

On February 15, 1955, the applicant applied ex parte to the Divisional Court for leave (which was granted) to apply for certiorari more than six months after the date of the justices' order. No notice was given to the respondent of the application and she did not appear on that occasion. At the present hearing counsel for the respondent indicated that, in the circumstances, he could not oppose an extension of time.

Frank Whitworth for the applicant.
J. H. Gower for the respondent.

LORD GODDARD C.J., having refused the application for certiorari, continued: There is one matter on which I want to say a word of general application with regard to applications for leave to move for orders of certiorari. R.S.C., Ord. 59, r. 4 (2), provides that motions for certiorari must be made within six months of the making of the order which it is sought to quash. The court has power, of course, to extend the order, and the present case is one in which it would be right to apply for the order to be extended. But where a person intends to apply to the court for an extension of time he must give notice to the person whom he would serve in the ordinary way as one who would be affected if the order challenged were quashed, that he intends to apply for an extension because the person affected has a right to be heard and to object to such an extension. He very likely has what I will call a vested interest in the upholding of the order. In the same way as if you go to the Court of Appeal out of time you have to give notice of motion for the time to be extended and as you have to do so in this court when justices have not stated a case within the requisite time, so, if you are going to move for certiorari out of time, you must give notice to the person who would be made in the ordinary way a respondent to the motion in order that he may be heard as to whether or not it is a fit case in which to extend the time.

1955

REGINA v. ASHFORD, KENT, JUSTICES. Ex parte RICHLEY.

Solicitors: Kingsford, Dorman & Co., for Kingsford, Flower & Pain, Ashford; Lovell, Son & Pitfield, for Willmott, Elwell & Taylor, Ashford.

J. D. P.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

C. A.

1955

Apr. 21.

Evershed M.R., Hodson and Parker L.JJ.

*J. W. GRAHAME (ENGLISH FINANCIERS) LD. v. INGRAM AND OTHERS.

[Plaint No. L. 114a.]

Moneylender — Memorandum — Copy — Delivery — Joint and several borrowers—Delivery to agent of borrower—Moneylenders Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 21), s. 6.

A moneylender sued for the repayment of money lent to four persons (one of whom had since died). The four borrowers had signed a memorandum of contract jointly and severally promising to repay the money with interest. At the foot of that document they acknowledged that they had received a copy of the memorandum. In fact, however, only one of the borrowers was personally served with a copy of the memorandum, and he was given an extra copy to send to one of the other three borrowers:—

Held, that section 6 of the Moneylenders Act, 1927, had not been complied with. The acknowledgment signed by the borrowers did not say that a copy of the memorandum had been sent or delivered to them. To comply with the statute a copy should have been sent to each borrower within seven days of the making of the contract. Service of a copy on one borrower as agent of another would not be sufficient.

Dictum of Scrutton L.J. in Eldridge v. Taylor [1931] 2 K.B. 416; 47 T.L.R. 516 applied.

C. A.

1955

J. W. Grahame (English Financiers) Ld. v. Ingram.

Appeal from Judge Charlesworth sitting at Sunderland County Court.

In August, 1952, one Godfrey desired to borrow money from the plaintiff company (referred to as the moneylender). As the moneylender was not prepared to lend Godfrey money on his promissory note alone, Godfrey's wife, her sister (Mrs. Ingram) and her husband were persuaded to be parties to the contract of borrowing. On August 25, 1952, the four borrowers signed a contract whereby they jointly and severally promised to pay to the moneylender £100, which was then advanced to Godfrey, with interest at 80 per cent. At the foot of the contract the borrowers gave the following acknowledgment: "The above note or memorandum which we have read and of which we acknowledge to have received a true copy was signed before the principal sum was advanced and the security stated above was given." Having signed that memorandum, they also signed a promissory note dated the same date promising to pay that sum and interest. On August 27, the moneylender sent to Godfrey two copies of the memorandum, one for himself and one for Ingram, but no copies were sent then or later to Mrs. Godfrey or Mrs. Ingram, and there was no evidence that Ingram received his copy within seven days of the signing of the contract, though he admitted receiving it at some date.

In an action by the moneylender against Ingram, Mrs. Ingram and Mrs. Godfrey (Godfrey having died), the surviving borrowers sought unsuccessfully to maintain that they were merely sureties for Godfrey. The county court judge found that the three borrowers, with Godfrey, had jointly and severally borrowed the money. The borrowers further contended that section 6 of the Moneylenders Act, 1927,[1] had not been complied with in that a copy of the memorandum of the contract had not been sent to each of the four borrowers within seven days of the making of the contract. On that matter the county court judge found for the borrowers and, accordingly, he dismissed the claim. The moneylender appealed.

D. L. Wilkes for the moneylender.
J. R. Johnson for the borrowers.

In addition to the case referred to in the judgment the following was cited in argument: S. H. Ellis Ld. v. Bridges.[2]

Evershed M.R. I will ask Parker L.J. to deliver the first judgment.

[1] Moneylenders Act, 1927, s. 6: "No contract for the repayment by a borrower of money lent to him or to any agent on his behalf by a moneylender . . . shall be enforceable, unless a note or memorandum in writing of the contract be made and signed personally by the borrower, and unless a copy thereof be delivered or sent to the borrower within seven days of the making of the contract."

[2] (1938) 5 L.Jo. Cty. Ct. 254.

C. A.
1955
J. W. Grahame (English Financiers) Ld. v. Ingram.

Parker L.J. This is an appeal from a judgment of Judge Charlesworth, sitting at Sunderland County Court, whereby he dismissed a claim brought by the plaintiff, who is a licensed moneylender, against the three defendants, Mr. and Mrs. Ingram and a Mrs. Godfrey. [His Lordship stated the facts, and continued:] Mr. Wickes before this court has taken two points. He has said first that the county court judge overlooked the fact that in the memorandum which the parties signed they gave an acknowledgment at the foot of it in these terms: "The above "note or memorandum which we have read and of which we "acknowledge to have received a true copy was signed before "the principal sum was advanced and the security stated above "was given." It is to be observed that it does not say there, as required by the statute, that there has been delivered to them, or sent to them and each of them, a copy of the memorandum.

Secondly, it is said (and this is the real point) that where there is more than one borrower, as in this case, it is sufficient if a copy of the memorandum is sent or delivered to one of those borrowers; and it is said (and the judge has so found) that a copy was in fact sent to Godfrey.

[His Lordship read section 6 of the Moneylenders Act, 1927, as set out above, and continued:] Reading those words, it seems plain that where, as here, there is more than one borrower, because they are borrowing jointly and severally, a copy must be sent to each borrower. The mischief aimed at by this section, as I understand it, is that the borrower should have this protection, that he should know and have in his possession a copy of the terms on which he has borrowed the money.

There is no authority on the point, but it is to be observed that in Eldridge v. Taylor,[1] Scrutton L.J., in commencing his judgment, drew attention to the stringency of the regulations relating to moneylenders. He said: "For reasons which appeared "to it satisfactory, Parliament has put money-lenders under "the strictest regulations, and it is not for us to consider "whether that policy is right or not. Section 6 of the Act of "1927 provides that certain contracts for the repayment of money "lent and certain securities for the repayment of money lent shall "be invalid unless a note or memorandum of the contract is "made and signed personally by the borrower, and unless a copy "thereof is delivered or sent to him within seven days of the "making of the contract. Parliament has apparently thought "that the borrower should be protected by having in his posses-"sion a copy of the writing he has signed."

Finally, it is to be borne in mind that it is the borrower himself to whom the copy of the memorandum is to be sent, and from the wording of the section it would appear that sending it to an agent of the borrower is insufficient. Accordingly, although for certain purposes one partner may be the agent of his other

[1] [1931] 2 K.B. 416, 418; 47 T.L.R. 516.

C. A.
1955
J. W. GRAHAME (ENGLISH FINANCIERS) LD. v. INGRAM.

partners, nevertheless it seems to me that under this section service of a copy on one partner would not be service on the other. For those reasons I think the county court judge came to a correct conclusion, and this appeal should be dismissed.

HODSON L.J. I agree, and have nothing to add.

EVERSHED M.R. I also agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Gibson & Weldon for S. H. Mincoff, Newcastle-upon-Tyne; Torr & Co. for Wilford, Speeding & Hanna, Sunderland.

E. D.

[CHANCERY DIVISION.]

1955
March 31.
Vaisey J.

*COMBER v. FLEET ELECTRICS LD.

[1954 C. 2598.]

Landlord and Tenant—Assignment or underletting—Covenant not to assign or underlet without consent—Fine—Covenant not to change user of premises without consent—Compensation moneys payable to tenant by local authority—Agreement by lessors to give consent in consideration of assignment by tenant of compensation money—Whether agreement enforceable—Whether a fine—Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5, c. 20), s. 144—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5, c. 36), s. 19 (3).

Lessors sought to enforce against lessees an agreement in a document (not under seal) by which the lessees agreed to pay over to the lessors the lessees' proportion of the compensation moneys payable in respect of a compulsory purchase of part of the demised premises by the local authority, in consideration of the lessors granting a licence to assign the lease and a licence to underlet and change the user of the premises:—

Held, (1) that the stipulated payment constituted a "fine" within the meaning of section 144 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, and section 19 (3) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927,[1]

[1] Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 144: "In all leases containing a "covenant, condition, or agreement "against assigning, underletting, or "parting with the possession, or disposing of the land or property "leased without licence or consent, "such covenant, condition, or agreement shall, unless the lease contains an express provision to the "contrary, be deemed to be subject "to a proviso to the effect that no "fine or sum of money in the nature "of a fine shall be payable for or in "respect of such licence or consent; "but this proviso does not preclude "the right to require the payment of "a reasonable sum in respect of any "legal or other expense incurred in "relation to such licence or consent."

Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, s. 19: "(1) In all leases whether "made before or after the commencement of this Act containing a "covenant condition or agreement "against assigning, underletting, "charging or parting with the possession of demised premises or any and as such was contrary to those provisions; (2) that, accordingly, there was no consideration for the payment, so that, the payment not having been made, the action failed.

Semble, (1) that if the money had actually been paid by the lessees to the lessors it would have been irrecoverable; (2) had the document been executed under seal the lessors could have enforced it.

ACTION.

The plaintiffs were the owners in fee simple of a shop and premises known as 32 Gallowtree Gate in the city of Leicester.

By a lease dated January 25, 1949, made between the plaintiffs of the one part and the defendant company of the other part, the plaintiffs demised the shop to the defendant company for the term of twenty-one years from December 25, 1948, subject to the payment of the rent and observance and performance of the covenants on the part of the lessee and the conditions therein contained. By the lease the defendant company covenanted, inter alia, not without the plaintiffs' consent to use the shop for any purpose other than the carrying on of the business of sellers by retail of certain specified and other electric domestic appliances, and also, not to assign, underlet or part with the possession of the shop or any part thereof without the written consent of the plaintiffs previously obtained.

Subsequent to the grant of the lease, but before May 22, 1951, Leicester corporation had, under compulsory powers and in order to set back the frontage of the shop, acquired the fee simple of the front portion of the premises, and were liable to pay compensation therefor, but its amount and the proportions to be paid to the plaintiffs and the defendant company respectively had not been agreed or determined. The company had agreed, subject to the consent of the plaintiffs, to assign the lease to one Lennard, who desired to carry on through the medium of a company known as Wards Hollywood Film Star Shoes Ld., to whom the shop was to be sublet by him, the business of ladies' outfitters.

" part thereof without licence or con- " sent, such covenant condition or " agreement shall, notwithstanding " any express provision to the con- " trary, be deemed to be subject— " (a) to a proviso to the effect that " such licence or consent is not to be " unreasonably withheld, but this " proviso does not preclude the right " of the landlord to require payment " of a reasonable sum in respect of " any legal or other expenses incurred " in connexion with such licence or " consent; . . . (3) In all leases " whether made before or after the " commencement of this Act con- " taining a covenant condition or " agreement against the alteration " of the user of the demised premises, " without licence or consent, such " covenant condition or agreement " shall, if the alteration does not " involve any structural alteration of " the premises, be deemed, notwith- " standing any express provision to " the contrary, to be subject to a " proviso that no fine or sum of " money in the nature of a fine, " whether by way of increase of rent " or otherwise, shall be payable for " or in respect of such licence or con- " sent; but this proviso does not pre- " clude the right of the landlord to " require payment of a reasonable " sum in respect of any damage to or " diminution in the value of the " premises or any neighbouring pre- " mises belonging to him and of any " legal or other expenses incurred in " connexion with such licence or " consent."

1955

COMBER v. FLEET ELECTRICS LD.

On May 22, 1951, the defendant company by a document (not under seal) signed by one Greaves, a director, "for and on "behalf" of the defendant company, undertook in consideration of the plaintiffs at the request of the defendant company granting it a licence to assign the lease to Lennard and to underlet it to Wards Hollywood Film Star Shoes Ld., and also to use the premises as a ladies' outfitters, to assign to the plaintiffs the proportion due to the defendant company of the compensation recoverable from Leicester corporation for setting back the frontage to the improvement line, and to pay certain other sums therein mentioned.

The plaintiffs alleged that in reliance of the undertaking on May 23, 1951, they granted a licence to assign and for change of user of the premises. They further alleged that the compensation payable by Leicester corporation and the proportions in which sum was divisible between the plaintiffs and the defendant company had been agreed with the corporation, but that the corporation was not prepared to pay over the defendant company's proportion of that compensation unless and until it had assigned that proportion to the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs had called upon the defendant company to assign its proportion of the compensation in pursuance of the undertaking, but the defendant company refused so to do. By their statement of claim the plaintiffs claimed specific performance of the undertaking.

The defendant company, by its amended defence, averred (1) that the assignment of its proportion of the compensation was a fine or a sum of money in the nature of a fine; (2) that notwithstanding the terms of the undertaking the lease was deemed to be subject to a proviso that no fine or sum of money in the nature of a fine, whether by way of increase of rent or otherwise, was to be payable for or in respect of a licence for the alteration of user of the premises or to assign the lease, and that the defendant company relied on section 19 (3) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, and section 144 of the Law of Property Act, 1925; (3) that the assignment of its proportion of the compensation money was unenforceable by action; alternatively, that the undertaking to assign the sum in question was an illegal consideration for the grant of the licence; alternatively, that there was no consideration for the undertaking.

E. M. Winterbotham for the plaintiff lessors.
David Stinson for the defendant company.

The following case, not referred to in the judgment, was cited in argument: Maskell v. Horner.[2]

VAISEY J. In this action the plaintiffs, Mr. and Mrs. Comber, are the freeholders of a shop in the city of Leicester known as [2] [1915] 3 K.B. 106, 118; 31 T.L.R. 332 (C.A.).

No. 32 Gallowtree Gate. There are two defendants, Fleet Electrics Ld. and Mr. Greaves, whose interests are as follows: Fleet Electrics Ld. are the lessees under the lease in question, and Mr. Greaves is a director of that company, but all proceedings have been stayed against him.

The lease is dated January 25, 1949, and it demises the shop to which I have referred to the defendant company for a term of twenty-one years from Christmas, 1948, at a rental of £1,000 per year. The lease is in common form and contains a number of covenants on the part of the lessees, of which only two are relevant. The first is a covenant by the lessees not to do or permit or suffer to be done to the premises anything which may be a nuisance, and also the lessees covenant not, without the landlords' consent, to use the demised premises for any purpose other than the carrying on of the business of retail sellers of electrical appliances. The other covenant which it is necessary to mention is a covenant by the lessees not to assign, underlet or part with possession of the demised premises without the written consent of the lessor. There is no difference, in my judgment, between the landlord's consent under clause 12 and the written consent of the lessor under clause 13 of the lease.

Some time after the granting of the lease there was an improvement effected by the Corporation of the City of Leicester which involved taking down the front part of the shop and setting it back some feet, thereby, I suppose, widening the highway. For that improvement compensation was payable to the extent of £2,000, which was divisible between the plaintiffs as landlords and the first defendants, Fleet Electrics Ld., as tenants, in equal shares, each being entitled to £1,000.

Fleet Electrics Ld. were anxious to assign this property to a Mr. Lennard, who wished to underlet part of the property to a company known as Ward's Hollywood Film Star Shoes Ld. It was therefore necessary for Fleet Electrics Ld., the lessees, to obtain the necessary leave of the landlord, that is, of the plaintiffs, for two purposes: first, to obtain their permission to the required assignment; and, secondly, to obtain permission for the intended change of user of the property.

The law which governs this matter has, I think, to be considered first from the point of view of the covenant not to assign and, secondly, from the point of view of the covenant which provided for an exclusive kind of user of the property.

The covenant not to assign is dealt with in the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 144, in these terms: [His Lordship read the section, and continued:] That section replaced an earlier section, section 3 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892. Its terms are well known and I do not think give rise to any difficulty of construction or interpretation. That has to be supplemented by section 19 (1) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927. [His Lordship read the subsection.]

1955

COMBER v. FLEET ELECTRICS LD.

Vaisey J.

Therefore under the Act of 1925 there is incorporated in every lease a proviso to the effect that no fine shall be payable in respect of the licence and the later Act of 1927 provides that the licence is not to be unreasonably withheld.

The other provision which is material in the present case is that which concerns the proposed change of user of the property. That is dealt with in section 19 (3) of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927. I am bound to say that I find this subsection extremely difficult to understand. [His Lordship read the subsection, and continued:] Under subsection (3), as it seems to me, a landlord, if asked for a licence or consent to the alteration of the user of premises, is perfectly entitled to refuse it; there is no question about a licence being unreasonably withheld in such a case. But if he gives his consent, then the statute for its own good purposes provides that no fine shall be payable in respect of such licence or consent. That apparently is the case notwithstanding any express provisions to the contrary, which may mean prima facie provisions to the contrary in the lease, but which might mean express provisions to the contrary in some other document. Therefore the landlord's decision, when asked to give his consent to a change of user, must either be to refuse it out of hand, or to grant it gratuitously.

The landlord and tenant cannot privately agree to disregard the law and agree that a licence shall be granted in consideration for the payment of a fine.

In my view it is a provision which interferes fundamentally with the ordinary rights of the subjects of Her Majesty in this country to make contracts in this respect, according to their wishes and inclinations. It is a prohibitory provision designed to prevent the passing of money upon the landlord giving his consent to a change of user of the demised premises. Unless it does mean that, then I do not think that it can mean anything at all. However, if money did pass under a bargain made between lessor and lessee for the granting of consent I am very doubtful whether the landlord would be subject to any penalty for having received it, or could be obliged to pay it back or account for it in any way.

But unfortunately in this case that is not what happened. What happened was that on May 22, 1951, the defendants, the lessees, signed a document undertaking, in consideration of the plaintiffs' granting, first, the licence to assign, and, secondly, the licence to underlet and to change the user of the premises, to assign to the plaintiffs their half of the compensation recoverable from the Leicester Corporation. It was in reliance upon that undertaking that the plaintiffs, by a document dated the following day, May 23, granted to the defendants the necessary licence, first, to assign the lease to Mr. Lennard; secondly, permission to underlet to the shoe company; and, thirdly, to use the shop for the new purpose of a ladies' outfitters.

This action is brought by the plaintiffs to enforce the undertaking in question. By this action they call upon the defendant company to assign its proportion of the compensation pursuant to that undertaking and the defendant refused to do so, originally alleging, first of all, that the defendant Greaves had no authority to contract on their behalf, that defence having later been withdrawn, and, secondly, that the undertaking was unenforceable, however much the defendants had pledged themselves to carry it out.

There is no real dispute about the facts of this case. The defendants plead in effect that they, being entitled to their half of the compensation money, had attempted to assign it to the plaintiffs for no consideration or for a consideration which is void. They claim the benefit of the licence. They claim that they are entitled to assign to Lennard, and that they can use the property for the purposes of ladies' outfitters. But they allege that there is no consideration for the undertaking to assign this compensation, and that the assignment in that respect is void. If the money had been paid, I think that there is ample authority to show that if once it had been paid it could not have been recovered. But the question is, now that the matter lies entirely in contract, whether there was consideration to support a contract upon which this action could be founded.

I have been referred to several cases. First I would mention Waite v. Jennings.[1] In that case there was an attempt to recover money and that attempt did not succeed.

Next, there is Andrew v. Bridgman.[2] The headnote reads as follows: "Section 3 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, does not "make illegal the demanding of a fine as a condition of giving "a licence or consent to the assignment of a lease which contains "a covenant against assignment without consent; it merely "makes the payment of a fine something not contracted for. "The parties to the lease may therefore agree that a fine shall be "paid for the granting of the licence."

That was a decision of Channell J., and it was upheld in the Court of Appeal.[3]

This is a very unfortunate case, because if money had passed from the lessees to the lessor I do not think that the lessees would have had any right to recover it, but since the matter lies solely in contract, the question is whether that contract can be given effect to, and there, in my view, lies the plaintiff's difficulty.

I have said that I think the merits of this case on the defendants' side are rather far to seek; these parties were negotiating at arm's length and the defendants, Fleet Electrics Ld., were perfectly willing to allow the landlord to receive this money in exchange for the licence which the plaintiffs gave.

I was somewhat tempted to follow the guidance of Haigh v. Brooks,[4] where there was a promise by the defendant to see

[1] [1906] 2 K.B. 11; 22 T.L.R. 510.
[2] [1907] 2 K.B. 494.
[3] [1908] 1 K.B. 596.
[4] (1839) 10 Ad. & El. 309, 320.

1955

COMBER v. FLEET ELECTRICS LD.

Vaisey J.

certain bills paid at maturity in return for the surrender of a guarantee, and there Lord Denman C.J. said: " . . . the plaintiffs were induced by the defendant's promise to part with " something which they might have kept, and the defendant " obtained what he desired by means of that promise."

In my judgment, however, I ought not to decide the present case on that ground, and I am afraid that this action fails because this undertaking to assign this money was a nudum pactum, there being no consideration for it. If the document had been executed under seal, the matter would have been different. The lessees' undertaking would, however, have to be implemented by their collecting this money and handing it over to the landlords or by the lessees releasing their right to the compensation and so permitting Leicester Corporation to hand it over to the landlords, and that seems to me to be as plainly as possible a fine, or, if it is not a fine, it is money in the nature of a fine. Inasmuch as the very strong words of the statute prohibit the payment of a fine or anything in the nature of a fine, I do not see how the plaintiff can in the particular circumstances of this case succeed. The words of section 19 (3) of the Act of 1927 are very strong. I think it is possible, in spite of the best intentions of the legislature, in many cases to circumvent those provisions, but I do not think it has been done in this case. If money had passed, in my view it would not be recoverable, but where the landlord, as here, has to come to the court to enforce an agreement which lies at the moment entirely in contract, then I do not see my way to give him the relief which he seeks.

It may be said that, the defendants having obtained the licence, it is very inequitable that the plaintiffs should not be paid what the tenant had agreed to pay them for it. That, however, is one of the results of this subsection, which was undoubtedly passed, I suppose, with the idea that it is the tenant who has to be protected and the landlord who has to suffer. The landlord could either refuse his consent or he could grant it, but, if he grants it and if he stipulates for the payment of money or money's worth, that is, for a fine or anything in the nature of a fine, he is contravening that which the law states must be read into the terms of every lease, namely, a proviso that no fine or a sum of money in the nature of a fine shall be paid for or in respect of any such licence or consent. Whatever may be put into a lease in ink or type, or however carefully the engrossment provides to the contrary, this subsection states that this proviso is binding on lessor and lessee and must be enforced whatever the consequences be. Accordingly, this action fails.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors: Janson, Cobb, Pearson & Co., for F. H. Nye & Murdoch, Brighton; Kimbers, Williams, Sweetland & Stinson.

J. A. G.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* AUTOMOBILE PROPRIETARY LD. v. BROWN (VALUATION OFFICER).

C. A.

1955
March 25, 28, 29.

Evershed M.R., Jenkins and Romer L.JJ.

[LVC 13 1953.]

Rates and Rating—Industrial hereditament—Club—Royal Automobile Club—Workshops—Occupier company comprising members of club—Provision of facilities to members—Whether "by way of trade"—Not a factory or workshop—Repair of units of road service fleet—Whether "maintenance of road vehicles"—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 149 (1) (c)—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5, c. 44), s. 3. Club.

The appellant company was comprised of the members of a club formed to encourage and develop motoring. It was not the object of the club to make a profit and no profits were distributed to its members. There were two types of members of the club: full members, who were required to be members of the company; and associate members who were not members of the company, nor were entitled to use the club premises. All the members were entitled to certain services and facilities afforded by the company to the members as motorists, including the provision of a road service fleet. The cost of providing these services and facilities was met out of a separate fund consisting of the subscriptions of the associate members (which were wholly so used) and the capitation fees of full members of the club. In connexion with the provision of these facilities the company occupied, and was rated in respect of, a hereditament described in the local valuation list as "workshops and appurtenances" and included in Part I of that list. The company contended that the hereditament ought to be treated as an industrial hereditament and be transferred to Part II of the list:—

Held, (1) that on all the facts of the case the principal activities carried on by the company on the hereditament were not conducted "by way of trade" for the purposes of that part of the definition of "non-textile factory" contained in section 149 (1) (c) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901; and that, accordingly, the hereditament was not an industrial hereditament within section 3 (1) of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928.

Challoner v. Robinson [1908] 1 Ch. 49; 24 T.L.R. 38 distinguished.

Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Eccentric Club Ld. [1924] 1 K.B. 390, 400; 40 T.L.R. 208 considered.

Quaere whether repairing the units of the road service fleet constituted maintenance of road vehicles within section 3 (2) (b) of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (as amended by section 69 of the Local Government Act, 1929).

Observation of Lord Dunedin in Potteries Electric Traction Co. Ld. v. Bailey [1931] A.C. 151, 169; 47 T.L.R. 154 considered.

APPEAL from the Lands Tribunal by case stated.

The appellant company, Automobile Proprietary Ld., was assessed for rating purposes in respect of a hereditament described in the valuation list as "workshops and appurtenances,

C. A.
1955
AUTOMOBILE PROPRIETARY LD. v. BROWN (VALUATION OFFICER).

"15 Maswell Park Road, Hounslow," and assessed at £1,048 gross value and £870 rateable value. The hereditament was entered in Part I of the valuation list for the Heston and Isleworth rating area, but on June 23, 1952, the company made a proposal that it ought to be treated as an industrial hereditament and be transferred to Part II of the list. The valuation officer objected and the company appealed against the objection. At a hearing on December 18 the local valuation court for South Middlesex confirmed the entry in the list. On January 6, 1953, the company appealed to the Lands Tribunal. The appeal was heard on November 18 and December 18, 1953, and the tribunal affirmed the decision of the local valuation court. The company appealed and the Lands Tribunal stated a case for the opinion of the court.

The following statement of the facts proved or admitted before the Lands Tribunal is taken from paragraph 8 of the case stated. "(a) The appellants are a company limited by guarantee "whose objects are expressed in their memorandum of associa- "tion as inter alia 'to establish, maintain and conduct a club "'for the encouragement and development in Great Britain of "'the auto-motor vehicle and other allied industries and for the "'accommodation of members of the company and their friends, "'and to provide a club-house or club-rooms and other con- "'veniences, and generally to afford to members and their friends "'all the usual advantages, conveniences and accommodation of "'a social club and centre of information and advise on all "'matters pertaining to auto-motor vehicles.' (b) The income "and property of the appellants, whencesoever derived, is to be "applied solely towards the objects of the company as set forth "in the memorandum of association. No portion thereof is to "be paid or transferred directly or indirectly by way of dividend, "bonus or otherwise howsoever, by way of profits to the members "of the company and in the event of the company being wound "up the members are not to receive any part of any surplus "assets but are to be liable each to contribute such a sum not "exceeding £1 as may be required for payment of the debts and "liabilities of the company. . . . (c) The appellants have estab- "lished a club known as the Royal Automobile Club the "members of which are required to be members of the company. "(d) The appellants have provided a club-house in Pall Mall, "London, and a country club at Woodcote Park, Epsom, avail- "able for the use of such members. (e) The appellants also "provide services and facilities in connexion with motoring such "as road patrols, road-side telephone boxes, road signs, assistance "in home and foreign touring, legal aid, etc. (f) There is another "class of members of the Royal Automobile Club termed "'associate members' who are not members of the company "and who are not entitled to use the club-house or country club "but who are entitled to the services and facilities referred to "in paragraph (e). The affairs and finances of the associate " members are administered by a committee specially constituted " for this purpose. (g) The subscriptions of associate members " are wholly utilized for the services and facilities referred to in " paragraph (e). These services and facilities are paid for out of " a separate fund provided by the subscriptions of the associate " members and by a capitation fee in respect of the full members; " it is not the object of the club to make a profit, but to provide " the maximum services and facilities which the available money " is sufficient to provide, and this fund is wholly spent on the " provision of such services and facilities. (h) On December 31, " 1952, the appellants owned a fleet of 754 vehicles, made up " of 628 motor-bicycles with sidecar boxes, 50 road service vans, " 74 cars, one motor-cycle and passenger sidecar and one invalid " tricycle. (i) The hereditament, the subject of this appeal, is " a collection of single storey buildings with an upper floor, used " as offices, in part of the main building, and there is a gallery " to the main building used principally for the storage of head " office papers. (j) At the hereditament the appellants service, " recondition and repair motor-cars, motor-vans, combinations of " motor-cycles and sidecars and parts of such cars, vans, cycles " and combinations belonging to them. At least four of these " motor-cars and motor-vans are usually housed at the hereditа- " ment. They also make badge fittings for attaching to motor- " vehicles the badges issued by the appellants to members, and " paint, spray and stencil the blue and white traffic signs used in " connexion with the services referred to in paragraph (e)."

The hereditament was described by reference to a plan on which the use to which the various buildings were put was indicated. On the ground floor at the back of the premises furthest from Maswell Park Road was a section indicated on the plan in pink, which was divided into three subsections. In the first subsection the work was carried on in making the brackets for affixing members' badges to motor-vehicles. The second subsection was marked on the plan " Sign painting and stencil- " ling," and there the preparation of the blue and white traffic signs took place. The third subsection was used in part for the storage of metal and boards used in connexion with the bracket making and sign painting, and so forth, and in part for brazing in connexion with the work carried out in the main building.

On the ground floor of the main building the plan referred to showed the following principal divisions, reading from left to right: a yellow area marked " A," a grey area marked " B " (with a small yellow island in the middle marked " C "), and a blue area marked " D." The grey area was thus, broadly speaking, sandwiched between the yellow and blue areas. The area coloured yellow and marked " A " was stated to be used as a " vehicle washing bay, a space . . . for garaging overhauling " and greasing cars or vans with a greasing lift, for vehicles " operated by compressed air, and a space for storing new motor- " cycles which may be awaiting assembly into motor-cycle and

C. A.
1955
AUTOMOBILE PROPRIETARY LD. v. BROWN (VALUATION OFFICER).

"sidecar box combinations." The area marked "B" and coloured grey was "the general utility and manoeuvring space "providing access to various parts of the premises." The yellow island marked "C" was a standing place for four motor-vehicles. The blue area marked "D" was stated to be the "dismantling "and assembly area and the work bays in which the overhaul "and repair of motor-cycles and the reconditioning of units" took place. A further part of the blue area was marked "stores, "stores office and foreman's office," and was used "mainly for "the storage of spare parts and other materials used (partly on "the hereditament and partly elsewhere) in the overhaul and "repair of motor-cycles or units such as engines, gear boxes and "clutches and also for the storage of such units" after they had been overhauled and repaired on the premises until they were required for use on the premises or for sending away. There were a number of smaller areas coloured grey used for general utility in relation to the purposes for which the hereditament was occupied, such as lavatories, canteen, battery charging room, boiler house, coal bunker and oil stores. There was also a small pink area used as frame stores, two yellow areas, one used as a standing for a caravan and the other as a tyre stores. The upper floor of the main building was used as offices and for storage of papers.

The case stated that it was the normal arrangement of the appellants to keep at the hereditament a "stock of spare parts, "reconditioned units, of . . . various kinds . . . and other "materials . . . so that they can be dispatched as required to "any part of Great Britain or Northern Ireland for the main- "tenance or repair of a patrol man's vehicle. The part or unit "is then substituted either by the patrol man himself or by a "local motor repairer. Where a reconditioned unit is substituted "for an unserviceable unit, the latter is sent to the hereditament, "overhauled and repaired as necessary and put into stock ready "for use on the hereditament or for sending away. The cars and "vans normally housed on the hereditament are there over- "hauled and maintained as necessary. Motor-cycle combinations "operated by patrol men in the neighbourhood are where "possible also overhauled and maintained on the hereditament "instead of by local motor repairers. (s) If a vehicle is brought "in for a complete overhaul the machine is stripped right down, "any damaged or worn out parts are repaired if possible or (in "most cases) replaced; for this purpose any new or reconditioned "parts required are provided from stock. The sidecar body is "sent away from the hereditament to be repaired and re- "enamelled and another body is usually substituted. Overhauls "of units are carried out by the same methods as overhauls of "machines. (t) In the part marked "A" on the . . . plan "there were carried out during 1952 overhauls to seven cars and "vans costing £840 and maintenance of four cars and two vans " costing £78 and in the part . . . marked ' D ' complete overhauls of 17 motor-cycles costing £1,955, a total of £2,873 for work of the nature of maintenance of road vehicles. (u) During the same year the work carried out in ' D ' . . . in connexion with units of the various kinds above mentioned was as follows:—171 motor-cycle engine overhauls costing £2,394; 108 motor-cycle gear box overhauls costing £648; 156 motor-cycle cylinder overhauls costing £507; 147 motor-cycle clutch overhauls costing £514 10s.; total cost of unit overhauls £4,063 10s.; and in the parts marked ' A ' and ' D ' . . . there were carried out assemblies of 86 motor-cycles and sidecar combinations costing £838 10s. (v) In the same year there were issued from the stores articles of stock amounting to a value of £4,596 for use on the hereditament and to a value of £12,733 for sending out to motor-vehicle patrol men for use in the repair of their vehicles; both of these figures being exclusive of the value of reconditioned units. The space occupied in the stores by articles (excluding reconditioned units) ultimately issued for use on and off the hereditament respectively was roughly proportionate to the values set out above. Only a very small proportion of units reconditioned on the hereditament was used thereon, such units seldom remained long in the stores before being issued for use elsewhere. About one-third of the store space was used for articles (including reconditioned units) used on the hereditament. The valuation of stock in store on December 31, 1952 (including reconditioned units), was £13,827, and stocks were maintained at a fairly even level throughout the year."

The conclusion reached by the tribunal was stated in paragraph 12 of the case: " We were satisfied upon the evidence that the primary purpose for which the hereditament was in fact occupied and used was the overhauling, repairing and reconditioning of units . . . and that . . . such work did not constitute ' the maintenance of road vehicles ' . . . We took the view that . . . all the work done on the premises . . . was done ' by way of trade.' We were, however, also satisfied that the . . . maintenance of cars, . . .," etc., of the company, was maintenance of road vehicles and that some of such work as well as the . . . repairing . . . of ' units ' took place in the part . . . marked 'D.' It seemed to us therefore that by reason of the provisions of section 3 (2) (b) " of the Act of 1928, such part was excluded from the definition of a ' factory or ' workshop ' and that all the purposes for which such part is used must therefore be ' purposes which are not those of a ' factory or workshop.' We took the view that we must look at the whole hereditament to ascertain the primary purpose for which it was occupied and used and . . . we determined that the hereditament was not an industrial hereditament; . . . Had we regarded it as permissible in law to treat the purposes of overhauling, repairing and reconditioning units carried out

C. A.
1955
AUTOMOBILE PROPRIETARY LD. v. BROWN (VALUATION OFFICER).

" in the part of the hereditament coloured blue and marked ' D ' " on the said plan as purposes of a factory or workshop we would " have reached the contrary conclusion."

G. D. Squibb for the appellant company.

Maurice Lyell Q.C. and Patrick Browne for the valuation officer.

In addition to the cases referred to in the judgments, the following were cited in argument: Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Westminster (Duke) *; Cornish Mutual Assurance Co. Ld. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners †; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Westleigh Estates Co. Ld. ‡; Trebanog Working Men's Club and Institute Ld. v. MacDonald §; Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland v. Forbes ¶; Moon v. London County Council. ||.

EVERSHED M.R. At the beginning of his interesting argument in opening this case Mr. Squibb told the court that in order to succeed he must show that this hereditament was occupied by the company by way of trade or for the purposes of gain. The latter alternative, I think, has no application and, therefore, I amend Mr. Squibb's sentence: " In order to succeed I must show " that the hereditament is being occupied by way of trade," that being, as will be seen, a reflection of certain language in the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901. The tribunal from whom the appeal comes was of opinion that the condition stated by Mr. Squibb had been satisfied. The tribunal's view, as is stated in the case was that, having regard to a dictum of Lord Wright in National Association of Local Government Officers v. Bolton Corporation,[1] and the decision in Challoner v. Robinson,[2] all the work done on the hereditament " being work done in carrying on " a proprietary club was done ' by way of trade.' " With all respect to the tribunal I have come to a different conclusion on that point; for, in my judgment, it is not true to say that the activities (which I will describe presently in more detail) with which we are concerned are activities undertaken by the company by way of trade; and if that view is right then, as Mr. Squibb conceded, he cannot succeed here.

Certain other points have also been raised but I shall confine my conclusion to the view which I take on that point, and I shall not express any concluded view on those other matters.

The facts are stated at considerable length in the case stated. [His Lordship read sub-paragraphs (c) to (f) inclusive of paragraph 8, and continued:] I note that we are not told how the

* [1936] A.C. 1; 51 T.L.R. 467.
† [1926] A.C. 281; 42 T.L.R. 255.
‡ [1924] 1 K.B. 390, 391; 40 T.L.R. 208.
§ [1940] 1 K.B. 576; 56 T.L.R. 404; [1940] 1 All E.R. 454.
¶ (1896) 3 T.C. 415.
|| [1931] A.C. 151, 152; 47 T.L.R. 154.
[1] [1943] A.C. 166, 184; 59 T.L.R. 1; [1942] 2 All E.R. 425.
[2] [1908] 1 Ch. 49; 24 T.L.R. 38.

committee [referred to in paragraph (f)] is in fact constituted, though Mr. Lyell stated that, as he understood it, it was a committee of the members of the club and, therefore, of the company. [His Lordship read sub-paragraph (g) and continued:] The case then proceeds to state in great detail the facts in regard to the company's fleet of vehicles, their upkeep, and so on—the fleet which is maintained for the purpose of providing the services mentioned in paragraph (e). The hereditament with which we are concerned is substantially devoted in one way and another to various aspects of the upkeep of these road vehicles and their component parts.

Upon this hereditament are, first of all, the means for the service of and repair of the vehicles which I have mentioned and of separate parts of those vehicles. Generally speaking, the parts are sent to the company's premises for reconditioning, and the company sends out to the patrolman (whose vehicles may be a very long way from London) another part out of its stock, either a new part which has been acquired or a similar part which previously has been reconditioned by the company, in order that the vehicle should be kept efficiently on the road and that time should not be wasted by bringing the whole vehicle, for example, all the way from Newcastle-upon-Tyne to London to have the particular part replaced.

In addition to those activities of service and repair a few vehicles are housed on these premises. There is also an activity of making badge fittings. I assume that it is generally known that members and associate members of the Royal Automobile Club are entitled to carry upon their vehicles a badge indicating such membership, and it is at this place that badge fittings are made in large quantities for the benefit of members and associate members. Finally, there is a place for the painting of the road signs which I have referred to earlier. All those activities, in addition to what may be called offices and store premises, are to be found at this hereditament.

The ground floor of the premises consists at the back, that is the part most remote from Maswell Park Road, of a section which is referred to as the "pink" section [being indicated by that colour on the plan attached to the stated case]. In area that would amount to something like a quarter of the whole ground floor area. The pink section is divided into three distinct parts, separated one from another by partitions: in one the bracket making takes place, in another the activity known as brazing occurs, and for the purposes of this case it has been conceded by Mr. Lyell that the brazing can be taken to be an activity so connected with the bracket making that, since the bracket making part is, for reasons which I shall later state, certainly a "factory "or workshop" within the language of the Act of 1901, that part of the "pink" which is occupied for the brazing should also be taken to be occupied as a factory or workshop. The third part is devoted to the painting of the signs. That is not in terms

C. A.
1955
AUTOMOBILE PROPRIETARY LD. v. BROWN (VALUATION OFFICER).
Evershed M.R.

within the Sixth Schedule to the Act of 1901, and if it is to be regarded as a factory for the purposes of section 149 (1), it must be because that activity is being undertaken "by way of trade."

The larger ground floor section (roughly, perhaps, three times in area the size of the pink part) is made up of parts coloured on the plan yellow, grey or neutral, and blue. The grey part (in so far as it is not used as canteens, lavatories and other such uses which are incidental to the main purpose for which the premises are used, being for the convenience and needs of those employed there) may be called the general manoeuvring part; vehicles would be coming in to the grey part and going thence to whatever other section of the building is appropriate. In the middle there is, coloured yellow, the standing place to accommodate four vehicles. The section which is lettered "A" and which is coloured yellow is, perhaps, itself a quarter of the total of this part of the ground floor in space. It is not suggested that the uses to which "A" is put are in themselves purposes of a factory or workshop within the meaning of the relevant statute. Some service takes place there of motor-cars: there is a washing bay, and so forth. But the most important section for present purposes is the blue part, which is lettered "D"; for it is on that part, save in so far as it is made up of stores, that the repair and maintenance of the vehicles and of the units of parts of vehicles takes place. As will be seen later, a very great deal depends, in the view taken by the tribunal, on the appropriate answer to the question: for the purposes of the de-rating is this blue part, lettered "D," occupied for factory purposes or not?

There is upstairs a much smaller area, consisting of a gallery and general offices, but this area, which is used in fact for storing documents or records of the town or country club, does not play, for the purposes of the present argument, any significant part.

The claim on behalf of the company is for what is commonly called de-rating, on the ground that this hereditament is being occupied as an industrial hereditament. The expression "industrial hereditament" is defined in section 3 of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928. Subsection (1) reads: "In this Act the expression 'industrial hereditament' means a "hereditament . . . occupied and used as a mine or mineral "railway or, subject as hereinafter provided, as a factory or "workship: Provided that the expression 'industrial hereditament' does not include a hereditament occupied and used as "a factory or workshop if it is primarily occupied and used for "the following purposes or for any combination of such purposes, "that is to say—(a) the purposes of a dwelling-house; (b) the "purposes of a retail shop; (c) the purposes of distributive whole-"sale business; (d) purposes of storage; (e) the purposes of a "public supply undertaking; (f) any other purposes, whether or "not similar to any of the foregoing, which are not those of a "factory or workshop." If it is permissible to make some criticism of the choice of language, it will be noticed that there is a certain lack of uniformity. Opening with the formula "the "purposes of a dwelling-house," the legislature changes that form in (c) to "the purposes of distributive wholesale business," and in (d), again, to "purposes"—without any article—"of "storage." Those slight variations do not altogether assist the argument which in a case like this arises. Subsection (2) in its original form contained what is now sub-paragraph (b) of that subsection (sub-paragraph (a) having been added by [section 69 of] the Local Government Act, 1929. Sub-paragraph (b) reads: "For the purposes of this Act any place used by the occupier "for the housing or maintenance of his road vehicles or as "stables shall, notwithstanding that it is situate within the "close, curtilage or precincts forming a factory or workshop and "used in connection therewith, be deemed not to form part of "the factory or workshop, but save as aforesaid, the expressions "'factory' and 'workshop' have respectively the same meanings "as in the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1901 to 1920." The selection, as a means of defining those expressions "factory" and "workshop," of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, strikes the reader as somewhat strange: since that was an Act which, as Jenkins L.J. observed, was concerned with a wholly different subject-matter, namely, the protection of workpeople from injury; and it made, accordingly, a distinction between factories or workshops of a special character from the point of view of danger and other factories. The former class, the more dangerous class, are stated by name or description in Part I of the Sixth Schedule to the Act. They include such factories or workshops as paint works, lucifer match works and cartridge works; and No. 13 of Part I is "Metal and india rubber works." It is to be noted that by virtue of the provisions of section 149 (1) of the Act of 1901, a factory, or, more specifically, a "non-textile factory," includes, first, "any works, warehouses . . . named in Part I of the Sixth "Schedule" to the Act.

Reverting for a moment to the plan, it is not in dispute in this case that the activities of the company conducted in the bracket making part of the pink area fall within the phrase "metal and india rubber works," being No. 13 of the list of non-textile factories in Part I of the Sixth Schedule. That part of the pink, therefore (and, for reasons which I have given, the part devoted to brazing), is clearly a "factory" by what I think Lord Dunedin called "direct" definition,[3] by virtue of section 3 of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928; for that part of the hereditament is a factory or workshop, having expressly the meaning assigned to those words by the Act of 1901. It is, however, equally clear that no other of the activities of the company is a factory or workshop within the special list of identified factories or workshops in the Sixth Schedule to the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901. If any others of the activities of the

[3] [1931] A.C. 151, 166; 47 T.L.R. 154, 158.

C. A.
1955
AUTOMOBILE PROPRIETARY LD. v. BROWN (VALUATION OFFICER).
Evershed M.R.

company are such as to bring the area where they are performed into the definition of "factory," it must be under the later language of section 149 (1). For present purposes it is sufficient to read the part of that subsection which follows the reference to the Sixth Schedule: "The expression 'non-textile factory' means— ". . . (c) any premises wherein or within the close or curtilage or "precincts of which any manual labour is exercised by way of "trade or for purposes of gain in or incidental to any of the "following purposes, namely—(i) the making of any article or of "part of any article; or (ii) the altering, repairing, ornamenting "or finishing of any article; or (iii) the adapting for sale of any "article. . . ." Later the expression "workshop" is given a corresponding definition. Again, to pick the matter up by reference to section 3, it follows that, prima facie, an industrial hereditament means a hereditament occupied and used as a factory, if it is occupied and used in any of the manners indicated in section 149 (1) (c) of the Act of 1901. The company claims that the activities conducted, first, in the sign painting and stencilling section of the pink and, second, in the blue section marked "D," must be treated as factory purposes, and so the area occupied by those activities must be regarded as an area used or occupied as a factory.

It will now be appreciated why Mr. Squibb has said that he must show that the activities of the club are by way of trade, for that is a necessary condition to what follows in paragraph (c). But, given that they are, then I think that so far as the sign painting is concerned there would be little difficulty in concluding that such an operation amounted to the ornamenting or finishing of any article. In "D," the greater part of the work done undoubtedly consists (because the tribunal has so found) of repair, not of the vehicles themselves, but of the units sent for reconditioning in the way I have tried to explain. Such an activity, if done by way of trade, would fall within the definition in paragraph (c) as being the repairing of any article. So much, I think, is not in doubt. It is, however, at this point that the further complication is introduced by the terms of section 3 (2) (b) of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928. I will read the opening words again: "For the purposes of this "Act any place used by the occupier for the housing or main- "tenance of his road vehicles or as stables shall, notwithstanding "that it is situate within the close, curtilage, or precincts form- "ing a factory or workshop and used in connection therewith, be "deemed not to form part of the factory. . . . It is also the fact, as I have earlier stated, that in addition to the primary function on this part of the premises of repairing units, there is also some repair or maintenance of the vehicles themselves, belonging to the company, which are brought in for such services. Therefore, it is undoubtedly the fact that part of the space is used by the occupier for maintenance of his road vehicles; and there is no railing-off or separation of that part of the premises which is used for that purpose of maintaining the road vehicles from the other parts which are devoted to what the tribunal held to be the much more substantial operation of repairing units.

Mr. Squibb has felt bound to concede that the whole of the area where maintenance of these vehicles in fact takes place must be excluded from the definition of factory, although on that area the more significant activity of the repair of units is performed. Mr. Squibb has felt bound, therefore, to concede that the area marked " D " cannot itself be regarded as a factory.

So far the situation may be put thus: if (as the tribunal held) what the company is doing is being done by way of trade then, says Mr. Squibb, in this hereditament, which is a single unit, there is undoubtedly on the pink part, a factory, since the sign painting falls within the language of section 149 (1) (c) of the Act of 1901; and there is no question about the bracket making and the brazing. This hereditament therefore is being used as to a part, and a significant part, as a factory. Further, and with regard to the rest of the premises, as the tribunal found, the primary purpose for which they are occupied is for repairing units; and the tribunal took the view, having regard to certain authorities, that repair of the units was not the same thing as maintenance of vehicles from which the units came. " Therefore," says Mr. Squibb, reverting to the opening words of section 3 (1) of the Act of 1928, " I have shown that my hereditament is " occupied as a factory, and it cannot be successfully said against " me that it is excluded from being an industrial hereditament " on the ground that it is primarily occupied for non-factory " purposes." It may well be that the part marked " D " is not itself a factory because of the performance there also of maintenance of the company's road vehicles. But, says Mr. Squibb, that is not to say that, in view of the findings of the tribunal, the hereditament as a whole is being primarily used for non-factory purposes; it is being primarily used, according to the findings of the tribunal, for the purposes of repairing road units, which is not an excluded occupation, so to speak, even though the area marked " D " where that occupation is in substance carried on, is not itself a factory by reason of the maintenance there also of the road vehicles. It was that latter part of Mr. Squibb's argument which the tribunal rejected; for it held that since the area " D " could not be regarded as a factory, therefore, equally it could not be said on behalf of the company that the repair of those units was a factory purpose: they had, so to speak, been disqualified altogether for derating purposes. The result was, as a piece of logic, a little surprising, for the tribunal was saying in one and the same breath that the primary purpose for which this blue, yellow and grey area is being occupied is the purpose of repairing units (which is not the maintenance of the company's road vehicles and is, because it is being done by way of trade, the purpose of a factory); and at the same time, since the area " D " cannot itself be called a factory, therefore, the

C. A.
1955
AUTOMOBILE PROPRIETARY LD. v. BROWN (VALUATION OFFICER).
Eversheed M.R.

primary purpose for which this hereditament is being occupied must be said to be a non-factory purpose. If it were necessary to decide this case on that point I should myself feel some hesitation in accepting the conclusion of the tribunal. The anomaly and apparent lack of logic appears if one refers to paragraph 12 of the case. [His Lordship read paragraph 12 and continued:] I should myself feel some reluctance in accepting a conclusion which, it seems to me, involves what looks very much like an illogical result. But it is not, in the view that I take, necessary to express a final opinion upon that matter; for, in my judgment, the necessary premise to the vital conclusion about the repair of units (namely, that those are factory purposes) is not established, that is, the condition that it is being done by way of trade.

The tribunal took the view that, as a matter of law, the case was in effect governed in this respect by Challoner v. Robinson,[4] a case which was not connected with rating but was one in which a landlord was seeking to distrain upon certain premises for non-payment of rent. He found on the premises certain pictures which were being exhibited. He claimed, and was held by this court entitled to claim successfully, that he could take those pictures by way of distress. The action was brought by the plaintiff, who said that the pictures were not liable to distraint on the ground that he was the proprietor of an institution known as the United Arts Club, and that these pictures had been committed to him to be managed in the way of his trade. If that had been so, they would have been exempt from distress. The headnote states the decision of Neville J. in the court of first instance thus: "the pictures were liable to distress unless the "plaintiff could bring his case within the exceptions laid down in "Simpson v. Hartopp, (1744) Willes, 512; 1 Sm.L.C., p. 437 "(11th ed.), as 'things delivered to a person exercising a public "'trade to be . . . managed in the way of his trade or employ.' "In the present case the plaintiff was not carrying on the trade "of a commission agent with all who chose to deal with him; "his trade was essentially a private trade, and for this reason the "pictures were not within the exemption." Upon appeal it was held: "that it was not necessary on the facts to consider the "meaning of the words 'public trade,' but that the word "'managed' must be taken to include, if not to be equivalent to, "'disposed of'; that the pictures were not delivered to the "plaintiff, but to the picture committee, and even if they were "delivered to the plaintiff, they were not delivered to him 'to "'be managed in the way of his trade,' which was that of a club "proprietor, and not that of a picture dealer." It is in those last few words which I have read that, it is said, the answer to the present problem resides. Cozens-Hardy M.R., delivering the reserved judgment of the Court of Appeal, said[5]: "These being

[4] [1908] 1 Ch. 49.

[5] Ibid. 60.

" the facts, we think the true view is that the pictures were not " delivered to Mr. Challoner, but were delivered to the picture " committee; and, further, that if, contrary to the above view, " they were delivered to Mr. Challoner, they were certainly not " delivered to him to be ' managed in the way of his trade.' " If the language had stopped there, the case would not have been of any real assistance to Mr. Squibb, but there then occurs the sentence: " His trade or business is that of a club proprietor, " and not that of a picture dealer." I think on the facts of that case the statement which I have just read is not one at which it would be possible to cavil. Mr. Challoner was running, to use the popular word, the institution known as the United Arts Club for his personal profit or gain. His trade or business was that of a club proprietor. But does it follow from that statement, as Mr. Squibb contended, that as a matter of law any person, whether an individual person or a persona ficta like the present company, who is a proprietor of a club is, therefore, necessarily carrying on a trade consisting of the activities inherent in that proprietorship? I do not think that it does follow.

Another instance given in the course of the argument which in some respects is closer, I think, to the present case was that of Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Eccentric Club Ld.,[6] the circumstances of which were considered by the Court of Appeal upon a claim for corporation profits tax. The Eccentric Club Ld., as its name implies, was a company incorporated under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, and its purpose, as stated by its memorandum of association, was to own and manage an ordinary social club known as the Eccentric Club. The full facts of the incorporation of the company and so forth are set out in the report.[7] It was said that since the company was carrying on the trade or business of proprietorship of a club it was liable to the impost of corporation profits tax, but the court held, as is stated in the headnote,[8] that the company being limited by guarantee and carrying on a social club in the ordinary way, that club was a members' club and not a proprietary club. " By " the memorandum of association profits were not distributable " among the members nor, in the event of the winding up of " the company, was any surplus distributable among them, but " was to be applied as the committee might determine." It was, therefore, held that the company was not carrying on an undertaking of a similar character to that of a trade or business and was, therefore, not liable to the tax. We were referred to a number of passages and I will cite one passage from Sargant L.J.[9]: " They ", referring to the club company, " insist that " this limitation of activities to a system of self-supply ", referring to the activities of the social club, " altogether differentiates their " enterprise from that of an individual or company carrying on " an ordinary proprietary club with the object of making a profit

[6] [1924] 1 K.B. 390, 400.
[7] Ibid. 400.
[8] Ibid. 391.
[9] Ibid. 430.

C. A.
1955
AUTOMOBILE PROPRIETARY LD. v. BROWN (VALUATION OFFICER).
Evershed M.R.

"out of the supply of club amenities." The Lord Justice went on to rely on certain reasoning which he derived from the speech of Lord Watson in New York Life Insurance Co. v. Styles.[10] As Mr. Lyell indicated, the conclusion which Sargant L.J. drew from the language of Lord Watson was later disapproved in the House of Lords [11]; but that does not, I think, indicate any doubt about the validity of the passage which I have just read where Sargant L.J. said (and the other members of the court used language to the same effect) that the substance of that case was that a social club was being carried on in all material respects as a members' club. As in the present case, the members of the club had to be members of the company. The headnote states [12] (and the same considerations are found in the present case) that any profits made were not distributable nor was excess property liable to be distributed among members of the company or the club on winding up. The case, therefore, was different for the purposes then in hand from what Sargant L.J. called the ordinary case of an individual owning and running a proprietary club for gain. It may be true, as Mr. Squibb said (referring to a passage at the end of the judgment of Pollock M.R.) that if a company is incorporated under the Companies Act there is a presumption that it is a trading company. But, if that be so, it is still a presumption which may be rebutted. It was rebutted in the Eccentric Club case [12] and it is certainly capable of being rebutted in very many cases in which, as Jenkins L.J. pointed out, a company is formed to carry on an activity which is plainly not a trading activity. Yet it may well be that not in every such case can the use of the word "limited" be dispensed with.

Mr. Squibb drew our attention to the terms of the memorandum and articles of association of the company in the present case, and it is true that clause 3 of the memorandum, the objects clause, contains many commonform powers or provisions in the widest terms, such as (f) "To carry on or conduct any "other businesses or proceedings which may seem to the "company capable of being conveniently carried on." There is also later in (m) power, which is one of the objects, "to sell "or dispose of the undertaking of the company, or any part "thereof." And then it was shown by reference to the articles, among other things, that by article 8 which is headed: "Applica- "tion of profits of company," "the income and property of the "company, whether arising from subscriptions of members of "the club . . . or from any other source, shall be applied solely "towards the promotion of the objects of the company as set "forth in its memorandum." As Mr. Squibb observed, that in terms covered any of the objects in the memorandum. But even if those considerations are of some force in distinguishing the present case in some degree from the facts in the Eccentric

[10] (1889) 14 App.Cas. 381; 5 T.L.R. 621.
[11] [1926] A.C. 281, 287.
[12] [1924] 1 K.B. 390.

Club case,[13] still, in my judgment, the facts in this case bring it much nearer to the Eccentric Club case [13] than to Challoner v. Robinson.[14]

Another point taken by Mr. Squibb was that in the present case the club, properly so-called, consisted of the premises in Pall Mall and Woodcote Park and the amenities there provided which were the exclusive privilege of full members. In addition to those activities this company was carrying on a separate enterprise in providing road services to full members and to associate members. It might, therefore, according to Mr. Squibb, fairly be said that the company was selling to each and every one of its associate members these services and that it was, in the ordinary sense, trading. That is not an analysis of its activities which I am prepared to accept. The full members as well as the associate members are equally entitled to these privileges and amenities and, as the tribunal found as a fact, this company is bound to apply and does apply the whole of the funds, which are made up from the associate members' subscriptions and capitation fees in respect of full members, in the provision of these services. That activity, though distinct and different no doubt from the activity of providing the amenities of a social club in the West End of London, is, nevertheless, an activity more akin to a club activity than to a trading activity in the ordinary sense of it.

On all the facts of this case I am of opinion that the activities carried on by the company at 15 Maswell Park hereditament are not there conducted "by way of trade"; and I do not think that Challoner v. Robinson [14] compels us to hold the contrary. I do not think, indeed, that this case is at all parallel upon its facts with Challoner v. Robinson,[14] the decision in which was, as I have already said, directed to an entirely different subject-matter. I do not lose sight of the significance and weight appropriate to be attached to the language of Lord Wright which the tribunal mentioned,[15] to the effect that the word "trade" is a word of very wide import. But the task which falls upon the court is to determine whether the activities being carried on in those premises are a trade being carried on by way of trade. I am unable, for my part, to accept the proposition that because this well-known institution known as the Royal Automobile Club, consisting of full members and of associate members, enjoys those amenities which are rendered possible by the activities carried on at the Maswell Park Road hereditament, and because the club and these activities are managed and conducted by the limited company as a proprietor, therefore, this company is carrying on this activity (and, indeed, it follows, all its activities) "by way of trade." If that conclusion be right, it follows, as I have earlier said, that Mr. Squibb cannot succeed, because he

[13] Ibid. 415.
[14] [1908] 1 Ch. 49.
[15] See National Association of Local Government Officers v. Bolton Corporation [1943] A.C. 166, 184.

C. A.

1955

Automobile Proprietary Ld. v. Brown (Valuation Officer).

Evershed M.R.

is left only with the bracket making and brazing activities; and beyond question, as the tribunal found, the primary purposes of the occupation of the hereditament cease to be factory purposes.

Another point was raised upon which also I do not propose to express a conclusion; but it would not be right, since the matter was argued before us, that I should pass it by unnoticed. In paragraph 12 of the case, which I read, it is stated at the beginning that the activities of repairing units, in the view of the tribunal, "did not constitute the 'maintenance of road "'vehicles,'" and it felt itself governed in that respect by the decision in the House of Lords of Potteries Electric Traction Co. Ld. v. Bailey.[16] Mr. Lyell, for the valuation officer, contended, and I think rightly contended, that on its facts the present case was materially different from the Potteries Electric Traction Company's case[16] and for this reason: the potteries company, among other things, owned a fleet of trams or omnibuses and upon the hereditament in question in that case it manufactured certain component parts for the omnibuses. If the company had not manufactured those parts, as was pointed out, it would have had to have bought them, and, probably, paid more money for them. But, as the House pointed out, the essence of the matter was that the company was carrying on the distinct enterprise of manufacturing the parts and it did not cease to be a factory for rating purposes and become merely an activity of maintenance of vehicles because, when the parts had been manufactured and had left the premises, they were then used for maintaining the vehicles. The question is, what is done on the premises; not what is done afterwards with what has been made on the premises? In the present case there is no such separate activity of manufacture. What is done at Maswell Park is to repair and recondition units which are sent for such purposes by servants of the company from various parts of the country. As I earlier said, as a matter of efficient maintenance of this fleet of vehicles, it is far better that the unit should be sent and a new unit sent back at once so that the vehicle can be got again on to the road, than that the vehicle should itself be brought all the way to Maswell Park Road and there remain out of action while some part of it is put right.

During the course of the argument Mr. Lyell was asked the question: If, in connexion with repairing units, the company is maintaining vehicles, what vehicle is being maintained when an individual unit is being in fact repaired? The answer given was that no individual vehicle can be identified, but the proper way to look at the matter is to say that the vehicles, as a fleet, as a whole, are being maintained by the activities of repairing units which have come from one or other of the vehicles to Maswell Park Road. I see the force of that contention. On the other hand, in the Potteries Traction case[17] certain language was used by Lord Dunedin, and, I think, also in the same sense by Lord

[16] [1931] A.C. 151. [17] Ibid.

Tomlin, which indicates that in their view the phrase "maintenance of road vehicles" necessarily imported the notion that the vehicle being maintained should be at the place where the alleged maintenance was being conducted. Lord Dunedin so stated in clear terms, for he said [18]: "Now the Court of Appeal held that, inasmuch as the spare parts manufactured in the factory were used for the omnibus fleet, this was a case in which the place was used for the 'maintenance' of road vehicles. I cannot assent to this. Maintenance is taken along with housing, and points, I think, to something done to the vehicle on the premises." Lord Tomlin used somewhat different language, but, as I have said, I am inclined to think that the matter struck him in the same way as it struck Lord Dunedin. He said [19]: "The only question therefore is whether or not having regard to the facts found by the learned recorder the premises are a 'place used by the occupier for the housing or maintenance of his road vehicles or as stables.' Now these words seem to me to refer to what is done on the premises. The manufacture of spare parts for use elsewhere is not in my view within the contemplation of the subsection." I, therefore, prefer to express no view of my own upon this matter. To accept the contention of Mr. Lyell would certainly involve dissenting from the opinion so clearly expressed by Lord Dunedin, and, although it is quite true that that particular point was not essential to his conclusion, it would be going further than I am prepared to do in this case (where it is also not necessary for the decision) to express a contrary opinion in acceptance of Mr. Lyell's argument. For the reasons I have stated, however, and because as I think the company is not doing the activities on the part marked "D" or elsewhere on the hereditament by way of trade, it follows, as Mr. Squibb conceded, that the company has failed to show that this hereditament is an industrial hereditament within section 3 of the Act of 1928. The appeal, therefore, in my judgment, should be dismissed.

JENKINS L.J. I entirely agree with the judgment which my Lord has just delivered, and he has dealt with all the relevant facts so fully that I do not find anything that I can usefully add to what he has said.

ROMER L.J.: I also agree, and I find myself in the same position in this matter as my brother Jenkins. I cannot usefully add anything to the very careful and exhaustive judgment which the Master of the Rolls has delivered.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: A. J. A. Hanhart; Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

E. D.

[18] Ibid. 169.

[19] Ibid. 180.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1955
Feb. 15, 16.

McNair J.

* KELMAN AND ANOTHER v. LIVANOS.

Shipping—Sale of ship—Hull damage—Class maintained—Whether purchaser entitled to refuse ship until repaired—Meaning of "free "from average"—"Average"—Priam Terms—Lloyd's survey—Repairs deferred to owner's convenience.

In an agreement for the sale of a steamer on "Priam Terms" it was agreed, inter alia, "(4) The vendors shall deliver the "steamer to the purchaser free from average . . . (6) For the "inspection by Lloyd's surveyor of steamer's bottom and all out-"side parts below the waterline . . . the vendors agree to place "the steamer in dry dock. . . . In the event of the bottom or any "outside parts below water line being found broken or damaged, "and purchasers decline to accept steamer in such state, it shall "be repaired and put in good and seaworthy condition to the satis-"faction of the surveyor at Lloyd's at the vendors' expense."

On inspection, the Lloyd's surveyor found that repairs of indents to the keel plates and shell plates might be deferred until the owner wished the work to be done. He considered that the vessel was in good and seaworthy condition and could maintain her class; he made a recommendation to Lloyd's and issued an interim classification certificate to that effect. The purchaser refused to accept the vessel with those defects and requested that they should be made good. The vendors refused to pay for the repairs, taking the view that as the surveyor had thought no repairs were necessary to put the ship into a good and seaworthy condition they were under no obligation to pay. The contract was completed subject to the arbitration to decide who should bear the cost of the repairs:—

Held that, construing clause 6 by considering it in relation to the whole group of clauses in which it was found, as the arbitrator found that the Lloyd's surveyor in carrying out the survey under clause 6 considered the steamer to be in good and seaworthy condition without any repairs, the purchaser was not entitled under that clause to decline to accept the steamer unless the indents were repaired.

Held, further, that "free from average" in clause 4 in this particular agreement meant "free from claims against the ship" and not "free from damage" and accordingly the vendors were not in breach of their obligation under clause 4 to deliver the steamer "free from average."

SPECIAL CASE stated by an arbitrator.

The claimants, Richard Cameron Kelman and Andrew Gordon Shirreffs, were, by a trust deed dated November 21, 1952, entered into by the partners of a firm called the Gwent Co., appointed trustees on behalf of the firm's creditors and its partners of all the partners' property. That property included the steel crew steamer Goodmar, built in 1943 as a minelayer for the Admiralty, but converted in 1949 into a trawler. The effect of the deed was to vest the property in the Goodmar in the claimants, subject to the rights of the mortgagees of the vessel. Kelman at all material times dealt with the matter of the Goodmar on both claimants' behalf. On March 9 and 10, 1953, an agreement was entered into between the claimants and the respondent, George John Livanos, by which the claimants agreed to sell and the respondent to buy the Goodmar. The agreement was for the most part on a printed form, which was commonly known as an agreement for sale on "Priam Terms." The agreement included the following clauses: "(1) The steamer shall be able to proceed under her own "steam, and shall be in a seaworthy condition at the time of "delivery. (2) The purchase price to be £19,000 . . . (3) The "purchaser shall deposit . . . £1,900 . . . on the signing of this "agreement. (4) The vendors shall deliver the steamer to the "purchasers free from average and with clean swept holds and "class maintained in Aberdeen not later than April 15, 1953. In "the event of the vendors failing to deliver the steamer within "the time herein specified, the purchasers shall have the option "of maintaining or cancelling this agreement, but any delay not "exceeding 30 days caused by force majeure and/or caused by "repairs in order to pass inspection by Lloyd's surveyor at port "of delivery, under clause 6 of this agreement, to be accepted by "the purchasers . . . (6) For the inspection by Lloyd's surveyor "of steamer's bottom and all outside parts below the water line "including the drawing of tail shaft the vendors agree to place "the steamer in drydock in Aberdeen as soon as possible . . . "In the event of the bottom or any outside part below the water "line being found broken or damaged, and purchasers decline to "accept steamer in such state, it shall be repaired and put in "good and seaworthy condition to the satisfaction of the surveyor "to Lloyd's at the vendors' expense. (7) If the bottom, tail shaft "or any outside part below the water line be found damaged or "broken, the expense of putting in and taking out of drydock, "drydock hire, and surveyor's fee shall be paid by the vendors, "but if the same be found in good order and passes the said "inspection without repairing, the purchasers shall bear these "expenses. (8) The steamer shall be deemed ready for delivery "as soon as the bottom and outside parts (including tail shaft) "below the water line have been approved by Lloyd's surveyor "in drydock, or any repairs required to obtain such approval have "been effected as provided in clause 4. (9) The purchasers "and/or vendors agree to order the surveyor to proceed with the "inspection of the steamer's bottom and outside parts below the "water line on receipt of written notice that the steamer is ready "for such inspection in drydock . . . (13) The vendors agree to "deliver the steamer to the purchasers free from all debts and "incumbrances."

On the signing of the contract the respondent made the deposit of £1,900 called for by clause 3. At the time the contract was signed the Goodmar had been laid up since about March, 1952. Her last Lloyd's special survey had taken place in 1949 and her classification certificate issued thereafter and dated December 19, 1949, carried as an endorsement on the back: "The following

1955

KELMAN v. LIVANOS.

"items relating to the condition of this ship have been noted, "but do not affect the maintenance of classification. Indents "in keel plates and shell plates A. 3 and 4 (port side) and A. 4 "(starboard side)."

The practice of Lloyd's Register of Shipping regarding deferred repairs and classification certificates was that deferred repairs were divided into two groups: (a) those which would prejudice class maintenance if not dealt with within a specified time; and (b) those which, not affecting seaworthiness, might be left to the owner's convenience. Deferred repairs in group (a) were dealt on the face of the classification certificate, but those in group (b) were noted only on the back of the certificates in the form of an endorsement.

Shortly before the contract was signed the respondent and one Lambelle, his consultant marine engineer and naval architect, visited Aberdeen and made a superficial inspection of the ship, then afloat. During the course of that visit Kelman handed to Lambelle for a few minutes the classification certificate of December 19, 1949. Lambelle attached little importance to it, but he did know of the endorsement before the contract was signed.

On March 25, 1953, the Ministry of Transport sanctioned the transfer of the Goodmar to the respondent, and pursuant to clause 6 of the contract the steamer was drydocked at Aberdeen on April 3, 1953. She was rapidly inspected that evening by Lambelle and the respondent and more fully inspected so far as her bottom and outside parts below water line were concerned on the following day by Douglas, surveyor to Lloyd's Register, Lambelle and Campbell, a consulting marine surveyor acting on behalf of the claimants.

In paragraph 9 of his award the arbitrator stated: "As the "result of his inspection Mr. Douglas formed the opinion that "the indents to the keel plates and shell plates had not "deteriorated since the previous inspections of the vessel and that "their repair might be deferred until the owner wished the work "to be done. He considered that without any repairs being then "carried out the Goodmar was in good condition and was "satisfied that she could maintain her class. He accordingly "recommended to Lloyd's Register that the vessel was in good "order and eligible in his opinion to remain as classed and "at a later date issued an interim certificate to that effect." Lambelle, on behalf of the respondent, immediately after the inspection, informed Kelman that he refused to accept the Goodmar with the above-mentioned indents and requested that they be made good. At the time of that refusal and request Kelman was not fully informed of Douglas's opinion and he immediately instructed Campbell to obtain estimates from two ship repairers. On Monday, April 6, the ship was inspected by two repairers and estimates were given amounting to £1,850 in one case and £1,830 in the other. On April 8, Kelman was told of Douglas's opinion and thereupon refused on behalf of the claimants to undertake any repairs and insisted on the respondent completing the contract, which he in his turn refused to do. The parties were able to reach agreement to resolve the deadlock, while reserving the rival claims of the parties to be decided by arbitration. They agreed that the respondent should take delivery of the Goodmar, that the claimants should deliver a valid bill of sale, that the respondent should pay the remainder of the purchase price and release the deposit, but that £1,850, being the estimated costs of repairs, should be paid by the claimants out of the purchase price into a joint account to await the result of the arbitration.

Having stated the facts as set out above, the arbitrator continued: "The major issues argued before me" (and they were substantially the same as the issues argued before McNair J.) "were (a) whether the respondent was entitled under clause 6 "to decline to accept the Goodmar unless the indents to her keel "plates and shell plates were repaired, and (b) whether the "claimants were in breach of their obligation under clause 4 to "deliver the Goodmar free from average."

The arbitrator, in paragraph 16 of his award, made the following further findings of fact: "(a) On April 4, 1953, and at all "material times thereafter the Goodmar was seaworthy and free "from damage other than the indents to her keel plates and shell "plates; (b) at the inspection in drydock on April 4, 1953, Mr. "Douglas, Lloyd's surveyor at Aberdeen, considered that without "any repairs the Goodmar was in good and seaworthy condition "to his satisfaction (see clause 6); at that time no repairs were "required to pass inspection by Mr. Douglas (see clause 4); she "was then found by Mr. Douglas to be in good order and passed "his inspection without repairing (see clause 7) and her bottom "and outside part below the water line were without repairs "approved by Mr. Douglas (see clause 8); (c) there was no "material change in the condition of the vessel or the opinion of "Mr. Douglas at any relevant date after April 4, 1953; (d) on "and after April 4, 1953, the class of the Goodmar was at all "material times maintained and she had clean swept holds; "(e) on April 4, 1953, and at all material times thereafter there "were no outstanding claims against the vessel and she had no "unrepaired insured damage; (f) the indents to the keel plates "and shell plates set out in the endorsement to the classification "certificate . . . were seen to be present and to that extent were "'found' at the inspection in drydock by Mr. Douglas on "April 4, 1953. These indents admittedly constituted damage to "the vessel's bottom and although not affecting seaworthiness "were more than trivial blemishes. They were not due to wear "and tear. Mr. Douglas described them as 'obvious defects' and "said that when he had first inspected the vessel for the purpose "of her previous special survey in 1949 he had regarded the "indents as a borderline case and had been in doubt whether

1955

KELMAN v. LIVANOS.

" to deal with them by ' endorsement ' only or to make them a " ' subject ' in his report to Lloyd's Register. He considered, " and I accept his view, that they would be expensive to repair " and would depreciate the value of the vessel; (g) . . . so far " as it is a question of fact I find that for the purpose of the " contra proferentem doctrine the respondent was the proferens; " (h) evidence was adduced by the respondent and was not " objected to by the claimants as to the meaning of ' free from " ' average ' on the ground that this was a technical term. From " the evidence of a very experienced shipbroker it appeared that " the printed form of contract used in this case, known as Priam " Terms (hence the letters P.T. in the top left hand corner) " dated back to shortly after 1903, that the phrase ' free from " ' average ' had no generally accepted meaning in the trade, that " it was thought to be a term in favour of the buyer and as such " was often objected to by or on behalf of sellers, that he had " always used it as meaning ' free of damage other than fair wear " ' and tear,' that he had never known it to be given in the trade " the meaning of ' free from average claims ' against the vessel, " but that it had no settled meaning and was vague and nebulous. " I find that there is no settled technical meaning to the phrase " ' free from average ' when used of the sale of a ship; . . . " 17. Subject to the decision of the court on the questions of " law set out in paragraph 23 hereof I formed the opinion that " the claimants were right on the construction of clause 6 . . . " ' free from average ' in clause 4 meant ' free from damage " ' other than fair wear and tear ' or ' free from damage ' (it was " unnecessary for me to decide which) as contended by the " respondent, but I considered that in view of the detailed " provisions of clause 6 and the related provisions of clauses 4, 7 " and 8 ' free from average ' in clause 4 could not be read as " applying to damage to the bottom and outside parts below " water line of the vessel."

In paragraph 23 the arbitrator stated the questions of law on which he had been requested by the respondent to state his award as follows: " . . . whether upon the facts found and upon " the true construction of the contract (i) the claimants are liable " (by reason of the provisions of clause 6 of the contract) for the " cost of repairing the defects in the vessel's bottom and outside " parts below the water line found on the drydock inspection; . . . " (iii) the claimants are liable (by reason of the provisions of " clause 4 of the contract) to allow to the respondent a diminution " in the price of the vessel or to pay damages to the respondent " by reason of the defects in the vessel's bottom and outside parts " below the water line found on the drydock inspection."

The arbitrator, subject to the decision of the court, decided that the claimants were not liable under either clause, and awarded that they were entitled to be paid £1,850, the sum paid into the joint account to await the result of the arbitration.

The respondent appealed.

Eustace Roskill Q.C. and John Honour for the respondent (purchaser).

Michael Kerr for the claimants (vendors).

The following cases were cited in argument: Shirlaw v. Southern Foundries (1926) Ld.[1]; In re Comptoir Commercial Anversois & Power, Son & Co.[2]; Uchida Kisen Kabushiki Kaisha of Kobe v. C. Henry Smith[3]; In re Grainger, Dawson v. Higgins[4]; Suzuki & Co. Ld. v. Benyon (T.) & Co. Ld.[5]; Fowkes v. Manchester and London Life Assurance and Loan Association.[6]

McNAIR J., having stated the facts and the relevant parts of the arbitrator's award as set out above, continued: Although the two points tend to merge into each other, it is convenient that I should first deal with the purchaser's argument as to the effect of clause 6. In substance, the argument advanced on behalf of the purchaser is, that the clauses in the contract do not, as a matter of construction, involve that the Lloyd's surveyor is appointed the arbiter of the parties in any respect save one, namely, in the respect that if the purchaser does decline to accept the ship on an examination below water line it is admitted that the Lloyd's surveyor, or the surveyor appointed under the clause, is the arbiter as to what repairs are necessary. It was further argued that in fact Douglas, who carried out the inspection, was not (as I understand it) carrying out an inspection under clause 6 for the purpose of determining whether she was in good and seaworthy condition under this contract, but was primarily, and I think, the argument went, wholly, concerned with determining whether the vessel could be said to be a vessel with "class maintained." It was urged further that if the vendors' construction of that clause was right it might happen, and indeed would happen on the facts of this case, that the purchaser would be compelled to take this vessel, though seaworthy, even though she had damage in her bottom which would cost some £1,800 to repair, that being about 10 per cent. of the purchase price, and it is said that that is a startling result which should not be arrived at unless the contract, by its clear terms, drove the court to the conclusion that that was the right result on the construction of the contract.

I think that the only sound way of approaching the construction of clause 6 is to consider it in relation to the whole fasciculus

[1] [1939] 2 K.B. 206; 55 T.L.R. 611; [1939] 2 All E.R. 113.

[2] [1920] 1 K.B. 868; 36 T.L.R. 101.

[3] (1922) 10 Ll.L.R. 456.

[4] [1900] 2 Ch. 756, C.A.; [1902] A.C. 1.

[5] (1926) 42 T.L.R. 269; 31 Com. Cas. 183; 24 Ll.L.R. 49.

[6] (1863) 3 Best & Smith 917.

1955

KELMAN v. LIVANOS.

McNair J.

of clauses in which it finds its place. It is clear that it is of the essence of this contract that when or shortly before the vessel is tendered for delivery there shall be an inspection of the bottom and underwater parts, and that that inspection shall normally be carried out by the vessel's classification society; and, as it seems to me, these clauses really provide, quite neatly and logically, for two situations. The first is where, on an inspection of the vessel's bottom and underwater parts, the surveyor comes to the conclusion that the vessel is in a good and seaworthy condition, and approves the condition of the bottom. In that situation clause 8 provides that "The steamer shall be deemed ready for "delivery as soon as the bottom and outside parts . . . below the "water line have been approved by Lloyd's surveyor . . . "; and clause 7, which is in the same group of clauses, provides that the drydocking expenses and surveyor's fee, in the event of the bottom and underwater parts being "found in good order and" pass "the said inspection without repairing, the purchasers shall "bear these expenses."

The second situation is where on inspection it is found that the bottom and underwater parts are broken or damaged, which, I think, in that context must clearly be read in contrast with "in good and seaworthy condition." If they are so found broken or damaged, so that the surveyor is unable to pass the bottom as being in good and seaworthy condition and approve it without repairs, the purchaser is given the right, if he so desires, of declining "to accept steamer in such state." He can, of course, if he wants the steamer urgently, take the steamer with those defects; but if he exercise his right to decline to accept the steamer in that state then the clause provides "it shall be "repaired and put in good and seaworthy condition to the satis-"faction of the surveyor to Lloyd's at the vendor's expense." If that event happens, provision is made in clauses 7 and 8 for the consequences. Under clause 7 it is provided that if the bottom or underwater parts are "found damaged or broken, the expense "of putting in and taking out of drydock, drydock hire, and "surveyor's fee shall be paid by the vendors"; and when one comes to clause 8, one finds that as regards delivery this same contingency is provided for by the words "The steamer shall be "deemed ready for delivery as soon as . . . any repairs required "to obtain" Lloyd's approval "have been effected, as provided "in clause 4." That, as it seems to me, is a perfectly logical and reasonable way of reading these three clauses together, and it does no violence to any single word in the clauses and, indeed, it carries out what I conceive to be the perfectly plain object of such a provision in a sale contract.

If one applies the facts as found by the arbitrator to that construction (which, as it seems to me, is plainly the construction which he favoured) one finds two decisive findings in the vendors' favour. The first is that contained in paragraph 9, that Douglas considered that without any repairs being carried out the Goodmar was in good condition, and he was satisfied that she could maintain her class; and, the second is in paragraph 16 (b) of his award that the vessel was found by him to be in good order and passed his inspection without repairing (and it is clear to my mind that the arbitrator meant his findings to be findings in relation to these particular clauses).

In my judgment those findings are quite conclusive of the case in favour of the vendors under this clause. Mr. Roskill asked me to find or infer that the Lloyd's surveyor had no authority from either party to do anything under this clause other than to deal with the question of maintenance of class. But it is clear from the contract itself that it was intended that the Lloyd's surveyor should do more than that; and it is clear from the findings which the arbitrator has made that he took the view that Douglas, Lloyd's surveyor, in forming the views that he found him to have formed, was acting in pursuance of clause 6. In the points of claim on which the arbitration was held it was expressly pleaded that this inspection took place pursuant to clause 6, and I think it clear that the arbitrator found that as a fact, as he was entitled to do.

The next point is one of some difficulty arising under clause 4 of the agreement, and it turns primarily on the meaning which has to be given to the words "free from average." In order that one may get those words into their context, it is right that I should read this clause again: "The vendors shall deliver the "steamer to the purchasers free from average and with clean "swept holds and class maintained in Aberdeen . . ." It is argued that, in order that this vessel may satisfy the requirements of the contract so far as they relate to her physical condition, it must be proved, first, that she was seaworthy; secondly, that she had clean swept holds; thirdly, that she was in a condition to qualify for maintenance of class; and fourthly, that she was "free from average," meaning "free from physical "damage."

That construction of the meaning of the phrase "free from "average" was, to some extent, based on the submission that, in its context in clause 4, it is to be found with two other requirements, both relating to the physical condition of the ship, namely, "clean swept holds" and "class maintained." In the first place, I do not accept that submission because, in my view, the phrase "class maintained," in clause 4, does not relate to the physical condition of the vessel but to a condition of affairs in her classification society. The vessel would, in my judgment, under clause 4 be properly described as "class maintained" although her physical condition was such as not to justify the maintenance of her class. Accordingly, one can approach clause 4 without the necessity of finding a meaning for the words "free from average," which is in the same field of thought as "clean swept holds" and a condition sufficient to justify maintenance of class.

1955

KELMAN v. LIVANOS.

McNair J.

Before I deal with the textbooks on the subject, I should refer to the findings of the arbitrator as to the evidence which was given before him with regard to the meaning of the phrase "free from average." [His Lordship read sub-paragraph (h) of paragraph 16 of the arbitrator's award, and continued:] The arbitrator concludes: "I find that there is no settled technical "meaning to the phrase 'free from average' when used of the "sale of a ship." That is a finding of fact, and, accordingly, the task which is left to me is to construe that phrase without the assistance of any finding as to any technical meaning of that phrase in a particular trade.

Mr. Roskill, on behalf of the purchaser, has urged that this is, in effect, a phrase borrowed from the language of marine insurance and that in marine insurance "average" connotes physical damage, and he submits that it is in that sense that the phrase is used in section 64 (1) of the Marine Insurance Act, 1906, which provides that "A particular average loss is a partial "loss of the subject-matter insured, caused by a peril insured "against, and which is not a general average loss." I was referred, in support of that argument, to the views expressed by Sir Mackenzie Chalmers, the draftsman of the Marine Insurance Act, which are to be found in Chalmers' Marine Insurance Act, 1906 (4th ed., p. 162), where the author appends an interesting note under the heading "Definitions of average," and states: "Much learning and ingenuity have been spent on the endeavour "to define the true meaning of the term 'average' . . . The "fact is that the term is used in different senses, and its meaning "in each case must be sought in its context." He continues: "The word is derived from the French 'avarie' or Italian "'avaria' which themselves are of uncertain derivation . . . "Originally the term 'average' signified a toll or duty"—for which reference is made to the Oxford Dictionary. "In ordinary "shipping law it denotes an extra charge, as in the expression "'primage and average as accustomed,' or when such charges "as pilotage or anchorage are referred to as 'petty average.' "In fire insurance it has a special meaning. When a fire policy "is made 'subject to average' the effect is that if the assured "has not insured the subject-matter for its full value he is treated "as his own insurer for the difference between the sum insured "and the real value." Then he continues: "In marine insurance "the use of the word 'average' is very puzzling. The fact is the "law has been developed piecemeal by decisions, and no uniform "theory has been worked out. A partial loss, as distinguished "from a total loss, may be either a general average loss or a "particular average loss, that is to say, it may be a loss which "gives rise to a right of contribution, or a loss which does not "do so." Then he continues in a passage which deals with the familiar complication as to the difference between particular charges and sue and labour charges, and finally refers to the section of the Act which I have already cited.

It does not seem to me, with respect, that that note lends much support to the view that the term "average" means physical damage, although it well may, in certain contexts, have the meaning of a claim arising out of physical damage.

If one turns to its dictionary meaning (and I turn, for the purposes of convenience to the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, although I have had reference made to the larger Oxford English Dictionary) in the Shorter Oxford Dictionary one finds, as I think, no support for the view, that as a matter of English language, the word "average" ever means "physical damage." Apparently, it is clear from this dictionary that originally it meant "a duty charged upon goods; a customs duty or the like." A secondary meaning is "any charge over and above the freight "incurred in the shipment of goods and payable by their owner." Then a special meaning is given of "the expense or loss to "owners, arising from damage at sea to the ship or cargo"; and, finally, "the incidence of any such charge, expense or loss; "especially the equitable distribution of such expense or loss "among all the parties interested." From those four rather archaic meanings there has developed the modern meaning of the arithmetical mean determined by calculation.

In Scrutton on Charterparties, 15th ed., p. 368, there is to be found an interesting and informative note dealing with the phrase "with primage and average accustomed," a form of words which is still to be found in many bills of lading, and I think it is clear from that passage that Scrutton L.J. certainly took the view that in that context "average" was used as meaning some form of charge or expense and was not used in any way in relation to physical damage.

I was also referred to passages in an early edition of Abbott's Law of Merchant Shipping and Lowndes' General Average, which do not, to my mind, give any very clear answer to the meaning.

As I have stated, the arbitrator has taken the view that, in this contract, the words mean damage to the ship other than fair wear and tear, but that they should not be read as applying to damage to the bottom or outside parts below water line of the vessel. It seems to me, with respect, that that is a great deal to get out of those three words. I would prefer to take the view that, inasmuch as clause 6 deals with the bottom damage and underwater damage and inasmuch as another clause of the contract gives the purchaser a right to inspect, the words "free from "average" in clause 4 relate not to physical damage at all but to the freedom from claims against the ship, of whatsoever nature.

It is clearly of importance to the prospective purchaser that he should know (whether under English law or under some foreign system of law) whether there may be claims against a ship, or extra charges, which Sir MacKenzie Chalmers says, in the passage I have read, is the meaning of these words in ordinary shipping law. If I adopt that construction, I avoid any conflict at all between clause 1, which contains the obligation that the vessel shall be seaworthy, and clause 6 which deals with damage to the bottom. If, on the other hand, one takes the view that "free from average" in clause 4 means "free from physical damage to the ship" one gets a most awkward conflict between clause 1 and clause 6 in relation to clause 4; and, applying what I conceive to be the right method of construction, namely, to adopt a construction which does not involve conflict with other provisions of the document, and taking the view that there is a reasonable and accepted meaning of the phrase "free from average" which does not connote damage, I take the view, as a matter of construction, that in this context "free from average" does not mean "free from damage to the "ship," but means "free from claims against the ship."

1955

KELMAN v. LIVANOS.

McNAIR J.

It is true that that view involves, or may in certain circumstances involve, some surplusage in the contract, because there is in clause 13 a provision, "The vendors agree to deliver the "steamer to the purchasers free from all debts and incum- "brances" but there may well be claims against a ship, either in English law or in foreign law, which are not debts or incumbrances, in respect of which a prospective purchaser would wish to be guaranteed that the ship is free.

In the result, therefore, I decide the questions of law stated in paragraph 23 in the same way as the arbitrator has done, and accordingly the award stated will take effect.

Award upheld.

Solicitors: Constant & Constant; Staddon, Pyke & Barnes.

C. J. E.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.]

1955
May 2.

Lord Goddard C.J., Hallett and Havers JJ.

*REGINA v. GODALMING LICENSING COMMITTEE. Ex parte KNIGHT AND ANOTHER.

Licensing—Justices—Jurisdiction—Power to accept surrender of an existing licence for the purpose of granting a different licence—Licensing Act, 1953 (1 & 2 Eliz. 2, c. 46), s. 7.

The applicants, the owners of an hotel, applied to the licensing committee for an annual unrestricted licence offering to surrender their existing term licence, in respect of the premises, which was subject to certain conditions:—

Held, that a current licence could be surrendered and another licence granted in its place and, accordingly, the justices had jurisdiction to accept the surrender of the term licence and grant a new licence if they thought fit.

Rex v. Corfield (1922) 86 J.P. 216 followed.

Rex v. Taylor, Rex v. Amendt [1915] 2 K.B. 593; 31 T.L.R. 317 distinguished.

1955

REGINA v. GODALMING LICENSING COMMITTEE. Ex parte KNIGHT.

APPLICATION for an order of mandamus.

Francis Warnford Osborn Knight and his wife, Peggy Knight, were the proprietors of the Thorshill Hotel, Hindhead, Surrey, and the joint holders of a licence in respect of the premises. The licence was granted on February 10, 1954, authorizing them to sell intoxicating liquor from April 5, 1954, the date of the confirmation of the licence, until July 5, 1957, subject to certain conditions which included that no bar for the sale of intoxicating liquor should be opened on the premises, that intoxicating liquor should be sold only to residents and their guests, and that the monopoly value in respect of the licence for the term was £105 payable as to £35 on October 1 in each of the years 1954, 1955, and 1956.

On March 2, 1955, the applicants applied to the Godalming Licensing Committee for the grant of an annual licence to be without conditions save as to monopoly value and to be in substitution for the current licence which would be surrendered.

The licensing committee held that it had no jurisdiction to grant the application on the ground that the licence applied for could not be granted while the licence granted on February 10, 1954, was in force, and that the latter could not be surrendered for the purpose.

Harold J. Brown Q.C. and N. H. Curtis-Raleigh for the applicants.

The justices did not appear and were not represented.

The cases cited in argument are referred to in the judgment.

LORD GODDARD C.J. Mr. Harold Brown moves in this case for an order of mandamus to justices for the County of Surrey sitting for licensing purposes at Godalming to hear and determine an application by him for a new licence in respect of the Thorshill Hotel, Hindhead.

The circumstances show that the applicant and his wife own this hotel in respect of which a term licence, that is to say, for something like three years, had been granted to them with a condition that they should not have a bar on the premises. They have now spent a great deal of money on the premises and they are desirous of having a full unrestricted licence, and they, therefore, applied to the justices at their licensing sessions to grant a full licence provided they surrendered, as they were willing to do, the existing licence.

The justices evidently took a great deal of trouble over the case and heard arguments submitted to them, but came to a wrong decision in saying that they had no jurisdiction. I think, perhaps, they were confused by some of the cases cited to them and they do not now appear to show cause and take part in this argument, no doubt having been advised that their decision was wrong. It is perfectly true that in Rex v. Taylor and Rex v.

1955

REGINA v. GODALMING LICENSING COMMITTEE. Ex parte KNIGHT.

Lord Goddard C.J.

Amendt,[1] in 1915, there was a licence in force to which there were certain conditions attached with regard to the payment of monopoly value. The applicants asked for another licence of exactly the same sort, but with a reduced monopoly value, and the court said: "You cannot do that." But I do not think in that case the court meant that the licence could not be surrendered and a new licence granted; if it was to be exactly the same, but at a reduced monopoly value, it was a very different thing because they could not reduce the monopoly value. The present case is quite different. It is a case in which the applicants are willing to surrender a restricted licence and apply for a new licence if the justices would accept the surrender of the restricted licence. That seems to be covered by the reasoning in Rex v. Corfield,[2] which shows that if a licensee who is the holder of a licence with conditions attached wishes to get rid of those conditions, his right course is to apply for a new licence and not a renewal of the old licence.

Another case to which attention has been called is Carter v. Pickering,[3] which shows by inference that the court there thought it was perfectly possible for a licensee to surrender an existing licence and ask for another licence, but we were only pointing out in that case that what had happened there did not amount to a surrender. The justices had refused to grant a new licence and the licensee wanted his licence back. As a matter of fact a fellow licensee, I should have thought somewhat churlishly, prosecuted him for selling beer without a licence, but of course the licensee had not surrendered his licence; he had offered to surrender it, but the justices refused to accept the surrender and Humphreys J.[4] called attention to the fact that the decisions in Rex v. Taylor and Rex v. Amendt[5] "are, no doubt, still good "law, subject to the Finance Act, 1947, section 73." That section is now reproduced in section 7 of the Licensing Act, 1953, and that in its terms clearly shows that a current licence can be surrendered and another licence granted in its place. Accordingly, I think that in the present case the justices were wrong and this matter must go back with a direction that they have jurisdiction to grant a new licence if they see fit, which, I suppose, they will do because apparently they were satisfied on the merits. We send the case back, saying that they had jurisdiction to consider the application and they must consider it and determine according to law.

HALLETT J. I agree and have nothing to add.

HAVERS J. I agree.

Order of mandamus.

Solicitors: Gibson & Weldon, for Burley & Geach, Petersfield.

C. J. E.

[1] [1915] 2 K.B. 593; 31 T.L.R. 317.

[2] (1922) 86 J.P. 216.

[3] [1949] 1 All E.R. 340.

[4] Ibid. 341.

[5] [1915] 2 K.B. 593.

[PROBATE, ETC., DIVISION.]

* PRACTICE DIRECTION. (COSTS.)

1955 May 5.

Costs—Taxation—Probate and Divorce Division—Objection to taxation —Informal reference to registrar—R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27, reg. 39.

Any party dissatisfied with the decision of a taxing officer of the Probate and Divorce Registry may, in accordance with R.S.C., Ord. 65, r. 27, reg. 39, lodge formal written objections, which will be dealt with by a registrar. In order to save expense and delay, however, it is the practice of the registrars to hear informal references from the taxing officers on disputed items in unopposed taxations, or, by agreement, in opposed taxations. Practitioners wishing to take advantage of this procedure should at the end of the taxation merely request the taxing officer to refer the items about which they are dissatisfied to a registrar.

B. LONG,
Senior Registrar.

May 5, 1955.

[COURT OF APPEAL.]

* HUYTON-WITH-ROBY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. HUNTER.

C. A.

1955 Apr. 27, 28.

Denning, Birkett and Romer L.JJ.

Highway—Private street works—Objection to proposals—Jurisdiction of justices — Evidence — Objection that alleged street is highway repairable by inhabitants at large—Onus of proof on local authority —Private Street Works Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57), ss. 5, 6, 7, 8.
Justices—Case stated—Jurisdiction of Divisional Court—Must not retry questions of fact. Burden of Proof—Nature of onus—Provisional burden — Evidence pro and con — Determinate conclusion — Irrelevance of onus.

A local authority proposed to make up a road at the expense of the frontagers under the Private Street Works Act, 1892. A frontager raised an objection which was heard and determined in his favour by justices who found that the road was a public highway and repairable by the inhabitants at large. The council appealed by case stated to the Divisional Court, which examined the nature of the evidence adduced before the justices, and allowed the appeal, holding that the absence of any evidence that public money had ever been spent on the road in question placed on the frontager the onus of proving that it was a public highway and that the evidence had not conclusively discharged that onus in his favour. On appeal by the frontager:—

Held, that where a local authority sought to charge frontagers

C. A.

1955

HUYTON-WITH-ROBY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. HUNTER.

under the Act of 1892, the onus of proof rested on the local authority to show that it was a "street not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large" within the definition in section 5; that as the tribunal of fact, namely, the justices, had come to a determinate conclusion that the road was a public highway, the only question which the Divisional Court was thereafter entitled to consider was whether in law there was any evidence on which the justices could so find; and that as there was material before the justices on which they could find as they did, no question as to onus of proof arose, and the frontager's appeal should be allowed.

Dicta of Channell J. in Rishton v. Haslingden Corporation [1898] 1 Q.B. 294, 301; 14 T.L.R. 155; and Lord Dunedin in Robins v. National Trust Co. Ld. [1927] A.C. 515, 520; 43 T.L.R. 243 applied.

Decision of Divisional Court (Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Streatfeild JJ.) reversed.

APPEAL from the Divisional Court (Lord Goddard C.J., Cassels and Streatfeild JJ.) on a case stated by justices for the County of Lancaster sitting in petty sessions at Prescot.

The following is a statement of those parts of the evidence summarized in the case stated and referred to by the Court of Appeal:

On March 2, 1953, the Huyton-with-Roby Urban District Council resolved that works should be executed by the council under the Private Street Works Act, 1892,[1] in making up a street known as Thingwall Lane. Samuel P. Hunter, an owner of a property with a frontage on to the lane, was treated in a provisional apportionment of the cost of making up the street as liable to be charged the sum of £36 3s. 6d., and notices and other matters as required by section 6 of the Act of 1892 were duly made, served, published and deposited.

Pursuant to section 7 of the Act, the frontager objected to the council's proposal on the ground that the street was a highway

[1] S. 5: "In this Act, if not "inconsistent with the context,—. . . "The expression 'street' means (unless the context otherwise requires) "a street as defined by the Public "Health Acts, and not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at "large. . . ." S. 7: ". . . any owner "of any premises shown in a provisional apportionment as liable to be "charged with any part of the "expenses of executing the works "may, by written notice served on "the urban authority, object to the "proposals of the urban authority "on any of the following grounds; ". . . (b) That a street or part of a "street is (in whole or in part) a "highway repairable by the inhabitants at large; . . ." S. 8: "(1) "The urban authority at any time "after the expiration of the said "month may apply to a court of summary jurisdiction to appoint a time "for determining the matter of all "objections made as in this Act mentioned, and shall publish a notice of "the time and place appointed, and "copies of such notice shall be served "upon the objectors; and at the time "and place so appointed any such "court may proceed to hear and determine the matter of all such objections in the same manner as nearly "as may be, and with the same "powers and subject to the same provisions with respect to stating a "case, as if the urban authority "were proceeding summarily against "the objectors to enforce payment "of a sum of money summarily "recoverable. . . ."

repairable by the inhabitants at large, and made application to the justices to appoint a time for determining the matter.

A map of 1786, made by the first qualified surveyor to make a survey of the County of Lancaster, showed Thingwall Lane, and at the end of the lane a gentleman's residence, marked as Summerhill; the lane was shown in the same manner as Thomas Lane, which had been a public highway and on the rates from time immemorial, though the mapmaker did not distinguish roads as public or private.

One part of the lane, now in the City of Liverpool, was shown on the West Derby Tithe Award Map of 1838, and that map showed what might well be a guide-stone in the centre of the roadway at the junction of Thingwall Lane with Thomas Lane; but nothing was specified as to the character of Thingwall Lane in the Tithe Award of 1840. The remaining part of the lane was shown in the Much Woolton Tithe Award Map of 1840 as an occupation road, ending in a cul-de-sac at a point adjacent to a farm now known as Thingwall Hall Farm; and the Tithe Award of 1842 described Thingwall Lane as an occupation road, but made no tithe charge in respect of the lane.

At the junction of Thomas Lane with Thingwall Lane there was a stone or guide-stone which on one side bore an inscribed cross, on another side the letters I. C. or J. C. and the date 1776, on the third side the words "Road to Broad Green," and on the fourth side the words "Road to Thingwell" and some letters not completely decipherable, with the word "Thorough" underneath and also writing which might be the word "By." The stone was very old and worn by the elements and the date 1776 was likely to be the correct date. There was no record that the stone had been put up by any surveyor of highways, and it might have been erected by James Clements, whose name appeared on the map of 1786, for his own private purposes. It was the practice for the rich man of the locality to provide the amenities such as signposts for the area.

The portion of Thingwall Lane lying in the urban district of Huyton-with-Roby was not made up or at any time repaired by the council of the Huyton-with-Roby Urban District or by any of its predecessors in title.

Title deeds of the residence referred to as Summerhill had been produced, extending back to an abstract of title dated July 27, 1846, which conveyed by reference to a description of the property in 1812, and there was no conveyance or reservation of a right to use the road Thingwall Lane; the plan attached to the abstract of title showed Summerhill coming to the boundary of Thingwall Lane but did not include the site of that road; the absence of the reservation indicated that Thingwall Lane was a public highway in respect of which the purchaser did not require an express grant to give him a right of way over it; and if it had been an occupation road it would have been necessary for a purchaser to obtain an express grant of a right of way over it.

C. A.
1955
HUYTON-WITH-ROBY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. HUNTER.

It was contended by the council that Thingwall Lane originated as an occupation road, that it was never a public highway before the coming into force of section 23 of the Highway Act, 1835, and that accordingly under that section it was not repairable by the inhabitants at large.

It was contended for the frontager that the lane had been dedicated by its owner to public use and had been used by the public and so had become a public highway before the coming into force of section 23 of the Highway Act, 1835, and that accordingly it was at common law a public highway repairable by the inhabitants at large.

The justices heard and determined the matter of all objections on April 5, 1954, and having viewed Thingwall Lane and inspected the guide-stone, found the following facts: that Thingwall Lane was a public highway and repairable by the inhabitants at large. They accordingly upheld the frontager's objection and awarded him costs.

The council appealed to the Divisional Court, and on January 12, 1955, the court allowed the appeal. Lord Goddard C.J., delivering the judgment of the court, stated that the road was undoubtedly an ancient track. His Lordship continued: "I think, and thought from a very early stage, that one of the "most important things is on whom the onus of proof lies in this "case. . . . The finding" (of the justices) "is challenged on "the ground that the evidence does not support it, and I do not "think one can lightly dismiss the case by saying that this is a "pure question of fact for the justices. We must examine the "evidence which was before the justices and see whether it "justifies the finding; and in my opinion, once it is agreed or "shown that public money never has been spent on the road, "the onus shifts or is placed on the person who alleges that it "is a road repairable by the inhabitants at large to prove it. If "you find a road which is said to be a public highway but the "public has never spent any money on it, either, as far as the "evidence goes, before 1835 or since 1835, it seems to me that "it raises a presumption that it is a road which is not repairable "by the inhabitants at large and therefore I think the onus in "this case must be on the respondent." His Lordship had then considered the evidence of the old maps on which, as stated in the case, the lane had been shown as ending in a cul-de-sac, and said that he was not inclined to decide the present case entirely on the ground that it was a cul-de-sac in the country because he doubted whether a road which led from a main road to a village or a hamlet could be called a cul-de-sac in the sense in which that expression was generally used. But his Lordship concluded that the evidence adduced was more consistent with the road being an occupation road than a highway and that the appeal should accordingly be allowed. The judgment referred to the conveyance but did not mention the guide-stone. The court gave leave to the frontager to appeal before leave was asked for. The frontager appealed.

Frank Gahan Q.C. and J. Edward Jones for the frontager.
Basil Nield Q.C. and G. B. H. Currie for the council.

The following cases were cited in argument: Cababé v. Walton-upon-Thames Urban Council[2]; Robins v. National Trust Co. Ld.[3]; Attorney-General v. Antrobus[4]; Copestake v. West Sussex County Council[5]; Rishton v. Haslingden Corporation[6]; Vyner v. Wirral Rural District Council[7]; Attorney-General v. Watford Rural District Council[8]; Bourke v. Davis[9]; Moser v. Ambleside Urban District Council[10]; Austin's Case[11]; Attorney-General and London Property Investment Trust Ld. v. Mayor, etc., of Richmond and Gosling & Sons[12]; Wakelin v. London and South Western Railway Co.[13]; Jones v. Great Western Railway Co.[14]

DENNING L.J. The Huyton-with-Roby Urban District Council propose to make up Thingwall Lane, a road within their district, and they seek to charge the frontagers with the expense of so doing. The frontagers object on the ground that the road is a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large. The justices, having inquired into the matter, decided in favour of the frontagers that it was such a highway. The Divisional Court, however, reversed their decision, and found in favour of the council, but gave leave to appeal to this court.

The history of Thingwall Lane is given in the case stated by the justices. In the eighteenth century the road led to a hamlet called Thingwall, which consisted of a large house, a farm, and some cottages. It branched off from another road which led to Broad Green. At the fork of the road in 1776 someone put up a guide-stone—an impressive stone some seven or eight feet high—to show the way. It was made of one solid block of stone. On one side of the stone there was carved: "Road to Broadgreen," and on the other side of the stone there was carved: "Road to "Thingwell. No thorough by." That stone showed people the way when they came to the fork in the road. If a man wanted to get to Thingwall, he took the way indicated; but the stone, by saying "No thorough by," warned him that there was no through road to anywhere else. That stone has been there from 1776 until the present day. It has recently been moved a few feet because [2] [1912] 2 K.B. 432; [1913] 1 K.B. 481 (C.A.); [1914] A.C. 102 (H.L.).

[3] [1927] A.C. 515; 43 T.L.R. 243.
[4] [1905] 2 Ch. 188; 21 T.L.R. 471.
[5] [1911] 2 Ch. 331.
[6] [1898] 1 Q.B. 294; 14 T.L.R. 155.
[7] (1909) 7 L.G.R. 628.
[8] [1912] 1 Ch. 417.
[9] (1889) 44 Ch.D. 110; 6 T.L.R. 87.
[10] (1924) 89 J.P. 59.
[11] (1672) 1 Vent. 189.
[12] (1903) 89 L.T. 700; 20 T.L.R. 131.
[13] (1886) 12 App.Cas. 41; 3 T.L.R. 233.
[14] (1930) 144 L.T. 194; 47 T.L.R. 39.

C. A.
1955
HUYTON-WITH-ROBY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. HUNTER.
Denning L.J.

it interferes with modern traffic conditions. This road to Thingwall has been open to the public ever since 1776, if not before. There has never been any obstruction or interruption of it.

At the beginning of the nineteenth century the big house at Thingwall was conveyed to a new owner. The site of Thingwall Lane was not conveyed to him, and there was no grant to him of any right of way along Thingwall Lane. That indicates that there was a public way along it; otherwise the new owner buying the house would surely have stipulated expressly for a right of way.

Those matters go to show that the road was dedicated to the public at least by 1776; and it is clear that if the road was dedicated to the public at any time before 1835, the inhabitants at large became at common law under a duty to repair the same. I pause to say that if a highway was created after 1835 by dedication or otherwise, it would not be repairable by the inhabitants at large unless the conditions laid down in section 23 of the Highway Act, 1835, had been complied with: see Cababé v. Walton-upon-Thames Urban Council.[1]

On the other hand, there are indications that it was a private road. In particular, there is no trace of any public money having been spent on this lane to keep it up at all, and in a tithe map of 1840 it was described as an occupation road. So there were indications each way, some pointing to its being a public way repairable by the inhabitants at large, others indicating that it was a private road. In that state of affairs it was for the justices, as the tribunal of fact, to give their decision, and they said: "Having viewed Thingwall Lane and inspected the guide-stone "at its junction with Thomas Lane we found the following facts, "that Thingwall Lane is a public highway and repairable by the "inhabitants at large." That being a finding of fact by the justices, it cannot be reversed on case stated unless there was no evidence to support it, and in my view there was evidence to support it.

But the Divisional Court have taken a different view. They said that, once it appeared that no public money had been spent on this road, the burden of proof shifted on to the frontagers to show that it was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large. I cannot share that view. In my judgment, on the true interpretation of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, if the local authority desire to charge a frontager with the cost of making up the road, the burden is on them to prove that it is a "'street' "... not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large." They must prove the negative, that it is not repairable by the inhabitants at large. That is the legal burden which rested on them throughout the case from beginning to end. This view is supported by Rishton v. Haslingden Corporation,[2] where Channell J. said that in such a case, the onus probandi was clearly on the council; and that decision has been followed in other cases such as Vyner v. Wirral Rural District Council.[3]

[1] [1914] A.C. 102.

[2] [1898] 1 Q.B. 294, 301.

The mistake made by the Divisional Court was that they failed to distinguish between a legal burden which is imposed by law and a provisional burden which is raised by the state of the evidence. Although the legal burden rests throughout on the local authority, they go some way to discharge it when they call evidence to show that no public money has ever been spent on the road. When this is done, there is a provisional presumption that the road is not a public road, but it is by no means conclusive. As the case proceeds, the evidence may first weigh in favour of the view that it is not a public road, and then against it, thus producing a burden—sometimes apparent, sometimes real—which may shift from one party to the other as the case proceeds, or may remain suspended between them. That is, however, not a legal burden, but only a provisional burden—a burden raised by the state of the evidence—from which the court may draw an inference one way or the other, but it is not bound to do so. At the end of the case the court has to decide as a matter of fact whether the road is repairable by the inhabitants at large or not. If it can come to a determinate conclusion, no question of the legal burden arises; but if at the end of the case the evidence is so evenly balanced that the court cannot come to a determinate conclusion, the legal burden comes into play and requires the court to say that the council have not proved the case.

I would like on this point to refer to an article which I wrote in 1945 in the Law Quarterly Review (at p. 375) in which I tried to point out the distinction between a legal burden imposed by law and a provisional burden raised by the state of the evidence. The part played by a legal burden of proof was well stated by Lord Dunedin in Robins v. National Trust Co. Ld.[4]: "onus "as a determining factor of the whole case can only arise if the "tribunal finds the evidence pro and con so evenly balanced that "it can come to no such conclusion. Then the onus will deter- "mine the matter. But if the tribunal, after hearing and "weighing the evidence, comes to a determinate conclusion, the "onus has nothing to do with it, and need not be further "considered." It seems to me that that is what happened in this case. The justices, after hearing and weighing the evidence, came to a determinate conclusion that this was a public highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, and so no question of onus came into it.

An argument was put before us on the ground that this land was a cul-de-sac, and that therefore, following observations in some of the cases—such as in the Stonehenge case (Attorney-General v. Antrobus[5]), per Farwell J.—it was a very important factor that no public money had ever been spent on it. I do

[3] (1909) 7 L.G.R. 628.
[4] [1927] A.C. 515, 520.
[5] [1905] 2 Ch. 188, 206–7.

C. A.
1955
HUYTON-WITH-ROBY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. HUNTER.
Denning L.J.

not regard this lane as a cul-de-sac. A cul-de-sac, as I understand it, is a blind alley, which this is not. There are innumerable villages and hamlets throughout the length and breadth of the land where the highway leads only to the one place, whether it be a hamlet underneath the downs or one beside a river, and the like. They are not cul-de-sacs. So in this case. It must be determined according to the principles applicable to ways in general and not as a cul-de-sac.

It appears to me that this case was an issue of fact for the justices. They have determined the matter on the facts, and have stated a very careful, complete and instructive case. In my view they have come to no error in point of law. The decision of the Divisional Court should be reversed accordingly, and the decision of the justices restored. I would allow the appeal.

BIRKETT L.J. I am of the same opinion. The proceedings with which we are concerned are proceedings under the Private Street Works Act, 1892; and when one reflects on the hearing before the justices, the proceedings before the Divisional Court, those before this court, and what further hearings I know not, it is a remarkable fact to think that the frontager in this case is liable for only £36 3s. 6d., and the whole collective body of frontagers are liable for £1,000.

But the point is obviously one of considerable importance, not merely to the frontagers, but to the local authority, and it is important to remember that it was taken under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, and the definition of "street" in section 5: "The expression 'street' means (unless the context otherwise "requires) a street as defined by the Public Health Acts, and not "being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large." The local authority, therefore, could have no claim against the frontager unless this first fact was firmly and clearly established, that this is a street within the meaning of the Act of Parliament; and all the evidence which was given before the justices (which is set out in the case stated) went to that point, whether this was or was not a public highway repairable by the inhabitants at large. In the case stated with severe simplicity, the justices said: "On "April 5, 1954, we proceeded to hear and determine the matter of "all such objections, and having viewed Thingwall Lane and "inspected the guide-stone at its junction with Thomas Lane, "found the following facts, that Thingwall Lane is a public high-"way and repairable by the inhabitants at large." That is the only fact that they found; and they set out in great detail the evidence which was before them on which that conclusion of fact had been made.

I can summarize the evidence in this way: by the co-operation of the local record office, the goodwill of the local council, and the co-operation of the frontagers, there was a great deal of material before the justices in the form of ancient maps, including an interesting map of the area, being the first map, according to the record office, that was made of that district at all, in which Liverpool, which we know today as a great city, is shown as merely a little collection of houses and great areas of countryside. There were tithe maps, and we had considerable argument about the weight of authority a tithe map ought to have, particularly the one which bore the words "occupation road," and so on. The maps were regarded as very important evidence in the case, as indeed they were, showing this particular track or lane or road or way, and its very ancient character.

In addition to that, there were other matters dealt with by the justices, and set out in the evidence, and notably one dealing with the guide-stone. One does not want to be critical about these things, but Lord Goddard C.J. says nothing at all about the guide-stone, whereas I regard the guide-stone as being a matter of prime importance, having regard to the evidence. He does refer to the conveyance, which was another matter produced in evidence, which went back by reference at least to 1812, and he refers generally to these maps. But I am not going into them now. If I may venture to say so with great respect to the Divisional Court and to the Lord Chief Justice, I think that the whole of the judgment in that court was really based on the onus of proof. Lord Goddard C.J. said: "The onus of proof is very "important in this case. I think the onus of proof shifted the "moment it was made plain that there has been no expenditure "of public money on this road, and the inhabitants at large have "never been called on to repair the road, and the onus thereupon "shifted to the frontager to make good his case that this was a "highway repairable by the inhabitants at large." He said later: "I do not think that onus has been discharged."

With great respect, the real question before the court—the plain and straightforward finding of the justices being that Thingwall Lane is a public highway, and repairable by the inhabitants at large—ought to have been, aye or no, was there or was there not any evidence to support that finding by the justices? Though I say it with reluctance, that is the kind of question that comes before the Lord Chief Justice and the Divisional Court almost every day, and it comes before the Court of Criminal Appeal almost every week. Sometimes the question is in the form: Is the verdict of the jury against the weight of evidence? which is an entirely different thing from saying: Is there, or is there not, any evidence? The judgment of the Divisional Court seems to be based on the second matter, what is the weight of the evidence? For example, the Lord Chief Justice says: "I think (and I "thought from a very early stage in this case) that one of the "most important things is on whom the onus of proof lies in "this case. The justices have obviously taken a great deal of "pains over this case. I think they have applied their minds to "the proper points, and they have come to the conclusion "that it is a road repairable by the inhabitants at large, and "therefore the respondent is not liable to contribute. That

C. A.
1955
HUYTON-WITH-ROBY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. HUNTER.
Birkett L.J.

" finding is challenged on the ground that the evidence does not " support it." That is a rather curious phraseology; it is not: " That finding is challenged on the ground there is no evidence " to support it," but " challenged on the ground that the " evidence does not support it."

The Lord Chief Justice goes on: " I do not think one can " lightly dismiss the case by saying that this is a pure question " of fact for the justices." With great respect, if my view is right, that was the question. This is a pure question of fact for the justices. The Lord Chief Justice continued: " We must " examine the evidence which was before the justices and see " whether it justifies the finding." Again, with respect, that is language which does not accord with the test (if it be the right test) aye or no, was there evidence? It is as though the Lord Chief Justice said: " We must weigh it; we must examine the " texture of the evidence to see where it leads "—that is, not " Is there evidence? ", but " What is its nature? "

Perhaps I may quote one other sentence from the judgment: " At any rate, I think, taking all the circumstances and position " into account, once it is agreed or admitted that there has been " no expenditure of public money on this road, and it is never " shown that the inhabitants at large have ever been called upon " to repair the road, the onus is on the respondent to show that " this is a public highway." And again: " I have come to the " conclusion that it is more consistent with it being an occupation " road than being a highway, and I think, therefore, the respon- " dent fails in this appeal." I have quoted those passages from the judgment to show that the Lord Chief Justice was not applying the proper test. It being admittedly a question of fact for the justices, was there or was there not evidence to support the finding, he is saying: " Let us examine the evidence and see " where it leads; does it justify this conclusion, or does it not? "

The second criticism which I would venture to make is on the question of onus of proof, and there I need not repeat what my Lord has said. I am not at all satisfied that when there are proceedings before justices under the section, and it is shown, for example, that one facet of the evidence is that no money has been spent by the inhabitants at large, the whole onus of proof thereafter falls on the frontager. Indeed, we were referred to section 8 of the Act of 1892, and I think it is important. On the question of the hearing and the determination of objections by the justices, the section provides: " . . . at the time and " place so appointed any such court may proceed to hear and " determine the matter of all such objections in the same manner " as nearly as may be, and with the same powers and subject " to the same provisions with respect to stating a case, as if " the urban authority were proceeding summarily against the " objectors to enforce payment of a sum of money summarily " recoverable." That is the procedure that the justices must follow, as though the local authority were merely presenting a summons against the frontager for the payment of £36; no one could doubt that the onus would be on the local authority to show that the £36 was due, that this was in fact a street, and that this was the frontager's share of the cost of making it up.

Mr. Nield said on this point that one ought to view the frontagers as being appellants coming to the court really to appeal against the administrative act of the local authority. I think it wrong to say that. The frontagers come to the court not as appellants against the administrative act of the local authority, but come (as they are entitled to do by the statute) to say to the local authority: "We have been granted these facilities of "coming to the justices, to state our objections to your pro-"cedure. We have come, and we put you to the proof of what "you allege against us"; and I think that is the true position.

On the facts of this case, I do not think that the question of onus of proof really arises. My Lord has cited the passage from the speech of Lord Dunedin in Robins v. National Trust Co. Ld.[6] which was read to us in argument, and I think that it applies here. What the justices have done here appears clearly from the case stated; admittedly they addressed their minds to all the proper points. It may be said: The fact that there was no evidence that payment had been made by the inhabitants at large is indeed a very strong point against the frontager; and it is; and it is calmly and fairly stated there; it is one point. But when we come, for example, to the guide-stone—which is not referred to in the judgment of the Divisional Court—that as a matter of evidence for the consideration of the justices is exceedingly important.

I listened with the greatest interest to Mr. Nield on that point, but I am afraid that he did not convince me. Here is a guide-stone which on one side says "Road to Broadgreen"—a clear indication to the public: "That is the way to Broadgreen, and "you may go." On the other side it says: "Road to Thingwell, "no thorough by"—clearly an indication to the public: "That "is the way to the hamlet of Thingwall, but remember there is "no through way there." Mr. Nield argued that it really meant, in effect, "No thoroughfare." It is easy to suggest that one might put on it "Private Road," or indeed the words "No "thoroughfare," but why put on the stone: "Road to Thing-"well, but you cannot come along it"?

At any rate, those were questions for the consideration of the justices, and they considered them with great care. They went to view this ancient stone with these initials "J. C." on it, and traced out apparently who J. C. was, when the stone was erected and why, and so on; but they came to the conclusion in the case stated, in regard to this matter: "There is no record of the said "stone having been 'put up' by any surveyor of highways and "that the said stone may have been erected by James Clements,

[6] [1927] A.C. 515, 520.

C. A.
1955
HUYTON-WITH-ROBY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. HUNTER.
Birkett L.J.

"whose name appears on Yates's map of 1786, for his own "private purposes, and that it was the practice for the rich man "of the locality to provide the amenities for the area such as "signposts. That there was no surveyor of highways in 1776 "and that the date of the first appointment of such an official "is not known." They felt that that was some evidence that this was a public highway, and that the "rich man of the "district" had erected this guide-post for the guidance of the public, "Road to Thingwell." It was entirely a question for the justices.

Then there was the matter of the conveyance in 1846 of the residence known at one time as Summerhill and later as Thingwall Hall. The Lord Chief Justice did consider that. That conveyance makes reference to a document of 1812, and it was said that there was no conveyance or reservation of a right to use the road; and the justices thought that that was some evidence that it was a public road. I am satisfied for my own part that there was very considerable evidence on which the justices could come to the conclusion which they did. The Divisional Court came to a wrong conclusion; and I would support restoration of the view taken by the justices in this case.

ROMER L.J. I agree. If Mr. Nield is wrong in his submission in regard to the onus of proof, it seems to me there is really very little left in this case. His submission was that, without admitting that the onus was originally on the urban district council, in any event it shifted to the frontager because of the combination of two reasons; firstly, that this lane, Thingwall Lane, was a cul-de-sac—a cul-de-sac in the country, as Mr. Nield described it—and, secondly, because the justices found that the lane had never been repaired at the public expense. That was the view which the Divisional Court took in the matter, and it resulted in the defeat of the frontager at the hearing before that court.

I think the argument fails, and that the Divisional Court erred in the view they took of it, if only because this lane cannot, in my opinion, on the facts that appear from the case, be described as a cul-de-sac at all within the meaning of that phrase as used in the relevant authorities, because it was a way leading from a highway to a hamlet; and it does not seem to me that that is the kind of way which can, for any material purpose, be described as a cul-de-sac. But the suggestion that it was a cul-de-sac lay at the very foundation of this argument on onus; and accordingly, without that foundation, the argument necessarily fails. I would only desire to add that on the general question of onus I entirely and respectfully agree with what my Lord has said on the question with regard to applications such as the present.

Once the question of onus is out of the way, the question (and the only question) is whether there was material on which the justices could arrive at the conclusion which they did in fact reach; and I do not propose to repeat what my brethren have said on the two most material matters, namely, the presence of the guide-stone, and the conveyance which was executed in 1846. I should, however, say that in regard to the guide-stone, Mr. Nield relied on the presence of the word "No" which appears on the stone before the word "thorough," as indicating that the evidence which is provided by that guide-stone is rather in his favour than against him; but it appears to me, for reasons which Birkett L.J. has given, that that argument cannot prevail. Mr. Nield then said that, at the lowest, the evidence which emerges from the guide-stone is equivocal. I do not think it is equivocal, but that it points very directly towards the conclusion at which the justices arrived, and supports it.

